JONAS MERRIAM, LOWELL, MASS., WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1854. EDITOR.

"The Great Day of the Lord is near; it is near, and hasteth greatly."

(Zeph. 1: 14)

The economy of grace, by which fallen, degraded humanity is to be elevated from the miry clay and horrible pit, placed upon the rock, and made to sing with the angels in a world of light, is worthy the admiration of an adoring universe. In this mighty enterprize, this stupendous achievement, celestial beings are deeply interested—the divine mind active—and, as it were, all heaven absorbed. The work to be accomplished is so worthy the energies of divine power, and the cordial co-operation of angelic hosts, that the highest ransom the universe could pay, even the sacrifice of the Son of God, was cheerfully presented through the infinite riches of a Savior's love. The foundation of this glorious edifice was laid on Calvary's Mount; and under the supervision of the sovereign Architect, the walls have been rising into a holy temple built of "lively stones," till the top-stone is about to be reared with shouting, "grace, grace unto it." It is the coming of our King in His beauty—our Lord in His glory—that will consummate the work—that will be the finishing stroke to that building, which in its loveliness and glory, surpassing far the beauty of Solomon's temple, is to shine forth as an everlasting monument of divine grace and infinite love. All glory to Prince Immanuel, the founder and finisher of this sanctuary of strength. Let heaven rejoice, and earth be glad—"let the inhabitant of the rock sing—let them shout from the top of the mountains" at the development of such benevolence—at the expression of such paternal regard for the happiness of rebellious man!

Who that has an interest in a Savior's love, can but rejoice with "joy unspeakable and full of glory" at the increasing evidence, that is poured in upon us from every quarter, that that day "HASTETH GREATLY"—its dawning light breaks in upon the moral darkness of earth like the beauty of the aurora after a gloomy night. O what a thrill of extatic joy—what a glow of infinite delight is poured in upon the soul—what a tide of blissful emotions rushes through the entire being of the expectant saint, when "the day dawns and the day-star arises in his heart;" when with triumphant faith, and confident hope, he beholds the heavenly landscape in prospective; when the opening glories of a brighter era shed around him the beams of celestial light.

We stand at a point analogous to the position of John the Baptist, in the transition state from one dispensation to another. Now the spiritual children, who walk and talk with God, as did Zachariah and Elizabeth; who worship daily in His courts, as did Anna the prophetess, look for redemption in Israel; and now as then those, who are not divinely illuminated, look for the amelioration of civil government. At the first Advent, there was a general expectation that a great Prince was to arise, and sit upon the throne of David; hence the visitation of the wise went to Jerusalem, and their adoration of the new born Monarch. Now, also, a star is seen by the Magi of the political world; and a confident expectation is abroad, that all despotic governments are soon to be abolished; and civil institutions, based upon the principles of equity and popular privilege are to be erected on their ruins. As the voice which proclaimed from heaven the glory of Christ, (John 12: 28) was not equally intelligible to all, some believing it the voice of God, and others the result of natural causes, and therefore, "said that it thundered;" so the sound that is now "gone out through all the earth," even the rumbling of the mighty car, whose swift-revolving wheels cause the pillars of the earth to shake, and the thrones of earthly power to totter on their base—this note of alarm—this tocsin of universal war is, to the saints, that voice of God which once shook the earth, and concerning which, it is said, "yet once more, I shake not the earth only, but also heaven; and this word, yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, that the things that cannot be shaken may remain"—even the everlasting kingdom of God, while to the uninitiated in respect to the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, this commotion is the result of natural causes in the political world, and destined to usher in an era of equitable law, civil liberty, and earthly glory. The thunder is loud enough to be distinctly heard by all, that have ears to hear; but it requires ears that have been circumcised to distinguish its tones of denunciation to a guilty world, and of consolation to the "weary saint as he sighs for home."

At the commencement of the Messianic dispensation, the recipients of evangelical faith were of humble origin, and of modest pretensions; while the despisers of their hope, the crucifiers of the Lord of glory, were exalted in station, and learned in the law. Thus at the present crisis of human affairs, when the Messianic reign is about to be established the advocates of His immediate coming are but humble instrumentalities employed by the Head of the Church; and talent seems to be created for the occasion; thus demonstrating that passage of scripture which says: "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called;" while on the other hand the scoffers at our faith—the disbelievers in the blessed hope, are in station, of worldly honor, and pecuniary emolument; men, who enjoy preeminence in the Church; so that it may be said as in olden time, "Have any of the rulers believed on Him?"

Says Jesus to His disciples, "Blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear." (Matt. 12: 16)—This benediction is pronounced on them after being assured it was their high prerogative "to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven;" while to the stubborn Jews it was not given; for their ears were dull of hearing, and their eyes had they closed, etc. "Henceforth I call you not servants," says Jesus, "for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth, but I have called you friends; for all things, that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you." (John 15: 15) "surely the Lord God will do nothing, but He revealeth His secret unto His servants the Prophets," (Amos 3: 7.) Thus we find it a principle of the divine administration, that the evolutions of light in the confoldings of that economy, are to be clearly perceived by the adherents to "the present truth." Those who are identified with the economy of grace, constituting the agencies through which truth is evolved, and disseminated, must of necessity comprehend the light, which they are the organs of communicating; and understand the truth, which they are the instruments of eliciting from the oracles, and extending for the condemnation of the world, and the edification of the Church. Thus we find that in the entire history of redemption thus far, Prophets have been raised up to foretell coming events; and when those events actually transpire, other servants are endowed with wisdom from on high to recognize and point out the fulfillment of those prophetic delineations.—Otherwise how could the purposes of grace be ever accomplished? Since the days of miraculous development, what instrumentalities are to be employed to enlighted the world, and give the signal of impending danger, and direct the Church to her appropriate position, if uninspired men are not to know the will of God, and understand the unfoldings of the gracious plan?

In the destruction of the antediluvian world, and that of the cities of the plain, we have two great, prominent events, which stand forth on the record as everlasting monuments of God's displeasure on the one hand, and merciful interposition on the other; and these two events are held up by our Savior as beacon lights to the Church in subsequent ages, as precedents of a coming day, developing and establishing principles of the divine economy, and illustrating the dealings of our heavenly Father both with the righteous and the wicked. And we are expressly told, that in those instances, while the wicked "knew not" the approaching judgment, and were reckless and insensate as the adamantine rock, in relation to the appalling scenes of desolation before them, the righteous were apprized not only of the event, but of the time of its occurrence. They were "not in darkness, that that day should overtake them as a thief." Thus in every age, those who have enjoyed most intimate union with the Head of the Church, who have been in harmony with God's moral government, have been also identified with His "present truth," and understood the developments of the divine economy at the passing hour; so that they could say with Peter, "this is that which was spoken by the Prophet." It is not in God "to slay the righteous with the wicked; and that the righteous should be as the wicked; that be far from thee," said the Patriarch.—Truly as the electric spark darts instantly from one conduction medium to another, and is never attracted by substances that are non conductors of the fluid; just so certainly the bolts of heavenly light on the purposes of God, proceeding from His throne, strike on the hearts of true believers, but are repelled from those who are filled with unbelief.

At the epoch of the flood, "Noah being warned of God, of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith. When the awful catastrophe overwhelmed Sodom and Gommorrah, righteous Lot was divinely forewarned of approaching danger, and fled to the mountains for refuge. On the deliverance of the Jews from Egypt, the same kind interposition of God's hand was manifest; and the seed of Abraham knew the day of their release, so made preparation for the journey to Canaan. The same principle was verified at the destruction of Jerusalem. Those who were indentified with the truth, as it is in Jesus, discerned the signs of approaching ruin, and when Jerusalem was encompassed with armies, fled to Pella and were saved; while those who were alienated from God by wicked works, were involved in one universal scene of horror, desolation and ruin.

We are compelled by the laws of anology to look for a complete development of the same justified principle of the divine economy, even in our day, for "surely the Lord God will do nothing, but He revealeth His secret unto His servants, the Prophets." But on this subject we are not left to the conjectures of men. God has been pleased to give explicit directions and distinctive tokens, by which the Church may know her position when in proximity to the glorious consummation of their hope. In the ever memorable discourse delivered on the mount of Olives, Jesus forewarned His disciples of the prominent scenes of trial and affliction, through which they were to pass; and the events that were to transpire as harbingers of approaching deliverance.—He predicted "wars and rumors of wars," that nation should rise against nation, "kingdom against kingdom," that there should be "pestilences," "famines" and "earthquakes in divers places," that the saints should be delivered up to be persecuted; and finally added, as presursors of His second coming, the darkening of the sun and moon, the falling of the stars, the shaking of the powers of heaven, the publication of the Gospel throughout the world "as a witness," "distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts' failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth."

We have now arrived at the point where nature, is if convulsed, has hung out her signals of distress. The Luminary that rules the day has been enshrouded as in sackcloth of hair; the moon has been enveloped in rayless night; and the falling stars have been scattered like leaves of Autumn; and an infraction has been made upon the order of the physical universe, by the appearance of "blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke" in the heavens; for the phenomena of the Aurora Borealis was unknown in former times, except in the higher latitudes of the north. "The day of His preparation" has been reached; and Nahum's chariots come, with their "flaming torches," thundering along the vales, and "shaking terribly the fir trees," "raging" with noise and violence through the streets of our cities, "justling one against another in the broad ways," and "running like the lightnings." We have come down to "the valley of decision," and the proclamation has gone forth, "Prepare war; wake up the mighty men; let all the men of war draw near." The master spirits of the age have gone forth from land to land with burning eloquence, and unprecedented ardor, to awaken to action the intellectual and physical energies of the world, preparatory to the battle of Armageddon, and to involve all the powers of earth in the final issue between absolute and democratic rule. The nations have sought redress of grievances, and the enjoyment of constitutional privilege, and popular liberty; but the fires of freedom have been quenched in tears and blood; and now the wail of "distress among nations" comes up from all the earth "into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth," and calls for "the day of vengeance of our God."

Standing as we do at this wonderful era in the history of the world, we may look back into the past and behold the Seer at Babylon standing in the royal palace, delineating, in the most perfect manner, the rise, progress, decline and fall of the kingdoms of earth, as embodied in the great metallic Image. As he traces the history of these mighty Empires, he declares to Nebuchadnezzar, "Thou, O King, art this head of gold. And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron" (Dan. 2: 38-40). These universal kingdoms have all successively arisen; the fourth has been divided; and it was during this broken state, that the Prophet saw the mighty stone disengaging itself from the adjacent mountain—when suddenly it fell on the Colossal Statue, dashing it to pieces, and grinding it to powder; "and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them;" "and the stone, that smote the Image, became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." Thus end the dynasties of the present world, with all their oppressive acts, and discordant elements, and unholy principles; and upon their ruins rises the kingdom of Christ, symbolized by the stone, in all its beauty and harmony, its peace and glory. Thus, "In the days of these kings shalt the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." (v. 44.)

The Pouring out of the 6th and 7th Vial.

BY THE EDITOR

"And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared."

The book of Revelation is, more than any other portion of the word, a symbolic book.

"The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John.—Rev. 1: 1.

The word here used in the Greek, rendered signify, implies giving instruction by signs or symbols; and if our blessed Saviour designs to teach us by symbols, as He did the disciples by parables, it is our wisdom to learn of him whether by literal or figurative instruction.

Water is used as a symbol to represent people.

REV. 17: 15—"And he said unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the Whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues."

Again, Dan. 7: 2, 3—"Daniel spake and said, I saw in my vision by night, and behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea.

And four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another."

In this connection the sea (waters) represent the masses of people, or nations of the earth, over which those four great beasts or governments reigned.

In Ezekiel 29: 2-11, we read,—

"Son of man, set thy face against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and prophecy against him, and against all Egypt;

Speak, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself.

But I will put hooks in thy jaws, and I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales, and I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers, and all the fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy scales.

And I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers; Thou shalt fall upon the open fields; thou shalt not be brought together, nor gathered; I have given thee for meat to the beasts of the field and to the fowls of the heaven.

And all the inhabitants of Egypt shall know that I am the Lord, because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel.

When they took hold of thee by the hand, thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder; and when they leaned upon thee, thou breakest, and madest all their loins to be at a stand.

Therefore thus saith the Lord God:—Behold, I will bring a sword upon thee, and cut off man and beast out of thee.

And the land of Egypt shall be desolate and waste; and they shall know that I am the Lord; because he hath said, The river is mine, and I have made it. Behold, therefore I am against thee, and against thy rivers, and I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate, from the tower of Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia.

No foot of man shall pass through it, nor foot of beast shall pass through it, neither shall it be inhabited forty years."

We perceive, by these passages, that waters in general symbolize people—the seas, all the nations of the earth—a river, a particular people or government.

Nearly all Commentators interpret the river Euphrates, as here brought to view, as referring to the Mahommedan power; and so great is the unanimity on this subject, that we need not dwell on this point. The action of the Angel in pouring out his vial on the river Euphrates, indicates that the events to transpire will affect the Mahommedan Empire—the drying up of the waters indicates that the power, designated by the river Euphrates, will be utterly wasted, destroyed and exterminated from the earth. That the wasting process has already commenced will not be denied.—In 1820, Greece rose in rebellion against the Turkish government and has since become an independant nation. In the battle of Navarino no less than 214 vessels of war, belonging to the Turkish government, were destroyed by the combined fleets of England, France and Russia, in less than three hours.*

In 1839, Mehemet Ali, the Pacha of Egypt, wrested from the Porte, Egypt and Syria, and had well nigh overturned the Mahomedan Empire, but was prevented by the interference of the allied sovereigns of Europe. Algeria, also, after a long war, has been taken from the Turks, and become a Province of France. Russia has also made inroads upon Turkey, and circumscribed its power to some extent, and thus has the Mahomedan Empire been gradually wasting away, so that the universal impression seems to be, that the days of that kingdom are numbered, and soon will be finished.

The drying up of the Euphrates was accomplished in order "that the way of the kings of the East might be prepared." It would appear that an analogy is drawn, in this prophecy, between the work here performed, and the preparation for the destruction of Babylon. That mighty achievement under Cyrus was effected by a diversion of the river Euphrates, which prepared the way for the invading forces, composed of troops from the kingdoms of Media and Persia on the east, to enter Babylon through the channel of the river. The action of the sixth vial gathers the kings (kingdoms) of the earth, and of the whole world, to the battle of Armageddon. This prepares the way for the action of the seventh vial, when "GREAT BABYLON comes in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of His wrath."

V. 13 "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet."

The three unclean spirits are the instrumentalities employed to gather the kings or kingdoms of the world, to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. These three spirits or agencies in the political world, proceed out of the three organizations of government, denominated the Dragon, the Beast, and the False Prophet. The epithet "unclean," applied to these spirits, may have reference to the impurity of the sources whence they originated, or to the abominations to be accomplished through their mission. Taking it either way, it is peculiarly appropriate.

It is worthy of remark, that there are, at this time, three great systems of false religion, viz:—Mohamedanism, Catholicism and the Greek religion in Europe, and that these three systems are identified with, and embodied in, the different governments of Europe,—the Mohamedan religion being incorporated with the civil government of Turkey,—the Catholic religion with the governments of Austria, France, Naples, &c.,—the Greek religion with the Imperial government of Russia.

It is generally admitted that the Beast represents the civil powers that support the Papacy, at the head of which stands France, which has been denominated, by the Popes, the eldest son of the Church.—The Dragon is understood by some to refer to the seat of the Eastern Empire of Rome, now under the dominion of the Turks, while others interpret it of Russia. The False Prophet is also understood by some to refer to the religion of the great Mohamedan Impostor, and by others to the delusions of the Greek religion. But in either case, the two powers of Turkey and Russia are involved.

V. 14. "For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

"For they are the spirits of devils," (or denomical influence) "working miracles." The terms here rendered "miracles," signifies, according to Liddell and Scott's Lexicon: "A mark by which something is known. This is its peculiar and appropriate meaning; consequently as it signifies a mark, token or signal, it was used by the Greeks to express a signal given for battle. It seems apparent that the idea here presented, is that the three unclean spirits give the signal for the battle of Armageddon. Having given an explanation of the symbols, we now proceed to inquire how far the development of this prophecy has transpired in the history of the world.

Within the year past the Emperor of France has, by his ambassador, made a treaty with the Porte to the effect, that the Catholics should have the control of the holy places at Bethlehem and Jerusalem. This treaty gave umbrage to the Emperor of Russia; and he despatched Prince Menschikoff to annul that treaty, and make another, giving to the Greeks the control of the holy places, and placing the Greeks in the Mohamedan Empire, under the protectorate of the Czar. The Porte, being unwilling to yield to the demands of Russia, Menchikoff withdrew, and the Danubian principalities were occupied by an armed force on the part of Russia. Since that time, the Mohammedan power has been the grand fulcrum, over which to move the world. From the action of these three Empires has gone forth an influence that is stirring the nations to the final conflict; and it is evident that the revolutionary forces which are preparing to explode all the tyrannical governments of earth are relying on the existing war between Russia and Turkey as about to furnish an opening in Providence for the prosecution of their designs. Indeed we learn from the European Papers that their motto is oriente lux (light from the East.) The democratic leaders in Europe select Turkey as a basis of operations and starting point, from which, if the emergency demands it, troops may be marched in Hungary and other places to open the expected campaign and begin the struggle for liberty. Thus is the way preparing for the kings (kingdoms) of the East to overturn the governments of the old Roman earth; and doubtless the same influence will extend abroad till the powers of "the whole world" (the whole habitable globe) shall come within the vortex of war. This will be "the battle of that GREAT DAY OF GOD ALMIGHTY."

V. 15 "Behold, I come as a thief.—Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame."

*Encyclopoedia American Art. Navarino.

This startling premonition is thrown in here as a note of alarm, so that when we see the movement toward the final struggle, we may be particularly watchful and prayerful lest we be overtaken in a snare.

V. 16. "And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon."

"And he gathered them together." —Prof. Stuart renders it "they;" i.e., The three unclean spirits gather them together. The way is now prepared for the outpouring of the seventh Vial which is to deluge the earth with blood.

V. 17 "And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done."

The air is the seat of the winds—the locality of storms. During the sealing process, which we believe is now being accomplished, the four Angels, or powers, hold the four winds; but when the work is finished, the seventh Angel pours out his vial into the air, and the four winds are loosed. "And there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, "IT IS DONE." Awful sentence—appalling declaration to the sinner—"it is done," the servants are sealed, probation ceases—the winds of war rush and destruction overwhelms an ungodly world.

V. 18 "And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great."

"And there were voices." The first definition given to this in the Greek is "roarings," and as the Vial was poured into the air, it would seem to be a more appropriate rendering. The roaring bespeaks the coming storm. As the roaring of the distant tempest accompanied by the lightning's vivid flash and startling thunder-peal are sure precursors of an impending storm, so will the commotions in the political elements portend the doom of earth, and herald forth the final catastrophe that will deluge the world with blood.

Vs. 19-21, "and that great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell; and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath.

And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found.

And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent; and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great."

The sixth Vial falls on the Mohammedan power—the seventh on the kingdoms of Western and Central Europe.—The kingdoms that have supported the papacy are the marked monuments of divine displeasure, at which the work of final destruction under the seventh Vial begins.—The "great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth" is ruptured into fragments by the earthquake of revolution, and Great Babylon drinks the wine-cup of His fury, "because of the sword that He will send among them." Now the ten kingdoms, that have agreed and given their power to the Beast, shall "hate the Harlot, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." But the judgment which commences on the Harlot, does not however end there; for it involves not only the kingdoms of the Roman earth, but ultimately the kingdoms of the whole world, or whole habitable globe; and, as in the visions of Daniel the winds of war "carry them away, that no place is found for them," or, in the language of this prophecy, "every island fled away, and the mountains (governments) were not found."

Said a traveller in Italy not long since "hatred to the papacy is sown over every inch of Roman ground; and the next revolution will sweep away not only the papal power, but the catholic religion." Says Father Gavazzi, "Luther was a Reformer, I am an exterminator;" and we learn that he has hastened to the scene of action in his native Italy, expecting the opening of the campaign in the beginning of the present year. Kossuth also we learn was to sail for Constantinople on the 16th ult. . . . .* the hating of the Harlot com- . . . . and the plan been projected to . . . . desolate and naked. The trumpet call to arms has saluted our ears—the nations of the earth are, as it were, wheeling into line of battle between absolute and democratic rule. Soon the earth will be strewed with carnage; and universal anarchy and confusion fill the world with horror. Then will that mighty EARTHQUAKE, whose premonitory throes already agitate the world, shake down the pillars of every throne, and the things that may be shaken will be removed, but we, thank God, receive a kingdom that cannot be moved; "for in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, AND IT SHALL STAND FOREVER."

DECLARATION OF WAR. There is a report in New York, based, it is said, on private letters,—that war has been formally declared by France and England against Russia, and that Lord Palmerston has returned to the Cabinet. Important—if true.

The World's Crisis

LOWELL, JANUARY 18, 1854.

Address to our Readers.

We live at an era of light in every department of knowledge, and particularly at this "time of the end" does the light break from the oracles in relation to the delineation of prophecy. Says Jesus,—"Let your light so shine before men," &c. Now every beam of light that radiates from the heavenly world, and shines upon the hearts of believers in Christ, is intended to dispel some of the dark shades of earth, and illuminate, in a measure, the world. Therefore Jesus gave his disciples specific directions to let their "light SHINE;" "what," says He, "ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the house-tops."—"Ye are the light of the world." "Ye are the salt of the earth." Inas-much, therefore, as we are conscious that precious bolts of light have been poured in upon our souls from the heavenly world, we feel under infinite obligations to reflect those sunbeams from glory to all around. Were we to do otherwise, we should be like the four lepers who arrogated to themselves all the riches and provisions of the Syrian camp, and more especially when we call to remembrance the beloved saints of God "scattered abroad," many of whom live retired from the busy scenes of life, and without the facilities which others enjoy to understand the thrilling events transpiring in the earth.

"Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear:
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air."

Such individuals have but little opportunity, it may be, for listening to the eloquence of some able advocate for the cause of truth; but through the medium of a paper they can be reached, and their souls fed and nurtured with the bread of life. Those who have the privilege of attending social meetings, and public worship, and general Conferences, among brethren of like faith, cannot fully sympathize with the scattered and isolated portion of the flock. One great object of the paper is to waft the tidings of the coming glory to the beloved lambs of the flock far and near, if practicable, to earth's remotest bounds. We have seen the glories of the rising dawn, enchanting as Eden, lovely as the morn of creation. Nay, it is the harbinger of a brighter era,—the auroră of immortal day!! and as the day-star arises in our hearts, and the day-dawn begins to break in such thrilling beams, as it were, of celestial light, we want some mirror to reflect the sunbeams, if possible, INTO EVERY NOOK AND CORNER OF THE GLOBE. For this is, we believe, THE WORLD'S CRISIS—the consummation of the age. GLORY TO GOD, that he has not left us in darkness in relation to these soul-cheering subjects—these transporting themes of contemplation. Tongue cannot utter it,—neither pencil can paint, nor poetry describe the thrilling, Joyous HEAVENLY Emotions of a soul, that can look across the Jordan, and over the battlements of the city, into the land of Canaan,—into the metropolis of glory. And who, O who, that has felt the charm, that has basked in that sunshine, can stand against the dissemination of the heaven-born light? Who would, if they could, dam up the river of salvation, and obstruct the flowing of the healing waters? God, we fully believe, is opening the flood-gates—He is stirring up the virgins to demand the life-giving element, and to open channels every where for the spread of truth in the earth; and we call upon all the true hearted to lift their voices to God, that every wheel in this machinery that is not of God may be obstructed, and its motion cease; but that every portion of the enginery that is set in motion by the finger of God, may move with a constantly increasing velocity, that no opposing influence may block the wheels or obstruct the movement. Pray that the paper may be like a well polished mirror to reflect light and truth; that every page may be illuminated as with the spirit of God. Nay, that the fire of love, and the light of truth may flash through every letter, and thus the sinner be convicted, and the saint comforted, and the Church edified in the most holy faith.

Thank God, our work is not our own. As we have heard of our Father even so we speak. We desire no personal aggrandizement, nor centralization of power, and at least so far as the humble servant of the Church in the editorial department is concerned, he would rather repose with the sleeping saints than stand in the way of the car of salvation. God grant that every stumbling block may be removed, and the chariot roll unobstructed throughout the land.

But while we have no desire for frail, erring man, to be invested with power to "lord it over God's heritage," we do desire CENTRALIZATION IN CHRIST,—concentration of the saints under the banner of His love; and all power to have a safe lodgement in the sovereign HEAD; and each member to move in harmony with Him, and consequently in unison one with another, each acting in his own sphere; and if one man's tongue is like the pen of a ready writer, let him blow the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in the holy mountain; and if another man's pen is like the tongue of a ready speaker, let him employ his gift to the glory of God. Thus we may be like a company of well disciplined soldiers, marching, wheeling, &c., all in martial order, and according to the word of command. Let Jesus be Captain, and each one obedient to His voice, and there will be no confusion or disorder in the ranks. We cannot expect to have the sympathies and cooperation of the world, for they are not of us, but in the name of Him who offered His life to redeem us, we call upon all who profess the faith of Jesus, and believe the present truth, to "love as brethren," to preserve "the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace," to concentrate their energies in sounding the MIDNIGHT CRY, that every slumbering virgin may be aroused, and the Church clad in her shining habiliments of light and love, ready to go in unto "the marriage of the Lamb."

I have remarked the present is an era of light,—let it be also an era of love. In the present enterprise of throwing out the fly-sheets of "The World's Crisis," we move simply because we believe the emergency imperatively demands it. Some of us have been devotedly attached to the Advent Herald, others to the Watchman, others still to the Harbinger. Let those papers move in the sphere they have chosen; but we have a specific work, which we believe God designs to accomplish through our humble instrumentality; and that is, to assist the beloved Bride to make herself ready, and be adorned with her jewels, and robed in "fine linen, clean and white"; that when the opening heavens shall reveal the son of God, vested in regal power to deliver "every one that is written in the book," she may "scale the mount of God," and in her radiant charms, and with resplendent crowns, and enchanting melodies, "be presented faultless before His presence with exceeding joy"!!!

We desire no personal controversy, nor collisions with papers, or correspondents, or any one else. We have not attempted to launch a vessel of war, that is to go forth with the thunders of ordinance, or throw out its missiles of death; we would rather send forth a heavy-laden merchantman, freighted with stores for the household of faith, and wafted by the breezes of heaven. The naval triumphs that we desire are such as were obtained by the transportation of provisions to starving Ireland. It is written: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."—This is the bread that we wish to convey, and our fervent aspirations ascend to heaven, that the columns of the paper may be replete with saving truth, with such communications as shall be received and digested by the flock, by which they may be strengthened for the pilgrimage, and nurtured unto eternal life. JONAS MERRIAM.

Conference at Lowell.

A general Conference of Adventists was holden in Lowell, Mass., commencing on Tuesday, 27th ult., and continuing over the Sabbath. It was attended by a large representation of believers in the speedy coming of Christ from Maine to New Jersey. Truly it was a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of His power. It seemed as though the same spirit pervaded every heart, and actuated every mind, and that it was the desire of all to seek the face and favor of God, to obtain a more perfect knowledge of His ways, and learn more of His blessed truth. Thank the Lord for so much of His peaceful presence as we enjoyed through the exercises of the meeting. It seemed as if every jarring element was banished from the place of convocation. It was an ever memorable occasion and we believe all who were in sympahty with the gentle, tender, lamb-like spirit of the meeting could say emphatically, "Lord it is good for us to be here," and further that while the chariot-wheels of the master delay, they will have reason to bless God for the strength and consolation received at that profitable interview. We could but indulge a secret wish, that all, who have received the impression that the advocates of time are possessed of a "hard spirit," had been present to witness the development of that general feeling, which pervaded the believers in the immediate revelation of their adorable Savior. There was a general manifestation of tenderness and sympathy, indeed, there seemed to be a universal outburst of feeling that was eminently in harmony with the spirit of Him, who offered His life a ransom for the sins of the world. The desire of the brethren was to "do good to all, and especially to the household of faith."

Among other efforts to benefit the Church and enlighten the world, was projected the plan of publishing weekly fly-sheets that may go forth on wings of love and errands of mercy, and with messages of truth, to announce the proclamation "BEHOLD THE BRIDEGROOM COMETH." The proposition was laid before the Conference by Bro. Couch, to send out gratuitously the startling intelligence as on the wings of every wind, to the extent of those means, which God may supply, even if it be to the ends of the earth. Amen, seemed to be the universal response; and the impression on every mind, so far as we could learn, was "It is the Lord let Him do what seemeth Him good." Such was the unanimity of feeling, and such the blessing of heaven that descended upon the members of the Conference in connection with this effort, that we could but recognize the hand of our heavenly Father, and humbly submit to the leadings of His Providence, and the teachings of His grace. In the early history of the Advent movement, the believers in the coming of Christ were of one mind, and of one heart, all believing the emergency of the case in the development of present truth, demanded a medium of communication for the specific work of preaching the everlasting Gospel, as symbolized by the flying Angel, (Rev. 14: 6, 7) "unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, fear God, and give glory to Him; for the hour of His judgment is come." In like manner, and for the same reason, we feel that in consequence of the new development of light showing us clearly, that those who thus went forth in 1843 and 4 fulfilled the first items in the Parable of the Virgins—that the tarrying time has followed—the slumbering and sleeping time been passed through—and that the momentous hour has arrived for startling the Virgins from their slumbers, that they may arise and meet their Lord in peace at His coming—in consequence of the light that now breaks upon the pathway of the Virgins, we need a public organ devoted to the specific purpose of sounding the MIDNIGHT CRY. If a Paper was needed to announce the time of His coming (according to our then belief) in 1843, is not another equally demanded to announce that proclamation of '54, which is the key-stone of the arch, establishing the former position, and finishes up the work with shoutings, "grace, grace unto it!" We take this step in the fear of God, and with good will to man, and the confident expectation that many, who are not now in sympathy with the present movement, will, by the grace of God, be awakened to a sense of the awful crisis impending, and, together with us, be ready, as we trust through the tender mercy of our God we shall, to enter into the nuptial ceremony and grand coronation scene, when the king shall appear in His beauty, and unvail His lovely face to the adoring bride, even He who is the joy of our hearts, the centre of our hopes, and will be the glory of heaven and "the light thereof."

Much practical instruction was thrown out during the session of the Conference, and particularly in a sermon on the use of the tongue, by Bro. Grant. We believe there were few, if any, that were not profited by the discourse: for every one seemed to inquire in relation to the pungent admonitions of the speaker, Lord, is it I? The position taken was not only that every idle word was a sin against God; but that all ALLUSSIONS to the faults of others in their absence, except when we design to warn some one who is in danger from their influence, is decidedly wrong. May the deep impressions made by that sermon be permanent on the heart of every hearer.

We cannot close this account without alluding to the melodies of Zion that were sung at the Conference. The harmony of song is always an index to the harmony of feeling in the assembly. So thrilling and delightful were their notes of praise, their outgushing songs of joy that we could but be reminded of the melodies of '43, when it seemed that a new dispensation of music was opened to the Church. And particularly on taking the parting hand, as they sung that touching air, and melting hymn, "When shall we all meet again"? it seemed to inspire that deep, thrilling emotion, which cannot be delineated with the pen. May we all enjoy that happy meeting again referred to in the hymn, in the new creation, where with immortal tongues, and in one mighty choir, we shall chant the praises of our dear Redeemer, and no more be obliged to sing the parting hymn!

☞ We have issued the first number of our paper as soon as the pressure of business would permit.

The new work from the pen of Bro. F. H. Berick, entitled "THE GRAND CRISIS IN HUMAN AFFAIRS: THE LORD SOON TO COME," from which we extract the leading article on the first page, will be ready for delivery in about two weeks. It embodies all the principle features in the argument on time, both Historical, Chronological and Biblical. All who desire to gain information on this momentous subject will be greatly benefitted by this publication; in perusing it, we are confident that it will enlighten, strengthen, and confirm every seeker after divine truth.

We hope and trust that it will be speedily scattered far and wide, even to the utmost parts of the earth, that it may be the means, under the blessing of God, of doing good, and bringing many to a knowledge of the truth.

All orders for the above work should be sent to the "World's Crisis," Lowell, Mass., and they will insure prompt attention.—Ed.

"How Long Shall it be to the End of These Wonders?"

The above is a question proposed to the man who stood above the waters of the river, by one of the heavenly messengers; the answer to which was as follows: "It shall be for a time, times, and an half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people all these things shall be finished."

What are we to understand by the "end of these wonders?" Answer—The wise shining as the brightness of the firmament. What is it thus to shine? Ans.—"As the sky above us. The image is that of the sky at night, thick set with bright and beautiful stars." (Barnes.). "Shall glisten as the shining of heaven." (Cov. Trans) Have we on the record of Sacred Scriptures any exhibition of this shining glory? Ans.—We have. In the 17th of Matt., we read that Christ was transfigured; and that "His face did shine as the sun, and His raiment was white as the light." In Rev. 1: 16, we read, that "His countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength." Will the saints ever thus shine? Yes. When? Ans.—"When He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." How long after He shall appear, before we shall be transformed to His likeness? Ans.—It shall be in a "moment in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." Mark. The shining of the saints is not a consequence of their entering the kingdom, but of their being made like unto Christ. Hence, if when the Savior comes the transformation of the saints takes place, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye;" they will then, and ever after shine, both at his coming and in the kingdom of God. Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to—to what? Ans.—To the 1335 days. To what part of them? Ans. —To the END. Or, as Job says, "all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change comes." How long is Daniel to go his way—to rest (in the grave)? Ans.—TILL THE END BE. End of what? Ans.—End of the 1335 days. The German text reads, "Thou shalt RISE UP and stand in thy lot." In the above rendering, the RISING UP is just as much an event to occur at the END of the days, as the standing in his lot. And as he must rise from the grave before he can stand in his lot, we believe the resurrection of the saints will mark the end of the days.

In Coverdale, we read, "Take thy rest, and bide in thy lot." Here the grave is the lot; and according to this rendering, Daniel is to sleep in the grave until the days be ended, look at it which way we will, whether according to this, or the German text; there is no resurrection until the end of the days.

Prof. Stuart renders this clause as follows:—Thou shall rise up FOR thy lot, at the end, &c. Mark, the lot does not come at the end of the days, but the resurrection, as an essential pre-requisite, to his standing in his lot. Mathew Henry in speaking of the numbers 1260, 1290, and 1335, says, that Anti-Christ "at the end of the 1260 should BEGIN TO FALL, but 30 years after he shall be QUITE FALLEN and whoever lives to the 1335 days will see glorious times indeed." All that wait and come to the end of these days, shall then exclaim this our God, we have waited for Him and He will save us. May the Lord help us to wait with patience, that we, with all the saints of God, may rise to meet the Lord in the air at the end of the days.

☞ The London correspondent of the N.Y. Tribune asserts that the British Government through its Minister at Constantinople, has pursued a most treacherous policy towards the Porte. Lord Redcliffe, he says, did not oppose the passage of the Danube by the Turks, believing that they would be whipped by the Russians. But as soon as the battle of Oltenitza was fought, he urged the Sultan not to risk his army, and induced him to give orders for its withdrawal to a defensive position.

☞ As a farther illustration of the hatred to the papacy entertained by the inhabitants of Rome, referred to in our article on the Vials, we cut the following from the Evening Traveller of the 12th. inst.:—

The Pope and the Romans. At a meeting of the Universal Democratic Association, at the Stuyvesant Institute, N.Y., on Tuesday evening, a letter of considerable interest was read from C. F. Henningsen. In this letter the writer gives it as his opinion received from contact with the Romans, that Roman Catholicism in Rome is dead. He says: "Nine-tenths of the people, including the female portion of the population, look on the Pope and his cardinals with contempt as spiritual imposters, and with the utmost hatred and horror as temporal oppressors." From what he heard and saw in Rome, he is convinced that, "within twenty-four hours after the withdrawal of the foreign garrison, the Pope's government will have fallen, and his own life, together with those of his counsellors will have been sacrificed, unless they can save themselves by flight or concealment, which will be very difficult; for every avenue of escape is noted and watched." He adds:

"The popular feeling of the Romans has been so embittered by the manifold executions, imprisonments, treacheries and oppressions of their rulers, that I regret to say, I found the popular leaders inexorably deaf to any counsels of moderation and mercy; deliberating merely whether the Holy Father should be hanged from the cross of St. Peter's, or over the so-called tomb of St. Peter within; the least violent stipulating only, that he should be unfrocked as a false priest, and then tried like Charles I., for violating his contract with and murdering his people."

We do not happen to know who this Charles Fred Henningsen is; but if he is a man whose character and means of observation authorize him to speak with confidence—as certainly the fact that his letter was read at a meeting of political refugees would suggest—the declaration made by him and opinions given deserve consideration.

That the power of the Pope is doomed to destruction, we cannot doubt, while we believe the Bible.

According to the above testimony it may be nearer at hand than the most sanguine have hoped.

Objections to Starting a New Paper Considered.

Since the question of starting a new paper has been agitated, some of our brethren and sisters have entertained fears that it would result in evil. It has been remarked, that it is too late in the day to think of engaging in such an enterprise, as that of publishing a paper. But we might with equal propriety, use the same argument against preaching, publishing books, &c. This is indeed a curious objection. Too late in the day? Why? It is late in the day, and our time short, and the end near, these considerations are sufficient of themselves to bestir us to action; instant and immediate action. And it becomes us to put forth every energy and to bring into requisition all the means within our power to spread this glorious light. We profess to believe that the last note of warning is being heard, the last message is being promulgated that this world will be favored with. And as the number is few who can, or will leave all to declare the warning to a judgment bound world, we feel called upon to issue a flying sheet that shall be scattered east, west, north and south, and thus those souls who do not—who cannot have the priviledge of sitting and listening to the argument, may read and ponder it, and thus, under the blessing of God, our effort in this department may prove a blessing to some, both in this and in the world to come. If the work is great, we must do the more. If the time is short, we must work the faster. If it is late in the day, we must, by constant action and effort, redeem the time, because the days are evil. And in our efforts to do this, we expect the blessing of our heavenly Father; nay more,—we have been blessed already.

Again,—It is said that there are papers enough now, hence no necessity of starting another.

In relation to the other papers we have nothing to say, except to remark that our brethren, who conduct those periodicals, do not feel the same interest, or do not see with us so fully the coming of the Lord this year. And although they have manifested a disposition to publish whatever has been sent to them on the question of time, (at least so far as my communications are concerned), yet the brethren believing in time have felt that to have the entire control of a small sheet devoted wholly to this question, would subserve their cause better than in any other way. We are conscious that we are doing up our last work. We have no disposition to contend with others, and thus waste our time for naught. Our duty is straight before us. If others oppose our views, and fill the columns of their periodicals with what they may regard as arguments against our position, we have no contention; our business will still be to present the truth as we understand it, and leave the reader to judge of its merits.

Should some be apprehensive that we shall not abide by the principle of minding our own business, and thus prophecy that we shall soon change our mind, we trust they will be disappointed. We would not feel self-confident, knowing that we are poor fallible creatures, but we do pray that God will enable us, and all who may in any way be connected with this paper, to manifest the spirit of Christ, and whether we preach, exhort, or write, to do all things with an eye single to the glory of God, and in reference to the coming of the Lord. Sad Accounts from the Ionian Islands.

Private letters from the Ionian Islands inform us that Zante and Cephalonia are in a most deplorable condition. The failure of the currant crop for two successive years, has cut off the only supply from which the inhabitants of those two Islands, in particular, derive their main support. The landowner and laborer are both suffering under such a calamity; but it is in the latter that want with its attendant horrors weighs heavily, and is crushing them to death.—Their circumscribed condition in a physical, as well as in a social sense, renders them helpless in their present misfortune. Any work which could offer the scanty remuneration of twelve cents per day, would, under existing circumstances, be hailed by thousands as a most propitious and heaven-sent boon. But there are no factories to employ the callous hand of the sturdy agriculturist, and it must drop with weakness by his side until death relieves his sufferings. The relief also that might be obtained by spreading out and thus rendering the intensity of suffering less observable, is rendered very difficult by the liquid element which locks them up in their native island. The Zautiotes in particular are well known throughout Greece as the most industrious, active, laborious and thrifty husbandmen of that part of the world, and yet even their doom also seems inevitable, and starvation is already preying upon that hardy race. During last autumn wild fruits and herbs growing in the fields constituted their food, but dreary winter has deprived them even of their miserable pittance. The Ionian Government has offered to many a free passage to Corfu, where the olive crop promised well this year, and where they might find employment in helping their fellow-islanders to get in their crop. This measure will no doubt afford some relief, however small, to the sufferings of many. Hundreds have already availed themselves of it, and our correspondent tells us that the haggard features of hundreds of starving beings, of all ages and sexes, leaving their sunny island in search of bread, presented a picture which drove out tears from the eyes of all who witnessed it.—(Boston Traveller.)

Present Truth.

"Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned; behold, the judge standeth before the door."—(James 5: 9.)

There never was a time, when the above admonition was more applicable than at the present. In fact, the connection in which it is found, determines its application to be at a point of time when............... * the early and latter rain. "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the COMING OF THE LORD DRAWETH NIGH."

The term "grudge," is rendered to groan or grieve (marg.) We are told by critics that the term as used here, signifies to be "fretful and impatient; or, to use a common word which more exactly expresses the sense, that of grumbling;" that is, to manifest a disposition of complaining, or finding fault. The causes of this complaining are various and many. Some persons are all the time grumbling because Mr. A. or B. is favored with more of this world's goods than themselves; thus neglecting the exhortation of the Apostle, "Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content."

Should a person possess greater talent, or be blessed with more pleasing qualities than another, that same envious, grumbling disposition is manifested. Or if others do not act as they may think best, or walk in the way that they have marked out; instead of trying to convince them of their folly, the tongue of defamation is let loose, and thus the breach is made wider and wider, until all confidence is destroyed or lost. Now how much better it would have been to follow out the instruction of the Apostle, when he says:—

"Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth and one convert him; Let him know, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

Again, if a word is dropped in their hearing against any person or persons whom they respect, they are impatient until they have peddled it here and there, adding little by little to it, to make it emphatic; and should any person be disposed to question its truthfulness, they are, as it were, ready to confirm it by an oath.—The primitive church were troubled with just such a class of busybodies, females, and the Apostle refers to this very class, when he says:—

"And withal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idlers, but tattlers also, and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not.

I will therefore that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house, give none occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully.

For some are already turned aside after Satan."

This class of persons do more to disturb the peace of a neighborhood, than all others put together. Pollock, in speaking of Madam Rumor, says:—

"Twas slander filled her mouth with lying words;
Slander, the foulest whelp of sin; the man
In whom the spirit entered was undone.
His tongue was set on fire of hell; his heart
Was black as death; his legs were faint with lust
To propagate the lie his soul had framed;
~~His pillow was the peace of families~~
Destroyed, the sigh of innocence reproached,
Broken friendships and the strife of brotherhoods."

The Psalmist in speaking of this same class, says:—

"Whoso privily slandereth his neighbor, him will I cut off: him that hath an high look and a proud heart will not I suffer.

Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me; he that walketh in a perfect way, he shall serve me.

He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house; he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight.

I will early destroy all the wicked of the land; that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the Lord."

And in the language of the Apostle, we say:—

"Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.

Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil-speaking, be put away from you with all malice:

And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

"Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned." Condemnation is sure to follow this "grumbling" disposition. If there is any thing to move one from this course of evil speaking, it is the announcement, "Behold, the judge standeth before the door." O, may the Lord help each and every one to examine himself, and to remember the language of the Savior, "That for every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." B.

Extracts from Letters.

Sister Bragg writing from Orrington, Me., says:—

"Bro. Merriam,—I do feel thankful to the good Lord that I ever heard the last .... * our sufferings over,—and where we shall delight ourselves in the abundance of peace forever; have the privilege of walking the streets of pure gold, and then surround the tree of life and eat and live forever. O, that will be blessed indeed. And the thought that it is all to be realized soon "makes me almost impatient for Christ to appear." Truly, this is a blessed hope, big with immortality and eternal life, and is like an anchor to the soul, but sure and steadfast, and it enters to that within the vail. I can truly say, the way does grow brighter and brighter.—"The way the holy prophets went," I will go. There is peace in believing and joy in the holy ghost; I truly have the hundred fold (that is promised) and the cheering promise that I shall live forever. O, praise the Lord for the foretaste of the heavenly rest that remains to all the saints of God.—If it be so blessed to anticipate the day of glory, what must it be to be there surrounded with the glory of God forever freed from temptation and evils, unnumbered of this bitter life. To think we are safe at home with the pure and the blest of all ages! O, glory, hallelujah to the Lamb of God forever, for a hope so "much divine." "We can trials well endure," knowing the trial of our "faith is more precious than gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, it will be found unto praise and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ" our Lord. I can "gladly wander up and down and smile at toil and pain." Yes,

"I'll suffer now, I'll triumph then,
I'll die for Jesus here;
In that bright world I'll live again,
A conquerer's crown to wear."

O praise the Lord is the language of my heart. I feel like a pilgrim and a stranger in an enemy's land, surrounded as a lamb among wolves, yet Jesus is for me, and is more than all that can be against me. I do feel it safe trusting in Israel's God, believing he is able to keep all I have entrusted to his care. O how good the Lord has been to me, to call me out from the world, and the proud Church, and give me a heart to love the truth that is now meat in due season. O glory be to Jesus, that I do by his grace stand out from the world, looking for Jesus to come and finish our faith, which we shall realise in 1854. Pilgrim Brother, be of good cheer, the land is near. Soon you will cast off all your desponding feelings, and rejoice forever with the blood-washed company who shall have overcome by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony. O my heart is often made glad when viewing by faith the blissful plains of Eden restored. There is no other class of people on the earth that can rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory but those who have the Gospel hope in the soul. I do feel and believe with all my heart, that we are on the track of truth, and on the last stepping-stone, and the next step, we are at the bar of God, to give an account of the deeds done in the body. O solemn thought, the destinies of all are eternally fixed this year. The days of Daniel's rest in the grave will run out, and he will stand in his lot, and all will then the harvest know. And my prayer is that we may be found without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, for a spotless Church is be presented to the Father this year. When I see that one sin will forever banish us from God's presence, I tremble and ask, Shall I be able to stand the grand review of the great I AM? I do feel like being wholly the Lord's, soul and body; wholly given up to God, willing to do anything that will be for the glory of God. I truly love the straightness of the way, and I mean to walk in it by the grace of God, and I know the Lord has ever helped me in time of need, and I do praise His heavenly name. He remains the same yesterday, to-day and forevermore. Amen.

O praise the Lord for the fulfilment of prophecy; we see the abomination of desolation is in the past, and according to the prediction of Christ, immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun was darkened, for which I give God glory, with all my heart, for that marked the ending of the 1260 years; and as long as we can rely on the words of Christ, we can believe beyond a shadow of doubt that 75 years from 1779 we shall see Daniel stand in his lot as promised by the Angel; and Job will see his Redeemer for himself: and Isaiah, with his dead men, will awake and sing the song of victory. O Hallelujah to God and the Lamb forever and ever—praise the Lord. I do feel that I am on the wing for glory, and that nothing shall be able to separate me from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus my Lord.

Brother Thomas, writing from Gardner, says:—

"I am still striving for the kingdom and I do believe that we are almost there; the .... *victory almost won .... *prayer will be offered; the .... *the last groan be heard, and the last tear be shed. Glory to God that eternal salvation is so near. God grant that we may soon meet in the glorious kingdom, that bright world, where all, ALL will be immortal, to part no more forever, even, forever and ever, is the prayer of your unworthy Brother in Christ, hoping for speedy redemption. Jedidiah Thomas, Jr."

The Midnight Cry.

Bro. Merriam:—Being among that class of believers, professing to be looking for the Lord to come this year, and that we are living under the sound of the "Midnight cry," I desire to advance a few thoughts in relation to this all-absorbing theme, as they may present themselves to my mind.

In the parable of the virgins, we learn that the cry at mid-night is given after a tarrying time, during which tarrying time, the virgins all slumbered and sleep. All can see, by the different figures presented in this parable, that the state of the church is not the same during the tarrying time that it was at the time of their going forth, as brought to view in the beginning of the parable. To be slumbering and sleeping, implies simply, insensibility or inaction; they gradually grow insensible in respect to the great truth which caused them as a class of people to move out, or "go forth to meet the Bridegroom," and thus fulfil the first item marked in their history, by the Lord himself.

But at midnight a cry is raised, "Behold the bridegroom cometh." Then, when the church comes to this third point in their history, of course they will see that the "going forth" and the tarrying time is in the past. Then certainly the sounding of the "cry at midnight" marks the ending of the tarrying time. But what constitutes the cry at midnight? Simply the proclamation that the Lord is coming, and coming at a given point of time.—Why? Because the same instrumentalities are used by the Lord in giving the cry at midnight, that were used in causing the church to make her first movement in going forth to meet the Bridegroom. All can see, I trust, that this principle is clearly shown in the giving of the cry, by carefully examining every point. 1. They have their lamps by them when they "go forth" and of course they keep their lamps by them while they are slumbering and sleeping; for as soon as the cry is heard they all arise and trim them, (the lamps.)

By the symbol of a lamp we all recognize the Bible, and I think we see by the Parable that it was light on that portion of Scripture, which relates to the time of our Saviour's return, that caused them to "go forth." 2. During the tarrying time, that light begins to wane and darkness imperceptibly creeps over the church in regard to the specific time of the coming of the Lord. That this is the case, all will clearly see by the expression, "then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps;" showing of course that darkness had been gathering on the very portions of scriptures from which they obtained the first light in regard to the Saviour's return at a definite point of time. 3. As the Lord used the Watchman, or "the servants of the householder," in leading out the church in that first movement, they, therefore, will be the messengers to give the cry at midnight; as they give the warning, the virgins begin to trim their lamps. But some may think this last position is assumption. Then I would call your attention to what the Lord said in regard to the servants who are made rulers of his household, &c., in the preceeding chapter.—Mark that expression, "Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing." Paul says: "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God; how can they hear without a preacher," &c. Then as faith cometh by hearing, can we not see this principle involved in the sounding of the cry? I think we can; for the church would not search into the evidences of the Saviour's return, unless notice had been given of that event being near by the good servant, giving meat in due season.

We are now living in an age of the world when there is a proclamation going through the land that "the Lord is coming in 1854". It stirs the whole Advent body. At the commencement of this announcement, there were but a few who sympathized with it; but we daily saw their number increasing, and light continued to break in on their pathway, which served to comfort and strengthen them, although Satan raged, and all the hosts of this ungodly age were to desperation driven, as if they would attempt to prostrate the plan and will of God,—but in their attempts, completely failing, and only proving it true, that nothing can be done against the truth, but for the truth. That the truth will triumph at last, all are ready to acknowledge; consequently all who are identified with the truth, by living it out daily before the world, will also triumph with it; while those who have turned a deaf ear to the oft-repeated admonitions of Christ and his followers, will share in a fatal and overwhelming defeat.

We have looked over carefully all the arguments which thus far have been offered against the present reckoning of the prophetic periods, and that has been presented to show that the Church could not know the time of our Saviour's return, and we acknowledge that up to this present time we have seen nothing to cause us to alter our present position in regard to the ending of the days, and the sounding of the "Cry at Midnight." Consequently, we expect Jesus will come this year. We believe he will come; and that the long dark night of disappointment, occasioned by the passing the time, is receding. We thank God for it. We rejoice in view of that coming day, which is to end the suffering of God's beloved and chosen ones. The great day of the Lord is at hand; the final redemption of the Church is soon to be witnessed.

Dear reader, think of these things. Ponder, for a moment, the joy of the saints, as they see the opening heavens reveal their blessed Redeemer! Hear them exclaim, "Lo! this is our God; we have waited for Him; we will be glad and rejoice in His salvation." See the beloved ones, who now lie under the clods of the valley, as the trump of God sounds; behold them coming forth clothed in immortality. Hear them shout, "O grave! where is thy victory? O death! where is thy sting? Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." "They are to be like the angels, "to die no more."

We would here call your attention to the timely warnings of God's people, and beg of you in the name of Jesus to heed them, and quit the ways of sin immediately; prepare to meet your God in peace, that you may have an inheritance in the world to come, "The saint's happy home."

To——————

Dear Brother: It is always the most agreeable to our feelings to dwell upon the reward of the righteous, than the final doom of the hypocrite and self-deceived, but both characters are presented in the Bible for our admonition. They are represented by the man who came to the wedding, without the garment prepared for that occasion. Satisfied with his own raiment, he rejects that provided by the king, and thus offers him an insult. The command is given to the servants—"Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Again, they are represented by the evil servant saying in his heart, "My Lord delayeth his coming," while he outwardly manifests his unbelief by smiting his fellow servant, who is giving "meat in due season." The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and cut him in sunder, and appoint him his portion with hypocrites and unbelievers."—They are also represented by the foolish virgins who outwardly manifested faith in the coming of the Bridegroom, but had not oil sufficient to enable them to abide in the light, until he came. They sought admittance to the marriage festival, but were forbidden to enter. Says the Savior, "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name have done wonderful works?—And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you, depart from me, ye workers of iniquity." Such is the portion of hypocrites and unbelievers. May the Lord save us from so fearful a doom.

From this subject we may learn the value of faith. Without it we cannot please God. Not a faith confined to a few detached portions of the Bible, relating to the life of Christ, his death, and our justification thereby. It should take a broader range, and strike out into the open field of prophecy, not only that portion of it which refers to past generations, but that also which has a bearing upon our own time, and likewise that which refers to the future glory.

There is too much indefiniteness to our faith. It is too much contracted. Many confound feeling with faith, and when their emotional exercises are deep, they suppose they have a good deal of faith, and yet if interrogated why they believed? they would be unable to reply. Again, they will talk much about the happiness of Heaven, and be very much animated by the prospect of it, and yet if asked where their future home was to be located, or in what its future glory was to consist, they could not tell. "Enough for us to know," say they, that we shall be very happy somewhere? They seem to be afraid of an intellectual faith; a faith that they can give the reason of. Thus large portions of the Bible remain untouched by them; those which clearly describe the nature of the christian's hope they have no interest in; they have professedly so much faith in the Lord that they can very willingly leave all that with him, without acquainting themselves with it, and thus they remain ignorant of many of the exceeding great and precious promises," which, if they but understand, would afford them a solid basis upon which to rest, and enable them understandingly to give a reason of their hope.

Although this is a land of Bibles, and all have the privilege of reading the word of God for themselves, yet there is, after all, but a limited acquaintance with its most precious truths, and very little genuine faith in its teachings. How few deem it to be the word of the Lord to us, just as really so, as though we heard it uttered amid the vivid lightnings, and deep thunderings of Mount Sinai. Yet we ought thus to regard it. "And if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall we not escape if we refuse him that speaketh from heaven. See then that ye refuse not him that speaketh."

But it is often said by those who wish apparently to evade the face of truth, "It is no matter what we believe if we are only sincere, or if we only live right." We find however by an examination of the sacred oracles, that we must have a correct faith, in order to produce right action. We see this plainly illustrated in the case of Noah, and of Lot. The majority found to their sorrow, that it was of some consequence what they believed, and so will also the Gentiles, if they refuse to hearken unto the voice of the Lord, and through fear of reproach turn away from the messages of the gospel.

Does it not my brethren, judging from the past history of the church, become our duty to search the scriptures that we may understand what the specific message is to us, or the present truth, for our day, that we may keep pace with prophecy—that we may follow the "shining light," and walk in harmony with the developments of the divine plan, and by a living, intellectual faith in the word of the Lord, be enabled to overcome the world? Leaving this subject now for your consideration, I subscribe myself your unworthy

THE EUROPEAN NEWS. Although the report that the combined fleets had entered the Black Sea is not confirmed, yet accounts from all quarters—from Constantinople, from Vienna, from Paris, and from London—agree in stating that orders to that effect have been given. Probably the next arrival will bring positive intelligence that the Rubicon has been passed. We look upon this movement as tantamount to a declaration of war on the part of England and France against Russia, and we may expect to hear that the next great naval movement in the Black Sea will be the blockade of Sebastopol.

Napoleon the Third is "mad"—awfully "mad." It is stated that the intelligence of the affair at Sinope aroused him to the utmost indignation, and that the French and English Governments immediately sent orders to their Admirals, Hamelin and Dundas, to enter the Black Sea without delay, and the combined fleets are now undoubtedly cruising in the Euxine. This indicates that the progress of events is forcing the great maritime powers into a course of more decided action than they have taken hitherto. Until this step, the Sultan has received, from his professed allies, only impediments to the vindication of his rights.—(Lowell Courier.

GOD KNOWS IT ALL.

In the dim recess of thy spirit's chamber,
Is there some hidden grief thou may'st not tell?
Let not thy heart forsake thee; but remember
His pitying eye, who sees and know's well,
God knows all!

And art thou tossed on billows of temptation,
And would'st do good, but evil oft prevails?
O think amid the waves of tribulation
When earthly hopes, and earthly refuge fails—
God knows it all!

And dost thou sin, thy deed of shame concealing
In some dark spot no human eye can see,
Then walk in pride, without one sigh revealing
The deep remorse that should disquiet thee?
God knows it all!

Art thou oppressed and poor, and heavy hearted,
The heavens above thee in thick clouds arrayed
And well nigh crushed; no earthly thought imparted
No friendly voice to say "Be not afraid!"
God knows it all!

Art thou a mourner; are thy tear drops flowing
For one too early lost to earth and thee?
The depths of grief no human spirit knowing,
Which moan in secret, like the moaning sea?
God knows it all!

Dost thou look back upon a life of sinning?
Forward, and tremble for thy future lot?
There's One who sees the end from the beginning,
Thy tear of penitence is unforgot—
God knows it all!

Then go to God. Pour out your hearts before him;
There is no grief your Father cannot feel;
And let your grateful songs of praise adore Him—
To save, forgive, and every wound to heal.
God knows it all—God knows it all!

Thoughts Suggested on Christmas Day.

It is the anniversary of the Saviour's birth. More than eighteen hundred years ago, while shepherds were keeping watch over their flocks by night, an heavenly messenger appeared to them on the plains of Judea, and announced the important event. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying "Glory to God in the highest, and on the earth peace and good will toward men." All heaven was interested in the birth of him who came to restore that which was lost. O, methinks they expected a dying world to echo back the shout, "Glory to God in the highest!" The shepherds heard with joy the glad tidings, and hastened to pay homage to the babe of Bethlehem.

The wise men beheld the prophetic star rising in the eastern horizon, and quickly sped in their way to the Jewish capital with the inquiry, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" eager to worship Him and buy their treasures of gold frankincense and myrrh at his feet. A .....* this, and we enter the temple. ....* ....* that aged man taking in his arms the infant child. His countenance is radiant with heavenly joy. He speaks,—let us list to his words,—"Lord now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." That is good old Simeon, with the babe of Bethlehem. Unto him had been "revealed by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ." And here was yet another—a mother in Israel of more than fourscore years, who departed not from the temple, but served God with fasting and prayers night and day, waiting for the consolation of Israel. An harbinger had gone before to prepare the way of the Lord,—her ear had caught the glad announcement,—her heart had received the joyous tidings, and when the infant Jesus was brought into the temple by Mary, his mother, the Holy Ghost witnessed with her spirit, that it was her long-looked Lord, "and she gave thanks likewise, and spoke of him to all them that looked for redemption in Israel."

There is much of thrilling interest clustering around the first Advent of our Savior. Upon one point, my mind, however, particularly lingers. He came not unannounced. John the Baptist had proclaimed his coming. His mission had been foretold by the prophets. He was "the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight!" The predicted star arose. The angelic host gave witness to his birth. Some there were, who hailed the tokens with joy, and "waited for the consolation," and "looked for redemption in Israel."—And now my mind's eye glances forward to the returning again of the King of Kings! Will there be any waiting one to greet him, as at the first advent? A Simeon and an Anna looking for redemption? Will there be any messenger to go before and prepare his way? Any "daystar" to indicate the dawn of "perfect day?" What meaneth the apostle when he gives the assurance "unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation?"

Who are those we find exclaiming, "Lo this is our God, we have waited for him, this is the Lord, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation?" Why does the Saviour command us to learn a parable of the fig-tree, after certain signs have appeared? Why is the evil servant antagonistical to the good, who is giving "meat in due season?" What induces the inquiry of the scoffer, "Where is the promise of his coming?" The wise can understand and reply.

PLEASANT VALLEY, Jan. 7, 1954.

Several of us have been trying, by the Grace of God, to serve him in that manner that may be well-pleasing in his sight; yet we have our trials and temptations like the rest of frail humanity.—But we feel that our trials will soon come to an end. Praise the Lord, our redemption draweth nigh. O, I bless the living God that he is leading on his people by the sure word of Prophecy. Yes, O yes, the pathway grows brighter and brighter and will unto the perfect day. The light that shone at first in our pathway, tells us now that we are right, for the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come, it will not tarry. And if there was ever a time when the Advent Church should bestir themselves it is now; and if there was ever a time when we needed the Holy Ghost in our vessels it is now. O may the Lord prepare us for the coming crisis.

Yours in the faith of the Gospel,
—WM. J. RIPLEY.

"The World's Crisis."

Such, then, is the motto that has been chosen as the heading of this paper, and considering the present state of the world, we deem it very applicable. That the world in general, is coming to a crisis, and an important indeed, no statesman, of any nation, disputes, or even denies; on the contrary, they themselves proclaim it.—They have for some years past, called the attention of people to it, in the most thrilling language. On this subject, Kossuth in various speeches alluded to it frequently as being the "turning point of centuries in the destinies of mankind," as the "approach of universal danger," the "decisive struggle," the "approaching death of despotic governments," "the drawing near of the judgment," &c., &c. We also hear from the eloquent Choate, of Boston, in a speech which he delivered in Faneuil Hall, near two years since, that it seemed to him "as if the prerogatives of crowns, and the rights of men, and the hoarded-up resentments and revenges of a thousand years, were about to unsheath the sword for a conflict, in which blood shall flow, as in the apocalyptic vision, to the bridles of the horses, and in which a whole age of men shall pass away; in which the great bell of time shall sound out another hour,—in which society itself shall be tried by fire and steel—whether it is of nature and of nature's God, or not." Although we no longer hear the eloquence of Kossuth in this our land, still he keeps on his work, but in a quiet and sure manner, and has been waiting for that time to come when he would make his last speech, which he declared would be, "Up boys, and follow me!" and already it is announced in our journals that Kossuth has been invited to Constantinople by the Porte, and that he was soon to depart accordingly for that place. Nor is the leading champion of oppressed Hungary alone in his desires and expectations. Within less than a year our chief cities have been visited by Father Gavazzi, an Italian patriot, who has declared plainly his object was in wearing the emblem of the sword, that in the coming struggle, he would be the first to use the sword to regain the independence of his beloved Italy, and to exterminate Popes and Popery forever from its shores. The same desire of liberty from the yoke of oppression still burns in the bosoms of the brave Poles, and they still entertain hopes of yet being free; they, too, are deeply interested in the common struggle, and many of them are offering their services to the Porte. And in fact there is not a nation in Europe but that is deeply interested in, and connected with, the coming struggle. Asia is stirred within herself by the Chinese rebellion; and even the desire of war by the Persians has been shown by acts of hostility upon the Turks. The war spirit is to be found in every civilized nation. Even Egypt lends her aid to the Turks, and thus takes a part in what will yet prove to be the fulfillment of Jer. 25:30-33 and of Rev. 16:14, by which we learn that the slain of the Lord shall be from one end of the earth even to the other end of the earth, and that they shall not be lamented, gathered or buried.

Reader, is not the world rapidly coming to a crisis? Surely every one acquainted with the affairs of the political world, will answer, yes. And every Bible student, who is posted up in relation to the fulfillment of God's word, will answer, Amen. All nature cries out, yes; and God's faithful word sheds light abroad, and by faith we can see the everlasting kingdom of God set up, and established forever under the whole heavens, after what is now dreaded, and is even upon us, shall have passed, and passed forever. The believer, whose name is written in the Lamb's book of Life, will alone survive the "coming crisis," and reach the home of peace and joy, which will be prepared for his abode.

With such things before us, is not the right motto chosen? and can we not, through this medium, raise the warning voice to the world in order to aid seekers after truth to get a knowledge of what is before them, that they to meet their God, and escape all those things that are coming on the earth.

Catholicism.

This power has been of late making rapid strides in influence all over this country, although in an underhanded way; still its progress does not wholly pass unnoticed. That the Catholics intend to rule in this country, it is very evident; but God has marked the history of that power, and therefore we can safely rest assured that although there may be a struggle on their part to gain the ascendency. It will only be its last, its final death struggle.

The following extract we copy from the Lowell Herald:

WHAT IS CATHOLICISM? Out west Catholicism is this: The Mayor of Pittsburg, Pa., calls on Bishop O'Connor of that place, to prevent the firing of cannon and beating of drums on the Sabbath.—Catholicism makes the Bishop more powerful than the executive magistrate. The editor of the Wayne (Id.) Times is assaulted by Archibald McDonald, a Catholic, for publishing an article on "Popery and popular education," in which he comments on an extract he makes from the Shepard of the Valley, a Catholic paper of St. Louis. McDonald is arraigned before the Mayor, pleads guilty, and alleges in vindication of the offence, that he was insulted by the article in the Times.—Catholicism denies the liberty of the press. The Shepard of the Valley, the St. Louis Catholic paper, declares that it is not an advocate of religious freedom, and says—"We repeat we are not. The liberty to believe contrary to the church is the liberty to believe a lie; the liberty to believe otherwise than she permits us, is the liberty to polute the imagination and abuse the mind. From such liberty may we and those we love at all times be preserved." Reader, such is Catholicism—as it is out West. Is it different here? If so, would it be different had it the same chance to display itself?

☞ The Lowell Courier of Jan. 2d, speaking of the past year, says:

"During the year just expired, what momentous events have transpired in our own country, in Europe, in the Orient, and on the borders of China! Amid "wars and rumors of wars," verily, we have lived fast.

Last year was prolific of great events. The consummation of the Napoleonic coup d'tat; the disgrace of President Arista in Mexico; the reenthronement of Santa Anna; the formation and (rumored) dissolution of the coalition ministry in England; the dethronement of the King of Ava;* *the revolution of China and Japan; the stirring scenes in the war on the Danube; the repetition of the usual follies and crimes in the South American States; the discovery of comets; signs in the heavens and perplexities in the earth."

On seeing the above we are forcibly reminded of the Saviour's language, found in Luke 21:15, "and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity," &c.

Everything upon the earth testifies to the truthfulness of our position; and during this year the world will realize the greatest of all events; but who will be left to record the mighty wonders of 1854?

Consternation Caused by the Comet.

The recent Comet seems to have excited great alarm and consternation in some parts of the Globe. A gentleman writing from Turkey says:

"The splendid comet now visible after sun-set on the western horison, has attracted the attention of everybody here. The public impression is that this celestial phenomenon is to be considered as a sign of war; and their astrologers to whom appeal is made for an interpretation, make the most absurd declarations; and I have been laughed at by very intelligent Turks, when I ventured to persuade them that great Nature's laws do not care about troubles here below."

The Madrid journals announced that the appearance of the comet has excited great alarm in that city, as it was considered a symptom of divine wrath, and a pressage of war, pestilence, and affliction for humanity.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Times said—"The comet which has lately been visible has served a priest not far from Warsaw with materials for a very curious sermon. After having summoned his congregation together, although it was neither Sunday nor festive, and shown them the comet, he informed them that this was the same star that appeared to the Magi at the birth of our Savior, and that it was only visible now in the Russian Empire. Its appearance on this occasion was to intimate to the Russian eagle, that the time was now come for it to spread its wings, and embrace all mankind in one orthodox and sanctifying church. He showed them the star now standing immediately over Constantinople, and explained that the dull light of the nucleus indicated its sorrow at the delay of the Russian army in proceeding to its destination."

The Affairs of Europe.

By the following, it will be seen that men of all nations and classes are deeply interested in the present struggle which is now going on in Europe, and that they consider the future destiny of all nations is herein involved;

PEACE OR WAR.—Of the present warlike attitude of the despotic and democratic instincts in Europe, the N.Y. National Democrat well says:—

"Much as we would do to avoid the waste of blood, we look upon the approach of such a war with satisfaction; better the carnage of one battle-field, where only men are slain than the lingering pestilence, the gibbets and the penal mines, the dungeons and the scourges, the famine and the desolation of despotic power, enduring on from age to age, and sparing neither sex, nor years, nor intellect, nor property. Better the red grave of freedom than the emaciated skeletons who gabber idiocy in the slimy cells of Buda, or waste their groans in the sunless depths of the Siberian caverns. There is a Canaan before the democracy of Europe; but the Red Sea must have swallowed the chariots and the horsemen of Pharoah before the promised land can be enjoyed."

"We have the private information from St. Petersburgh of the most positive nature, and of incontestible truthfulness, brought by the Pacific, which throws some light on the complicated Eastern drama. * * * Nobody in St. Petersburg imagined that open hostilities would so soon begin. The declaration of war by the Sultan, as well as the almost immediate crossing of the Danube, took the Russians both in Bucharest and St. Petersburg wholly unawares. The Czar and his councillors believed to the last that bullying Turkey and her supporters would suffice to bend them to his demands. Now, Nicholas is taught better and is exceedingly dissatisfied with Menchikoff. The Emperor never seriously wished for war, and does not now wish it, though he says that he will never submit to be dictated to by England and France. It is, therefore, impossible to foresee what will be the influence in St. Petersburg of the recent military and diplomatic events. The excitement in Russia, and above all in Moscow, the heart of the empire, whose population act powerfully on the masses of the people through the whole country,—this excitement is on the increase, and of the most dangerous character, because it is religious. The wealthiest merchants of that capital are among the dissenters from the Orthodox Russian Church, and are generally not on good terms with the Government, but now they have offered to furnish millions of rubles to carry on the holy war. This example will be followed by other cities and communities in the interior. On the other hand, we are informed the Servians and Montenegrins are kept quiet as yet by the united exertions of Russia and Austria. If, however, no pacification should take place during the winter * . . . . eve of a terrible conflagration * . . . . . . case it is decided in the . . . . to open a serious campaign, by ... all the elements of general discord. ...kewitch will then be put at the head of the active army, numbering above 3000,000 men, and will march—if he can,—directly on Constantinople. Other corps d'elite, such as that of the Grenadiers and of the Guards, 130,000 in all, under the personal command of the Grand Duke Alexander, the heir apparent, will be drawn up in echelons between the theatre of war and Poland, which will be occupied by some 20,000 men of the Guards of the Interior, all of whom are veterans. In Poland the peasantry take no interest in anything and no chance exists there for a successful insurrection. Preparations on an extensive scale are now being made in the military colonies of cavalry near the borders of the Principalities, and the signal to rise will be given to the Montenegrins and Servians when their services are wanted. As yet, however, the chances are about equal. With the spring we may see displayed the white flag of peace or the blood-red flag of war. Should the latter be the case, Europe will be paralleled into two hostile camps, no power of the second or third order being able to remain neutral. How they will divide it is difficult to foresee precisely,—but peace will be nowhere. The first hostile acts will be marked by blockading the Baltic, the Euxine, and very likely the Mediterranean. The American will be the only neutral flag. EVEN HOLLAND, SWEDEN, and the GERMAN FREE CITIES WILL SOON BE OBLIGED TO SIDE WITH ONE OR THE OTHER OF THE BELLIGERENTS. But God grant that they may not have occasion to make the choice! Assuredly, a general war cannot lead to freedom anywhere."

All who read the above can certainly understand that the writer of it acknowledged that unless affairs are quickly settled, all Europe must soon be involved in a general war. The writer says, "with the spring" we may see peace or war.—War, and that universal, we believe, will prove to be the equal of what is now passing before us; and, that war spoken of in the word of God, as being the last and final struggle, "the battle of the great day of God Almighty."

Father Gavazzi, in his farewell lecture, which he delivered in Tremont Temple, Boston, Friday evening, Dec. 24, says:—

"After the apostacy of Pius the 9th, we would have nothing more to do with Pope or Popery. Our crusade was thenceforward in behalf of Italy, and not in behalf of the Pope. In the approaching crusade we adopt the sword as an emblem of our determination to fight for God and our native land. The sword is to destroy all the enemies of civil and religious liberty in Italy. HE HOPED SHE WOULD NOT REMAIN IN SLAVERY MUCH LONGER. IT IS TIME TO DECIDE HER DESTINY. HE HOPED THAT NEXT YEAR—IN THE BEGINNING OF THE YEAR—THE QUESTION WOULD BE SETTLED, AND SETTLED FOREVER."

Speaking of his mission, he says:—

"It was true that his mission was a soldierly one—a rough one—a mission of destruction, of annihilation to Popery and to Popes; for then, and not till then, would Italy be free.

Therefore, he meant to go to Italy as soon as possible, not to preach the Gospel of Christ, but first to destroy the enemies of the Gospel, and then to build on the ruins of Popes and Popery the pure Gospel of Christ. Between Christ and the Pope there is the sword, and the sword forever."

In a previous lecture, Gavazzi remarked that "Luther was a reformer; I am an exterminator."

Thus we see, that this eloquent and energetic leader expects that this year is to decide forever, whether Italy is to be a free nation or not.

The following sensible remarks we copy from the Lowell Courier of Jan. 6:

The Eastern question has assumed a more defined shape lately than ever before. Hitherto, the Czar had supposed that he could without difficulty bully Turkey and her allies into acquiescence to his demands. Minschikoff had long fortified him in this delusive assumption. The events of the last few weeks, the reported successes of the forces of the Sultan by sea and land, and the despicable character exhibited by his own troops in all their plans and engagements, have at last opened the eyes of the Northern Autocrat to the real status of the case. As a necessary sequence, followed the disgrace of Minschikoff, so long the leading spirit in the foreign diplomacy of Russia. The Rubicon has now been completely passed, and all the world knows it. It only remains for Russia to prosecute hostilities on a scale commensurate with the magnitude of the interests at stake; for it is clear that not only the interests of Russia in the principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia, but also the honor and prestige of the Russian name in Europe is involved. Thus, then does the case stand—war a moral certainty; Russia on the one side, all the western powers of Europe and the sympathies of the whole Christian world on the other—and God help the right!

The Christian Era, alluding to the same subject, also says:

"the year eighteen hundred and fifty-four opens with fearful indications of future commotions. Wars and rumors of wars are heard and the nations of the earth are in commotion. Since our last issue, news has been received of the disastrous defeat of the Turkish fleet. This is only the prelude to the general and complete . . . . in which all nations will act a part, must shortly take place. And as we take a glance at the Eastern World, at this present time, we see all Europe is interested in one thing, viz: "The Russio-Turkish Question," from the fact that what is involved in that question seriously affects all the European powers.

That Turkey is to be the first power to fall, and fall forever, we have not a doubt. Its history is written out by inspiration, and though but few believe it, yet, it is to come to its end and that speedily.

We here add, as the ending of this article, the following extracts from the London Examiner:

Our attention has been drawn to some remarkable passages from conversations reported to have been held by Napoleon with Mr. Barry O'Meara 35 years ago, and published by that person in his book on the captivity at St. Helena.

We do not need to make any comment on them. What we have been writing on this question from week to week for the last six months amounts to little more than an enlarged commentary on these extraordinary expressions of the ex-Emperor of France, which (bating some exaggerations natural to the speaker and the time,) contain the exact rationale of the Eastern question as it stands at this moment.

* * * *

"In the course of a few years," said Napoleon, "Russia will have Constantinople, the greatest part of Turkey and all Greece. Thus I hold to be as certain as if it had already taken place. Almost all the cajoling and flattery which Alexander practiced toward me, was to gain my consent to effect this object. I would not consent, foreseeing that the equilibriam of Europe would be destroyed. In the natural course of things, in a few years Turkey must fall to Russia. The greatest part of her population are Greeks, who, you may say, are Russians. The powers it would injure, and who could oppose it, are England, France, Prussia and Austria. Now, as to Austria, it will be very easy for Russia to engage her assistance by giving her Servia and other provinces bordering on the Austrian dominions, reaching near Constantinople. THE ONLY HYPOTHESIS ON WHICH FRANCE AND ENGLAND MAY EVER BE ALLIED WITH SINCERITY WILL BE IN ORDER TO PREVENT THIS—But even this alliance will not avail.—France, England and Prussia united cannot prevent this. Russia and Austria can at any time effect it. Once masters of Constantinople, Russia gets all the commerce of the Mediteranean, becomes a great naval power, and God knows what may happen," &c.

Notice.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS: Believing as I do that the Lord is coming in 1854, I feel the importance of all believing it, that they may get ready. To believe it understandingly it is better for all to examine for themselves—Bower's History of the Popes—which shows plainly the commencement and ending of the 1260, 1290 and 1335 days. This history is acknowledged by all our learned men, throughout the country, to be the best and most reliable of any work ever issued from the press. They are not for sale in the Book stores, but I have obtained of the publishers all that remains of the edition.—The publishers have always retailed the work (3 vols.) for $6, but I shall sell them for $5. They can be safely sent in any direction by express. I am sure that no brother or sister will regret having them. Then they can act and believe understandingly and also be able to show others. As I have but a limited number, and there will be no more published at present, those who want them had better send soon.

In comparing this History with the Bible you will see, beyond all controversy, that the Lord will come this year. That the Lord may open your understanding and bless you is my prayer. Amen.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS,

PUBLISHED FOR GRATUITOUS CIRCULATION BY BELIEVERS IN THE SPEEDY COMING OF JESUS CHRIST

In the publication of this paper a * ...... object is that the poor may have the Gospel preached unto them, and we desire in all things to imitate Him, who is our great Exampler, and obey his instructions—"Freely ye have received, freely give." We therefore make no charge against subscribers in any case. As pecuniary resources however are indispensable to the prosecution of the enterprise, we would say to those readers of the "Crisis," who are interested in its circulation, that whatever funds may be volumtarily collected for this object, and forwarded to the office, will be gratefully received, and applied to the continuance of the paper.—We have faith in God that while it is His will for the "Crisis" to be circulated, His overruling Providence will furnish the means; and whenever those resources stop, the gate will be shut down and the work cease. The will of God be done.

All friends to the cause of present truth are at liberty not only to give in their names for the paper, but to forward all other names for whom they wish the paper directed, provided only that it be carefully read; and we cordially invite all who are solicitous, candidly to investigate the subject, to present their names as subscribers to the paper.

In respect to communications, we would say that we desire this whole work to be under the special direction of our heavenly Father, and supervision of the Holy Ghost. We seek not honor that cometh from man, but that which cometh from God only. We therefore do not open our columns for polemic war, or the aggrandizement of self, but do most cordially solicit the correspondence of such as feel their hearts deeply imbued with the love of God, and the living truth like fire shut up in their overflowing heart. We have a heartfelt sense of our utter dependence on the arm of God to move forward the work; and we desire that every correspondent's eye may be single to the glory of God, and edification of the little flock, to whom Christ will give the kingdom when He comes without sin unto salvation, for which we wait the present year.

All individuals to whom The World's Crisis is forwarded, are respectfully solicited to ascertain what persons in the place of their residences are desirous of receiving it, and send to us the names of subscribers, together with the Post Office address; also to inform us whether papers are to be sent by mail or express, whether in one bundle, or directed to each individual. Much labor and expense at the office would be saved if some one of the subscribers, in different places, could receive the papers directed to a particular Post Office in a single package, and distribute them to the several subscribers.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

OFFICE OF PUBLICATION, (COURIER BUILDING.)

ISSUED BY BELIEVERS IN THE IMMEDIATE COMING OF CHRIST.

NO. 17 CENTRAL STREET, (UP STAIRS.)

JONAS MERRIAM, LOWELL, MASS., WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1854. EDITOR.

"The Great Day of the Lord is near; it is near, and hasteth greatly."

The economy of grace, by which fallen, degraded humanity is to be elevated from the miry clay and horrible pit, placed upon the rock, and made to sing with angels in a world of light, is worthy the admiration of an adoring universe. In this mighty enterprize—this stupendous achievement, celestial beings are deeply interested—the divine mind active—and, as it were, all heaven absorbed. The work to be accomplished is so worthy the energies of divine power, and the cordial co-operation of angelic hosts, that the highest ransom the universe could pay, even the sacrifice of the Son of God, was cheerfully presented through the infinite riches of a Savior's love. The foundation of this glorious edifice was laid on Calvary's Mount; and under the supervision of the sovereign Architect, the walls have been rising into a holy temple built of "lively stones," till the top-stone is about to be reared with shoutings, "grace, grace unto it." It is the coming of our King in His beauty—our Lord in His glory—that will consummate the work—that will be the finishing stroke to that building, which in its loveliness and glory, surpassing far the beauty of Solomon's temple, is to shine forth as an everlasting monument of divine grace and infinite love. All glory to Prince Immanuel, the founder and finisher of this sanctuary of strength. Let heaven rejoice, and earth be glad—"let the inhabitants of the rock sing—let them shout from the top of the mountains" at the development of such benevolence—at the expression of such paternal regard for the happiness of rebellious man!

Who, that has an interest in the Savior's love, can but rejoice with "joy unspeakable and full of glory" at the increasing evidence, that is poured in upon us from every quarter, that that day "HASTETH GREATLY"—its dawning light breaks in upon the moral darkness of earth like the beauty of the aurora after a gloomy night. O what a thrill of ecstatic joy—what a glow of infinite delight is poured in upon the soul—what a tide of blissful emotions rushes through the entire being of the expectant saint, when "the day dawns and the day-star arises in his heart;" when with triumphant faith, and confident hope, he beholds the heavenly landscape in prospective; when the opening glories of a brighter era shed around him the beams of celestial light.

We stand at a point analogous to the position of John the Baptist, in the transition state from one dispensation to another. Now the spiritual children, who walk and talk with God, as did Zachariah and Elizabeth; who worship daily in His courts, as did Anna the prophetess, look for redemption in Israel; and now as then those, who are not divinely illuminated, look for an amelioration of civil government. At the first Advent, there was a general expectation that a great Prince was to arise, and sit upon the throne of David; hence the visitation of the wise men to Jerusalem, and their adoration of the new born Monarch. Now, also, a star is seen by the Magi of the political world; and a confident expectation is abroad, that all despotic governments are soon to be abolished; and civil institutions, based upon the principles of equity and popular privileges are to be erected on their ruins. As the voice which proclaimed from heaven the glory of Christ, (John 12: 28,) was not equally intelligible to all, some believing it the voice of God, and others the result of natural causes, and therefore, "said that it thundered;" so the sound that is now "gone out through all the earth," even the rumbling of the mighty car, whose swift-revolving wheels cause the pillars of the earth to shake, and the thrones of earthly power to totter on their base—this note of alarm—this tocsin of universal war is, to the saints, that voice of God which once shook the earth, and concerning which, it is said, "yet once more, I shake not the earth only, but also heaven; and this word, yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, that the things that cannot be shaken may remain"—even the everlasting kingdom of God, while to the uninitiated in respect to the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, this commotion is the result of natural causes in the political world, and destined to usher in an era of equitable law, civil liberty, and earthly glory. The thunder is loud enough to be distinctly heard by all, that have ears to hear; but it requires ears that have been circumcised to distinguish its tone of denunciation to a guilty world, and of consolation to the "weary saint as he sighs for home."

At the commencement of the Messianic dispensation, the recipients of evangelical faith were of humble origin, and of modest pretensions; while the despisers of their hope, the crucifiers of the Lord of glory, were exalted in station, and learned in the law. Thus at the present crisis of human affairs, when the Messianic reign is about to be established, the advocates of His immediate coming are but humble instrumentalities employed by the Head of the Church; and talent seems to be created for the occasion; thus demonstrating that passage of Scripture which says: "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called;" while on the other hand the scoffers at our faith—the disbelievers in the blessed hope, are in station, of worldly honor, and pecuniary emolument; men, who enjoy pre-eminence in the Church; so that it may be said as in olden time, "Have any of the rulers believed on Him?"

Says Jesus to His disciples, "Blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear." (Mat. 12: 16.) This benediction is pronounced on them after being assured it was their high prerogative "to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven;" while to the stubborn Jews it was not given; for their ears were dull of hearing, and their eyes had they closed, &c. "Henceforth I call you not servants;" says Jesus, "for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you." (John 15: 15.) "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but He revealeth His secret unto His servants the Prophets." (Amos 3: 7.) Thus we find it a principle of the divine administration, that the evolutions of light in the unfoldings of that economy, are to be clearly perceived by the adherents to "the present truth." Those who are identified with the economy of grace, constituting the agencies through which truth is evolved, and disseminated, must of necessity comprehend the light, which they are the organs of communicating; and understand the truth, which they are the instruments of eliciting from the oracles, and extending for the condemnation of the world, and the edification of the Church. Thus we find that in the entire history of redemption thus far, Prophets have been raised up to foretell coming events; and when those events actually transpire, other servants are endowed with wisdom from on high to recognize and point out the fulfillment of those prophetic delineations. Otherwise how could the purposes of grace be ever accomplished? Since the days of miraculous development, what instrumentalities are to be employed to enlighten the world, and give the signal of impending danger, and direct the Church to her appropriate position, if uninspired men are not to know the will of God, and understand the unfoldings of the gracious plan?

In the destruction of the antediluvian world, and that of the cities of the plain, we have two great, prominent events, which stand forth on the record as everlasting monuments of God's displeasure on the one hand, and merciful interposition on the other; and these two events are held up by our Savior as beacon lights to the Church in subsequent ages, as precedents of a coming day, developing and establishing principles of the divine economy, and illustrating the dealings of our heavenly Father both with the righteous and the wicked. And we are expressly told, that in those instances, while the wicked "knew not" the approaching judgment, and were reckless and insensate as the adamantine rock, in relation to the appalling scenes of desolation before them, the righteous were apprised not only of the event, but of the time of its occurrence. They were "not in darkness, that that day should overtake them as a thief." Thus in every age, those who have enjoyed most intimate union with the Head of the Church, who have been in harmony with God's moral government, have been also identified with His "present truth," and understood the developments of the divine economy at the passing hour; so that they could say with Peter, "this is that which was spoken by the Prophet." It is not in God "to slay the righteous with the wicked; and that the righteous should be as the wicked; that be far from thee," said the Patriarch. Truly as the electric spark darts instantly from one conducting medium to another, and is never attracted by substances that are non conductors of the fluid; just so certainly the bolts of heavenly light on the purposes of God, proceeding from His throne, strike on the hearts of true believers, but are repelled from those who are filled with unbelief.

At the epoch of the flood, "Noah being warned of God, of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith. When the awful catastrophe overwhelmed Sodom and Gomorrah, righteous Lot was divinely forewarned of approaching danger, and fled to the mountains for refuge. On the deliverance of the Jews from Egypt, the same kind interposition of God's hand was manifest; and the seed of Abraham knew the day of their release, so made preparation for the journey to Canaan. The same principle was verified at the destruction of Jerusalem. Those who were identified with the truth, as it is in Jesus, discerned the signs of approaching ruin; and when Jerusalem was encompassed with armies, fled to Pella and were saved; while those who were alienated from God by wicked works, were involved in one universal scene of horror, desolation and ruin.

We are authorized by the laws of analogy to look for a complete development of the same principle of the divine economy, even in our day, for "surely the Lord God will do nothing, but He revealeth His secret unto His servants, the Prophets." But on this subject we are not left to the conjectures of men. God has been pleased to give explicit directions and distinctive tokens, by which the Church may know her position when in proximity to the glorious consummation of their hope. In the ever memorable discourse delivered on the mount of Olives, Jesus forewarned His disciples of the prominent scenes of trial and affliction, through which they were to pass; and the events that were to transpire as harbingers of approaching deliverance. He predicted "wars, and rumors of wars," that nation should rise against nation, "kingdom against kingdom," that there should be "pestilences," "famines" and "earthquakes in divers places," that the saints should be delivered up to be persecuted; and finally added, as precursors of His second coming, the darkening of the sun and moon, the falling of the stars, the shaking of the powers of heaven, the publication of the Gospel throughout the world "as a witness," "distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth."

We have now arrived at the point where nature, as if convulsed, has hung out her signals of distress. The Luminary that rules the day has been enshrouded as in sackcloth of hair; the moon has been enveloped in rayless night; and the falling stars have been scattered like leaves of Autumn; and an infraction has been made upon the order of the physical universe, by the appearance of "blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke" in the heavens; for the phenomena of the Aurora Borealis was unknown in former times, except in the higher latitudes of the north. "The day of His preparation" has been reached: and Nahum's chariots come, with their "flaming torches," thundering along the vales, and "shaking terribly the fir trees," "raging" with noise and violence through the streets of our cities, "justling one against another in the broad ways," and "running like the lightnings." We have come down to "the valley of decision," and the proclamation has gone forth, "Prepare war; wake up the mighty men; let all the men of war draw near." The master spirits of the age have gone forth from land to land, with burning eloquence, and unprecedented ardor, to awaken to action the intellectual and physical energies of the world, preparatory to the battle of Armageddon, and to involve all the powers of earth in the final issue between absolute and democratic rule. The nations have sought redress of grievances, and the enjoyment of constitutional privilege, and popular liberty; but the fires of freedom have been quenched in tears and blood; and now the wail of "distress among nations" comes up from all the earth "into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth," and calls for "the day of vengeance of our God."

Standing as we do at this wonderful era in the history of the world, we may look back into the past, and behold the Seer at Babylon standing in the royal palace, delineating, in the most perfect manner, the rise, progress, decline and fall of the kingdoms of earth, as embodied in the great metallic Image. As he traces the history of these mighty Empires, he declares to Nebuchadnezzar, "Thou, O King, art this head of gold. And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron." (Dan. 2: 38–40.) These universal kingdoms have all successively arisen; the fourth has been divided; and it was during this broken state, that the Prophet saw the mighty stone disengaging itself from the adjacent mountain—when suddenly it fell on the Colossal Statue, dashing it to pieces, and grinding it to powder; "and the wind carried them away: that no place was found for them;" "and the stone, that smote the Image, became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." Thus end the dynasties of the present world, with all their oppressive acts, and discordant element, and unholy principles; and upon their ruins rises the kingdom of Christ, symbolized by the stone, in all its beauty and harmony, its peace and glory. Thus, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." (v. 44.)

The Pouring Out of the 6th and 7th Vial.

BY THE EDITOR.

"And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared."

The book of Revelation is, more than any other portion of the word, a symbolic book.

"The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John.—Rev. 1: 1.

The word here used in the Greek, rendered signify, implies giving instruction by signs or symbols; and if our blessed Savior designs to teach us by symbols, as He did the disciples by parables, it is our wisdom to learn of him whether by literal or figurative instruction.

Water is used as a symbol to represent people.

Rev. 17: 15—"And he said unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the Whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues."

Again, Dan. 7: 2, 3—"Daniel spake and said, I saw in my vision by night, and behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea.

And four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another."

In this connection the sea (waters) represent the masses of people, or nations of the earth, over which those four great beasts or governments reigned.

In Ezekiel 29: 2–11, we read,—

"Son of man, set thy face against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and prophesy against him, and against all Egypt:

Speak, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself.

But I will put hooks in thy jaws, and I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales, and I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers, and all the fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy scales.

And I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers; thou shalt fall upon the open fields; thou shalt not be brought together, nor gathered; I have given thee for meat to the beasts of the field and to the fowls of the heaven.

And all the inhabitants of Egypt shall know that I am the Lord, because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel.

When they took hold of thee by the hand, thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder; and when they leaned upon thee, thou breakest, and madest all their loins to be at a stand.

Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will bring a sword upon thee, and cut off man and beast out of thee.

And the land of Egypt shall be desolate and waste; and they shall know that I am the Lord; because he hath said, The river is mine, and I have made it.

Behold, therefore, I am against thee, and against thy rivers, and I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate, from the tower of Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia.

No foot of man shall pass through it, nor foot of beast shall pass through it, neither shall it be inhabited forty years."

We perceive, by these passages, that waters in general symbolize people—the seas, all the nations of the earth—a river, a particular people or government.

Nearly all Commentators interpret the river Euphrates, as here brought to view, as referring to the Mahommedan power; and so great is the unanimity on this subject, that we need not dwell on this point. The action of the Angel in pouring out his vial on the river Euphrates, indicates that the events to transpire will affect the Mohammedan Empire—the drying up of the waters indicates that the power, designated by the river Euphrates, will be utterly wasted, destroyed and exterminated from the earth. That the wasting process has already commenced will not be denied. In 1820, Greece rose in rebellion against the Turkish government, and has since become an independent nation. In the battle of Navarino no less than 214 vessels of war, belonging to the Turkish government, were destroyed by the combined fleets of England, France and Russia, in less than three hours.*

In 1839, Mehemet Ali, the Pacha of Egypt, wrested from the Porte, Egypt and Syria, and had well nigh overturned the Mahommedan Empire, but was prevented by the interference of the allied sovereigns of Europe. Algeria, also, after a long war, has been taken from the Turks, and become a Province of France. Russia has also made inroads upon Turkey, and circumscribed its power to some extent, and thus has the Mahommedan Empire been gradually wasting away, so that the universal impression seems to be, that the days of that kingdom are numbered, and soon will be finished.

The drying up of the Euphrates was accomplished in order "that the way of the kings of the East might be prepared." It would appear that an analogy is drawn, in this prophecy, between the work here performed, and the preparation for the destruction of Babylon. That mighty achievement under Cyrus was effected by a diversion of the river Euphrates, which prepared the way for the invading forces, composed of troops from the kingdoms of Media and Persia on the east, to enter Babylon through the channel of the river. The action of the sixth vial gathers the kings (kingdoms) of the earth, and of the whole world, to the battle of Armageddon. This prepares the way for the action of the seventh vial, when "GREAT BABYLON comes in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of His wrath."

V. 13. "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet."

The three unclean spirits are the instrumentalities employed to gather the kings or kingdoms of the world, to the battle of the great day of God Almighty. These three spirits or agencies in the political world, proceed out of the three organizations of government, denominated the Dragon, the Beast and the False Prophet. The epithet "unclean," applied to these spirits, may have reference to the impurity of the sources whence they originated, or to the abominations to be accomplished through their mission. Taking it either way, it is peculiarly appropriate.

It is worthy of remark, that there are, at this time, three great systems of false religion, viz:—Mohammedanism, Catholicism and the Greek religion in Europe; and that these three [illegible] with, and sustained by, the different governments of Europe,—the Mohammedan religion being incorporated with the civil goverment of Turkey,—the Catholic religion with the goverments of Austria, France, Naples, &c,—the Greek religion with the Imperial government of Russia.

It is generally admitted that the Beast represents the civil powers that support the Papacy, at the head of which stands France, which has been denominated, by the Popes, the eldest son of the Church. The Dragon is understood by some to refer to the seat of the Eastern Empire of Rome, now under the dominion of the Turks, while others interpret it of Russia. The False Prophet is also understood by some to refer to the religion of the great Mohammedan Impostor, and by others to the delusions of the Greek religion. But in either case, the two powers of Turkey and Russia are involved.

V. 14. "For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

"For they are the spirits of devils," (or demonical influence) "working miracles." The term here rendered "miracles," signifies, according to Liddell and Scott's Lexicon: "A mark by which something is known. This is its peculiar and appropriate meaning; consequently as it signifies a mark, token or signal, it was used by the Greeks to express a signal given for battle. It seems apparent that the idea here presented, is that the three unclean spirits give the signal for the battle of Armageddon. Having given an explanation of the symbols, we now proceed to inquire how far the development of this prophecy has transpired in the history of the world.

Within the year past the Emperor of France has, by his ambassador, made a treaty with the Porte to the effect, that the Catholics should have the control of the holy places at Bethlehem and Jerusalem. This treaty gave umbrage to the Emperor of Russia; and he despatched Prince Menchikoff to annul that treaty, and make another, giving to the Greeks the control of the holy places, and placing the Greeks in the Mohammedan Empire, under the protectorate of the Czar. The Porte, being unwilling to yield to the demands of Russia, Menchikoff withdrew, and the Danubian principalities were occupied by an armed force on the part of Russia. Since that time, the Mohammedan power has been the grand fulcrum, over which to move the world. From the action of these three Empires has gone forth an influence that is stirring the nations to the final conflict; and it is evident that the revolutionary forces which are preparing to explode all the tyrannical governments of earth, are relying on the existing war between Russia and Turkey as about to furnish an opening in Providence for the prosecution of their designs. Indeed we learn from the European Papers that their motto is oriente lux (light from the EAST.) The democratic leaders in Europe consider Turkey as a basis of operations—a rallying point, from which, if the emergency demands it, troops may be marched into Hungary and other places to open the expected campaign, and begin the struggle for liberty. Thus is the way preparing for the kings (kingdoms) of the East to overturn the governments of the old Roman earth; and doubtless the same influence will extend abroad till the powers of "the whole world" (the whole habitable globe) shall come within the vortex of war. This will be "the battle of that GREAT DAY OF GOD ALMIGHTY."

V. 15. "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame."

This startling premonition is thrown in here as a note of alarm, so that when we see the movement toward the final struggle, we may be particularly watchful and prayerful lest we be overtaken in a snare.

V. 16. "And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon."

"And he gathered them together."

"The Great Day of the Lord is near; it is near, and hasteth greatly."

The economy of grace, by which fallen, degraded humanity is to be elevated from the miry clay and horrible pit, placed upon the rock, and made to sing with angels in a world of light, is worthy the admiration of an adoring universe. In this mighty enterprize—this stupendous achievement, celestial beings are deeply interested—the divine mind active—and, as it were, all heaven absorbed. The work to be accomplished is so worthy the energies of divine power, and the cordial co-operation of angelic hosts, that the highest ransom the universe could pay, even the sacrifice of the Son of God, was cheerfully presented through the infinite riches of a Savior's love. The foundation of this glorious edifice was laid on Calvary's Mount, and under the supervision of the sovereign Architect, the walls have been rising into a holy temple built of "lively stones," till the top-stone is about to be reared with shoutings, "grace, grace unto it." It is the coming of our King in His beauty—our Lord in His glory—that will consummate the work—that will be the finishing stroke to that building, which in its loveliness and glory, surpassing far the beauty of Solomon's temple, is to shine forth as an everlasting monument of divine grace and infinite love. All glory to Prince Immanuel, the founder and finisher of this sanctuary of strength. Let heaven rejoice, and earth be glad—"let the inhabitants of the rock sing—let them shout from the top of the mountains" at the development of such benevolence—at the expression of such paternal regard for the happiness of rebellious man!

Who, that has an interest in the Savior's love, can but rejoice with "joy unspeakable and full of glory" at the increasing evidence, that is poured in upon us from every quarter, that that day "HASTETH GREATLY"—its dawning light breaks in upon the moral darkness of earth like the beauty of the aurora after a gloomy night. O what a thrill of ecstatic joy—what a glow of infinite delight is poured in upon the soul—what a tide of blissful emotions rushes through the entire being of the expectant saint, when "the day dawns and the day-star arises in his heart;" when with triumphant faith, and confident hope, he beholds the heavenly landscape in prospective, when the opening glories of a brighter era shed around him the beams of celestial light.

We stand at a point analogous to the position of John the Baptist, in the transition state from one dispensation to another. Now the spiritual children, who walk and talk with God, as did Zachariah and Elizabeth; who worship daily in His courts, as did Anna the prophetess, look for redemption in Isarel; and now as then those, who are not divinely illuminated, look for an amelioration of civil government. At the first Advent, there was a general expectation that a great Prince was to arise, and sit upon the throne of David; hence the visitation of the wise men to Jerusalem, and their adoration of the new born Monarch. Now, also, a star is seen by the Magi of the political world; and a confident expectation is abroad, that all despotic governments are soon to be abolished; and civil institutions, based upon the principles of equity and popular privileges are to be erected on their ruins. As the voice which proclaimed from heaven the glory of Christ, (John 12 : 28,) was not equally intelligible to all, some believing it the voice of God, and others the result of natural causes, and therefore, "said that it thundered;" so the sound that is now "gone out through all the earth," even the rumbling of the mighty car, whose swift-revolving wheels cause the pillars of the earth to shake, and the thrones of earthly power to totter on their base—this note of alarm—this tocsin of universal war is, to the saints, that voice of God which once shook the earth, and concerning which, it is said, "yet once more, I shake not the earth only, but also heaven; and this word, yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, that the things that cannot be shaken may remain"—even the everlasting kingdom of God, while to the uninitiated in respect to the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, this commotion is the result of natural causes in the political world, and destined to usher in an era of equitable law, civil liberty, and earthly glory. The thunder is loud enough to be distinctly heard by all, that have ears to hear; but it requires ears that have been circumcised to distinguish its tone of denunciation to a guilty world, and of consolation to the "weary saint as he sighs for home."

At the commencement of the Messianic dispensation, the recipients of evangelical faith were of humble origin, and of modest pretensions, while the despisers of their hope, the crucifiers of the Lord of glory, were exalted in station, and learned in the law. Thus at the present crisis of human affairs, when the Messianic reign is about to be established, the advocates of His immediate coming are but humble instrumentalities employed by the Head of the Church; and talent seems to be created for the occasion, thus demonstrating that passage of Scripture which says. "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called;" while on the other hand the scoffers at our faith—the disbelievers in the blessed hope, are in station, of worldly honor, and pecuniary emolument; men, who enjoy pre-eminence in the Church; so that it may be said as in olden time, "Have any of the rulers believed on Him?"

Says Jesus to His disciples, "Blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear." (Mat. 12 : 16.) This benediction is pronounced on them after being assured it was their high prerogative "to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven," while to the stubborn Jews it was not given, for their ears were dull of hearing, and their eyes had they closed, &c "Henceforth I call you not servants," says Jesus, "for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you" (John 15 : 15) "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but He revealeth His secret unto His servants the Prophets." (Amos 3 : 7) Thus we find it a principle of the divine administration, that the evolutions of light in the unfoldings of that economy, are to be clearly perceived by the adherents to "the present truth." Those who are identified with the economy of grace, constituting the agencies through which truth is evolved, and disseminated, must of necessity comprehend the light, which they are the organs of communicating; and understand the truth, which they are the instruments of eliciting from the oracles, and extending for the condemnation of the world, and the edification of the Church. Thus we find that in the entire history of redemption thus far, Prophets have been raised up to foretell coming events; and when those events actually transpire, other servants are endowed with wisdom from on high to recognize and point out the fulfillment of those prophetic delineations. Otherwise how could the purposes of grace be ever accomplished? Since the days of miraculous development, what instrumentalities are to be employed to enlighten the world, and give the signal of impending danger, and direct the Church to her appropriate position, if uninspired men are not to know the will of God, and understand the unfoldings of the gracious plan?

In the destruction of the antediluvian world, and that of the cities of the plain, we have two great, prominent events, which stand forth on the record as everlasting monuments of God's displeasure on the one hand, and merciful interposition on the other; and these two events are held up by our Savior as beacon lights to the Church in subsequent ages, as precedents of a coming day, developing and establishing principles of the divine economy, and illustrating the dealings of our heavenly Father both with the righteous and the wicked. And we are expressly told, that in those instances, while the wicked "knew not" the approaching judgment, and were reckless and insensate as the adamantine rock, in relation to the appalling scenes of desolation before them, the righteous were apprised not only of the event, but of the time of its occurrence. They were "not in darkness, that that day should overtake them as a thief." Thus in every age, those who have enjoyed most intimate union with the Head of the Church, who have been in harmony with God's moral government, have been also identified with His "present truth," and understood the developments of the divine economy at the passing hour; so that they could say with Peter, "this is that which was spoken by the Prophet." It is not in God "to slay the righteous with the wicked; and that the righteous should be as the wicked; that be far from thee," said the Patriarch. Truly as the electric spark darts instantly from one conducting medium to another, and is never attracted by substances that are non conductors of the fluid; just so certainly the bolts of heavenly light on the purposes of God, proceeding from His throne, strike on the hearts of true believers, but are repelled from those who are filled with unbelief.

At the epoch of the flood, "Noah being warned of God, of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith. When the awful catastrophe overwhelmed Sodom and Gomorrah, righteous Lot was divinely forewarned of approaching danger, and fled to the mountains for refuge. On the deliverance of the Jews from Egypt, the same kind interposition of God's hand was manifest; and the seed of Abraham knew the day of their release, so made preparation for the journey to Canaan The same principle was verified at the destruction of Jerusalem. Those who were identified with the truth, as it is in Jesus, discerned the signs of approaching ruin, and when Jerusalem was encompassed with armies, fled to Pella and were saved, while those who were alienated from God by wicked works, were involved in one universal scene of horror, desolation and ruin.

We are authorized by the laws of analogy to look for a complete development of the same principle of the divine economy, even in our day, for "surely the Lord God will do nothing, but He revealeth His secret unto His servants, the Prophets." But on this subject we are not left to the conjectures of men. God has been pleased to give explicit directions and distinctive tokens, by which the Church may know her position when in proximity to the glorious consummation of their hope. In the ever memorable discourse delivered on the mount of Olives, Jesus forewarned His disciples of the prominent scenes of trial and affliction, through which they were to pass; and the events that were to transpire as harbingers of approaching deliverance. He predicted "wars, and rumors of wars," that nation should rise against nation, "kingdom against kingdom," that there should be "pestilences," "famines" and "earthquakes in divers places," that the saints should be delivered up to be persecuted; and finally added, as precursors of His second coming, the darkening of the sun and moon, the falling of the stars, the shaking of the powers of heaven, the publication of the Gospel throughout the world "as a witness," "distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth."

We have now arrived at the point where nature, as if convulsed, has hung out her signals of distress. The Luminary that rules the day has been enshrouded as in sackcloth of hair; the moon has been enveloped in rayless night; and the falling stars have been scattered like leaves of Autumn; and an infraction has been made upon the order of the physical universe, by the appearance of "blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke" in the heavens; for the phenomena of the Aurora Borealis was unknown in former times, except in the higher latitudes of the north. "The day of His preparation" has been reached: and Nahum's chariots come, with their "flaming torches," thundering along the vales, and "shaking terribly the fir trees," "raging" with noise and violence through the streets of our cities, "justling one against another in the broad ways," and "running like the lightnings." We have come down to "the valley of decision," and the proclamation has gone forth, "Prepare war; wake up the mighty men; let all the men of war draw near." The master spirits of the age have gone forth from land to land, with burning eloquence, and unprecedented ardor, to awaken to action the intellectual and physical energies of the world, preparatory to the battle of Armageddon, and to involve all the powers of earth in the final issue between absolute and democratic rule. The nations have sought redress of grievances, and the enjoyment of constitutional privilege, and popular liberty; but the fires of freedom have been quenched in tears and blood; and now the wail of "distress among nations" comes up from all the earth "into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth," and calls for "the day of vengeance of our God."

Standing as we do at this wonderful era in the history of the world, we may look back into the past, and behold the Seer at Babylon standing in the royal palace, delineating, in the most perfect manner, the rise, progress, decline and fall of the kingdoms of earth, as embodied in the great metallic Image. As he traces the history of these mighty Empires, he declares to Nebuchadnezzar, "Thou, O King, art this head of gold. And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron." (Dan. 2 : 38–40.) These universal kingdoms have all successively arisen; the fourth has been divided; and it was during this broken state, that the Prophet saw the mighty stone disengaging itself from the adjacent mountain—when suddenly it fell on the Colossal Statue, dashing it to pieces, and grinding it to powder; "and the wind carried them away that no place was found for them;" "and the stone, that smote the Image, became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." Thus end the dynasties of the present world, with all their oppressive acts, and discordant element, and unholy principles; and upon their ruins rises the kingdom of Christ, symbolized by the stone, in all its beauty and harmony, its peace and glory. Thus, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." (v. 44.)

The Pouring Out of the 6th and 7th Vial.

BY THE EDITOR.

"And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared."

The book of Revelation is, more than any other portion of the word, a symbolic book.

"The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John.—Rev. 1 : 1.

The word here used in the Greek, rendered signify, implies giving instruction by signs or symbols; and if our blessed Savior designs to teach us by symbols, as He did the disciples by parables, it is our wisdom to learn of him whether by literal or figurative instruction.

Water is used as a symbol to represent people.

Rev. 17 : 15—"And he said unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the Whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues."

Again, Dan. 7 : 2, 3—"Daniel spake and said, I saw in my vision by night, and behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea.

And four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another."

In this connection the sea (waters) represent the masses of people, or nations of the earth, over which those four great beasts or governments reigned.

In Ezekiel 29 : 2–11, we read,—

"Son of man, set thy face against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and prophesy against him, and against all Egypt;

Speak, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself.

But I will put hooks in thy jaws, and I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales, and I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers, and all the fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy scales.

And I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers; thou shalt fall upon the open fields; thou shalt not be brought together, nor gathered; I have given thee for meat to the beasts of the field and to the fowls of the heaven.

And all the inhabitants of Egypt shall know that I am the LORD, because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel.

When they took hold of thee by the hand, thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder; and when they leaned upon thee, thou breakest, and madest all their loins to be at a stand.

Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will bring a sword upon thee, and cut off man and beast out of thee.

And the land of Egypt shall be desolate and waste; and they shall know that I am the LORD; because he hath said, The river is mine, and I have made it.

Behold, therefore, I am against thee, and against thy rivers, and I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate, from the tower of Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia.

No foot of man shall pass through it, nor foot of beast shall pass through it, neither shall it be inhabited forty years."

We perceive, by these passages, that waters in general symbolize people—the seas, all the nations of the earth—a river, a particular people or government.

Nearly all Commentators interpret the river Euphrates, as here brought to view, as referring to the Mahommedan power; and so great is the unanimity on this subject, that we need not dwell on this point. The action of the Angel in pouring out his vial on the river Euphrates, indicates that the events to transpire will affect the Mohammedan Empire—the drying up of the waters indicates that the power, designated by the river Euphrates, will be utterly wasted, destroyed and exterminated from the earth. That the wasting process has already commenced will not be denied. In 1820, Greece rose in rebellion against the Turkish government, and has since become an independent nation. In the battle of Navarino no less than 214 vessels of war, belonging to the Turkish government, were destroyed by the combined fleets of England, France and Russia, in less than three hours.*

In 1839 Mehemet Ali, the Pacha of Egypt, wrested from the Porte Egypt and Syria, and had well nigh overturned the Mahommedan Empire, but was prevented by the interference of the allied sovereigns of Europe. Algeria, also, after a long war, has been taken from the Turks, and become a Province of France. Russia has also made inroads upon Turkey, and circumscribed its power to some extent, and thus has the Mahommedan Empire been gradually wasting away, so that the universal impression seems to be, that the days of that kingdom are numbered, and soon will be finished.

The drying up of the Euphrates was accomplished in order "that the way of the kings of the East might be prepared." It would appear that an analogy is drawn, in this prophecy, between the work here performed, and the preparation for the destruction of Babylon. That mighty achievement under Cyrus was effected by a diversion of the river Euphrates, which prepared the way for the invading forces, composed of troops from the kingdoms of Media and Persia on the east, to enter Babylon through the channel of the river. The action of the sixth vial gathers the kings (kingdoms) of the earth, and of the whole world, to the battle of Armageddon. This prepares the way for the action of the seventh vial, when "GREAT BABYLON comes in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of His wrath."

V. 13. "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet."

The three unclean spirits are the instrumentalities employed to gather the kings or kingdoms of the world, to the battle of the great day of God Almighty. These three spirits or agencies in the political world, proceed out of the three organizations of government, denominated the Dragon, the Beast and the False Prophet. The epithet "unclean," applied to these spirits, may have reference to the impurity of the sources whence they originated, or to the abominations to be accomplished through their mission. Taking it either way, it is peculiarly appropriate.

It is worthy of remark, that there are, at this time, three great systems of false religion, viz:—Mohammedanism, Catholicism and the Greek religion in Europe; and that these three systems are identified with, and embodied in, the different governments of Europe,—the Mohammedan religion being incorporated with the civil goverment of Turkey,—the Catholic religion with the goverments of Austria, France, Naples, &c,—the Greek religion with the Imperial government of Russia.

It is generally admitted that the Beast represents the civil powers that support the Papacy, at the head of which stands France, which has been denominated, by the Popes, the eldest son of the Church. The Dragon is understood by some to refer to the seat of the Eastern Empire of Rome, now under the dominion of the Turks, while others interpret it of Russia. The False Prophet is also understood by some to refer to the religion of the great Mohammedan Impostor, and by others to the delusions of the Greek religion. But in either case, the two powers of Turkey and Russia are involved.

V. 14. "For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

"For they are the spirits of devils," (or demonical influence) "working miracles." The term here rendered "miracles," signifies, according to Liddell and Scott's Lexicon: "A mark by which something is known. This is its peculiar and appropriate meaning; consequently as it signifies a mark, token or signal, it was used by the Greeks to express a signal given for battle. It seems apparent that the idea here presented, is that the three unclean spirits give the signal for the battle of Armageddon. Having given an explanation of the symbols, we now proceed to inquire how far the development of this prophecy has transpired in the history of the world.

Within the year past the Emperor of France has, by his ambassador, made a treaty with the Porte to the effect, that the Catholics should have the control of the holy places at Bethlehem and Jerusalem. This treaty gave umbrage to the Emperor of Russia; and he despatched Prince Menchikoff to annul that treaty, and make another, giving to the Greeks the control of the holy places, and placing the Greeks in the Mohammedan Empire, under the protectorate of the Czar. The Porte, being unwilling to yield to the demands of Russia, Menchikoff withdrew, and the Danubian principalities were occupied by an armed force on the part of Russia. Since that time, the Mohammedan power has been the grand fulcrum, over which to move the world. From the action of these three Empires has gone forth an influence that is stirring the nations to the final conflict; and it is evident that the revolutionary forces which are preparing to explode all the tyrannical governments of earth, are relying on the existing war between Russia and Turkey as about to furnish an opening in Providence for the prosecution of their designs. Indeed we learn from the European Papers that their motto is oriente lux (light from the EAST.) The democratic leaders in Europe consider Turkey as a basis of operations—a rallying point, from which, if the emergency demands it, troops may be marched into Hungary and other places to open the expected campaign, and begin the struggle for liberty. Thus is the way preparing for the kings (kingdoms) of the East to overturn the governments of the old Roman earth; and doubtless the same influence will extend abroad till the powers of "the whole world" (the whole habitable globe) shall come within the vortex of war. This will be "the battle of that GREAT DAY OF GOD ALMIGHTY."

V. 15. "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame."

This startling premonition is thrown in here as a note of alarm, so that when we see the movement toward the final struggle, we may be particularly watchful and prayerful lest we be overtaken in a snare.

V. 16. "And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon."

"And he gathered them together."

*Encyclopedia American Art. Navarino.

Prof. Stuart renders it "they;" i. e., the three unclean spirits gather them together. The way is now prepared for the outpouring of the seventh Vial which is to deluge the earth with blood.

V. 17. "And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done."

The air is the seat of the winds—the locality of storms. During the sealing process, which we believe is now being accomplished, the four Angels, or powers, hold the four winds; but when the work is finished, the seventh Angel pours out his vial into the air, and the four winds are loosed. "And there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, "IT IS DONE." Awful sentence—appalling declaration to the sinner—"It is done," the servants are sealed, probation ceases—the winds of war rush and destruction overwhelms an ungodly world.

V. 18. "And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great."

"And there were voices." The first definition given to this in the Greek is "roarings," and as the Vial was poured into the air, it would seem to be a more appropriate rendering. The roaring bespeaks the coming storm. As the roaring of the distant tempest accompanied by the lightning's vivid flash and startling thunder-peal are sure precursors of an impending storm, so will the commotions in the political elements portend the doom of earth, and herald forth the final catastrophe that will deluge the world with blood.

Vs. 19–21. "And that great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell; and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath.

And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found.

And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent: and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great."

The sixth Vial falls on the Mohammedan power—the seventh on the kingdoms of Western and Central Europe. The kingdoms that have supported the papacy are the marked monuments of divine displeasure, at which the work of final destruction under the seventh Vial begins. The "great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth" is ruptured in fragments by the earthquake of revolution, and great Babylon drinks the wine-cup of His fury, "because of the sword that he will send among them." Now the ten kingdoms, that have agreed and given their power to the Beast, shall "hate the Harlot, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." But the judgment which commences on the Harlot, does not however end there; for it involves not only the kingdoms of the Roman earth, but ultimately the kingdoms of the whole world, or whole habitable globe; and, as in the visions of Daniel the winds of war "carry them away, that no place is found for them," or, in the language of this prophecy, "every island fled away, and the mountains (governments) were not found."

Said a traveller in Italy not long since "hatred to the papacy is sown over every inch of Roman ground; and the next revolution will sweep away not only the papal power, but the catholic religion." Says Father Gavazzi, "Luther was a Reformer, I am an exterminator;" and we learn that he has hastened to the scene of action in his native Italy, expecting the opening of the campaign in the beginning of the present year. Kossuth also we learn was to sail for Constantinople on the 16th ult. Thus has the hating of the Harlot commenced, and the plan been projected to make her desolate and naked. The trumpet-call to arms has saluted our ears—the nations of the earth are, as it were, wheeling into line of battle between absolute and democratic rule. Soon the earth will be strewed with carnage; and universal anarchy and confusion fill the world with horror. Then will that mighty EARTHQUAKE, whose premonitory throes already agitate the world, shake down the pillars of every throne, and the things that may be shaken will be removed, but we, thank God, receive a kingdom that cannot be moved; "for in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom, shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, AND IT SHALL STAND FOREVER."

DECLARATION OF WAR. There is a report in New York, based, it is said, on private letters, that war has been formally declared by France and England against Russia, and that Lord Palmerston has returned to the Cabinet. Important—if true.

The World's Crisis

LOWELL, JANUARY 18, 1854.

Address to our Readers.

We live at an era of light in every department of knowledge, and particularly at this "time of the end" does the light break from the oracles in relation to the delineation of prophecy. Says Jesus, —"Let your light so shine before men," &c. Now every beam of light that radiates from the heavenly world, and shines upon the hearts of believers in Christ, is intended to dispel some of the dark shades of earth, and illuminate, in a measure, the world. Therefore Jesus gives his disciples specific directions to let their "light SHINE;" "what," says He, "ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops." "Ye are the light of the world." "Ye are the salt of the earth." Inasmuch, therefore, as we are conscious that precious bolts of light have been poured in upon our souls from the heavenly world, we feel under infinite obligations to reflect those sunbeams from glory to all around. Were we to do otherwise, we should be like the four lepers who arrogated to themselves all the riches and provisions of the Syrian camp, and more especially when we call to remembrance the beloved saints of God "scattered abroad," many of whom live retired from the busy scenes of life, and without the facilities which others enjoy to understand the thrilling events transpiring in the earth.

"Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear.
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air."

Such individuals have but little opportunity, it may be, for listening to the eloquence of some able advocate for the cause of truth; but through the medium of a paper they can be reached, and their souls fed and nurtured with the bread of life. Those who have the privilege of attending social meetings, and public worship, and general Conferences, among brethren of like faith, cannot fully sympathize with the scattered and isolated portion of the flock. One great object of the paper is to waft the tidings of the coming glory to the beloved lambs of the flock far and near, if practicable, to earth's remotest bounds. We have seen the glories of the rising dawn, enchanting as Eden, lovely as the morn of creation. Nay, it is the harbinger of a brighter era,—the aurora of immortal day! ! and as the day-star arises in our hearts, and the day-dawn begins to break in such thrilling beams, as it were, of celestial light, we want some mirror to reflect the sunbeams, if possible, INTO EVERY NOOK AND CORNER OF THE GLOBE. For this is, we believe, THE WORLD'S CRISIS—the consummation of the age. GLORY TO GOD, that he has not left us in darkness in relation to these soul-cheering subjects—these transporting themes of contemplation. Tongue cannot utter it,—neither pencil can paint, nor poetry describe the thrilling, JOYOUS, HEAVENLY EMOTIONS of a soul, that can look across the Jordan, and over the battlements of the city, into the land of Canaan,—into the metropolis of glory. And who, O who, that has felt the charm, that has basked in that sunshine, can stand against the dissemination of the heaven-born light? Who would, if they could, dam up the river of salvation, and obstruct the flowing of the healing waters? God, we fully believe, is opening the flood-gates—He is stirring up the virgins to demand the life-giving element, and to open channels everywhere for the spread of truth in the earth; and we call upon all the true-hearted to lift their voices to God, that every wheel in this machinery that is not of God may be obstructed, and its motion cease; but that every portion of the enginery that is set in motion by the finger of God, may move with a constantly increasing velocity, that no opposing influence may block the wheels or obstruct the movement. Pray that the paper may be like a well polished mirror to reflect light and truth; that every page may be illuminated as with the spirit of God. Nay, that the fire of love, and the light of truth may flash through every letter, and thus the sinner be convicted, and the saint comforted, and the church edified in the most holy faith.

Thank God, our work is not our own. As we have heard of our Father even so we speak. We desire no personal aggrandizement, nor centralization of power, and, at least so far as the humble servant of the Church in the editorial department is concerned, he would rather repose with the sleeping saints than stand in the way of the car of salvation. God grant that every stumbling block may be removed, and the chariot roll unobstructed throughout the land.

But while we have no desire for frail, erring man, to be invested with power to "lord it over God's heritage," we do desire CENTRALIZATION IN CHRIST,—concentration of the saints under the banner of His love; and all power to have a safe lodgement in the sovereign HEAD; and each member to move in harmony with Him, and consequently in unison one with another, each acting in his own sphere; and if one man's tongue is like the pen of a ready writer, let him blow the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in the holy mountain; and if another man's pen is like the tongue of a ready speaker, let him employ his gift to the glory of God. Thus we may be like a company of well disciplined soldiers, marching, wheeling, &c., all in martial order, and according to the word of command. Let Jesus be Captain, and each one obedient to His voice, and there will be no confusion or disorder in the ranks. We cannot expect to have the sympathies and co-operation of the world, for they are not of us; but in the name of Him who offered His life to redeem us, we call upon all who profess the faith of Jesus, and believe the present truth, to "love as brethren," to preserve "the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace," to concentrate their energies in sounding the MIDNIGHT CRY, that every slumbering virgin may be aroused, and the Church clad in her shining habiliments of light and love, ready to go in unto "the marriage of the Lamb."

I have remarked the present is an era of light,—let it be also an era of love. In the present enterprise of throwing out the fly-sheets of "The World's Crisis," we move simply because we believe the emergency imperatively demands it. Some of us have been devotedly attached to the Advent Herald, others to the Watchman, others still to the Harbinger. Let those papers move in the sphere they have chosen; but we have a specific work, which we believe God designs to accomplish through our humble instrumentality; and that is, to assist the beloved Bride to make herself ready, and be adorned with her jewels, and robed in "fine linen, clean and white"; that when the opening heavens shall reveal the Son of God, vested in regal power to deliver "every one that is written in the book," she may scale the mount of God," and in her radiant charms, and with resplendent crowns, and enchanting melodies, "be presented faultless before His presence with exceeding joy" ! ! !

We desire no personal controversy, nor collisions with papers, or correspondents, or any one else. We have not attempted to launch a vessel of war, that is to go forth with the thunders of ordinance, or throw out its missiles of death, we would rather send forth a heavy-laden merchant-man, freighted with stores for the household of faith, and wafted by the breezes of heaven. The naval triumphs that we desire are such as were obtained by the transportation of provision to starving Ireland. It is written: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." This is the bread that we wish to convey, and our fervent aspirations ascend to heaven, that the columns of the paper may be replete with saving truth, with such communications as shall be received and digested by the flock, by which they may be strengthened for the pilgrimage, and nurtured unto eternal life.

JONAS MERRIAM.

Conference at Lowell.

A general Conference of Adventists was holden in Lowell, Mass., commencing on Tuesday, 27th ult., and continuing over the Sabbath. It was attended by a large representation of believers in the speedy coming of Christ from Maine to New Jersey. Truly it was a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of His power. It seemed as though the same spirit pervaded every heart, and actuated every mind, and that it was the desire of all to seek the face and favor of God, to obtain a more perfect knowledge of His ways, and learn more of His blessed truth. Thank the Lord for so much of His peaceful presence as we enjoyed through the exercises of the meeting. It seemed as if every jarring element was banished from the place of convocation. It was an ever memorable occasion and we believe all who were in smypathy with the gentle, tender, lamb-like spirit of the meeting could say emphatically, "Lord, it is good for us to be here," and further that while the chariot-wheels of the master delay, they will have reason to bless God for the strength and consolation received at that profitable interview. We could but indulge a secret wish, that all, who have received the impression that the advocates of time are possessed of a "hard spirit," had been present to witness the development of that general feeling, which pervaded the believers in the immediate revelation of their adorable Savior. There was a general manifestation of tenderness and sympathy, indeed, there seemed to be a universal outburst of feeling that was eminently in harmony with the spirit of Him, who offered His life a ransom for the sins of the world. The desire of the brethren was to "do good to all, and especially to the household of faith."

Among other efforts to benefit the Church and enlighten the world, was projected the plan of publishing weekly fly-sheets that may go forth on wings of love and errands of mercy, and with messages of truth, to announce the proclamation, "BEHOLD THE BRIDEGROOM COMETH." The proposition was laid before the Conference by Bro. Couch, to send out gratuitously the startling intelligence as on the wings of every wind, to the extent of those means, which God may supply, even if it be to the ends of the earth. Amen, seemed to be the universal response; and the impression on every mind, so far as we could learn, was "It is the Lord; let Him do what seemeth Him good." Such was the unanimity of feeling, and such the blessing of heaven that descended upon the members of the Conference in connection with this effort, that we could but recognize the hand of our heavenly Father, and humbly submit to the leadings of His Providence, and the teachings of His grace. In the early history of the Advent movement, the believers in the coming of Christ were of one mind, and of one heart, all believing the emergency of the case in the development of present truth, demanded a medium of communication for the specific work of preaching the everlasting Gospel, as symbolized by the flying Angel, (Rev. 14 : 5, 7) "unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to Him; for the hour of His judgment is come." In like manner, and for the same reason, we feel that in consequence of the new development of light showing us clearly, that those who thus went forth in 1843 and 4 fulfilled the first items in the Parable of the Virgins—that the tarrying time has followed—the slumbering and sleeping time been passed through—and that the momentous hour has arrived for startling the Virgins from their slumbers, that they may arise and meet their Lord in peace at His coming—in consequence of the light that now breaks upon the pathway of the Virgins, we need a public organ devoted to the specific purpose of sounding the MIDNIGHT CRY. If a Paper was needed to announce the time of His coming (according to our then belief) in 1843 is not another equally demanded to announce that proclamation of '54, which is the key-stone of the arch, establishing the former position, and finishes up the work with shoutings, "grace, grace unto it!" We take this step in the fear of God, and with good will to man, and the confident expectation that many, who are not now in sympathy with the present movement, will, by the grace of God, be awakened to a sense of the awful crisis impending, and, together with us, be ready, as we trust through the tender mercy of our God we shall, to enter in to the nuptial ceremony and grand coronation scene, when the king shall appear in His beauty, and unvail His lovely face to the adoring bride, even He who is the joy of our hearts, the centre of our hopes, and will be the glory of heaven and "the light thereof."

Much practical instruction was thrown out during the session of the Conference, and particularly in a sermon on the use of the tongues, by Bro. Grant. We believe there were few, if any, that were not profited by the discourse: for every one seemed to inquire in relation to the pungent admonitions of the speaker, Lord, is it I? The position taken was not only that every idle word was a sin against God; but that all ALLUSIONS to the faults of others in their absence, except when we design to warn some one who is in danger from their influence, is decidedly wrong. May the deep impressions made by that sermon be permanent on the heart of every hearer.

We cannot close this account without alluding to the melodies of Zion that were sung at the Conference. The harmony of song is always an index to the harmony of feeling in the assembly. So thrilling and delightful were their notes of praise, their outgushing songs of joy that we could but be reminded of the melodies of '43, when it seemed that a new dispensation of music was opened to the Church. And particularly on taking the parting hand, as they sung that touching air, and melting hymn, "When shall we all meet again"? it seemed to inspire that deep, thrilling emotion, which cannot be delineated with the pen. May we all enjoy that happy meeting again referred to in the hymn, in the new creation, where with immortal tongues, and in one mighty choir, we shall chant the praises of our dear Redeemer, and no more be obliged to sing the parting hymn!!!

☞ We have issued the first number of our paper as soon as the pressure of business would permit.

☞ The new work from the pen of Bro. F. H. Berick, entitled "THE GRAND CRISIS IN HUMAN AFFAIRS; THE LORD SOON TO COME," from which we extract the leading article on the first page, will be ready for delivery in about two weeks. It embodies all the principle features in the argument on time, both Historical, Chronological and Biblical. All who desire to gain information on this momentous subject will be greatly benefited by this publication; in perusing it, we are confident that it will enlighten, strengthen, and confirm every seeker after divine truth.

We hope and trust that it will be speedily scattered far and wide, even to the uttermost parts of the earth, that it may be the means, under the blessing of God, of doing good, and bringing many to a knowledge of the truth.

All orders for the above work should be sent to the "World's Crisis," Lowell, Mass., and they will insure prompt attention.—ED.

"How Long shall it be to the End of These Wonders?"

The above is a question proposed to the man who stood above the waters of the river, by one of the heavenly messengers; the answer to which was as follows: "It shall be for a time, times, and an half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people all these things shall be finished."

What are we to understand by the "end of these wonders?" Answer—The wise shining as the brightness of the firmament. What is it thus to shine? Ans.—"As the sky above us. The image is that of the sky at night, thick set with bright and beautiful stars." [Barnes.] "Shall glisten as the shining of heaven." [Cov. Trans.] Have we on the record of Sacred Scriptures any exhibition of this shining glory? Ans.—We have. In the 17th of Matt., we read that Christ was transfigured; and that "His face did shine as the sun, and His raiment was white as the light." In Rev. 1 : 16, we read, that "His countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength." Will the saints ever thus shine? Yes. When? Ans.—"When He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." How long after He shall appear, before we be transformed to His likeness? Ans.—It shall be in a "moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." Mark. The shining of the saints is not a consequence of their entering the kingdom, but of their being made like unto Christ Hence, if when the Savior comes the transformation of the saints takes place, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye;" they will then, and ever after shine, both at his coming and in the kingdom of God. Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to—to what? Ans.—To the 1335 days. To what part of them? Ans.—To the END. Or, as Job says, "All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change comes." How long is Daniel to go his way—to rest (in the grave)? Ans.—TILL THE END BE. End of what? Ans.—End of the 1335 days. The German text reads, "Thou shalt RISE UP and stand in thy lot." In the above rendering, the RISING UP, is just as much an event to occur at the END of the days, as the standing in his lot. And as he must rise from the grave before he can stand in his lot, we believe the resurrection of the saints will mark the end of the days.

In Coverdale, we read, "Take thy rest, and bide in thy lot." Here the grave is the lot; and according to this rendering, Daniel is to sleep in the grave until the days be ended, look at it which way we will, whether according to this, or the German text; there is no resurrection until the end of the days.

Prof. Stuart renders this clause as follows:—Thou shall rise up FOR thy lot, at the end, &c. Mark, the lot does not come at the end of the days, but the resurrection, as an essential prerequisite, to his standing in his lot. Mathew Henry, in speaking of the numbers 1260, 1290 and 1335, says, that Anti-Christ "at the end of the 1260 should BEGIN TO FALL, but 30 years after he shall be QUITE FALLEN—and whoever lives to the 1335 days will see glorious times indeed." All that wait and come to the end of these days, shall then exclaim this is our God, we have waited for Him and He will save us. May the Lord help us to wait with patience, that we, with all the saints of God, may rise to meet the Lord in the air at the end of the days.

☞ The London correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune asserts that the British Government, through its Minister at Constantinople, has pursued a most treacherous policy towards the Porte. Lord Redcliffe, he says, did not oppose the passage of the Danube by the Turks, believing that they would be whipped by the Russians. But as soon as the battle of Oltenitza was fought, he urged the Sultan not to risk his army, and induced him to give orders for its withdrawal to a defensive position.

☞ As a farther illustration of the hatred to the papacy entertained by the inhabitants of Rome, referred to in our article on the Vials, we cut the following from the Evening Traveller of the 12th inst.:—

The Pope and the Romans. At a meeting of the Universal Democratic Association, at the Stuyvesant Institute, N. Y., on Tuesday evening, a letter of considerable interest was read from C. F. Henningsen. In this letter the writer gives it as his opinion, received from contact with the Romans, that Roman Catholicism in Rome is dead. He says, "Nine-tenths of the people, including the female portion of the population, look on the Pope and his cardinals with contempt as spiritual imposters, and with the utmost hatred and horror as temporal oppressors." From what he heard and saw in Rome, he is convinced that, "within twenty-four hours after the withdrawal of the foreign garrison, the Pope's government will have fallen, and his own life, together with those of his counsellors will have been sacrificed, unless they can save themselves by flight or concealment, which will be very difficult; for every avenue of escape is noted and watched." He adds:

The popular feeling of the Romans has been so embittered by the manifold executions, imprisonments, treacheries and oppressions of their rulers, that I regret to say, I found the popular leaders inexorably deaf to any counsels of moderation and mercy; deliberating merely whether the Holy Father should be hanged from the cross of St. Peter's, or over the so-called tomb of St. Peter within; the least violent stipulating only, that he should be unfrocked as a false priest, and then tried like Charles I., for violating his contract with and murdering his people."

We do not happen to know who this Charles Fred Henningsen is; but if he is a man whose character and means of observation authorize him to speak with confidence—as certainly the fact that his letter was read at a meeting of political refugees would suggest—the declaration made by him and the opinions given deserve consideration.

That the power of the Pope is doomed to destruction, we cannot doubt, while we believe the Bible.

According to the above testimony it may be nearer at hand than the most sanguine have hoped.

Objections to Starting a New Paper Considered.

Since the question of starting a new paper has been agitated, some of our brethren and sisters have entertained fears that it would result in evil. It has been remarked, that it is too late in the day to think of engaging in such an enterprise as that of publishing a paper. But we might with equal propriety, use the same argument against preaching, publishing books, &c. This is indeed a curious objection. Too late in the day? Why? If it is late in the day, and our time short, and the end near, these considerations are sufficient of themselves to bestir us to action; instant and immediate action. And it becomes us to put forth every energy and to bring into requisition all the means within our power, to spread this glorious light We profess to believe that the last note of warning is being heard, the last message is being promulgated that this world will be favored with. And as the number is few who can, or will leave all to declare the warning to a judgment bound world, we feel called upon to issue a flying sheet that shall be scattered east, west, north and south, and thus those souls who do not—who cannot have the privilege of sitting and listening to the argument, may read and ponder it, and thus, under the blessing of God, our effort in this department may prove a blessing to some, both in this and in the world to come. If the work is great, we must do the more. If the time is short, we must work the faster. If it is late in the day, we must, by constant action and effort, redeem the time, because the days are evil. And in our efforts to do this, we expect the blessing of our heavenly Father; nay, more,—we have been blessed already.

Again,—It is said that there are papers enough now, hence no necessity of starting another.

In relation to the other papers we have nothing to say, except to remark that our brethren, who conduct those periodicals, do not feel the same interest, or do not see with us so fully the coming of the Lord this year. And although they have manifested a disposition to publish whatever has been sent to them on the question of time, (at least so far as my communications are concerned,) yet the brethren believing in time have felt that to have the entire control of a small sheet devoted wholly to this question, would subserve their cause better than in any other way. We are conscious that we are doing up our last work. We have no disposition to contend with others, and thus waste our time for naught. Our duty is straight before us. If others oppose our views, and fill the columns of their periodicals with what they may regard as arguments against our position, we have no contention; our business will still be to present the truth as we understand it, and leave the reader to judge of its merits.

Should some be apprehensive that we shall not abide by the principle of minding our own business, and thus prophesy that we shall soon change our mind, we trust they will be disappointed. We would not feel self-confident, knowing that we are poor fallible creatures, but we do pray that God will enable us, and all who may in any way be connected with this paper, to manifest the spirit of Christ, and whether we preach, exhort, or write, to do all things with an eye single to the glory of God, and in reference to the coming of the Lord.

SAD ACCOUNTS FROM THE IONIAN ISLANDS. Private letters from the Islands inform us that Zante and Cephalonia are in a most deplorable condition. The failure of the currant crop for two successive years, has cut off the only supply from which the inhabitants of those two Islands, in particular, derive their main support. The land-owner and the laborer are both suffering under such a calamity; but it is in the latter that want with its attendant horrors weigh heavily, and is crushing them to death. Their circumscribed condition in a physical, as well as in a social sense, renders them helpless in their present misfortune. Any work which could offer the scanty remuneration of twelve cents per day, would, under existing circumstances, be hailed by thousands as a most propitious and heaven-sent boon. But there are no factories to employ the callous hand of the sturdy agriculturist, and it must drop with weakness by his side until death relieves his sufferings. The relief also that might be obtained by spreading out, and thus rendering the intensity of suffering less observable, is rendered very difficult by the liquid element which locks them up in their native island. The Zantiotes in particular are well known throughout Greece as the most industrious, active, laborious and thrifty husbandmen of that part of the world, and yet even their doom also seems inevitable, and starvation is already preying upon that hardy race. During last autumn wild fruits and herbs growing in the fields constituted their food, but dreary winter has deprived them even of their miserable pittance. The Ionian Government has offered to many a free passage to Corfu, where the olive crop promised well this year, and where they might find employment in helping their fellow-islanders to get in their crop. This measure will no doubt afford some relief, however small, to the sufferings of many. Hundreds have already availed themselves of it, and our correspondent tells us that the haggard features of hundreds of starving beings, of all ages and sexes, leaving their sunny island in search of bread, presented a picture which drew out tears from the eyes of all who witnessed it.—[Boston Traveller.

Present Truth.

"Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: behold, the judge standeth before the door."—[James 5: 9.

There never was a time, when the above admonition was more applicable than at the present. In fact, the connection in which it is found, determines its application to be at a point of time when the church are, in a special sense, waiting for the coming of the Lord. Says the Apostle:—

"Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain.

The term "grudge," is rendered to groan or grieve (marg.) We are told by critics that the term as used here, signifies to be "fretful and impatient; or, to use a common word which more exactly expresses the sense, that of grumbling;" that is, to manifest a disposition of complaining, or finding fault. The causes of this complaining are various and many. Some persons are all the time grumbling because Mr. A. or B. is favored with more of this world's goods than themselves; thus neglecting the exhortation of the Apostles, "Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content."

Should a person possess greater talent, or be blessed with more pleasing qualities than another, that same envious, grumbling disposition is manifested. Or if others do not act as they may think best, or walk in the way that they have marked out; instead of trying to convince them of their folly, the tongue of defamation is let loose, and thus the breach is made wider and wider, until all confidence is destroyed or lost. Now how much better it would have been to follow out the instruction of the Apostle, when he says:—

"Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

Again, if a word is dropped in their hearing against any person or persons whom they respect, they are impatient until they have peddled it here and there, adding little by little to it, to make it emphatic; and should any person be disposed to question its truthfulness, they are, as it were, ready to confirm it by an oath. The primitive church were troubled with just such a class of busy-bodies, females, and the Apostle refers to this very class, when he says:—

"And withal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idlers, but tattlers also, and busy-bodies, speaking things which they ought not.

I will therefore that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house, give none occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully.

For some are already turned aside after Satan."

This class of persons do more to disturb the peace of a neighborhood, than all others put together. Pollock, in speaking of Madam Rumor, says:—

"Twas slander filled her mouth with lying words;
Slander, the foulest whelp of sin; the man
In whom the spirit entered was undone.
His tongue was set on fire of hell; his heart
Was black as death; his legs were faint with lust
To propagate the lie his soul had framed;
His pillow was the peace of families
Destroyed, the sigh of innocence reproached,
Broken friendships and the strife of brotherhoods."

The Psalmist in speaking of this same class, says:—

"Whoso privily slandereth his neighbor, him will I cut off: him that hath an high look and a proud heart will not I suffer.

Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me; he that walketh in a perfect way, he shall serve me.

He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house: he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight.

I will early destroy all the wicked of the land; that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the Lord."

And in the language of the Apostle, we say:—

"Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.

Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil-speaking, be put away from you, with all malice:

And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

"Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned." Condemnation is sure to follow this "grumbling" disposition. If there is anything to move one from this course of evil speaking, it is the announcement, "Behold, the judge standeth before the door." O, may the Lord help each and every one to examine himself, and to remember the language of the Savior, "That for every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." B.

Extracts from Letters.

Sister Bragg writing from Orrington, Me., says:—

"Bro. Merriam,—I do feel thankful to the good Lord that I ever heard the last note of warning that is dying away on a fire-doomed world. And above all, I do thank God that I have a heart to love and believe the truth of the Lord's coming this year. O, glory be to God forever, for the cheering prospect of getting home this year, where we shall shout our suffering over,—and where we shall delight ourselves in the abundance of peace forever; have the privilege of walking the streets of pure gold, and then surround the tree of life and eat and live forever. O, that will be blessed indeed. And the thought that it is all to be realized so soon "makes me almost impatient for Christ to appear." Truly, this is a blessed hope, big with immortality and eternal life, and is like an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and it enters to that within the vail. I can truly say, the way does grow brighter and brighter. "The way the holy prophets went," I will go. There is peace in believing and joy in the Holy Ghost; I truly have the hundred fold (that is promised) and the cheering promise that I shall live forever. O, praise the Lord for the foretaste of the heavenly rest that remains to all the saints of God. If it be so blessed to anticipate the day of glory, what must it be to be there surrounded with the glory of God forever freed from temptation and evils, unnumbered of this bitter life. To think we are safe at home with the pure and the blest of all ages! O, glory, hallelujah to the Lamb of God forever, for a hope so "much divine." "We can trials well endure," knowing the trial of our "faith is more precious than gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, it will be found unto praise and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ" our Lord. I can "gladly wander up and down and smile at toil and pain." Yes,

"I'll suffer now, I'll triumph then,
I'll die for Jesus here;
In that bright world I'll live again,
A conqueror's crown to wear."

O praise the Lord is the language of my heart. I feel like a pilgrim and a stranger in an enemy's land, surrounded as a lamb among wolves, yet Jesus is for me, and is more than all that can be against me. I do feel it safe trusting in Israel's God, believing he is able to keep all I have entrusted to his care. O how good the Lord has been to me, to call me out from the world, and the proud Church, and give me a heart to love the truth that is now meat in due season. O glory be to Jesus, that I do by his grace stand out from the world, looking for Jesus to come and finish our faith, which we shall realize in 1854. Pilgrim Brother, be of good cheer, the land is near. Soon you will cast off all your desponding feelings, and rejoice forever with the blood-washed company who shall have overcome by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony. O my heart is often made glad when viewing by faith the blissful plains of Eden restored. There is no other class of people on the earth that can rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory but those who have the Gospel hope in the soul. I do feel and believe with all my heart, that we are on the track of truth, and on the last stepping-stone, and the next step, we are at the bar of God, to give an account of the deeds done in the body. O solemn thought, the destinies of all are eternally fixed this year. The days of Daniel's rest in the grave will run out, and he will stand in his lot, and all will then the harvest know. And my prayer is that we may be found without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, for a spotless Church is to be presented to the Father this year. When I see that one sin will forever banish us from God's presence, I tremble and ask, Shall I be able to stand the grand review of the great I AM? I do feel like being wholly the Lord's, soul and body; wholly given up to God, willing to do anything that will be for the glory of God. I truly love the straightness of the way, and I mean to walk in it by the grace of God, and I know the Lord has ever helped me in time of need, and I do praise His heavenly name. He remains the same yesterday, to-day and forevermore. Amen.

O praise the Lord for the fulfilment of prophecy; we see the abomination of desolation is in the past, and according to the prediction of Christ, immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun was darkened, for which I give God glory, with all my heart, for that marked the ending of the 1260 years; and as long as we can rely on the words of Christ, we can believe beyond a shadow of doubt that 75 years from 1779 we shall see Daniel stand in his lot as promised by the Angel; and Job will see his Redeemer for himself; and Isaiah, with his dead men, will awake and sing the song of victory. O hallelujah to God and the Lamb forever and ever—praise the Lord. I do feel that I am on the wing for glory, and that nothing shall be able to separate me from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus my Lord."

Brother Thomas, writing from Gardner, says:—

"I am still striving for the kingdom, and I do believe that we are almost there; the battle almost fought; the victory almost won. Soon the last prayer will be offered; the last sigh, the last groan be heard, and the last tear be shed. Glory to God that eternal salvation is so near. God grant that we may soon meet in that glorious kingdom, that bright world, where all, ALL will be immortal, to part no more forever, even, forever and ever, is the prayer of your unworthy Brother in Christ, hoping for speedy redemption.

JEDEDIAH THOMAS, JR."

The Midnight Cry.

Bro. Merriam:—Being among that class of believers, professing to be looking for the Lord to come this year, and that we are living under the sound of the "Midnight cry," I desire to advance a few thoughts in relation to this all-absorbing theme, as they may present themselves to my mind.

In the parable of the virgins, we learn that the cry at midnight is given after a tarrying time, during which tarrying time, the virgins all slumbered and sleep. All can see, by the different figures presented in this parable, that the state of the church is not the same during the tarrying time that it was at the time of their going forth, as brought to view in the beginning of the parable. To be slumbering and sleeping, implies simply, insensibility or inaction; they gradually grow insensible in respect to the great truth which caused them as a class of people to move out, or "go forth to meet the Bridegroom," and thus fulfill the first item marked in their history, by the Lord himself.

But at midnight a cry is raised, "Behold the bridegroom cometh." Then, when the church comes to this third point in their history, of course they will see that the "going forth" and the tarrying time is in the past. Then certainly the sounding of the "cry at midnight" marks the ending of the tarrying time. But what constitutes the cry at midnight? Simply the proclamation that the Lord is coming, and coming at a given point of time. Why? Because the same instrumentalities are used by the Lord in giving the cry at midnight, that were used in causing the church to make her first movement in going forth to meet the Bridegroom. All can see, I trust, that this principle is clearly shown in the giving of the cry, by carefully examining every point. 1. They have their lamps by them when they "go forth," and of course they keep their lamps by them while they are slumbering and sleeping; for as soon as the cry is heard they all arise and trim them. (the lamps.)

By the symbol of a lamp we all recognize the Bible, and I think we see by the Parable that it was light on that portion of Scripture, which relates to the time of our Savior's return, that caused them to "go forth." 2. During the tarrying time, that light begins to wane and darkness imperceptibly creeps over the church in regard to the specific time of the coming of the Lord. That this is the case, all will clearly see by the expression, "then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps;" showing of course that darkness had been gathering on the very portions of Scriptures from which they obtained the first light in regard to the Savior's return at a definite point of time. 3. As the Lord used the Watchman, or "the servants of the householder," in leading out the church in that first movement, they, therefore, will be the messengers to give the cry at midnight; as they give the warning, the virgins begin to trim their lamps. But some may think this last position is assumption. Then I would call your attention to what the Lord said in regard to the servants who are made rulers of his household, &c., in the preceding chapter. Mark that expression, "Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing." Paul says: "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God; how can they hear without a preacher," &c. Then as faith cometh by hearing, can we not see this principle involved in the sounding of the cry? I think we can; for the church would not search into the evidences of the Savior's return, unless notice had been given of that event being near by the good servant, giving meat in due season.

We are now living in an age of the world when there is a proclamation going through the land that "the Lord is coming in 1854." It stirs the whole Advent body. At the commencement of this announcement, there were but a few who sympathized with it; but we daily saw their number increasing, and light continued to break in on their pathway, which served to comfort and strengthen them, although Satan raged, and all the hosts of this ungodly age were to desperation driven, as if they would attempt to prostrate the plan and will of God,—but in their attempts, completely failing, and only proving it true, that nothing can be done against the truth, but for the truth. That the truth will triumph at last, all are ready to acknowledge; consequently all who are identified with the truth, by living it out daily before the world, will also triumph with it; while those who have turned a deaf ear to the oft-repeated admonitions of Christ and his followers, will share in a fatal and overwhelming defeat.

We have looked over carefully all the arguments which thus far have been offered against the present reckoning of the prophetic periods, and that has been presented to show that the Church could not know the time of our Savior's return, and we acknowledge that up to this present time we have seen nothing to cause us to alter our present position in regard to the ending of the days, and the sounding of the "Cry at Midnight." Consequently, we expect Jesus will come this year. We believe he will come; and that the long, dark night of disappointment, occasioned by the passing the time, is receding. We thank God for it. We rejoice in view of that coming day, which is to end the suffering of God's beloved and chosen ones. The great day of the Lord is at hand; the final redemption of the Church is soon to be witnessed.

Dear reader, think of these things. Ponder, for a moment, the joy of the saints, as they see the opening heavens reveal their blessed Redeemer! Hear them exclaim, "Lo! this is our God; we have waited for Him; we will be glad and rejoice in His salvation." See the beloved ones, who now lie under the clods of the valley, as the trump of God sounds; behold them coming forth clothed in immortality. Hear them shout, "O grave! where is thy victory? O death! where is thy sting? Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." They are saved from death forever, and they are to be like the angels, "to die no more."

We would here call your attention to the timely warnings of God's people, and beg of you in the name of Jesus to heed them, and quit the ways of sin immediately; prepare to meet your God in peace, that you may have an inheritance in the world to come, "The saint's happy home."

To ———

DEAR BROTHER: It is always the most agreeable to our feelings to dwell upon the reward of the righteous, than the final doom of the hypocrite and self-deceived, but both characters are presented in the Bible for our admonition. They are represented by the man who came to the wedding, without the garment prepared for that occasion. Satisfied with his own raiment, he rejects that provided by the king, and thus offers him an insult. The command is given to the servants—"Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Again, they are represented by the evil servant saying in his heart, "My Lord delayeth his coming," while he outwardly manifests his unbelief by smiting his fellow servant, who is giving "meat in due season." The Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and cut him in sunder, and appoint him his portion with hypocrites and unbelievers." They are also represented by the foolish virgins, who outwardly manifested faith in the coming of the Bridegroom, but had not oil sufficient to enable them to abide in the light, until he came. They sought admittance to the marriage festival, but were forbidden to enter. Says the Savior, "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name have done wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you, depart from me, ye workers of iniquity." Such is the portion of hypocrites and unbelievers. May the Lord save us from so fearful a doom.

From this subject we may learn the value of faith. Without it we cannot please God. Not a faith confined to a few detached portions of the Bible, relating to the life of Christ, his death, and our justification thereby. It should take a broader range, and strike out into the open field of prophecy, not only that portion of it which refers to past generations, but that also which has a bearing upon our own time, and likewise that which refers to the future glory.

There is too much indefiniteness to our faith. It is too much contracte . Many confound feelings with faith, and when their emotional exercises are deep, they suppose they have a good deal of faith, and yet if interrogated why they believe? they would be unable to reply. Again, they will talk much about the happiness of Heaven, and be very much animated by the prospect of it, and yet if asked where their future home was to be located, or in what its future glory was to consist, they could not tell. "Enough for us to know," say they, that we shall be very happy somewhere? They seem to be afraid of an intellectual faith; a faith that they can give the reason of. Thus large portions of the Bible remain untouched by them; those which clearly describe the nature of the Christian's hope, they have no interest in; they have professedly so much faith in the Lord, that they can very willingly leave all that with him, without acquainting themselves with it, and thus they remain ignorant of many of the "exceeding great and precious promises," which, if they but understand, would afford them a solid basis upon which to rest, and enable them understandingly to give a reason of their hope.

Although this is a land of Bibles, and all have the privilege of reading the word of God for themselves, yet there is, after all, but a limited acquaintance with its most precious truths, and very little genuine faith in its teachings. How few deem it to be the word of the Lord to us, just as really so, as though we heard it uttered amid the vivid lightnings, and deep thunderings of Mount Sinai. Yet we ought thus to regard it. "And if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall we not escape if we refuse him that speaketh from heaven. See then that ye refuse not him that speaketh."

But it is often said by those who wish apparently to evade the face of truth, "It is no matter what we believe if we are only sincere, or if we only live right." We find however by an examination of the sacred oracles, that we must have a correct faith, in order to produce right action. We see this plainly illustrated in the case of Noah, and of Lot. The majority found to their sorrow, that it was of some consequence what they believed, and so will also the Gentiles, if they refuse to hearken unto the voice of the Lord, and through fear of reproach turn away from the messages of the gospel.

Does it not, my brethren, judging from the past history of the church, become our duty to search the Scriptures that we may understand what the specific message is to us, or the present truth, for our day, that we may keep pace with prophecy—that we may follow the "shining light," and walk in harmony with the developments of the divine plan, and by a living, intellectual faith in the word of the Lord, be enabled to overcome the world? Leaving this subject now for your consideration, I subscribe myself your unworthy

War has been officially declared against Turkey by Persia.

Stockholm, 26th. The King has invited the Diet to nominate a small number of its members possessing its entire confidence, to whom, as a secret committee, Government may make important communications. It is believed that the Government wishes to bring some momentous facts connected with foreign affairs to the knowledge of the Diet.

THE GREEK CHURCH occupies an important position at this time with reference to the Eastern question. The supreme supervision of the church, which belongs in right to the Patriarch of Constantinople, has of late been claimed by the Autocrat of Russia. Meantime, though the Czar proclaimed himself the protector of all the Greek Christians in the East, the patriarchs of that communion, within the dominions of the Porte, have with one consent given in their solemn and bona fide adhesion to the Court of Constantinople. The Greek Church is very widely extended as regards territory, and comprehends a large part of Greece and the Grecian Isles, Wallachia, Moldavia, Egypt, Abyssinia, Nubia, Lybia, Arabia, Mesopotamia, Syria, Silicia, and Palestine; to which may be added the whole of the Russian Empire in Europe, a great part of Siberia in Asia, Astrakan, Casan, and Georgia. It comprehends more extent of territory than the Latin Church, with all the branches that have sprung from it.—[Lowell Courier.

THE EUROPEAN NEWS. Although the report that the combined fleets had entered the Black Sea is not confirmed, yet accounts from all quarters—from Constantinople, from Vienna, from Paris, and from London—agree in stating that orders to that effect have been given. Probably the next arrival will bring positive intelligence that the Rubicon has been passed. We look upon this movement as tantamount to a declaration of war on the part of England and France against Russia, and we may expect to hear that the next great naval movement in the Black Sea will be the blockade of Sebastopol.—[Lowell Journal.

Napoleon the Third is "mad"—awfully "mad." It is stated that the intelligence of the affair at Sinope aroused him to the utmost indignation, and that the French and English Governments immediately sent orders to their Admirals, Hamelin and Dundas, to enter the Black Sea without delay, and the combined fleets are now undoubtedly cruising in the Euxine. This indicates that the progress of events is forcing the great maritime powers into a course of more decided action than they have taken hitherto. Until this step, the Sultan has received, from his professed allies, only impediments to the vindication of his rights.—[Lowell Courier.

God Knows it All.

In the dim recess of thy spirit's chamber,
Is there some hidden grief thou may'st not tell?
Let not thy heart forsake thee; but remember,
His pitying eye, who sees and knows't well,
God knows all!

And art thou tossed on billows of temptation,
And would'st do good, but evil oft prevails?
O think amid the waves of tribulation
When earthly hopes, and earthly refuge fails—
God knows it all!

And dost thou sin, thy deed of shame concealing
In some dark spot no human eye can see,
Then walk in pride, without one sigh revealing
The deep remorse that should disquiet thee?
God knows it all!

Art thou oppressed and poor, and heavy hearted,
The heavens above thee in thick clouds arrayed,
And well nigh crushed; no earthly thought imparted,
No friendly voice to say, "Be not afraid!"
God knows it all!

Art thou a mourner; are thy tear drops flowing
For one too early lost to earth and thee?
The depths of grief no human spirit knowing,
Which moan in secret, like the moaning sea?
God knows it all!

Dost thou look back upon a life of sinning?
Forward, and tremble for thy future lot?
There's One who sees the end from the beginning,
Thy tear of penitence is unforgot—
God knows it all!

Then go to God. Pour out your hearts before Him;
There is no grief your Father cannot feel:
And let your grateful songs of praise adore Him—
To save, forgive, and every wound to heal.
God knows it all—God knows it all!

Thoughts Suggested on Christmas Day.

It is the anniversary of the Savior's birth. More than eighteen hundred years ago, while shepherds were keeping watch over their flocks by night, an heavenly messenger appeared to them on the plains of Judea, and announced the important event. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of heavenly host praising God, and saying "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will toward men." All heaven was interested in the birth of him who came to restore that which was lost. O, methinks they expected a dying world to echo back the shout, "Glory to God in the highest!" The shepherds heard with joy the glad tidings, and hastened to pay homage to the babe of Bethlehem.

The wise men beheld the prophetic star rising in the eastern horizon, and quickly sped in their way to the Jewish capital, with the inquiry, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" eager to worship him, and lay their treasures of gold, frankincense and myrrh at his feet. A little from this, and we enter the temple. Behold that aged man taking in his arms an infant child. His countenance is radiant with heavenly joy. He speaks,—let us list to his words,—"Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." That is good old Simeon, and the babe of Bethlehem. Unto him had it been "revealed by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ." And there was yet another—a mother in Israel of more than fourscore years, who departed not from the temple, but served God with fasting and prayers night and day, waiting for the consolation of Israel. An harbinger had gone before to prepare the way of the Lord,—her ear had caught the glad announcement,—her heart had received the joyous tidings, and when the infant Jesus was brought into the temple by Mary, his mother, the Holy Ghost witnessed with her spirit, that it was her long-looked for Lord, "and she gave thanks likewise, and spoke of him to all them that looked for redemption in Israel."

There is much of thrilling interest clustering around the first Advent of our Savior. Upon one point, my mind, however, particularly lingers. He came not unannounced. John the Baptist had proclaimed his coming. His mission had been foretold by the prophets. He was "the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his path straight!" The predicted star arose. The angelic host gave witness to his birth. Some there were, who hailed the tokens with joy, and "waited for the consolation," and "looked for redemption in Israel." And now my mind's eye glances forward to the returning again of the King of kings! Will there be any waiting ones to greet him, as at the first Advent? A Simeon and an Anna looking for redemption? Will there be any messenger to go before and prepare his way? Any "day-star" to indicate the dawn of "perfect day?" What meaneth the apostle when he gives the assurance "unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation?"

Who are those we find exclaiming, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, this is our Lord, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation?" Why does the Savior command us to learn a parable of the fig-tree, after certain signs have appeared? Why is the evil servant antagonistical to the good, who is giving "meat in due season?" What induces the inquiry of the scoffer, "Where is the promise of his coming?" The wise can understand and reply.

Pleasant Valley, Jan. 7, 1854.

* * * Several of us have been trying, by the Grace of God, to serve him in that manner that may be well-pleasing in his sight; yet we have our trials and temptations like the rest of frail humanity. But we feel that our trials will soon come to an end. Praise the Lord, our redemption draweth nigh. O, I bless the living God that he is leading on his people by the sure word of Prophecy. Yes, O yes, the pathway grows brighter and brighter and will unto the perfect day. The light that shone at first in our pathway, tells us now that we are right, for the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come, it will not tarry. And if there was ever a time when the Advent Church should bestir themselves it is now; and if there was ever a time when we needed the Holy Ghost in our vessels it is now. O may the Lord prepare us for the coming crisis. Yours in the faith of the Gospel.

Wm. J. Ripley.

"The World's Crisis."

Such, then, is the motto that has been chosen as the heading of this paper, and considering the present state of the world, we deem it very applicable. That the world in general, is coming to a crisis, and an important indeed, no statesman, of any nation, disputes, or even denies; on the contrary, they themselves proclaim it. They have for some years past, called the attention of the people to it, in the most thrilling language. On this subject Kossuth in various speeches alluded to it frequently as being the "turning point of centuries in the destines of mankind," as the "approach of universal danger," the "decisive struggle," the "approaching death of despotic governments," "the drawing near of the judgment," &c., &c. We also hear from the eloquent Choate, of Boston, in a speech which he delivered in Faneuil Hall, near two years since, that it seemed to him "as if the prerogatives of crowns, and the rights of men, and the boarded-up resentments and revenges of a thousand years, were about to unsheath the sword for a conflict, in which blood shall flow, as in the apocalyptic vision, to the bridles of the horses, and in which a whole age of men shall pass away; in which the great bell of time shall sound out another hour,—in which society itself shall be tried by fire and steel—whether it is of nature and of nature's God, or not." Although we no longer hear the eloquence of Kossuth in this our land, still he keeps on his work, but in a quiet and sure manner, and has been waiting for that time to come, when he would make his last speech, which he declared would be, "Up, boys, and follow me!" and already it is announced in our journals that Kossuth has been invited to Constantinople by the Porte, and that he was soon to depart accordingly for that place. Nor is the leading champion of oppressed Hungary alone in his desires and expectations. Within less than a year our chief cities have been visited by Father Gavazzi, an Italian patriot, who has declared plainly his object was in wearing the emblem of the sword, that in the coming struggle, he would be the first to use the sword to regain the independence of his beloved Italy, and to exterminate Popes and Popery forever from its shores. The same desire of liberty from the yoke of oppression still burns in the bosoms of the brave Poles, and they still entertain hopes of yet being free; they, too, are deeply interested in the common struggle, and many of them are offering their services to the Porte. And in fact there is not a nation, in Europe but that is deeply interested in and connected with, the coming struggle. Asia is stirred within herself by the Chinese rebellion; and even the desire of war by the Persians has been shown by acts of hostility upon the Turks. The war spirit is to be found in every civilized nation. Even Egypt lends her aid to the Turks, and thus takes a part in what will yet prove to be the fulfillment of Jer. 25: 30–33 and of Rev. 16: 14, by which we learn that the slain of the Lord shall be from one end of the earth even to the other end of the earth, and that they shall not be lamented, gathered or buried.

Reader, is not the world rapidly coming to a crisis? Surely every one acquainted with the affairs of the political world, will answer, yes. And every Bible student, who is posted up in relation to the fulfillment of God's word, will answer, Amen. All nature cries out, yes; and God's faithful word sheds light abroad, and by faith we can see the everlasting kingdom of God set up, and established forever under the whole heavens, after what is now dreaded, and is even upon us, shall have passed, and passed forever. The believer, whose name is written in the Lamb's book of Life, will alone survive the "coming crisis," and reach the home of peace and joy, which will be prepared for his abode.

With such things before us, is not the right motto chosen? and can we not, through this medium, raise the warning voice to the world in order to aid seekers after truth to get a knowledge of what is before them, that they to meet their God, and escape all those things that are coming on the earth.

Catholicism.

This power has been of late making rapid strides in influence all over this country, although in an underhanded way; still its progress does not wholly pass unnoticed. That the Catholics intend to rule in this country, it is very evident; but God has marked the history of that power, and therefore we can safely rest assured that although there may be a struggle on their part to gain the ascendency, it will only be its last, its final death struggle.

The following extract we copy from the Lowell Herald:

What is Catholicism? Out West Catholicism is this: The Mayor of Pittsburg, Pa., calls on Bishop O'Connor of that place, to prevent the firing of cannon and beating of drums on the Sabbath. Catholicism makes the Bishop more powerful than the executive magistrate. The editor of the Wayne (Id.) Times is assaulted by Archibald McDonald, a Catholic, for publishing an article on "Popery and popular education," in which he comments on an extract he makes from the Shepard of the Valley, a Catholic paper of St. Louis. McDonald is arraigned before the Mayor, pleads guilty, and alleges in vindication of the offence, that he was insulted by the article in the Times. Catholicism denies the liberty of the press. The Shepard of the Valley, the St. Louis Catholic paper, declares that it is not an advocate of religious freedom, and says—"We repeat we are not. The liberty to believe contrary to the church is the liberty to believe a lie; the liberty to believe otherwise than she permits us, is the liberty to pollute the imagination and abuse the mind. From such liberty may we and those we love at all times be preserved." Reader, such is Catholicism—as it is out West. Is it different here? If so, would it be different had it the same chance to display itself?

☞ The Lowell Courier of Jan. 2d, speaking of the past year, say:

"During the year just expired, what momentous events have transpired in our own country, in Europe, in the Orient, and on the borders of China! Amid "wars and rumors of wars," verily, we have lived fast. * * * * * *

Last year was prolific of great events. The consummation of the Napoleonic coup d'tat; the disgrace of President Arista in Mexico; the re-enthronement of Santa Anna; the formation and (rumored) dissolution of the coalition ministry in England; the dethronement of the King of Ava; * * * the revolutionization of China and Japan; the stirring scenes in the war on the Danube; the repetition of the usual follies and crimes in the South American States; the discovery of comets; signs in the heavens and perplexities in the earth."

On seeing the above we are forcibly reminded of the Savior's language, found in Luke 21: 15, "and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity," &c.

Everything upon the earth testifies to the truthfulness of our position; and during this year the world will realize the greatness of all events; but who will be left to record the mighty wonders of 1854?

Consternation Caused by the Comet.

The recent Comet seems to have excited great alarm and consternation in some parts of the Globe. A gentleman writing from Turkey says:

"The splendid comet now visible after sun-set on the western horizon, has attracted the attention of everybody here. The public impression is that this celestial phenomenon is to be considered as a sign of war; and their astrologers, to whom appeal is made for an interpretation, make the most absurd declarations; and I have been laughed at by very intelligent Turks, when I ventured to persuade them that great Nature's laws do not care about troubles here below."

The Madrid journals announced that the appearance of the comet had excited great alarm in that city, as it was considered a symptom of divine wrath, and a pressage of war, pestilence, and affliction for humanity.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Times said—"The comet which has lately been visible has served a priest not far from Warsaw with materials for a very curious sermon. After having summoned his congregation together, although it was neither Sunday nor festival, and shown them the comet, he informed them that this was the same star that appeared to the Magi at the birth of our Savior, and that it was only visible now in the Russian Empire. Its appearance on this occasion was to intimate to the Russian eagle, that the time was now come for it to spread its wings, and embrace all mankind in one orthodox and sanctifying church. He showed them the star now standing immediately over Constantinople, and explained that the dull light of the nucleus indicated its sorrow at the delay of the Russian army in proceeding to its destination."

The Affairs of Europe.

By the following, it will be seen that men of all nations and classes are deeply interested in the present struggle which is now going on in Europe, and that they consider the future destiny of all nations is herein involved:

Peace or War.—Of the present warlike attitude of the despotic and democratic instincts in Europe, the N. Y. National Democrat well says:—

"Much as we would do to avoid the waste of blood, we look upon the approach of such a war with satisfaction; better the carnage of one battle-field, where only men are slain than the lingering pestilence, the gibbets and the penal mines, the dungeons and the scourges, the famine and the desolation of despotic power, enduring on from age to age, and sparing neither sex, nor years, nor intellect, nor property. Better the red grave of freedom than the emaciated skeletons who gabber idiocy in the slimy cells of Buda, or waste their groans in the sunless depths of the Siberian caverns. There is a Canaan before the democracy of Europe; but the Red Sea must have swallowed the chariots and the horsemen of Pharaoh before the promised land can be enjoyed."

"We have private information from St. Petersburg of the most positive nature, and of incontestible truthfulness, brought by the Pacific, which throws some light on the complicated Eastern drama. * * * Nobody in St. Petersburg imagined that open hostilities would so soon begin. The declaration of war by the Sultan, as well as the almost immediate crossing of the Danube, took the Russians both in Bucharest and St. Petersburg wholly unawares. The Czar and his councillors believed to the last that bullying Turkey and her supporters would suffice to bend them to his demands. Now, Nicholas is taught better and is exceedingly dissatisfied with Menchikoff. The Emperor never seriously wished for war, and does not now wish it, though he says that he will never submit to be dictated to by England and France. It is, therefore, impossible to foresee what will be the influence in St. Petersburg of the recent military and diplomatic events. The excitement in Russia, and above all in Moscow, the heart of the empire, whose population act powerfully on the masses of the people through the whole country,—this excitement is on the increase, and of the most dangerous character, because it is religious. The wealthiest merchants of that capital are among the dissenters from the Orthodox Russian Church, and are generally not on good terms with the Government, but now they have offered to furnish millions of rubles to carry on the holy war. This example will be followed by other cities and communities in the interior. On the other hand, we are informed the Servians and Montenegrins are kept quiet as yet by the united exertions of Russia and Austria. If, however, no pacification should take place during the winter, Europe is really on the eve of a terrible conflagration. In such a case it is decided in the Imperial Councils to open a serious campaign, by stirring up all the elements of general discord. Pashkewitch will then be put at the head of the active army, numbering above 300,000 men, and will march—if he can,—directly on Constantinople. Other corps d'elite; such as that of the Grenadiers and of the Guards, 130,000 in all, under the personal command of the Grand Duke Alexander, the heir apparent, will be drawn up in echelons between the theatre of war and Poland, which will be occupied by some 20,000 men of the Guards of the Interior, all of whom are veterans. In Poland the peasantry take no interest in anything, and no chance exists there for a successful insurrection. Preparations on an extensive scale are now being made in the military colonies of cavalry near the borders of the Principalities, and the signal to rise will be given to the Montenegrins and Servians when their services are wanted. As yet, however, the chances are about equal. With the spring we may see displayed the white flag of peace or the blood-red flag of war. Should the latter be the case, Europe will be paralelled into two hostile camps, no power of the second or third order being able to remain neutral. How they will divide it is difficult to foresee precisely,—but peace will be nowhere. The first hostile acts will be marked by blockading the Baltic, the Euxine, and very likely the Mediterranean. The American will be the only neutral flag. Even Holland, Sweden, and the German free Cities will soon be obliged to side with one or the other of the Belligerents. But God grant that they may not have occasion to make the choice! Assuredly, a general war cannot lead to freedom anywhere."

All who read the above can certainly understand that the writer of it acknowledged that unless affairs are quickly settled, all Europe must soon be involved in a general war. The writer says, "with the spring" we may see peace or war. War, and that universal, we believe, will prove to be the sequel of what is now passing before us; and, that war spoken of in the word of God, as being the last and final struggle, "The battle of the great day of God Almighty."

Father Gavazzi, in his farewell lecture, which he delivered in Tremont Temple, Boston, Friday evening, Dec. 24, says:—

After the apostasy of Pius the 9th, we would have nothing more to do with Pope or Popery. Our crusade was thenceforth [illegible] of Italy, and not in behalf of the Pope. In the approaching crusade we adopt the sword as an emblem of our determination to fight for God and our native land. The sword is to destroy all the enemies of civil and religious liberty in Italy. He hoped she would not remain in slavery much longer. It is time to decide her destiny. He hoped that next year—in the beginning of the year—the question would be settled, and settled forever."

Speaking of his mission, he says:—

"It was true that his mission was a soldierly one—a rough one—a mission of destruction, of annihilation to Popery and to Popes; for then, and not till then, would Italy be free.

Therefore he meant to go to Italy as soon as possible, not to preach the Gospel of Christ, but first to destroy the enemies of the Gospel, and then to build on the ruins of Popes and Popery the pure Gospel of Christ. Between Christ and the Pope there is the sword, and the sword forever."

In a previous lecture, Gavazzi remarked that "Luther was a reformer; I am an exterminator."

Thus, we see, that this eloquent and energetic leader expects that this year is to decide forever, whether Italy is to be a free nation or not.

The following sensible remarks we copy from the Lowell Courier of Jan. 6:

The Eastern question has assumed a more defined shape lately than ever before. Hitherto, the Czar had supposed that he could without difficulty bully Turkey and her allies into acquiescence to his demands. Menschikoff had long fortified him in this delusive assumption. The events of the last few weeks, the reported successes of the forces of the Sultan by sea and land, and the despicable character exhibited by his own troops in all their plans and engagements, have at last opened the eyes of the Northern Autocrat to the real status of the case. As a necessary sequence, followed the disgrace of Menschikoff, so long the leading spirit in the foreign diplomacy of Russia. The Rubicon has now been completely passed, and all the world knows it. It only remains for Russia to prosecute hostilities on a scale commensurate with the magnitude of the interest at stake; for it is clear that, not only the interest of Russia in the principalites of Moldavia and Wallachia, but also the honor and prestige of the Russian name in Europe is involved. Thus, then, does the case stand—war a moral certainty; Russia on the one side, all the Western powers of Europe and the sympathies of the whole Christian world on the other—and God help the right!

The Christian Era, alluding to the same subject, also says:

"The year eighteen hundred and fifty-four opens with fearful indications of future commotion. Wars and rumors of wars are heard and the nations of the earth are in commotion. Since our last issue, news has been received of the disastrious defeat of the Turkish fleet. This is only the prelude to the general and complete defeat of the Mahommedan Empire. God has predicted the downfall of Turkey and soon, in spite of all the efforts of European powers, this overthrow will come."

Testimony after testimony might be added to the above, all going to show that what is marked in God's word as the struggle in which all nations will act a part, must shortly take place. And as we take a glance at the Eastern World, at this present time, we see all Europe is interested in one thing, viz: "The Russio-Turkish Question," from the fact that what is involved in that question seriously affects all the European powers.

That Turkey is to be the first power to fall, and fall forever, we have not a doubt. Its history is written out by inspiration, and though but few believe it, yet it is to come to its end and that speedily.

We here add, as the ending of this article, the following extracts from the London Examiner:

Our attention has been drawn to some remarkable passages from conversations reported to have been held by Napoleon with Mr. Barry O'Meara 35 years ago, and published by that person in his book on the captivity at St. Helena.

We do not need to make any comment on them. What we have been writing on this question from week to week for the last six months amounts to little more than an enlarged commentary on these extraordinary expressions of the ex-Emperor of France, which (bating some exaggerations natural to the speaker and the time,) contain the exact rationale of the Eastern question as it stands at this moment.

* * * * *

"In the course of a few years," said Napoleon, "Russia will have Constantinople, the greatest part of Turkey and all Greece. This I hold to be as certain as if it had already taken place. Almost all the cajoling and flattery which Alexander practiced toward me, was to gain my consent to effect this object. I would not consent, foreseeing that the equilibrium of Europe would be destroyed. In the natural course of things, in a few years Turkey must fall to Russia. The greatest part of her population are Greeks, who, you may say, are Russians. The powers it would injure, and who could oppose it, are England, France, Prussia and Austria. Now, as to Austria, it will be very easy for Russia to engage her assistance by giving her Servia and other provinces bordering on the Austrian dominions, reaching near Constantinople. The only hypothesis on which France and England may ever be allied with sincerity will be in order to prevent this. But even this alliance will not avail. France, England and Prussia united cannot prevent this. Russia and Austria can at any time effect it. Once masters of Constantinople, Russia gets all the commerce of the Mediterranean, becomes a great naval power, and God knows what may happen," &c.

For the World's Crisis.

Notice.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: Believing as I do that the Lord is coming in 1854, I feel the importance of all believing it, that they may get ready. To believe it understandingly it is better for all to examine for themselves—Bower's History of the Popes—which shows plainly the commencement and ending of the 1260, 1290 and 1335 days. This history is acknowledged by all our learned men, throughout the country, to be the best and most reliable of any work ever issued from the press. They are not for sale in the Book stores, but I have obtained of the publishers all that remains of the edition.—The publishers have always retailed the work (3 vols.) for $6, but I shall sell them for $5. They can be safely sent in any direction by express. I am sure that no brother or sister will regret having them. Then they can act and believe understandingly and also be able to show others. As I have but a limited number, and there will be no more published at present, those who want them had better send soon.

In comparing this History with the Bible you will see, beyond all controversy, that the Lord will come this year. That the Lord may open your understanding and bless you is my prayer, Amen.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

Published for Gratuitous Circulation, by Believers in the Speedy Coming of JESUS CHRIST.

Office of Publication, 27 Central St.
(Up Stairs,) Lowell, Mass.

☞ All communications or orders for papers, &c., should be directed to "The World's Crisis," Lowell, Mass.

JONAS MERRIAM, . . . EDITOR.

S. J. VARNEY, Printer, . . 27 Central St.

In the publication of this paper a leading object is that the poor may have the Gospel preached unto them, and we desire in all things to imitate Him, who is our great Exampler, and obey his instructions—"Freely ye have received, freely give." We therefore make no charge against subscribers in any case. As pecuniary resources however are indispensable to the prosecution of the enterprise, we would say to those readers of the "Crisis," who are interested in its circulation, that whatever funds may be voluntarily collected for this object, and forwarded to the office, will be gratefully received, and applied to the continuance of the paper. We have faith in God that while it is His will for the "Crisis" to be circulated, His overruling Providence will furnish the means; and whenever those resources stop, the gate will be shut down and the work cease. The will of God be done.

All friends to the cause of present truth are at liberty, not only to give in their names for the paper, but to forward all other names to whom they wish the paper directed, provided only, that it may be carefully read; and we cordially invite all who are solicitous, candidly to investigate the subject, to present their names as subscribers to the paper.

In respect to communications, we would say that we desire this whole work to be under the special direction of our heavenly Father, and supervision of the Holy Ghost. We seek not honor that cometh from man, but that which cometh from God only. We therefore do not open our columns for polemic war, or the aggrandisement of self, but do most cordially solicit the correspondence of such as feel their hearts deeply imbued with the love of God, and the living truth like fire shut up in their bones, to communicate from the fullness of an overflowing heart. We have a heartfelt sense of our utter dependence on the arm of God to move forward the work; and we desire that every correspondent's eye may be single to the glory of God, and edification of the little flock, to whom Christ will give the kingdom when He comes without sin unto salvation, for which we wait the present year.

All individuals to whom The World's Crisis is forwarded, are respectfully solicited to ascertain what persons in the place of their residence are desirous of receiving it, and send to us the name of subscribers, together with their Post Office address; also to inform us whether papers are to be sent by mail or express, whether in one bundle, or directed to each individual. God Knows it All.

In the dim recess of thy spirit's chamber,
Is there some hidden grief thou may'st not tell?
Let not thy heart forsake thee; but remember,
His pitying eye, who sees and know's't well,
God knows all!

And art thou tossed on billows of temptation,
And would'st do good, but evil oft prevails?
O think amid the waves of tribulation
When earthly hopes, and earthly refuge fails—
God knows it all!

And dost thou sin, thy deed of shame concealing
In some dark spot no human eye can see,
Then walk in pride, without one sigh revealing
The deep remorse that should disquiet thee?
God knows it all!

Art thou oppressed and poor, and heavy hearted,
The heavens above thee in thick clouds arrayed,
And well nigh crushed; no earthly thought imparted,
No friendly voice to say, "Be not afraid!"
God knows it all!

Art thou a mourner; are thy tear drops flowing
For one too early lost to earth and thee?
The depths of grief no human spirit knowing,
Which moan in secret, like the moaning sea?
God knows it all!

Dost thou look back upon a life of sinning?
Forward, and tremble for thy future lot?
There's One who sees the end from the beginning,
Thy tear of penitence is unforgot—
God knows it all!

Then go to God. Pour out your hearts before Him;
There is no grief your Father cannot feel:
And let your grateful songs of praise adore Him—
To save, forgive, and every wound to heal.
God knows it all—God knows it all!

Thoughts Suggested on Christmas Day.

It is the anniversary of the Savior's birth. More than eighteen hundred years ago, while shepherds were keeping watch over their flocks by night, an heavenly messenger appeared to them on the plains of Judea, and announced the important event. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of heavenly host praising God, and saying "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will toward men." All heaven was interested in the birth of him who came to restore that which was lost. O, methinks they expected a dying world to echo back the shout, "Glory to God in the highest!" The shepherds heard with joy the glad tidings, and hastened to pay homage to the babe of Bethlehem.

The wise men beheld the prophetic star rising in the eastern horizon, and quickly sped in their way to the Jewish capital, with the inquiry, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" eager to worship him, and lay their treasures of gold, frankincense and myrrh at his feet. A little from this, and we enter the temple. Behold that aged man taking in his arms an infant child. His countenance is radiant with heavenly joy. He speaks,—let us list to his words,—"Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." That is good old Simeon, and the babe of Bethlehem. Unto him had it been "revealed by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ." And there was yet another—a mother in Israel of more than fourscore years, who departed not from the temple, but served God with fasting and prayers night and day, waiting for the consolation of Israel. An harbinger had gone before to prepare the way of the Lord,—her ear had caught the glad announcement,—her heart had received the joyous tidings, and when the infant Jesus was brought into the temple by Mary, his mother, the Holy Ghost witnessed with her spirit, that it was her long-looked for Lord, "and she gave thanks likewise, and spoke of him to all them that looked for redemption in Israel."

There is much of thrilling interest clustering around the first Advent of our Savior. Upon one point, my mind, however, particularly lingers. He came not unannounced. John the Baptist had proclaimed his coming. His mission had been foretold by the prophets. He was "the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his path straight!" The predicted star arose. The angelic host gave witness to his birth. Some there were, who hailed the tokens with joy, and "waited for the consolation," and "looked for redemption in Israel." And now my mind's eye glances forward to the returning again of the King of kings! Will there be any waiting ones to greet him, as at the first Advent? A Simeon and an Anna looking for redemption? Will there be any messenger to go before and prepare his way? Any "day-star" to indicate the dawn of "perfect day?" What meaneth the apostle when he gives the assurance "unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation?"

Who are those we find exclaiming, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, this is our Lord, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation?" Why does the Savior command us to learn a parable of the fig-tree, after certain signs have appeared? Why is the evil servant antagonistical to the good, who is giving "meat in due season?" What induces the inquiry of the scoffer, "Where is the promise of his coming?" The wise can understand and reply. M. D. W.

Pleasant Valley, Jan. 7, 1854.

* * * Several of us have been trying, by the Grace of God, to serve him in that manner that may be well-pleasing in his sight; yet we have our trials and temptations like the rest of frail humanity. But we feel that our trials will soon come to an end. Praise the Lord, our redemption draweth nigh. O, I bless the living God that he is leading on his people by the sure word of Prophecy. Yes, O yes, the pathway grows brighter and brighter and will unto the perfect day. The light that shone at first in our pathway, tells us now that we are right, for the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come, it will not tarry. And if there was ever a time when the Advent Church should bestir themselves it is now; and if there was ever a time when we needed the Holy Ghost in our vessels it is now. O may the Lord prepare us for the coming crisis. Yours in the faith of the Gospel.

"The World's Crisis."

Such, then, is the motto that has been chosen as the heading of this paper, and considering the present state of the world, we deem it very applicable. That the world in general, is coming to a crisis, and an important indeed, no statesman, of any nation, disputes, or even denies; on the contrary, they themselves proclaim it. They have for some years past, called the attention of the people to it, in the most thrilling language. On this subject Kossuth in various speeches alluded to it frequently as being the "turning point of centuries in the destines of mankind," as the "approach of universal danger," the "decisive struggle," the "approaching death of despotic governments," "the drawing near of the judgment," &c., &c. We also hear from the eloquent Choate, of Boston, in a speech which he delivered in Faneuil Hall, near two years since, that it seemed to him "as if the prerogatives of crowns, and the rights of men, and the hoarded-up resentments and revenges of a thousand years, were about to unsheath the sword for a conflict, in which blood shall flow, as in the apocalyptic vision, to the bridles of the horses, and in which a whole age of men shall pass away; in which the great bell of time shall sound out another hour,—in which society itself shall be tried by fire and steel—whether it is of nature and of nature's God, or not." Although we no longer hear the eloquence of Kossuth in this our land, still he keeps on his work, but in a quiet and sure manner, and has been waiting for that time to come, when he would make his last speech, which he declared would be, "Up, boys, and follow me!" and already it is announced in our journals that Kossuth has been invited to Constantinople by the Porte, and that he was soon to depart accordingly for that place. Nor is the leading champion of oppressed Hungary alone in his desires and expectations. Within less than a year our chief cities have been visited by Father Gavazzi, an Italian patriot, who has declared plainly his object was in wearing the emblem of the sword, that in the coming struggle, he would be the first to use the sword to regain the independence of his beloved Italy, and to exterminate Popes and Popery forever from its shores. The same desire of liberty from the yoke of oppression still burns in the bosoms of the brave Poles, and they still entertain hopes of yet being free; they, too, are deeply interested in the common struggle, and many of them are offering their services to the Porte. And in fact there is not a nation, in Europe but that is deeply interested in and connected with, the coming struggle. Asia is stirred within herself by the Chinese rebellion; and even the desire of war by the Persians has been shown by acts of hostility upon the Turks. The war spirit is to be found in every civilized nation. Even Egypt lends her aid to the Turks, and thus takes a part in what will yet prove to be the fulfillment of Jer. 25: 30–33 and of Rev. 16: 14, by which we learn that the slain of the Lord shall be from one end of the earth even to the other end of the earth, and that they shall not be lamented, gathered or buried.

Reader, is not the world rapidly coming to a crisis? Surely every one acquainted with the affairs of the political world, will answer, yes. And every Bible student, who is posted up in relation to the fulfillment of God's word, will answer, Amen. All nature cries out, yes; and God's faithful word sheds light abroad, and by faith we can see the everlasting kingdom of God set up, and established forever under the whole heavens, after what is now dreaded, and is even upon us, shall have passed, and passed forever. The believer, whose name is written in the Lamb's book of Life, will alone survive the "coming crisis," and reach the home of peace and joy, which will be prepared for his abode.

With such things before us, is not the right motto chosen? and can we not, through this medium, raise the warning voice to the world in order to aid seekers after truth to get a knowledge of what is before them, that they to meet their God, and escape all those things that are coming on the earth.

Catholicism.

This power has been of late making rapid strides in influence all over this country, although in an underhanded way; still its progress does not wholly pass unnoticed. That the Catholics intend to rule in this country, it is very evident; but God has marked the history of that power, and therefore we can safely rest assured that although there may be a struggle on their part to gain the ascendency, it will only be its last, its final death struggle.

The following extract we copy from the Lowell Herald:

What is Catholicism? Out West Catholicism is this: The Mayor of Pittsburg, Pa., calls on Bishop O'Connor of that place, to prevent the firing of cannon and beating of drums on the Sabbath. Catholicism makes the Bishop more powerful than the executive magistrate. The editor of the Wayne (Id.) Times is assaulted by Archibald McDonald, a Catholic, for publishing an article on "Popery and popular education," in which he comments on an extract he makes from the Shepard of the Valley, a Catholic paper of St. Louis. McDonald is arraigned before the Mayor, pleads guilty, and alleges in vindication of the offence, that he was insulted by the article in the Times. Catholicism denies the liberty of the press. The Shepard of the Valley, the St. Louis Catholic paper, declares that it is not an advocate of religious freedom, and says—"We repeat we are not. The liberty to believe contrary to the church is the liberty to believe a lie; the liberty to believe otherwise than she permits us, is the liberty to pollute the imagination and abuse the mind. From such liberty may we and those we love at all times be preserved." Reader, such is Catholicism—as it is out West. Is it different here? If so, would it be different had it the same chance to display itself?

"During the year just expired, what momentous events have transpired in our own country, in Europe, in the Orient, and on the borders of China! Amid "wars and rumors of wars," verily, we have lived fast. * * * * *

Last year was prolific of great events. The consummation of the Napoleonic coup d'tat; the disgrace of President Arista in Mexico; the re-enthronement of Santa Anna; the formation and (rumored) dissolution of the coalition ministry in England; the dethronement of the King of Ava; * * * the revolutionization of China and Japan; the stirring scenes in the war on the Danube; the repetition of the usual follies and crimes in the South American States; the discovery of comets; signs in the heavens and perplexities in the earth."

On seeing the above we are forcibly reminded of the Savior's language, found in Luke 21: 15, "and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity," &c.

Everything upon the earth testifies to the truthfulness of our position; and during this year the world will realize the greatness of all events; but who will be left to record the mighty wonders of 1854?

Consternation Caused by the Comet.

The recent Comet seems to have excited great alarm and consternation in some parts of the Globe. A gentleman writing from Turkey says:

"The splendid comet now visible after sun-set on the western horizon, has attracted the attention of everybody here. The public impression is that this celestial phenomenon is to be considered as a sign of war; and their astrologers, to whom appeal is made for an interpretation, make the most absurd declarations; and I have been laughed at by very intelligent Turks, when I ventured to persuade them that great Nature's laws do not care about troubles here below."

The Madrid journals announced that the appearance of the comet had excited great alarm in that city, as it was considered a symptom of divine wrath, and a pressage of war, pestilence, and affliction for humanity.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Times said—"The comet which has lately been visible has served a priest not far from Warsaw with materials for a very curious sermon. After having summoned his congregation together, although it was neither Sunday nor festival, and shown them the comet, he informed them that this was the same star that appeared to the Magi at the birth of our Savior, and that it was only visible now in the Russian Empire. Its appearance on this occasion was to intimate to the Russian eagle, that the time was now come for it to spread its wings, and embrace all mankind in one orthodox and sanctifying church. He showed them the star now standing immediately over Constantinople, and explained that the dull light of the nucleus indicated its sorrow at the delay of the Russian army in proceeding to its destination."

The Affairs of Europe.

By the following, it will be seen that men of all nations and classes are deeply interested in the present struggle which is now going on in Europe, and that they consider the future destiny of all nations is herein involved:

Peace or War.—Of the present warlike attitude of the despotic and democratic instincts in Europe, the N. Y. National Democrat well says:—

"Much as we would do to avoid the waste of blood, we look upon the approach of such a war with satisfaction; better the carnage of one battle-field, where only men are slain than the lingering pestilence, the gibbets and the penal mines, the dungeons and the scourges, the famine and the desolation of despotic power, enduring on from age to age, and sparing neither sex, nor years, nor intellect, nor property. Better the red grave of freedom than the emaciated skeletons who gabber idiocy in the slimy cells of Buda, or waste their groans in the sunless depths of the Siberian caverns. There is a Canaan before the democracy of Europe; but the Red Sea must have swallowed the chariots and the horsemen of Pharaoh before the promised land can be enjoyed."

"We have private information from St. Petersburg of the most positive nature, and of incontestible truthfulness, brought by the Pacific, which throws some light on the complicated Eastern drama. * * * Nobody in St. Petersburg imagined that open hostilities would so soon begin. The declaration of war by the Sultan, as well as the almost immediate crossing of the Danube, took the Russians both in Bucharest and St. Petersburg wholly unawares. The Czar and his councillors believed to the last that bullying Turkey and her supporters would suffice to bend them to his demands. Now, Nicholas is taught better and is exceedingly dissatisfied with Menchikoff. The Emperor never seriously wished for war, and does not now wish it, though he says that he will never submit to be dictated to by England and France. It is, therefore, impossible to foresee what will be the influence in St. Petersburg of the recent military and diplomatic events. The excitement in Russia, and above all in Moscow, the heart of the empire, whose population act powerfully on the masses of the people through the whole country,—this excitement is on the increase, and of the most dangerous character, because it is religious. The wealthiest merchants of that capital are among the dissenters from the Orthodox Russian Church, and are generally not on good terms with the Government, but now they have offered to furnish millions of rubles to carry on the holy war. This example will be followed by other cities and communities in the interior. On the other hand, we are informed the Servians and Montenegrins are kept quiet as yet by the united exertions of Russia and Austria. If, however, no pacification should take place during the winter, Europe is really on the eve of a terrible conflagration. In such a case it is decided in the Imperial Councils to open a serious campaign, by stirring up all the elements of general discord. Pashkewitch will then be put at the head of the active army, numbering above 300,000 men, and will march—if he can,—directly on Constantinople. Other corps d'elite; such as that of the Grenadiers and of the Guards, 130,000 in all, under the personal command of the Grand Duke Alexander, the heir apparent, will be drawn up in echelons between the theatre of war and Poland, which will be occupied by some 20,000 men of the Guards of the Interior, all of whom are veterans. In Poland the peasantry take no interest in anything, and no chance exists there for a successful insurrection. Preparations on an extensive scale are now being made in the military colonies of cavalry near the borders of the Principalities, and the signal to rise will be given to the Montenegrins and Servians when their services are wanted. As yet, however, the chances are about equal. With the spring we may see displayed the white flag of peace or the blood-red flag of war. Should the latter be the case, Europe will be paralelled into two hostile camps, no power of the second or third order being able to remain neutral. How they will divide it is difficult to foresee precisely,—but peace will be nowhere. The first hostile acts will be marked by blockading the Baltic, the Euxine, and very likely the Mediterranean. The American will be the only neutral flag. Even Holland, Sweden, and the German free Cities will soon be obliged to side with one or the other of the Belligerents. But God grant that they may not have occasion to make the choice! Assuredly, a general war cannot lead to freedom anywhere."

All who read the above can certainly understand that the writer of it acknowledged that unless affairs are quickly settled, all Europe must soon be involved in a general war. The writer says, "with the spring" we may see peace or war. War, and that universal, we believe, will prove to be the sequel of what is now passing before us; and, that war spoken of in the word of God, as being the last and final struggle, "The battle of the great day of God Almighty."

Father Gavazzi, in his farewell lecture, which he delivered in Tremont Temple, Boston, Friday evening, Dec. 24, says:—

After the apostasy of Pius the 9th, we would have nothing more to do with Pope or Popery. Our crusade was thenceforward in behalf of Italy, and not in behalf of the Pope. In the approaching crusade we adopt the sword as an emblem of our determination to fight for God and our native land. The sword is to destroy all the enemies of civil and religious liberty in Italy. He hoped she would not remain in slavery much longer. It is time to decide her destiny. He hoped that next year—in the beginning of the year—the question would be settled, and settled forever."

Speaking of his mission, he says:—

"It was true that his mission was a soldierly one—a rough one—a mission of destruction, of annihilation to Popery and to Popes; for then, and not till then, would Italy be free.

Therefore he meant to go to Italy as soon as possible, not to preach the Gospel of Christ, but first to destroy the enemies of the Gospel, and then to build on the ruins of Popes and Popery the pure Gospel of Christ. Between Christ and the Pope there is the sword, and the sword forever."

In a previous lecture, Gavazzi remarked that "Luther was a reformer; I am an exterminator."

Thus, we see, that this eloquent and energetic leader expects that this year is to decide forever, whether Italy is to be a free nation or not.

The following sensible remarks we copy from the Lowell Courier of Jan. 6:

The Eastern question has assumed a more defined shape lately than ever before. Hitherto, the Czar had supposed that he could without difficulty bully Turkey and her allies into acquiescence to his demands. Menschikoff had long fortified him in this delusive assumption. The events of the last few weeks, the reported successes of the forces of the Sultan by sea and land, and the despicable character exhibited by his own troops in all their plans and engagements, have at last opened the eyes of the Northern Autocrat to the real status of the case. As a necessary sequence, followed the disgrace of Menschikoff, so long the leading spirit in the foreign diplomacy of Russia. The Rubicon has now been completely passed, and all the world knows it. It only remains for Russia to prosecute hostilities on a scale commensurate with the magnitude of the interest at stake; for it is clear that, not only the interest of Russia in the principalites of Moldavia and Wallachia, but also the honor and prestige of the Russian name in Europe is involved. Thus, then, does the case stand—war a moral certainty; Russia on the one side, all the Western powers of Europe and the sympathies of the whole Christian world on the other—and God help the right!

The Christian Era, alluding to the same subject, also says:

"The year eighteen hundred and fifty-four opens with fearful indications of future commotion. Wars and rumors of wars are heard and the nations of the earth are in commotion. Since our last issue, news has been received of the disastrious defeat of the Turkish fleet. This is only the prelude to the general and complete defeat of the Mahommedan Empire. God has predicted the downfall of Turkey and soon, in spite of all the efforts of European powers, this overthrow will come."

Testimony after testimony might be added to the above, all going to show that what is marked in God's word as the struggle in which all nations will act a part, must shortly take place. And as we take a glance at the Eastern World, at this present time, we see all Europe is interested in one thing, viz: "The Russio-Turkish Question," from the fact that what is involved in that question seriously affects all the European powers.

That Turkey is to be the first power to fall, and fall forever, we have not a doubt. Its history is written out by inspiration, and though but few believe it, yet it is to come to its end and that speedily.

We here add, as the ending of this article, the following extracts from the London Examiner:

Our attention has been drawn to some remarkable passages from conversations reported to have been held by Napoleon with Mr. Barry O'Meara 35 years ago, and published by that person in his book on the captivity at St. Helena.

We do not need to make any comment on them. What we have been writing on this question from week to week for the last six months amounts to little more than an enlarged commentary on these extraordinary expressions of the ex-Emperor of France, which (bating some exaggerations natural to the speaker and the time,) contain the exact rationale of the Eastern question as it stands at this moment.

* * * * * *

"In the course of a few years," said Napoleon, "Russia will have Constantinople, the greatest part of Turkey and all Greece. This I hold to be as certain as if it had already taken place. Almost all the cajoling and flattery which Alexander practiced toward me, was to gain my consent to effect this object. I would not consent, foreseeing that the equilibrium of Europe would be destroyed. In the natural course of things, in a few years Turkey must fall to Russia. The greatest part of her population are Greeks, who, you may say, are Russians. The powers it would injure, and who could oppose it, are England, France, Prussia and Austria. Now, as to Austria, it will be very easy for Russia to engage her assistance by giving her Servia and other provinces bordering on the Austrian dominions, reaching near Constantinople. The only hypothesis on which France and England may ever be allied with sincerity will be in order to prevent this. But even this alliance will not avail. France, England and Prussia united cannot prevent this. Russia and Austria can at any time effect it. Once masters of Constantinople, Russia gets all the commerce of the Mediterranean, becomes a great naval power, and God knows what may happen," &c.

For the World's Crisis.

Notice.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: Believing as I do that the Lord is coming in 1854, I feel the importance of all believing it, that they may get ready. To believe it understandingly it is better for all to examine for themselves—Bower's History of the Popes—which shows plainly the commencement and ending of the 1260, 1290 and 1335 days. This history is acknowledged by all our learned men, throughout the country, to be the best and most reliable of any work ever issued from the press. They are not for sale in the Book stores, but I have obtained of the publishers all that remains of the edition.—The publishers have always retailed the work (3 vols.) for $6, but I shall sell them for $5. They can be safely sent in any direction by express. I am sure that no brother or sister will regret having them. Then they can act and believe understandingly and also be able to show others. As I have but a limited number, and there will be no more published at present, those who want them had better send soon.

In comparing this History with the Bible you will see, beyond all controversy, that the Lord will come this year. That the Lord may open your understanding and bless you is my prayer, Amen. Jacob Weston.

In the publication of this paper a leading object is that the poor may have the Gospel preached unto them, and we desire in all things to imitate Him, who is our great Exampler, and obey his instructions—"Freely ye have received, freely give." We therefore make no charge against subscribers in any case. As pecuniary resources however are indispensable to the prosecution of the enterprise, we would say to those readers of the "Crisis," who are interested in its circulation, that whatever funds may be voluntarily collected for this object, and forwarded to the office, will be gratefully received, and applied to the continuance of the paper. We have faith in God that while it is His will for the "Crisis" to be circulated. His overruling Providence will furnish the means; and whenever those resources stop, the gate will be shut down and the work cease. The will of God be done.

All friends to the cause of present truth are at liberty, not only to give in their names for the paper, but to forward all other names to whom they wish the paper directed, provided only, that it may be carefully read; and we cordially invite all who are solicitous, candidly to investigate the subject, to present their names as subscribers to the paper.

In respect to communications, we would say that we desire this whole work to be under the special direction of our heavenly Father, and supervision of the Holy Ghost. We seek not honor that cometh from man, but that which cometh from God only. We therefore do not open our columns for polemic war, or the aggrandizement of self, but do most cordially solicit the correspondence of such as feel their hearts deeply imbued with the love of God, and the living truth like fire shut up in their bones, to communicate from the fullness of an overflowing heart. We have a heartfelt sense of our utter dependence on the arm of God to move forward the work; and we desire that every correspondent's eye may be single to the glory of God, and edification of the little flock, to whom Christ will give the kingdom when He comes without sin unto salvation, for which we wait the present year.

All individuals to whom The World's Crisis is forwarded, are respectfully solicited to ascertain what persons in the place of their residences are desirous of receiving it, and send to us the name of subscribers, together with their Post Office address; also to inform us whether papers are to be sent by mail or express, whether in one bundle, or directed to each individual. Much labor and expense at the office would be saved if some one of the subscribers, in different places, could receive the papers directed to a particular Post Office in a single package, and distribute them to the several subscribers.

Exposition of Daniel, Chap. 7.

BY F. H. B.

In the 7th chapter of Daniel we have presented the same four great Empires, symbolized by the Image, (Dan. 2) with a few additional items, viz., the following: [illegible] The humiliation of the king of Babylon, (v. 4,) under the symbol of a lion standing up on his feet as a man, and having a man's heart given to it." 2. A beast (v. 5) with four heads, symbolizing the divisions of that kingdom, viz., the Grecian monarchy. 3. A beast with ten horns (v. 7,) prefiguring the divisions of the Roman Empire, between A. D. 356 and 483. 4. Another horn, or kingdom coming up subsequently to the rise of the ten, different in its character, and prevailing against the saints until the judgment sit.

There is no subject of revelation, that is fraught with deeper interest than the subject of prophecy; and from its very character, it presents the great events of futurity as clearly as the past. One of the principal designs, which the dispenser of all blessings had in view, in the revelation of leading facts in the history of the world, is expressed in the language of the Apostle, (Rom. 15: 4), "For whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning, that we, through patience and comfort of the scriptures, might have hope," and again, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17).

The system of revealed truth may be classified in three divisions:—1. Historic; 2. Preceptual; 3. Prophetic; or, in other words, [illegible] present and future. The historic portion of the word are ordinarily interpreted in their primary sense, while [illegible]

[illegible]

... the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and tread it down, and break it in pieces. And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings. And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and to destroy it unto the end." (vs. 23-26.)

In two particulars the above is very clear, first the facts revealed, and secondly, that which is indicated by the facts, viz.; the signification of the above symbols.— Hence, what demands our more special attention is, to make an application of that interpretation, which the Angel has given.

We are informed (v. 17,) that these four beasts are four kings, that shall arise out of the earth; and the fourth beast is called (v. 23) "the fourth kingdom upon the earth," &c. Hence the other three beasts must indicate kingdoms, as rendered in the Septuagint. These are the same as those in the Image of Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 2.), where it is declared (v. 40), that "the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron; and it shall break in pieces and bruise."

There is no difficulty in locating the first of these kingdoms; for the Prophet declares, (Dan. 2: 37, 38;) "Thou, O king art a king of kings; for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory.

"And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold."

Nebuchadnezzar held in subjection Egypt, Syria, Phœnicia, Arabia, the greater part of Libya and Spain. He [illegible] his army into Thrace and Pontus. (Newton on Proph. pp. 186, 187.) The Prophet Jeremiah when speaking of an invasion of the king of Babylon, (Jer. 4: 7), says, "The lion is come up from his thicket, and the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way." As the lion is the king of beasts, so Babylon was at that time the most renowned and powerful kingdom on the earth. This mighty empire was overthrown [illegible] B. C. 538, and was succeeded by the Medes and Persians, who from their cruelty, and thirst for blood are represented by [illegible]. "And they said thus unto it, [illegible] devour much flesh," evidently [illegible] as in Isa. 21: 2, an invasion of Babylon: "Go up, O Elam, besiege O Media," or, as in Ch. 13: 17, "Behold, I will stir up the Medes against them." "And Babylon (v. 19,) the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah."

The dominion of the Medes and Persians, as we learn from Esth. 1: 1, extended over 127 Provinces. "It was bounded on the east by the Red Sea, on the north by the Euxine Sea, on the west by Cyprus and Egypt, and on the south by Ethiopia." (Clark's Com.) This kingdom was overthrown by Alexander the Great, about B. C. 331. "He crossed the Caucasus, subdued Hyrcania, and penetrated into India as far as the Ganges; and having conquered all the countries that lay between the Adriatic Sea and this river, (the Ganges) he fulfilled the declaration of the Prophet (Dan. 2: 39), "And another third kingdom of brass" (shall arise) "which shall bear rule over all the earth." This mighty Empire however did not remain long consolidated; for Alexander dying B. C. 323, his kingdom was subsequently divided between his four Generals, Ptolemy, Seleucus, Cassander and Lysimachus, which four reigned over the kingdoms of Thrace and Bithynia, Macedonia, Syria and Egypt. The first of these divisions ceased to form a distinct kingdom B. C. 281, (1) the second B. C. 158, (2) the third B. C. 65, (3) the fourth B. C. 30, (4) at which time Rome became mistress of the world. This empire is symbolized by the "legs of iron," (Dan. 2.) [illegible]

... the fourth beast, (Dan. 7), which was to tread down the earth, and to break it in pieces; for between B. C. 168 and B. C. 30, the Romans conquered Carthage, Macedon, Illyricum, Greece, Syria, Bithynia, Cyprus, Cappadocia, Pontus, Syracuse, Numidia, Spain, Balearian Isles, Dalmatia, Phœnicia, and the south-eastern part of Britain.

Who can but exclaim with David, "Thy word is true from the beginning?"

The above is not only in harmony with the great majority of expositors, but also with history. But in relation to the ten kingdoms there is a variety of opinion, some placing the rise of the ten between A. D. 356 and 483, while others bring them down as late as the eighth century. But as these kingdoms were continually changing, how are we to know which to apply to the prophecy? Ans. When we find ten, and another, or eleven kingdoms within the territory of Rome answering to the description as given by the prophet. For mark—we are not to look exclusively to Western Rome for the rise of the ten kingdoms—but, as in the division of Alexander's empire, the four horns represent the entire kingdom over which that monarch reigned; likewise the eleven horns that were to arise out of this fourth kingdom embrace the entire territory over which the Cæsars reigned.— Hence when we have ascertained the limit, extent, or boundary of Rome, we shall be prepared to look for these divisions of its territory. On the death of Augustus Cæsar, the empire was bounded on the "west by the Atlantic ocean, the Rhine and Danube on the north, the Euphrates on the east, and towards the south the sandy deserts of Arabia and Africa."— "During the first century the province of Britain was added (5): the wall of Antoninus at a small distance beyond the modern cities of Edinburgh and Glasgow was fixed as the limit of this province. The province of Dacia was added by Trajan in the second century (6). This same Emperor carried his victorious army beyond the Euphrates; but his successor resigned [illegible] the eastern conquests of Trajan; and the Euphrates became again the eastern boundary of the empire (7). The Emperors of Rome made many efforts to subdue the warlike natives of Germany, and the Emperor Probus was on the point of reducing it to a Roman province, but he soon relinquished this design. He, however, built a wall nearly two hundred miles long by which he joined the Rhine and Danube (8).

By the above facts it will be easy for us at one view to trace the boundary of the Roman Empire; for if we start at the Straits of Gibraltar and pass up the Atlantic coast to the English Channel, from thence we pass up on the west side of the British Isle, crossing at or near the Straits of Scotland, thence across the German Ocean to the mouth of the Rhine; we follow this river towards its source until we come to the wall built by Probus; thence across to the Danube until we come to the province of Dacia; leaving the river we pass round Dacia on the north, until we come to the Black Sea; crossing the Black Sea we strike the mountains of Armenia, thence to the Euphrates; passing down the Euphrates until we come to Arabia; then running in a southerly direction to the Red Sea, including Syria; crossing the Red Sea, we pass up between, or at, the north of the Arabian and African deserts: we include all Egypt and all of Northern Africa to the Straits of Gibraltar. Within these limits we are to look for the eleven kingdoms.— Now, then, when we arrive in the history of the world where there are just "ten kingdoms," and "another," answering to the description given in the prophecy on the old Roman territory, this will be the fulfilment. And, for convenience, let us at A. D. 500 look to see if these ten kingdoms had arisen.

1st. We may remark, that the Vandals entered Africa about A. D. 427-9, and were at this time in possession of a large portion of it.

Says Koch, "The Vandals and Alans passed into Africa A. D. 427. Genseric (King of the Vandals,) conquered in the [illegible] possession of the part of Africa pertaining to the Western Empire, from the Straits of Cadiz, (about 65 miles Northwest of Gibraltar,) as far as Cyrenaica (the North-eastern part of Tripoli), which was dependent on the Empire of the East. He subdued, likewise, the Balearic Isles, with Sardinia, Corsica and a part of Sicily."— (Koch's Rev. in Eu.)

"Genseric ruled (in Africa) fifty years, from A. D. 428-477."—(Kohl. His. of Ger. [illegible])

[illegible] Suevi passed into Spain about A. D. 409, and established themselves in the western and northwestern part of that province. Koch, in speaking of the Alans, Vandals, and Suevi, remarks,—"After having settled some years in Gaul, these tribes passed the Pyrenees (409) to establish themselves in the most fertile regions of Spain. The Vandals seized Bœtica, and a part of Gallicia; the Suevi the rest of Gallicia, while the Alans took possession of Lusitania, and the province of Carthagenia. The Alans afterwards submitted to the sway of Gonderic, King of the Vandals (420); while the Suevi preserved their native Princes, who reigned in Gallicia and Lusitania, this latter Province having been abandoned by the Vandals (427) when they passed into Africa.— (Koch, p. 36.)

Invasion of Spain by the Suevi A. D. 409.—(Gib. vol. 3, p. 307.) The Suevi passed the Pyrenees A. D. 409.—(Kohl. pp. 84, 85.)

3d. The Visigoths established themselves in Spain A. D. 462-472, and ultimately extended their dominion over the whole peninsula.

"The Visigoths, pressed by the Romans in Gaul, took the resolution of carrying their arms beyond the Pyrenees, under the conduct of their King, Adolphus; they made themselves masters of the city of Barcelona in 415. [illegible] one of the successors of this Prince, took from the Romans (472) all that yet remained of their possessions in Spain; and Leovigild, another of their kings completed the conquest of all that country (584.)

The Visigoths, according to the Encyclopedia Am., were established in Spain between A. D. 419 and 428; and between 467 and 484 the Romans lost the entire province.—(Enc. v. 11, p. 507.)

Says Kohlrausch, Adolphus and Wallia were the founders of the Westrogothic kingdom, which embraced southern France and a great part of Spain. Adolphus entered Spain about A. D. 414.—(Gib. v. 3, p. 8.) Wallia entered Spain about A. D. 420.—(Mon. p. 114.) According to Gibbon, the principal conquests of the Visigoths in Spain, were between A. D. 462 and 472.—Gib. v. 3, p. 496.

According to Smith's Classical Dic., the Visigoths settled in Spain immediately after the Vandals passed over to Africa, A. D. 426-9.—(p. 375.)

Reeves says that the Visigoths and Suevi were in possession of Spain in A. D. 476.

Says Putnam, The kingdom of the Visigoths was established in Spain A. D. 468. —(Dic. of Dates, p. 65.)

Mede reckons the Visigoths as one of the ten, as early as A. D. 456.

4th. The Britons. The revolt of the Britons is put down in Gibbon's history at A. D. 409.—(See Chro. Index, v. 3, p. 8.)

Procopius says that the Romans could no longer save Britain, A. D. 409.

[illegible]

... their savage retreats [illegible] maintained the mountains of Cornwall, until the middle of the tenth, and in Wales until the thirteenth century, their independent dominion."—(Rotteck, [illegible] 93.)

5th. The Angles and Saxons. In the middle of the fifth century, 449, the Angeli, Saxons and Juti pressed over into England.—(Kohl. Hist. of Ger. p. 88.)— A body of these Anglo-Saxons entered in Britain 450, in the first year of the reign of the Emperor Marcian, under the command of Hengist and Horsa.—(Koch, v. 1, p. 46.)

6. The Burgundians entered Gaul about A. D. 413, and subsequently established themselves in the [illegible] southeastern part of Gaul, on the Rhone.

"The Burgundians, a people, it would appear, originally from the countries situated between the Oder and the Vistula, followed nearly in the track of the Visigoths; as we find them about 413, established on the upper Rhine, and in Switzerland. After the dissolution of the empire, they succeeded in establishing themselves in those parts of Gaul known by the names of the Sequanois, Lyannois, Viennois and Narbonnois, viz. those districts which formed, in course of time, the Burgundies, the Provinces of Lyannois, Dauphiny and Provence on this side the Durance, Savoy, the Pays du Vaud, the Valais and Switzerland. The countries then assumed the name of the kingdom of the Burgundians." (Koch., vol. 1, pp. 44, 45.)

"Southeastern France, Savoy and western Switzerland belonged now (476) to the Burgundians." (Kohl. His. of Ger., p. 92.)

"The Burgundians obtained a permanent settlement and dominion in Gaul, A. D. 419." (Gib., vol. 3, p. 313.)

"The kingdom of the Burgundians begun in Alsace, A. D. 413." (Putnam's Dic. of Dates, p. 224.)

Mede, in enumerating the ten kingdoms, as they existed in 456, reckons the Burgundians [illegible]

Bishop Lloyd dates the rise of the Burgundian kingdom from 407.

7. The Franks entered Gaul about 407, and subsequently became masters of the whole Province.

"At length the Franks having been repulsed in different rencontres by the Romans, again passed the Rhine, (430) under the conduct of Clodion, their chief, made themselves masters of the greater part of Belgic Gaul, took possession of Tournay, Cambia and Amiens, and thus laid the foundation of the new kingdom of France in Gaul." (Koch, vol. 1, p. 45.)

"On the lower Rhine, on the Maas and the Scheldt, as far as the Netherlands, and in the north of France, dwelt (476) the branches of the Franks." (Kohl., p. 91.)

"The Franks established themselves in France, A. D. 420—451." (Gib., vol. 3, p. 428.)

Bishop Lloyd gives 407 as the year of their establishment.

8. The Ostrogoths were established in Italy A. D. 493.

"We have seen the foundation of this kingdom (Ostrogothic) in Italy, by the great Theodoric (493)." (Rotteck, vol. 2, p. 56.)

"Theodoric broke up with his nation in the year 488, passed through the passes of Italy, and encountered Odoacer near Aquileja and Verona. * * * Odoacer was a third time defeated, near the Adda, after his own city, Rome, had shut its gates against him; and for three years he [illegible] given in both the Vision and the interpretation.

Vis.—"Four great beasts came up out of the sea."

Int.—"These great beasts which are four, are four kings which shall arise out of the earth."

Vis.—"Then I would know the truth of the fourth beast."

Int.—"Thus he said, The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth."

Vis.—"And it" (the fourth beast) "had ten horns."

Int.—"And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise."—

Vis.—"I considered the horns, and behold there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots."

Int.—"And another shall rise after them, and he shall subdue three kings."

Who cannot see, from the above, that those who place the establishment of the little horn after the plucking up of the three, or any one of the three, are wrong? The words, "He shall subdue," and "before whom three fell," forever settle this point. This is not our interpretation, but the very language of the angel of God.

We are then to ascertain what power it is that subdues THREE OF TEN CONTEMPORANEOUS KINGDOMS. On turning to history, we learn that three of the above ten kingdoms were plucked up by the victorious armies of Justinian, under Belisarius and Narses—the Vandals in Africa, A. D. 534.

1. "The dominion of the Vandals in Africa lasted about a hundred years. Their kingdom was destroyed by the Emperor Justinian, who reunited Africa to the Empire of the East. Gelimer, the last king of the Vandals, was conquered by Belisarius, 534." (Koch, vol. 1, p. 48. Vide Gib., vol. 4, pp. 121–136.)

2. "The Goths raised themselves once more, after four of their sovereigns had been destroyed, under their king, Totilas, who was worthy of ruling the dominions of Theodoric; but as he also, after he had fought with fame for eleven years, was killed in the year 552, in a battle against Narses, and ten months afterwards, his successor, Tejas, fell likewise in the three days' desperate battle, near Cuma, the Gothic kingdom sunk into such a ruinous state, that twenty-seven years after the death of Theodoric, and in the year 553, the Ostrogoths were not only vanquished, but also almost entirely ANNIHILATED. A few only escaped over the Alps, to seek an asylum among other German nations." (Kohl. His. of Ger., pp. 98–99. Vide Koch, vol. 1, pp. 49–50.)

3d. The Alemans were overthrown in A. D. 554. "The Alemans, who dwelt in the mountains, deemed the occasion favorable, on the disappearance of the Goths, (553,) for an invasion of Italy.—They divided into two enormous hordes, commanded by Leutharis and Batilinus, the former of whom coasted the Mediterranean, the latter the Adriatic. These hordes were composed of foot soldiers armed with shields and swords, and merely clothed with long trousers, the upper part of the body being naked, from an idea that by that means, they should suffer less by the heat of the climate. The army under Leutharis was destroyed by pestilence, and that under Batilinus was surrounded, and cut to pieces by Narses, five men escaping the fate of their comrade, A. D. 554."—(Hist. of Ger. by Menzel, pp. 186, 187.)

"But it may seem incredible that a victory, (which no more than five of the Alemanni survived,) could be purchased with the loss of fourscore Romans." (Gib. Vol. [illegible].) This then is a fulfilment of the declaration, (Dan. 7: 24), "he shall subdue three kings." Hence, having ascertained when the last of the ten arose, and when the first of the ten contemporary kingdoms was subdued, we have defined the circle, within which the little horn is to be established, viz., between A. D. [illegible] and A. D. 534. Having shown, by historical testimony, that three of the ten were subdued by the military force of the Greek Government, it follows, as a matter of course, that this is the government in connection with the Church, that answers to the little horn. This symbol (the little horn) warrants us in looking for a union of Church and State, or the full assumption of authority over religion, nationalization of the Catholic Church, and concurrence with the Pope in enforcing the false doctrines and superstitions of that Apostate on its subjects(1).

No such union is to be looked for between Constantine and Theodosius, because it is too early; the ten horns (kingdoms) not having arisen. And if we can depend on the assertion of Baronius, "there was not, in the year 490, a single Catholic Prince in the whole circuit of the earth."(2) It was at this time that Anastasius filled the throne at Constantinople; and during the greater part of his administration, the Church was rent and torn by disputes between the various Bishops.—At this time the Bishop of Constantinople and the Pope of Rome strove to augment their power; efforts were made to unite the seas of Constantinople and Rome; but the demands of the Pope were so exorbitant in the estimation of the Emperor, that it did not take place until A. D. 519.—During the year 518 Anastasius died.—"The priests, availing themselves of this circumstance, frightened the superstitious multitude, and threatened the heretics with the vengeance of God. Their intrigues were so well conducted, that they placed on the throne Justin, a very ignorant man, and from that very cause, a good Catholic. The prince, on his elevation, gave a direction to affairs entirely opposite to that of his predecessor. The pretended heretics were punished, and the populace by reiterated acclamations made the Catholic faith triumphant. The will of a fanatical mob having been confirmed by a council held at Constantinople, the Catholics could exercise their vengeance against the Eutychians."(3).

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, JANUARY 25, 1854.

Tarrying of the Vision.

In all ages of the world, the dealings of God with His children have been such as to put their faith to the test; and often their confidence in His word has been stretched to the utmost tension before the promise made to them was redeemed, and deliverance came. Isaac, that beloved child of promise, was given to Abraham in advanced life; and even then that son of his old age, the endeared object of his paternal affections, in whom his hopes were centered, through whose line he expected to become the father of many nations, upon him the requisition of God was laid for a sacrifice of burnt-offering. It was his son—his ONLY SON—ISAAC, WHOM HE LOVED—upon him the demand was made. How could he relinquish a child so beloved—around whose very existence clustered so many promises—in whose life such momentous interests for himself, the church and the world were involved?—Would it not impeach the veracity of God? Would it not overthrow the designs of heaven? Would he not be left in the decrepitude of age, bereaved and disconsolate, and his "gray hairs come down with sorrow to the grave?" But such carnal reasoning, such unhallowed pleadings of earthly wisdom, seem not to have entered his mind. God commands and he obeys. It is the prerogative of infinite wisdom to direct, the province of man to acquiesce. Being strong in the faith, he staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but gave glory to God, accounting that He was able to raise him from the dead, whence also he received him in a figure.

Thus also the faith of the primitive disciples was tried as by fire, when He, in whose divine mission they had so fully confided; He, who was their adored Messiah—their glorious deliver from Roman bondage, and every other yoke; He fell beneath the power of His stubborn foes. Instead of the conquering king that they had believed on, it was He, who "by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God," was delivered up to be "crucified and slain" by wicked hands. Their hopes were unexpectedly blasted; and although they "trusted that it had been He that should have redeemed Israel," they seem now to be thrown into distraction, doubt and unbelief. It was indeed marvellous, that notwithstanding Jesus had informed the disciples in the clearest language, of His approaching dissolution and subsequent resurrection, they were still unapprized of the distressing scene that was before them. Had they understood the events about to transpire, their faith would not have been tried, and their fidelity tested by the fiery ordeal through which they passed. But it pleased God that the Saviour's explicit declarations should not be apprehended by them. Says the Scripture (Luke 18: 31–34),

Then he took unto him the twelve, and said unto them, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man shall be accomplished.

For he shall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on;

And they shall scourge him, and put him to death; and the third day he shall rise again.

And they understood none of these things; and this saying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were spoken.

But when the Son of God arose from the tomb, the two shining messengers reminded them of the words of Jesus, which He had spoken unto them in Galilee, saying, "the Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again. And they remembered His words." (Luke 24: 7, 8). The Lord's hand seems to have covered this transaction so that they could not comprehend the most simple and unambiguous language on the subject, because this saying was hid from them. On another occasion "their eyes were holden" that they should not know Him, although personally and visibly before their eyes. (Luke 24: 16). So on His triumphant entrance into Jerusalem, the disciples did not understand the fulfilment of the word, but afterward they remembered these things were written of Him. There is, therefore, a principle of the divine economy developed in Scripture, that in certain emergencies in the history of the church, it is determined in the counsel of heaven to conceal coming events from the apprehension of God's children. But this principle is, however, an exception to the general rule of the divine administration, and is only acted upon when the glory of God and the good of the church specially demand it. It is not unfrequently the case in the experience of individuals, that our Heavenly Father manifests His presence and favor to the humble suppliant, so that he may feel an assurance that his prayer will be heard and answered. But in respect to the different modifications of time and manner, the confiding saint may realize a disappointment. He may expect the conversion of a sinner before it takes place; but if he has received the witness from God that the work will be accomplished, he may rest assured that the word will not return unto Him void. It may be like the "snow that cometh down from heaven, and returneth not thither; but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater." The snow may envelope the earth in a mantle of frost, and increase the winter's cold rather than fructify the soil; but the husbandman hath long patience till at length the genial spring dissolves the icy fetters of winter, the snow in its solution penetrates the soil, and the opening beauties of a new vegetation throws an enchantment and loveliness upon the landscape, that tells of the fertilizing influences of the rain and snow.

Thus God may for wise reasons see fit to delay the fulfilment of His word till the faith of His children is severely tested; but as the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, so will faith in the coming of the Lord still adhere to the promise, and wait for the consolation of Israel, until the day dawn, and the Son of man shall be revealed in His glory, and reward the expectant saint with a crown of life.

Indeed, the Scriptures clearly reveal the fact, that prior to the coming of the Lord, there will be a class of believers in Christ that will entertain an expectation of meeting their deliverer, by which they will, as expressed in the hymn "antedate the day"—they will be animated with an ardent desire and a confident expectation of seeing their king at a given point of time; but that time will pass, the days be prolonged, and the promise, in the eye of the world, prove a failure—disappointment and sorrow will ensue to the church, and an apparent but temporary triumph will be enjoyed on the part of an unbelieving world.

In the Greek Septuagint the idea presented in this passage is peculiarly emphatic and striking in reference to the passing of the time. The Prophet, personating the Church, sees an extreme emergency in the future respecting which he needs, in an eminent degree, the counsel of God to direct. He finds himself about to be involved in an inextricable labyrinth of difficulty; and that he may know how to meet the case, he applies with great earnestness to the fountain of true wisdom. It would be well for all who profess the name of Christ, if they would, in all seasons of difficulty and danger, repair to the same mercy-seat. "If any of you," says James, "lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." Thank the Lord that he has opened a fountain of infinite wisdom, from which we may draw lessons of instruction and consolation and strength amid all the perils of the way.—Habakkuk seems to present the idea of a trial, like that of a criminal at the bar of public opinion. The allegation to be presented was, that he had proclaimed to the world the word of the Lord—that that word had proved a failure—his vision had lied, (deceived the people,) and now, he desired to know what he should reply to his "accusers," as it might have been rendered.

The Prophet earnestly implores divine aid, desiring to know first what God will communicate to him, and secondly what answer he shall give to his accusers. The specific direction given to him was, to "write the vision" plainly and present it before the public eye, that all might have the opportunity to read and understand for themselves: and the message to others was a command from God that if, in their estimation, the time had passed, and the vision LIED, and many had been deceived, they were to await the final result; "for the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and NOT LIE;" or, "At the last it shall come to pass and NOT FAIL," (Coverdale's Trans.) This implies that while unbelievers conceive the whole message to have been a deception practised on their credulity—a delusion of the Prophet.—the GOD OF HEAVEN says, that in due time it shall be fulfilled—that though the days are apparently prolonged beyond the time, it is yet for a specific or APPOINTED TIME. There is no uncertainty or indefiniteness in the divine mind in relation to the time. But says the scorner the vision tarries—"though it tarry" (according to human calculation) says the word of God, "wait for it because it will SURELY come; it will NOT tarry," or "though HE tarry, yet wait thou for HIM; for in very deed HE will come and not be slack," (Coverdale.)

It may be inquired, what authority have we for applying this to the coming of the Lord? DIVINE AUTHORITY as presented in Hebrews 10: 35–39, says the Apostle, "Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompence of reward. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul." In this passage Paul quotes Habakkuk almost word for word as in the Septuagint version, which was the Bible in use at that age of the world; and instead of the impersonal pronoun it, he uses the personal pronoun HE, as in Coverdale's translation. The Apostle continues, still quoting from the Septuagint, "now the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back my soul shall have no pleasure in him." The word rendered draw back means to falter as through unbelief, or to FLINCH as through fear; clearly presenting the idea that if any man give up his faith in the word, or confidence in the promises, in consequence of the passing of the time, God's soul will have no pleasure in him. O beloved brethren and sisters, who have received divine light on the proclamation of the Redeemer's coming, and gone forth to meet the Lord in 1843 and 4, what a startling admonition have we here! How tremendous the denunciation of God against those who recede from the heaven-born light,—the glorious manifestations of divine love and joy which have been communicated to our souls in resting down on the truth of His immediate coming!! If we falter from the rectilinear course—if we flinch from acknowledging the truth—if we fall back from the position of the Church in their expectation of approaching redemption, God will be displeased with our unbelief, and reject us for our unfaithfulness and want of knowledge in discerning the signs of the times. Says Jesus, "if the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" A brighter light never shone on the Church—the pillar of fire leading to Canaan never blazed forth with such overwhelming brilliancy—such resplendent charms, as when the light and glory of the Advent truth flashed upon the camp of Zion, and like a beacon signal pointed out her position in proximity to the promised land.—O where is the eloquence that can portray our obligations for the unspeakable gift, the infinite blessedness of recognizing the finger of God in the movements of the Church, and the fulfilment of His word.—But be it remembered, the brighter the light developed from the oracles, and the more enrapturing the divine communications in connection with the reception of His truth, the more barren and desolate will be the soul that abandons the truth of God. As in a dark night, when vivid lightnings dart athwart the heavens, the succeeding darkness seems doubly intense; so those who reject the clearest light of truth are enveloped in the darkest shades of night. It would seem that if God has communicated any doctrine clearly to the world, it is in relation to Christ's second glorious appearing; and if He has admonished us faithfully on any point, it is not to relinquish our faith in this respect. We are patiently to wait for the promise, and let this hope purify us even as He (Christ) is pure. This is the supreme object of our desire, the grand centre of our hopes, the one great ALL ABSORBING THEME of spiritual contemplation, a light to our pathway that dispels the gloom—that spreads around a serene and constant and heavenly radiance. Without it, the future is a blank, death an eternal sleep; the saint is divested of his crown and shorn of his glory and robbed of his inheritance; the sleeping saints have perished, and the living "in this life only" "have hope," (1 Cor. 15: 18, 19). As it is—the essential prerequisite to redemption,—the corner stone of the mighty fabric in the economy of grace, the developement of light on this subject has been clear and unmistakeable in proportion to the magnitude of the interests involved; and God will leave all men, who have enjoyed the means of enlightenment in relation to this subject, without excuse. Truly "the light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not."

"Behold his soul which is lifted up is not upright in him; but the just shall live by his faith," or, according to Coverdale, "Behold whoso will not believe, his soul shall not prosper;" according to the Douay, "Behold he that is unbelieving, his soul shall not be right in himself."—How clearly is it enjoined on those who may have experienced a disappointment in consequence of the tarrying of the vision, or the delay of the coming of Christ, not to give up their faith, not to abandon the blessed hope, nor cast away that "confidence which hath great recompense of reward."

Ezekiel refers to the same subject evidently in Ch. 12: 21–25; "And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, what is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel, saying, The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth? Tell them therefore, Thus saith the Lord God; I will make this proverb to cease, and they shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel; but say unto them, The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision. For there shall be no more any vain vision nor flattering divination within the house of Israel. For I am the Lord: I will speak, and the word that I shall speak shall come to pass; it shall be no more prolonged: for in your days, O rebellious house, will I say the word, and will perform it, saith the Lord God." The expression, "the days are prolonged and every vision faileth," is equivalent to the idea conveyed in Habakkuk, viz.: that the vision tarries.—"These," says Clark, "are the words of infidels and scoffers, who, because vengeance was not speedily executed on an evil work, set their heart to do iniquity." The fact that it is a proverb or common saying proves the universality of that unbelieving, scoffing spirit, which Clark refers to. Whether there be direct reference here to the second coming of Christ or not, it cannot be denied that the principle is developed in this passage, that God so deals with His children as to test their faith; and with the world so as to give apparently a temporary triumph over the believers in God's word, and enable them to speak proverbially of the passing of the time, and the ostensible failure of the vision. If the phraseology has not an historical, it certainly has a moral application to an unbelieving world in relation to the coming of Christ. Coverdale's translation reads thus "Yet came the word of the Lord unto me again, saying, Thou son of man, what manner of bye-word is that, which ye have in the land of Israel, saying, "Tush" (the word "tush" is of Saxon origin, and is expressive of sovereign contempt,) "seeing that the days are so slack in coming, all the visions are of none effect."

But when the wicked are thus scoffing, thinking the time is prolonged, and the danger passed away, what says the answer of God unto them? "Tell them therefore thus saith the Lord God: I will make this proverb to cease, and they shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel; but say unto them, the days are AT HAND and the effect of every vision;" or "the days are at hand, THAT EVERY THING WHICH HATH BEEN PROPHESIED, SHALL BE FULFILLED." (Cov.) "For there shall be no more any vain vision, nor flattering divination within the house of Israel;" or, "there shall no vision be in vain, neither ANY PROPHECY FAIL among the children of Israel," (Cov.) "For I am the Lord: I will speak, and the word that I shall speak shall come to pass; it shall be no more prolonged;" or "For it is I, the Lord that speak it; and whatsoever I, the Lord speak, it shall be performed, and not be slack in coming."

This while scoffers and unbelievers are congratulating themselves that the time at which Christ was expected to appear in judgment had passed over, and their fears of His iron rod of vindictive justice are passed away with the specific point of time, the decision of heaven is that the day is "AT HAND, and the effect (or accomplishment) of every vision;" "for in your days, O rebellious house, will I say the word and will perform it, saith the Lord God." This language fixes the fulfilment of the denunciation upon the wicked within the bounds of that generation who scoffingly inquire, as expressed by Peter, "where is the promise of His coming?"

From these two passages in the prophetic visions of Habakkuk and Ezekiel, we may learn the importance of being steadfast in faith, and unwavering in our confidence that in all cases God will redeem His promise—that His word cannot ultimately fail, for "it is impossible for God to lie;" therefore the visions that come from God will in the end "speak, and not lie."

On the other hand we perceive what imminent peril they incur, that scoff at the word of God, or mock the children of His love, who are warning them of impending wrath, although to outward appearance the danger may seem to be past. Those who thus trifle with the word of God are unconsciously sporting with the thunderbolts of heaven; and in a moment [illegible] they think not, those lightnings of holy indignation against the incorrigible sinner, will burst from the magazine of heaven, and lay the daring rebel low before the majesty of a long-suffering and gracious but now incensed God. O sinner BEWARE—the judgment now "for a long time lingereth not," the wheel is in rapid motion that rolls on the fearful day—rush to the mountains,—flee to the ark—improve the present moment, or the harvest will be past, the summer ended, and your souls not saved.

Continued.

The intelligence brought by the Niagara has come to hand just as our paper was going to press; therefore we have but a moment to write on the subject. The news is startling in the extreme. We can see the storm-cloud rising, gathering, blackening in the heavens, and from its darkening brow flash fearfully the thunderbolts of vengeance, that are now causing the pillars of the earth to tremble. Every thing is moving on, and converging toward the final crisis. Even the throne of England, that stood unmoved amid the earthquake shocks of '48, is beginning to reel by the upheavings of the political elements. The consort of the Queen is being denounced as a traitor to the interests of his adopted country Victoria, one of the most popular of all Queens, is losing her hold on the loyalty of her subjects; and France is threatening to aid the revolutionists of Hungary and Italy. Thus are affairs converging toward a revolutionary crisis, which will prove, as we understand the propecies, the battle of Armageddon. It will go forth "like a whirlwind" from nation to nation, till all the kingdoms and powers of the habitable globe are involved in the popular outbreaks, and civil commotions, which will spread universal anarchy and confusion over the earth. Thus will God "shake the heavens and the earth," for saith the Lord, "I will OVERTHROW THE THRONE [illegible] will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the SWORD OF HIS BROTHER."

Seven Days Later From Europe!

HALIFAX, Jan. 23.

The R. M. steamship Niagara from Liverpool, Saturday 7th inst., about 2 30 P. M. arrived at this port this morning.

The following is the latest:—

The Moniteur contains a circular, dated Dec. 30th, by the minister of foreign affairs, to all the French legations, on the Eastern question. The document is moderate, but very firm in its style. After narrating the phases of the question, it declares that France, England, Austria and Prussia, have recently by agreement at Vienna, solemnly recognized the territorial integrity of the Ottoman Empire as one of the conditions of their political equilibrium.—Further, that the affair at Sinope took place against all provisions (Russia having declared that she only desired a material guarantee) therefore, to prevent the Ottoman flag or territory from a new attack by the naval forces of Russia, the French and English fleets have received orders to enter the Black Sea. The circular terminates by expressing the hope that Russia will not expose Europe to new convulsions.

The French papers authentically further state, that the French Government, dissatisfied with the evasive conduct of Austria, has addressed a strong remonstrance, intimating that any further secession on her part from the proceedings of the other three powers will be taken as an indication of meditated hostilities, the results of which she must be prepared to abide by, whatever that may be; and that France will afford aid to the revolutionists of [illegible] Italy, &c.

The Patrie, in a bulletin, gives a report that the Czar had given orders for making immediate preparations for crossing the Danube. This, if true, seems to infer that the Czar has rejected the propositions of the four powers.

Advices from Constantinople agree that little hope is entertained of new negotiations leading to any satisfactory result.

Vienna, Friday evening.—The Russians have occupied the Austrian Wallachian frontier from Orsova to Yorbourg pass, near Cronstadt. They have also been permitted to make purchases within the Austrian frontier.

Krajova advices of Dec. 30th say that the peasantry [illegible]

Danube, from Kalefat to Turnal as far as Aluta, and that they were supported by Wallachian irregulars. The Russian minor officials were everywhere turned out.

TURKEY.—Authentic intelligence confirms the previous reports that on the evening of December 20th, the Porte accepted the note of the four powers. He says he would not, under certain circumstances, object to an armistice, but continues to insist on the evacuation of the principalities and consents to a Congress in a neutral city. Consents to a revision of existing treaties, and to consider the propriety of further ameliorations in the condition of Christians; but the integrity of the Ottoman Empire, and the Sultan's sovereignty must be maintained.

The deliberations of the Divan continued three days, the 20th, 21st and 22nd December.

On the result of the deliberations transpiring in Constantinople on the 21st, a tumult arose. A mob of 3000 Softas, urged on by Ulemas, assembled to present a remonstrance to the Sultan, declaring that the Scheriate constitution was violated by the resolutions of the Council; for a time, a riot was feared, and the English and French steamers and Marines were called to Constantinople; but the night was passed over quietly. On the 22nd, a proclamation was issued, and quietude restored. Several of the malcontents were arrested and banished to Candia.

Something definite as to the action of the Czar was daily looked for at London and Paris. It was stated that Nicholas had formally rejected the Vienna protocol and the note of the 5th, but would consent to receive and examine the Turkish propositions of the 20th, as above, although he persists in refusing to recognize the right of European Intervention in matters which, he says, concerns Russia and Turkey alone.

To the 25th of December the allied fleets had not entered the Black Sea, owing to the tempestuous weather.

Contractors at Malta are ordered to form depots at Sinope, Varna and Trebizond.

The instructions to the fleets are, that in the event of meeting the Russian ships of war, they will, in the names of their respective governments, request the Russian officer in command to return with his ship or ships to Sebastopol, where he will find further instructions from his own government; on his refusal, force will be used.

Russian statements affect not to feel the slightest alarm as regards the threat of the allied squadrons; on the contrary, they assert that the entry of the fleets will be the signal for a simultaneous outbreak in India, Algeria and Greece; also a Greek insurrection throughout the Turkish empire, all being already organized by agents of the Czar.

The heavy snows prevented operations of magnitude. Daily small skirmishes occurred between the outposts of the two armies.

A Russian despatch says that the Turkish army in Asia is totally disorganized, and Selim Pacha and General Guyon have been killed by their troops. No one believes this. Turkish accounts acknowledge the evacuation of the Russian territory in Asia, but say that it was effected without the reported losses.

Accounts from all parts of Russia describe an extraordinary state of military activity, unexampled since 1818.

The Czar has just got a supply of twenty million roubles from the Church.

The London Observer says, that agents are on their way to the United States to purchase ships and arms, privately, for Russia.

GREAT BRITAIN.—Much indignation is excited at the discovered interference of Prince Albert in politics. The more independent of the papers, and yet more loudly, the public voice, protest that Prince Albert is the subservient tool of Russia and that Lord Aberdeen is altogether under his (Prince Albert's) influence.—The Prince, it is said, betrays every secret of the British Cabinet to the Russian, Austrian, and German Courts, and the important State affairs that are kept profoundly secret from the British public are freely known in St. Petersburgh and Vienna.

The expressions of indignation against Prince Albert, who is, truly or falsely, regarded as the "tell tale," are unusually strong. He is popular in Manchester, Liverpool, and with manufacturing interests generally, consequently the organs of that interest are silent on the subject, but radical and conservative papers alike join in declaring that his interference has reached a pitch dangerous to the Constitution. The affair will doubtless come before Parliament.

FRANCE.—The customary New Year's day Levee was held on Sunday, the 1st, at the Tuileries. In addressing the ambassadors, Napoleon said: "I sincerely hope to be able to maintain the relations of amity which now subsist between our government and the sovereigns whose representatives you are." Turning to the Ottoman ambassador, he addressed him thus: "My good wishes, my sympathies, and my efforts are in favor of your sovereign; and you will be good enough to communicate to him what I say."

The Times reports, as its correspondent's statement, that when required seventy thousand Frenchmen will form a camp, one part near Adrianople, and the other near Constantinople.

The report from the War Department states that the number of men available for the army in France, in the event of a general war, is one and a quarter millions for the land service.

It is current in political circles that the Czar does not cease to tempt Napoleon to desert the English alliance, and offers his consent to the French annexation of Belgium and Egypt; the Czar promising also to abandon the cause of the French Bourbons.

SWEDEN AND DENMARK.—The governments of Sweden and Denmark have addressed a circular to the ports of Europe, stating that whatever difficulties Turkey may cause among Maritime powers, Sweden and Denmark have formally resolved to remain strictly neutral.

AUSTRIA.—Vienna advices continue to submit the imposition of an immediate five per cent. home loan of $25,000,000. This, if immediately issued, proves that Austria disbelieves in the prospects of peace.

☞ Having visited Lawrence and preached to the brethren in that city yesterday, (Sabbath) I learn that the Lord is reviving His work there, and converting souls to Christ. We enjoyed a blessed interview in the evening, and some young converts gave a new impluse to our feelings, by coming forward and declaring their faith in the immediate coming, and giving glory to God for His manifestations of love to them, in the forgiveness of their sins.

☞ We have been gratified to learn that an effort has been made in Lowell, to relieve the embarrassment of the Advent Watchman, in which those interested in the new paper, in connection with others, participated; and we sincerely hope that all debts of honor as well as legal demands on the part of the Watchman, will be promptly liquidated.—"Owe no man anything." [ED.]

FOREIGN ITEMS. The Shah of Persia has left Teheran, with his army, numbering 30,000 cavalry, with 1000 pieces of cannon, and 3000 camel loads of ammunition, to co-operate with Russia. At latest accounts the army had passed Tabrez. The Shah had also sent an envoy to Dost Mahommed to point out the advantages of his aiding with Persia and the Russians.

According to the Kolner Zeitung, curious developments are coming to light, which indicate that Russia has long been preparing for the present crisis. A large expedition has been secretly organizing under the pretence of a campaign against the Khan of Khiva. For fifteen years past Russian agents have been busied in organizing the Mongolian and Kirgesian hordes, supplying them with money and arms, and teaching them to act in concert. From this source it is asserted that Russia may obtain the aid of 200,000 irregulars, mostly horsemen, so that if war does break out in earnest between Russia and the Western powers, the war will rage along the entire line of Russia and Asia and the colonies of Northwestern America.

Odessa letters of the 8th state positively that the Gagondib, ninety-gun Russian ship, was lost at the battle of Sinope.—The official bulletins do not mention this loss. This ship was bravely attacked by a Turkish frigate, and both vessels blew up. The Turks themselves estimate the loss they sustained at Sinope, in ships, munitions and treasure, at twenty millions of piastres.

According to a letter from Constantinople, out of 4,499 Ottoman sailors, only 1,680—and those mostly wounded—survived the battle.

European Affairs.

The reader can form some idea of the present state of affairs in Europe, by carefully reading the articles on this and the 4th page; which, compared to the great mass of corresponding evidence, is but a drop in the bucket.

Every arrival only confirms us in the belief that with the coming spring, we shall see all nations mustering their forces for the last time.

Persia has declared war with Turkey, and has united with Russia to aid in the work of "drying up the river Euphrates," or, in other words, destroying the nation of the Turks. We are already living in the reality of the pouring out of the sixth vial; and now the admonition is, "Behold I come quickly; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments."

All eyes are turned anxiously toward Turkey. The rights of Turkey are being discussed, at home and abroad, and the Turk daily gains the sympathy and good-wishes of every injured and down-trodden lover of Freedom, as well as the hearty co-operation of exiles of all European nations. The Hungarians are joining the Turks, for they well know they cannot gain their liberty till Russia is checked in her arbitrary designs. Governor Ujhazy, an exiled Hungarian statesman, now living in one of the Western States, has recently declared his readiness and that of his son, to place themselves at the disposition of Kossuth, at any time when their services may be required.

The cause of Turkey is becoming the cause of the democratic world. It is plainly seen wherein lies the interests of all nations, from this consideration: If Russia is triumphant, universal liberty receives at once its death-blow. If Turkey and its allies are triumphant, then despotism is overthrown, and the rights of all men recognized by democratic institutions taking the place of despotic governments. Such then, is the reason why all parties in every nation, will be drawn into one universal struggle, and at the same time, one universal deception. They are already deceived. Even those who are trying to remain neutral, are deceived. The poor exile dreams of future happiness under the tri-colored flag of Freedom,—of a world governed by republicanism, instead of absolutism; but the die is cast—the end of all earthly governments is hastening rapidly on. There is a struggle coming, truly; God's wrath is about to be poured out on a guilty world. The day of darkness, of clouds and of thick darkness, is about to be ushered in upon this world, with all its attendant woes,—but a day of peace and joy to all God's chosen and faithful people. C. W. S.

GOOD WORKS. He that has once felt the grace of God in the remission of sins, will hardly stop short, or make it a handle for sloth or licentiousness. This would be as if a man was travelling in a certain country, and having by some means or other got a taste of its excellent fruits, should make it a pretence for going no farther, or turning back again. G. F.

Daniel 8: 14.—"Unto two thousand three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

This declaration is in answer to an enquiry made by another saint, to that certain saint which was speaking, who we are informed was Gabriel. The subject of the conversation was a vision of four monarchies; the last of which was to tread down the earth, (Dan. 7: 23) and stamp the residue under foot; or as in the question, "how long are the host, and the sanctuary given, to be trodden under foot?" This reply (unto 2300 days) covers the time from the zenith of the Persian kingdom to the session of the Ancient of days, or till the fourth beast (Rome) is "broken without hand," (Dan. 8: 25.)

Obj "These numbers reach to the last end of the indignation; therefore must go beyond the treading down of the host," &c. That must be determined by the indignation here brought to view. A remarkable feature of this fourth beast was, to "destroy wonderfully"; and especially "the mighty and holy people. (Dan. 8: 24.) And so indignant was this power against them, that he would "kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth," (Rev. 6: 8) or as in Dan. 11: 33, "they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity and by spoil." Also, 30th verse, "he shall have indignation against the holy covenant, and have intelligence with them that forsake the holy covenant."

As this covenant (of promise) when completed, will overthrow this beast, he has manifested his indignation by treading down both host and sanctuary, and will do so "until the indignation be accomplished," (Dan. 11: 36) either in its Papal or Mahammedan garb. Here then, will be "the last end of the indignation" upon the host and sanctuary.

2d "Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." When? Then; the next event. If the cleansing had been the subject of the vision, and the 2300 days allotted for its completion, then the 2300 days would have covered the restitution. But the vision brings to view an entirely different work. It is a scene of desolation,—"treading down" indignantly—Hence the cleansing is an act after the transgression shall cease. For instance, I rent a certain tenement, which at present is occupied by a miserable tenant that is doing much injury to the house, garden, &c. Being anxious to change my location, I begin to enquire concerning the length of their lease. (The conditions upon which I rent the place are, that the house shall be papered, painted, whitewashed, "cleansed.") How long the lease to give both house and yards to be trodden under foot (destroyed)? Until the first of April next, or unto April, 1854; then shall the place be cleansed, fitted up.—Could there be any doubt about the length of the lease, or the duration of this desolating process? How then, mistake the time for the treading down, the host and sanctuary? What is the sanctuary? Although it is sometimes used differently, yet in the text it can be no other than the place occupied by the host: a part of a tabernacle. Proof.—After Moses had been instructed about the building of the "tabernacle," his attention was called to the division of it, and the object of that division. (Ex. 26: 31.) "And thou shalt make a veil of blue, and purple, and scarlet; and thou shalt hang up the veil, that thou mayest bring in hither within the veil the ark of the testimony, and the veil shall divide unto you, between the holy and the most holy." And thou shalt put the mercy seat upon the ark of the testimony, in the most holy place; and thou shalt set the table, and the candlestick, without the veil." Paul, speaking of this tabernacle, says it was a figure; (Heb. 9: 9) and in the 23 verse, that it was a pattern. Again, Heb. 8: 1-2, "We have the true tabernacle, and an high priest in the holy of holies," which he further declares is heaven itself. Hence we are assured that heaven itself is the holy of holies of the "true tabernacle," which God pitched, and not man. Now for the blue veil: Josephus says it was so beautifully wrought, that a little way off it could not at all be told from the blue sky itself. Paul says, "our hope enters to that within the veil, whither our forerunner for us hath entered." Thus we have the inner part, and the veil of the "true tabernacle."

Now for the sanctuary. Heb. 9: 1—"Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made; the first (part) wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shewbread, which is called the sanctuary."

Now as we have the true tabernacle, and have found the holy of holies, (heaven) and the veil, (sky) if we can find where the candlestick, (church) shew-bread, (sacrament emblems) and table, (Lord's table) are, we shall have the true sanctuary. Now in the pattern all sacrifice was to be offered by the priests in the sanctuary; so also in the true tabernacle, all sacrifices must be offered by priests in the real sanctuary; and no offering can be acceptable only as it is so offered. Where, then, is the priesthood? (I Peter 2: 5.) "Ye brethren are an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices holy and acceptable unto God, by Jesus Christ." Therefore neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, (exclusively) but in any place where two or three are gathered in my name, there is a place of "offering;" there is the true sanctuary. Even so, Amen.

Now, lest some should prefer the testimony of an unconverted Jew, I will give one right from the first of the twenty-four courses of priests. "When Moses distinguished the tabernacle into three parts, and allowed two of them to the priests, as a place accessible and common, he denoted the land and the sea, these being of general access to all; but he set apart the third division for God, because heaven is inaccessible to man." Again, "Now the room within those pillars was the most holy place; but the rest of the room was the tabernacle which was open for the priests. However, this proportion of the measure of the tabernacle, proved to be the imitation of the system of the world; for, that third part thereof which was within the four pillars, to which the priests were not admitted, is, as it were, a heaven peculiar to God; but the space of the twenty cubits is, as it were, SEA AND LAND on which men live." (Josephus, Book 3, chap. 6-7.) This arrangement of the tabernacle, in the wilderness was afterward brought into the temple, and thus continued until Christ hung upon the cross; when that arrangement was destroyed, and the veil of the temple was rent from top to bottom. We now, having the true tabernacle, (unto which the residue or remnant of Jews, may seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called) may never expect another; and this will be laid aside when the heavens (veil) shall roll together as a scroll, and our high priest, shall appear the second time unto salvation, to all those who love his appearing. Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed, according to II Peter, chap. 3. The time is necessarily deferred for another number, and will be proved to harmonize with the ending of the 1335 days. (Dan. 12.) Cast not away, therefore, your confidence which hath great recompense of reward. The vision will speak and not lie. Praise the Lord. (He has not brought us out to perish. "Be of good cheer." "Be strong."

Yours, in full assurance of faith.

Revivals.

We have cheering news to all lovers of Jesus. God's truth continues to work mightily, glory to his holy name. A good work has already commenced in Salem, under the labors of Brn. Hook and Paine. There had been an interest for some time past, previous to the commencement of their labors. About twenty who never have experienced religion before, have turned in with the offers of salvation, and have been made to rejoice in hope of speedy redemption with all the rest of waiting Israel. Several back-sliders have been reclaimed; some professors of religion from other churches, have come out and embraced the present truth, believing that the Lord will come this present year.

Another revival has commenced in Cheshire, Conn. Bro. Mathewson informs us that thirty arose and requested prayers, last Sabbath evening. Praise the Lord. We hope these are only a few drops before a more plentiful shower.

Since writing the above, we have received the following letter from Bro. Mathewson:

CHESHIRE, Jan. 19, 1854.

DEAR BRO. MERRIAM:—The work in this place is yet progressing. Last evening I should think about forty came forward for prayers; and I hope a goodly number will be prepared for the coming of the Lord—for the destiny of the world, I believe, will soon be fixed, and how few will be prepared! Let us, who believe in the time, do all we can to arouse a world from lethargy before the door of mercy shall be closed.

O, what a day is fast approaching!—a day of joy to the righteous, but of sorrow to the ungodly. And shall we see the Lord this year? To this year all the prophetic periods point as the year of their termination. We have not followed cunningly devised fables, but the consummation of our hope will soon be realized.

S. G. MATHEWSON.

☞ We would request all brethren who wish the paper sent to themselves or others, to forward the names, together with their post office address, written legibly, soon as may be; for we are desirous of knowing how many are needed at the commencement. We struck off five thousand last week, but find we have not enough to supply the demand. This week we shall publish six thousand. We have had letters of inquiry to ascertain our terms. The terms of the Crisis we wish all to understand, are gratuitous. Only let them in candor be read. In respect to our expenditures, we trust those who may be profited by the perusal of the fly-sheets, will do their duty to God by a voluntary contribution, each one giving according as the Lord has prospered him, and we trust in the arm of God that the tidings will go through the medium of the paper, while His glory will be promoted by it; and as we intend to pay as we go, we feel an assurance that the means will not be wanting. We make no charge, and therefore desire not to be credited; if therefore funds fail, we shall take it as an indication in Providence that the paper should stop.

☞ All the provinces of Turkey are now ranged against the Russians. Abdalla Pasha, the Arab who had been exiled to Adrianople for rebellion, was sent to Arabia by the Porte, and according to the last advices, he already had 20,000 volunteers, all horsemen, under his command, and was on his march to the seat of war. The Kurds, the Albanians, the Druses, are all gathering around the standard of the Prophet, and there is no doubt that the Sultan will in the spring have 600,000 men under arms. The enthusiasm at Constantinople is indescribable, and Damascus, Aleppo and Smyrna vie with each other in offering money, horses, accoutrements and cash to the Sultan.

☞ We have had placed in our hands a manuscript, from which we extracted one letter last week and another the present week. It was designed to be published in a volume, but the writer (Mary D. Welcome) was willing selections should be inserted in the Crisis. Her letters have been much admired for their simplicity and practical instruction in the divine life, and we hope our readers will be profited and refreshed by occasional extracts.

☞ The demand for the Crisis is so great, that we would respectfully request all persons to whom it has been sent, in case they do not desire to read it, to return the same to us after writing their names and Post Office address on the paper, and it will be discontinued.

TORNADO AT THE WEST. Mount Vernon, Ohio, Jan. 21. Yesterday afternoon this section of the country was visited by the heaviest storm of wind, rain, thunder and lightning, we have experienced since 1828. A perfect tornado was experienced six miles South of this. The town of Brandon was almost entirely destroyed, scarcely a house being left to mark the site of the place. Dr Wheaton was seriously injured, and another man badly hurt. The tornado extended about half a mile in width, tearing up everything in its course. The streams have overflowed the banks, and Ebenezer Jenkins while attempting to cross Armstrong's river last evening, was thrown from his buggy and drowned.

☞ The English journals almost without exception, agree in regarding that nation, as on the eve of war with Russia. The spring of the present year, there is scarcely room to doubt, will find England engaged in open hostilities with that country.

☞ Protestantism is flourishing in Turin. The Waldenses are about opening in that city, a Protestant Temple, the first in Italy, upon the very spot where the Dominicans burnt the bodies of the martyrs.

For the World's Crisis.

Notice.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS: Believing as I do that the Lord is coming in 1854, I feel the importance of all believing it, that they may get ready. To believe it understandingly it is better for all to examine for themselves—Bower's History of the Popes—which shows, plainly the commencement and ending of the 1260, 1290 and 1335 days. This history is acknowledged by all our learned men, throughout the country, to be the best and most reliable of any work ever issued from the press. They are not for sale in the Book stores, but I have obtained of the publishers all that remains of the edition.—The publishers have always retailed the work (3 vols.) for $6, but I shall sell them for $5. They can be safely sent in any direction by express. I am sure that no brother or sister will regret having them. Then they can act and believe understandingly and also be able to show others. As I have but a limited number, and there will be no more published at present, those who want them had better send soon.

In comparing this History with the Bible you will see, beyond all controversy, that the Lord will come this year. That the Lord may open your understanding and bless you is my prayer. Amen.

Deaths.

Died, in Norfolk, Ct., Dec. 27th, Bro. Henry [illegible]

He died in the glorious [illegible] that delivers [illegible] through fear of death." His calm and peaceful, yet bold resignation, as he was delivered by the ruthless, wasting hand of consumption to be [illegible] the icy chains of the foul destroyer, the enemy of all mankind, is to be admired as a trophy achieved by the "blessed hope, the [illegible] of the dead, and the speedy [illegible] holds the "keys of death and the grave." Oh, how long shall Death, the Tyrant, reign!

West Winsted, Ct. [illegible]

Died, in Lowell, Mass., Jan. [illegible], Norman [illegible], son of William and Sophia [illegible], aged [illegible] years.

For some ten months, past this young man laboured under a decline, [illegible] since his illness commenced, [illegible] strong in the faith of the immediate coming of Christ to redeem His waiting people. He was often heard to say, that "his body would not moulder back to dust before the Lord would come." His exit was peaceful and happy, and we trust he now rests with those who have died in the Lord, to be awakened by the signal blast of the trumpet at the end of the days, when Daniel shall stand in his lot, and when Michael shall stand up for the deliverance of "all who are written in the book." Appointments.

[illegible] appointed to preach in Westboro', Mass., Wednesday evening, Jan. 25, and continue every evening through the week and over the Sabbath.

There will be a Conference at Bristol, Me. to commence Thursday, Jan. 26, and hold over the Sabbath. Also, at Orrington, to commence the Thursday before the first Sabbath in February.

J. COUCH.

Bro. William Sutherland will preach at the Kirk street chapel, Lowell, Sabbath, Jan. 29.

There will be a Conference in Hermon, Me., every first Saturday and Sunday of each month. In Holden and Prospect every second Saturday and Sunday, and in Orrington the third Saturday and Sunday following.

We hope the brethren coming this way to preach the word will give timely notice in the Crisis, so that brethren and sisters can attend the different appointments. [illegible]

A course of lectures will be given in Portland, Me., to commence Thursday evening, Jan. 26, and hold over the Sabbath. F. H. BERICK. EDWIN BURNHAM.

S. G. Mathewson will preach at New Bedford, Mass., the first Sabbath in February, and at Providence, R. I., the second.

Brethren Mathewson and Grant will hold a Conference at [illegible] commencing March 2d, and to continue one week. ISAAC NEWTON.

Particular Notice.

We would request all persons sending letters, papers, or communications to the "World's Crisis" or its Editor, hereafter to direct them to "Jonas Merriam, Editor of the World's Crisis, Lowell, Mass." otherwise there is danger of their being lost. We hope all interested will observe this.

☞ Those who wish for a supply of the Pilgrim's Songster, Investigation of the 1260, 1290 and 1335 days of Daniel and John, by F. H. Berick, or The Lithographic Charts, published by Bro. Cummings, can be supplied by directing orders to J. French, Office of the World's Crisis. The Lithographic Charts can be sent by mail for 12 1-2 cents, any where within 300 miles.—Price of the Charts, $3.00. "Bible vs. Tradition," can also be obtained of Bro. French.

All's for the Best.

[illegible]

All's for the best! be sanguine and cheerful, [illegible]
[illegible]
All for the best! [illegible] ... if man would but know it,
Providence wishes it all to be blest;
This is no dream of the pundit or poet;
Heaven is gracious, and—All's for the best!

All for the best!—set this on your standard,
[illegible] ... or pilgrim of love,
[illegible] ... of Despair may have wandered,
[illegible]
A way-wearied swallow, or heart-stricken dove,
All for the best!—be a man but confiding,
Providence tenderly governs the rest,
And the frail bark of His creature is guiding,
Wisely and warily, all for the best.

All for the best!—then fling away terrors,
Meet all your fears and your foes in the van,
And in the midst of your dangers or errors,
Trust like a child, while you strive like a man;
All for the best!—unbiased, unbounded,
Providence reigns from the East to the West;
And by both wisdom and mercy surrounded,
Hope and be happy that all's for the best.

To My Beloved Sister.

While laboring under severe depression of late, my mind was relieved from embarrassment, by the following expression of the great Apostle: "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God."—Rom. 8: 28. With how much assurance the Apostle expresses himself in this passage. Such language could only come from one whose will was in perfect harmony with the divine, and whose faith implicitly confided in Him.

How full of consolation is this blessed truth to that self-denying disciple of Jesus, who has abandoned all to follow Him, and in consequence, has to "endure a great fight of afflictions." Sometimes he is ready to exclaim, "all things are against me;" but when he turns to the assurance, "All things work together for good to them that love God," his faith is strengthened, his hope brightens, and he goes confidingly forward, believing that although he does not now fully understand why he is called to pass through so many "fiery trials," yet he shall know hereafter.—Enough for him, that the assurance is without limitation; it embraces all things; "persecution," as well as the "hundred fold;" "the trial of faith," as well as the "joy unspeakable;" "perils among false brethren," as well as the love and "fellowship of the saints." Yes, his own familiar friend, with whom he has taken sweet counsel and walked in company to the house of God, may secretly whisper against him, and devise mischief, while Judas-like he betrays Him with a kiss.

True it is, such perils enter deeply into the soul, and effect our entire being; and we are ready to inquire, "How can I possibly be benefitted by these things, so calculated in themselves to destroy my influence, coming, as they do, from my professed friends and Christian brethren?"—"If an enemy had done this, I could have borne it." But what saith the answer of God to one thus tried? There it stands forth in bold relief—written in characters of light by the pen of the Eternal—"All things work together for good to them that love God." Will you, my dear friend, take home to your heart the comfort here offered to you, and let faith in God sustain you in this hour of trial? Perhaps you were too sensitive in relation to your good name—thought too much of your reputation, and were hardly willing to be spoken evil of for Christ's sake; or perchance you trusted in an arm of flesh more than was for your highest good, [illegible] more the esteem and love of earthly friends, than your Heavenly Father deemed consistent with His honor. He is jealous of His own glory. He will not permit us to give to another that which belongs to Himself, without applying the chastening rod. He will break down our earthly props, so frail in their nature, that we may be led trustingly to lean alone upon His potent arm. Therefore while we feel them giving way beneath us, let us not repine, but rest more confidently upon the immovable foundation laid for us in Zion. While one after another of those in whom we have confided forsake us, we ought not to murmur, but rather comfort ourselves in Him who has said, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Has not our Master suffered the same things for us? "All of His disciples forsook Him and fled." Peter, in the spirit of self-confidence, cries out, "Though all men forsake thee, yet will not I." But he denies his Master with oaths and curses. Behold the Savior in the garden, as He takes the bitter cup.—How little sympathy do those three disciples chosen by Him to be witnesses of His agony, manifest towards Him! In this hour of anguish, so deep that "His sweat, as it were, great drops of blood falling down to the ground," they sleep, although He had requested them to watch. Mark His treatment toward them; it is worthy of our imitation. Does He harshly upbraid them for their fault? O, no.—"Couldest thou not watch one hour?"—Then as if to palliate the offence, He immediately adds: "The spirit truly is willing, but the flesh is weak." Happy would it be, could we exercise the same spirit toward our erring friends, considering the infirmities of the flesh, and the frailties of human nature. When we feel that we are treated with coldness and neglect by those from whom we anticipate sympathy and attention, let us turn our thoughts to the Garden of Gethsemene, and learn a lesson of meekness and submission.

We are in greater danger when flattered, than when frowned upon. "Woe unto you, when all men speak well of you," says Jesus. And again, "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven." True, it is contrary to selfish nature, to rejoice under such circumstances; but those who have been "crucified with Christ," and have "put off the old man with his deeds," can obey this requisition of the Gospel as well as all others. Says Peter, "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you. On their part, He is evil spoken of, but on your part, He is glorified." But the Apostle would not have us, for a moment suppose this blessing to be ours, if by our misconduct we incur such reproach; he therefore throws in the admonition, "But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a busy-body in other men's matters. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed, but let him glorify God in this behalf." If we are buffeted for our faults, and take it patiently, we receive no glory in so doing; but if we do well, and suffer for it with patience, this is acceptable with God.

In this Christ has set us an example; "Who did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth: who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not; but committed himself to Him that judgeth righteously." Thus ought we ever to do. His example is worthy our imitation. But those only who have experienced a regeneration by the power of the Holy Ghost can do likewise. It is congenial to our natural temperaments, when reviled and threatened, to retaliate, to use harsh epithets, or represent the position of our opponents as ridiculous, or by some means to injure their influence. All this is decidedly wrong.—"Who is he that can harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" O how sweet, it is to reflect, when we hear the slander of many, and fear is on every side," that our cause is in the hands of Him who judgeth righteously—that He will vindicate it in His own good time; and also that our influence, our reputation is dearer far to Him, than to ourselves. When we do therefore, in the exercise of faith, thus rely on our covenant-keeping God, how calmly can we move forward in the prosecution of our work, and how abundantly flows the peace of God to our hearts!

I do not affirm that we ought never to seek to free ourselves from false imputations. There are times when the cause of God seems to demand it; but much heavenly wisdom is requisite, at such seasons; the glory of God should ever be kept in view, and never ought we to seek to regain our influence, at the expense of others. The reputation of our brethren should be esteemed as precious as our own; for it is as dear to them as ours is to us; and their feelings should always be respected.

If always actuated by the principle of love to God and our neighbor, we shall do just right in such cases. How careful ought we to be about judging too hastily in such matters. We should understand the whole case before we judge, lest we condemn the innocent. The golden rule, when obeyed, always leads to right action. It ought to be indelibly engraven upon the tablet of our hearts, that it may be ever before us.

How little do we know what is for our highest good. Our richest blessings often come in disguise. That which causes the greatest pain, frequently proves the most beneficial. We often pray that God would purify us and fit us for His kingdom; and then, when He commences the work, we repine because it is not accomplished in our own way. Truly we need grace to enable us to bear the answers to our supplications. If we pray for purity, we must be willing to enter the furnace; for the Lord can no more qualify us for His kingdom without it, than the refiner of silver can purge away the dross without it. It is a pleasing thought that God's eye is upon the crucible, and He will not suffer us to remain any longer therein than is essential for our good.

How we shrink from self crucifixion.—It is contrary to every principle of the natural heart, to have the life of self destroyed, and the life of God imparted. The old man struggles hard for life; but he must be nailed to the cross, with all his deeds, in order for the new man, Christ Jesus, to be put on. Now our heavenly Father knows infinitely better than ourselves how this can best be effected. Visions of glory, and bright manifestations of the divine presence, such as were witnessed by Peter, James and John upon the holy mount, by Stephen when dying, by Paul when caught up into the third heavens, and by the "beloved disciple" upon the Isle of Patmos, are not best calculated to accomplish the work of self-crucifixion. These things are important in their place; but it is not the ordinary method of divine manifestations to the soul. When favored with such glorious communications, we are prone to delight ourselves more in the comforts, than in the Author of them; and to desire their continuance always. We are ready to exclaim with the disciple at the transfiguration, "Master, it is good for us to be here!" and fain would we pitch our tabernacles where we may ever be blessed with such heavenly manifestations.

The disciples could not be gratified;—neither can we. They must follow Jesus to the garden, and witness His agony; to the bar of Pilate, and behold His humiliation; likewise to the cross, and there listen to His dying groans. They must also follow Him to the tomb, and witness, as it were the burial of all their people; for they "trusted it had been He, which should have redeemed Israel." Now was it not just as necessary that they should pass through all these painful scenes, as it was that they should witness the glorification of Christ on the "holy mount?"—Could they have been qualified for their ministry without them? So with Paul.—His perils by sea, and on the land, and "among false brethren," were just as profitable to him, as the vision of things unlawful to utter. And never did that Apostle more perfectly glorify God, than when, having "fought a good fight," and "kept the faith," he suffered a martyr's death.

In the banishment of that "disciple whom Jesus loved," we discover a beautiful illustration of the text, "All things shall work together for good, to them that love God." Domitian designed it not for good, but evil. God, however, overruled it for His own glory. He made the wrath of man to praise Him. There Christ manifested himself to the lonely exile personally and gloriously. He is overpowered by the revelation of such glory, and falls as one dead. But he beheld dark as well as bright visions of the future. He had to trace the history of the church through the bloody reign of Antichrist, as well as on the sea of glass, with the harps of God in their hands, or on Mount Zion, the golden city. How little did John anticipate the glory that awaited him there on a solitary Island of the Ægean Sea. He might have reasoned thus with himself: "My career of usefulness has now come to an end. I can be of no more service in the cause of God. Henceforth my attention must be devoted to labors in the mines, while life remains." Thus John might have soliloquized; but such was not his destiny.—God called him to explore the mines of futurity,—of eternity. He was not to remain a solitary exile; but to be favored with the presence of Angels and of God. Never did that disciple accomplish so much for Christ, as when on that dreary Isle.—There he wrote a chart to guide the church, until the end of time. Many a weary pilgrim's heart is now cheered by its perusal; for it shows the beacon lights are nearly all passed—the heavenly country nigh—and the city of God about to appear. We rejoice that John was ever banished, that from the Isle of Patmos he might behold the prophetic visions of futurity and immortality. All things conspired together for his good, because he loved God.—We behold the goodness of God,—His tender regard for his children in giving this Revelation to the church. What Paul saw was unlawful to utter; but the things John saw he was commanded "to write in a book." In the joyousness of his heart, he exclaims, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of the prophecy!"

We may never be placed in a condition like that of John, on a lonely Isle; but we may be so situated as to deem our usefulness at an end, and our services in the work of God closed. Outward circumstances may preclude hope; but let us not repine, for it may be the best position for us to occupy, and that in which we can most glorify God. On a bed of sickness, deprived the privilege of the sanctuary, we may exemplify the power of saving grace by meekness of spirit and patient endurance. God will not fail to secure to himself glory as well by the saint in the sick chamber as by the active laborer in His vineyard. It is a great lesson to "learn in whatsoever situation we are, therewith to be content." Every thing that tends to cut us loose from earth, and creature comforts, and lead us to seek consolation in Christ, is of incalculable importance to us. The probing of the heart, which reveals its hidden depravity, is just as necessary to our salvation, as "peace like a river," or "joy unspeakable and full of glory."—The one prepares us for the reception of the other. We must be wounded in order to receive the balm of Gilead.

Will reserve further thoughts upon this subject until my next.

Loss of the San Francisco. We have no room to give a full account of this sad affair. We merely allude to it, and add a few lines taken from the Boston Journal. Lieut. Wm. A. Winder, U. S. A., makes the following statement, which will be read with deep interest:

Ship Three Bells,
At Sea, Friday, Jan. 6, 1854.

The steamer San Francisco, as you are aware, sailed from New York on the 22d of December, with United States troops, bound for California. The day was beautiful, and everything promised a pleasant and prosperous voyage. The ship was well provided with everything which could render us comfortable, and every luxury that could be procured was placed on board. All these things, together with the gentlemanly and efficient officers of the ship, and pleasant company in the cabin, served to render us happy and contented. But, alas for all human calculations! about nine o'clock the second day out, a gale sprung up, and continued to increase all night. At daylight it was perfectly frightful. During the night—I think about 12 o'clock—our engine gave out, and soon after our foremast was carried away, which left us entirely at the mercy of the wind and waves. The scene in the cabin during this time was truly distressing.—Nearly all had turned out of the state rooms, despair depicted on the countenances of all. A few of us who occupied the upper cabin left it and went below; and well it was for us, for soon after day—I think about 8 o'clock—a sea broke over our starboard wheelhouse, and with frightful force dashed against the after cabin, carrying away all of the cabin, and about one hundred and fifty people.

I had gone below but a few minutes before this terrible crash, and was lying at the foot of the steps at the time. I never experienced such a sensation as when the water came pouring into the cabin, together with the debris of the upper cabin, down upon my head and breast. I was swept across the cabin with a terrible force, but after three attempts succeeded in regaining my feet. I supposed that the ship had broken in two, and that we were fast sinking. I followed after some I saw going on deck, and on reaching it my blood ran cold at the sight of the poor fellows struggling among the fragments in the sea.—The waves were, to my eyes, frightful; we could render no assistance whatever, and in fact expected ourselves that we should go down every minute. With great difficulty we clung to the deck, the sea making a perfect breach over us, and the cold so great that an hour longer must have finished us.

The sea was running very high at the time, and the wreck was strewn on each side, with pieces of the wreck scattered here and there, with men and women clinging to the pieces in order to save themselves. In a few moments all was still, none of them appearing. Not a sound was heard except the dismal moaning of the wind.

He then gives a lengthy account of the condition of the ship after that time, and the manner by which they were enabled to keep afloat, and of their rescue by the barque Kelby, British ship Three Bells, and the Antarctic. Previous to falling in with the Three Bells, sickness broke out among the remaining passengers, of which many died in consequence.

The number of lives lost is estimated at about 200; 563 were saved by the three vessels. Total number on board at the time of leaving New York, was 763.

The Boston papers also bring us accounts of the wreck and total loss of the Staffordshire, a Packet ship, by which, also, 175 lives were lost.

☞ Private letters received at New York, from Kossuth, state that he had postponed his departure from Constantinople in order to make further preparations.—He states explicitly that he has been invited to Turkey by Government, and adds that provision will be made to transport thither from the United States all Hungarians who desire to go.

☞ There is a great possibility—a possibility amounting almost to a probability—that before the lapse of many weeks, another French revolution will have been chronicled in the annals of the times. The Republicans seriously talk of a speedy rising in Paris, to be followed by a restoration of the Bourbon dynasty.—[Lowell Courier.

Austria. The regular correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing from Vienna, Dec. 18, says:

Of the political dangers which menace Austria, it is hardly necessary to speak.—Her immense army, and a police which has in its service almost half the citizens of the Empire, are barely sufficient to prevent outbreaks, and to dry up individual drops of disaffection. On the one side she is menaced by France, and, in case of a European war, is sure to lose her Italian provinces, and on the other the Hungarians and Poles are moving heaven and earth to fan the flame which has broken out along the Danube into a general war.—She can gain nothing by a war, and would lose everything. Many European politicians have thought that she would like to secure the Principalities of Bosnia and Servia, but such is not the case. They were offered to the Emperor Joseph nearly a century ago, and he refused to accept of them. At the present time the Servians have manifested a spirit which Francis Joseph may admire in the abstract, but which would lead him to hesitate long before incorporating the Principalities as an integral part of the Empire. It is certain that Austria, as well as Prussia, has assented to the declaration of France and England, that the Eastern question shall be settled without disturbing in any way the existing territorial relations of Europe; but at the same time she has but little confidence in effecting such an arrangement. The above resolution on the part of the four Great Powers may have some effect in confining the present struggle between Russia and Turkey to the region of the lower Danube, but Austria is secretly making preparations for the worst. She is exhorting the Servians and Montenegrins to keep quiet, but has promised to aid them if they are forced into a contest with the Turks. A friend, who lately came to Vienna through Hungary, informs me that by night he met numerous large military trains hastening toward the Servian frontier. Notwithstanding the true interests of Austria are intimately connected with the Western Powers, there is, I am sorry to say, a general feeling of satisfaction at the late Russion victory at Sinope. Count Fiquelmont, though not in power, is at the head of a strong Russian party at the Vienna Court. The populace appear to be delighted with the defeat of the Turks. Their ignorance of political affairs, however, is their bliss. "Ah!" remarked to me yesterday a noble Hungarian, "the foolish people little know what is in store for them if Russian policy proves triumphant."

☞ The following spirited remarks are taken from "The Citizen," a new paper just started in N. Y. City, edited by John Mitchel, an exiled Irish Patriot:

"Once again rosy morning dawns upon the earth. The 'Peace and Order' established in Europe at the point of five million bayonets begins to grow nervous.—The nightmare of five years loosens its clutch upon the breast of the nations, and we see daylight and hear the cheerful cock-crow. Many a time in this long, dark unrest, misnamed Peace, brave and just men wished that they were dead: the righteous cause, they said, is crushed hopelessly for our generation—'that which is crooked cannot be made straight, and that which is wanting cannot be numbered.' But, courage! courage! The unwearied sun chases his own shadow still; and it is well to be alive, and not dead, when the dawn is breaking, calling us to the work and the play of life again.

* * * * * * *

"Meantime, the Turks are highly exasperated, and in good spirits and condition. Thus far they have belied all the expectations and opinions of Europe; opinions which were carefully purchased, inculcated, suborned, by the prudent Czar. The horse-tail pennons of the Pashas fly bravely on the Danube: the Spahis, on their Turkman steeds, are sweeping the valleys of Caucasus and the shores of the Euxine: it gives us delight to see and to feel, notwithstanding the dismal doctrines of the decadence of races which prevail in these times—that our mother earth breeds the same sort of sons as of old.

* * * * * * *

"But already Hungarians are swarming into Turkey. Others are setting forth from America to join them. If Turkey can hold her ground, notwithstanding the false friendship of the Western Powers, Hungary will be the first country in arms. Then a gallant game will be on foot, indeed. In Berlin, Vienna, Milan, Paris, men are already eyeing the lines and corners of streets, with a view to judicious barricades; and it is pleasing to the benevolent mind to see the terror of Kings and Courts. The 'legitimate' pulse beats somewhat tremulously; and even Serene Highnesses lose their serenity. Perhaps the great day of deliverance is indeed dawning for Europe.

"The war, however, is very likely to grow and spread; no man can tell how many powers will be brought into it. If it last long, America will not be able to avoid collisions, and we shall be glad of it. Look up ye life-weary exiles of all lands, and see if it be not indeed the morning that is red in that Eastern sky. We have a vision of royal thrones crackling and blazing, and dropping to ashes in the public squares of capital cities; dungeons razed, and the captives set free; barricades coming down, and leaving the streets clear again for processions of gay citizens, and funerals of the glorious dead; smoking walls and rafters of ruined royal palaces; smiling cottages of free and contented peasants; and twenty gleaming tricolors of twenty Republics studding the soil of Europe over, as stars gem her sky."

If it be true that Kossuth goes to Turkey at the request of Ab-dul-Medjid, with regard to which, we await further information, there can no longer be a doubt that the Porte anticipates the addition of Austria to its declared enemies, and is preparing to keep that power busy at home by a new rising in Hungary, an example, which, of course, will at once be followed in Italy.—At the same time, we have to announce that public feeling in England is daily becoming more inflamed. The excitement is not only directed against the Ministry for its weak and treacherous conduct in the Turkish question, but Prince Albert is openly charged with complicity with Russia, and the Queen herself is no longer regarded with the same exuberant loyalty as before. It is surprising to see the roughness with which the Prince is handled by journals once filled with respect and devotion for his person and character. Indeed, there has been no such stirring-up of the popular elements in England since the times of the Reform Bill. The public at large are hot for war; and of this the late articles of The London Times upon the Turkish naval disaster alone afford conclusive evidence. At no moment since the commencement of the difficulties have the chance of peace been so faint and the probabilities of a general war so strong.—That such a dire convulsion is certain we do not say; it may be that some means of escape can yet be found; but we are bound to declare that the horizon reddens with the menace of a universal conflagration. We do not hail the omen with pleasure. Our faith is in the triumphs of industry, of science, and the gradual acquisition of freedom through the growth of material and social well-being. But in saying this, let us never forget the truth that if a general war must follow, it has two causes, namely: the wicked and unjustifiable pretensions of Russia, and the timid, base, hypocritical conduct of the British and French Governments. The weight of responsibility lies on these powers, but above all on Russia, as the aggressor and source of the entire difficulty. It is the Czar who fears not to disturb the peace of the world, to interrupt its prosperity, to cause a boundless and irreparable waste of money and of life, all upon the most frivolous and worthless pretexts. Let there come, then, if the struggle is inevitable, a befitting chastisement for the flagrant and gigantic wickedness of the despot who thus arrogantly gambles with the blood and treasure of his own people, and puts in peril the dearest interests of Mankind!

☞ From Stockholm, December 16th, we learn that King Oscar has organized the higher departments of the military and naval administration, with a view to securing greater utility and efficiency in the event of hostilities.

By the route of Berlin, December 24th, we have it confirmed that negotiations are pending between Sweden and Denmark, having for their object the conclusion of a league offensive and defensive, between the two states. Sweden is arming by sea and land, and Denmark will immediately fortify her coasts, and place Copenhagen in a state of defence.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS,

In the publication of this paper a leading object is that the poor may have the Gospel preached unto them, and we desire in all things to imitate Him, who is our great Example, and obey his instructions—"Freely ye have received, freely give." We therefore make no charge against subscribers in any case. As pecuniary resources however are indispensable to the prosecution of the enterprise, we would say to those readers of the "Crisis," who are interested in its circulation, that whatever funds may be voluntarily collected for this object, and forwarded to the office, will be gratefully received and applied to the continuance of the paper.—We have faith in God that while it is His will for the "Crisis" to be circulated, His overruling Providence will furnish the means; and whenever those resources stop, the gate will be shut down and the work cease. The will of God be done.

All friends to the cause of present truth are at liberty, not only to give in their names for the paper, but to forward all other names to whom they wish the paper directed, provided only, that it may be carefully read; and we cordially invite all who are solicitous, candidly to investigate the subject, to present their names as subscribers to the paper.

In respect to communications, we would say that we desire this whole work to be under the special direction of our Heavenly Father, and supervision of the Holy Ghost. We seek not honor that cometh from man, but that which cometh from God only. We therefore do not open our columns for polemic war, or the aggrandizement of self, but do most cordially solicit the correspondence of such as feel their hearts deeply imbued with the love of God, and the living truth like fire shut up in their bones, to communicate from the fullness of an overflowing heart. We have a heartfelt sense of our utter dependence on the arm of God to move forward the work; and we desire that every correspondent's eye may be single to the glory of God, and edification of the little flock to whom Christ will give the kingdom when He comes without sin unto salvation, for which we wait the present year.

All individuals to whom The World's Crisis is forwarded, are respectfully solicited to ascertain what persons in the place of their residence are desirous of receiving it, and send us the names of subscribers, together with their Post Office address; also to inform us whether papers are to be sent by mail or express, whether in one bundle, or directed to each individual. Much labor and expense at the office would be saved if some one of the subscribers, in different places, could receive the papers directed to a particular Post Office in a single package and distribute them to the several subscribers.

Exposition of Daniel, Chap. 7.

BY F. H. B.

(Concluded.)

This change in the church and state brings us to a new era. The first effort of this new Emperor was to heal this division that had rent the church in the East. In this he was aided by his nephew Justinian, who was a rigid Catholic. It appears from history that the nephew of Justinian and Proclus were the actual rulers. During the year 518, the Emperor sent to the Pope at Rome, requesting him to send legates into the East, capable of forwarding and accomplishing the great work of uniting the two churches of Rome and Constantinople. The following year, (519) the Pope sends his legates, who on being introduced to the Emperor, Justin, at Constantinople, presented the following conditions, on which the union was to take place: "1. To ANATHEMATIZE ALL HERETICS in general, and those in particular, who have been mentioned above, together with Acacius. 2. To RECEIVE THE COUNCIL OF CHALCEDON, THE LETTER OF LEO ON THE INCARNATION, AND ALL THE LETTERS WHICH THAT POPE HAD WRITTEN ON THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION; though most of the orientals, probably all, were utter strangers to those letters, and the doctrine they contained. 3. They were to declare that they CONFORMED, and WOULD CONFORM IN ALL THINGS TO THE APOSTOLIC SEE; THAT THEY RECEIVED ALL THE CONSTITUTIONS OF THE ROMAN CHURCH." (Bower's His. of the Popes, vol. 1, pp. 313–314.)

The result of this effort of the Emperor and Pope was the reunion of the church of Constantinople with that of Rome.—The Bishop of Constantinople refused, at first, to sign the articles; and this determined the Emperor to present them to the Senate, who approved them. Afterwards he obliged the Patriarch to sign them, and thus a union of the two churches took place, A. D. 519.

In relation to the above, we may remark, that the events of A. D. 519, are far more decisive in their character relative to the fulfilment of this prophecy, (Dan. 7: 8, 24–25) than any events that have transpired either before or since.—Let it be remembered that the rise of the little horn is to be looked for between the years 493, when the LAST of the ten,—the Goths arose, and A. D. 534, when the FIRST of the three,—the Vandals were subdued. It is WITHIN THIS CIRCLE OF TIME, that the Apostate Church is to assume her civil character, or as the Apostle represents, (Rev. 17) the Woman is to take her SEAT UPON THE BEAST.

The above-named Articles being DICTATED by the POPE OF ROME, and by his legates conveyed to the Emperor of the East, and RATIFIED by the SENATE through the INFLUENCE OF IMPERIAL POWER; from THIS ENACTMENT of the CIVIL GOVERNMENT, constituting the CREED OF CHALCEDON, the LAW of the EMPIRE, we may date the ORIGIN of the little horn.

The religious world was, at this time, divided into many sects—as Arians, Pelagians, Eutychians, Nestorians, Manicheans and Catholics. The second of those articles required first, that those anti-Catholic sects should EMBRACE THE DOCTRINES OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH, AS DEFINED by the CHALCEDONIAN COUNCIL; and secondly that they should ENDORSE not only the letters of Leo on the INCARNATION, but ALL the LETTERS which that Pope had written on the Christian religion; and thirdly, should declare that they CONFORMED in ALL THINGS to the APOSTOLIC SEE; that they received ALL the constitutions of the CATHOLIC CHURCH, &c. The Catholic faith was not only secured as the RELIGION OF THE STATE, but by an IMPERIAL EDICT ENFORCED ultimately upon ALL OTHER SECTS. The FAITH OF CHALCEDON BECOMES NOW the DOMINANT RELIGION, the CATHOLIC CHURCH is NATIONALIZED, the WOMAN TAKES HER SEAT UPON THE BEAST, the man of sin HIS SEAT in the TEMPLE OF GOD, and the abomination is SET UP, or STANDS in the HOLY PLACE.

It must be remembered that the point to be proved is not that the Pope should become a temporal Prince. This would not agree with the instruction given by the Angel of God; for the Pope did not become a temporal Prince until about the close of the eighth century, while the truth (Dan. 7: 24) requires the existence of the horn with eyes and a mouth, BEFORE A. D. 534,—when the Vandal kingdom was conquered. It is the NATIONALIZATION of the CATHOLIC CHURCH by the GOVERNMENT—not by the ten kingdoms of the Western Empire—but by the BEAST, (Rev. 17) and as Lord remarks,(1) "THE CONCURRENCE WITH THE POPE IN ENFORCING THE FALSE DOCTRINES AND SUPERSTITIONS of that Apostate on its subjects." This was done in 519, by the EASTERN EMPIRE. By consulting the history of those times, we learn that the Bishop of Antioch signed the Articles(2) in 519. Here, then, were three great divisions of the church in the person of her representatives united in the Catholic faith, viz. the Bishops of Rome, Constantinople and Antioch.

The Metropolitan of Thessalonica and the Bishop of Alexandria refused to sign the Articles, not because they contained the creed of Chalcedon, or because they required entire obedience to the constitution of the Catholic Church, but from the fact that they were required to condemn the memory of some of their Bishops.—This occasioned great disputes, but that part relating to the Bishops being left out, (3) the Council was received ALL OVER the East.(4) The quarrels of the Popes and Emperors subsequently, do not touch the question, or invalidate the great work, which was accomplished in 519, else no demonstration can be presented that the union was ever formed; for such dissensions have been of frequent occurrence ever since. The question whether one or more persons in the Trinity suffered in the flesh, was not a point specified in the Articles; hence it was not a question that affects this position. It was not a union of the two churches, but a nationalization of the Catholic Church, the reception of the faith of Chalcedon, and the persecution of dissenters,(1) that distinguished the acts of Justin from 519 onward. The government of the East, down as late as the time of Pepin, protected the Catholic Church both in the East and in the West; but in consequence of the Emperor of the East declaring against the worship of images,(2) A. D. 726, the people of Rome were excited against the Emperor; they expelled the Governor, and formally erected a Republic, (730). Subsequently, however, being pressed by the Lombards, Pope Stephen, 2d, sought for an alliance with the Greek Empire; but not obtaining it, he applied to Pepin, (755) who delivered Rome from the Lombards, and put the Pope in possession of the Exarchate.—From this event we are to date the administration of the second head of the best. (Rev. 17). (4)

But to return to the subject, we remark that Justinian, whom Gibbon styles the pillar of true religion,(5) was consul under Justin, (519) and that he was adopted in 520, some say as Colleague, others as successor. But however this may be, it is certain he had a great influence in the government, as the following will show: "After the death of Anastasius, the diadem had been placed on the head of a feeble old man; but the powers of government were assumed by the nephew of Justin, (Justinian) who already meditated the extirpation of heresy, and the conquest of Italy and Africa. A rigorous law was published at Constantinople, to reduce the Arians by the dread of punishment within the pale of the church." And in a letter addressed to Justin by Theodoric, we have this sharp reproof: "That to pretend to a dominion over the conscience is to usurp the prerogative of God; that by the nature of things the power of the sovereign is confined to external government; that they have no right of punishment but over those who disturb the public peace, of which they are the guardians; that the most dangerous heresy is that of a sovereign who separates from himself a part of his subjects because they believe not according to his belief." (7.) Justin, while under the influence of Catholicism, together with the Pope himself, did, as Theodoric says, usurp the prerogatives of God, or as Paul says, sit in the temple of God, showing himself to be God. I do not ask for better evidence to show the rise of the little horn, (Dan. 7); for the watchword with both Justin and the Pope was, "give the heretics no quarters." They proscribed them in matters of faith. They did not, they would not, grant them toleration. Hence we believe this to be the period, (A. D. 519) where the daily was taken away, and the abomination was set up. That the papal power was not at its height in 519, is admitted, for history informs us that it was not until the fourteenth century that it attained its full height, its full power.—It was then that Boniface stood on that proud and guilty eminence, of absolute, spiritual and temporal power. But I think that 519 was the time when the beast began to operate, to make war upon the saints, to tread under foot the holy city, the time when the witnesses began to prophesy in sackloth, and when the woman (church) fled into the wilderness.—Even the Catholics themselves regard this as an important era in the history of the church. They heap their anathemas on the two former Emperors—Zeno and Anastasius—while they lavish their benediction on the heads of Justin and Justinian. This event was of importance to the Catholics; it gave them power and wealth, they could pursue with fire and sword those who refused to bow to their mandates; and from this time onward, with but very few exceptions, if any, there was an unbroken ... steady increase of power down to the time of the Reformation. As we have inserted a number of historical extracts, we shall do well, perhaps, to take a retrospective view of the facts defined by this historic testimony. We learn, 1st. That Anastatius dies, and that Justin succeeds to the throne, A. D. 518. 2d. Justin, being a rigid Catholic, compelled all the Bishops in his dominion to subscribe to the above mentioned articles, on pain of forfeiting their sees. 3d. The above mentioned articles were signed by the Patriarch at Constantinople, and the Bishop of Antioch, A. D. 519. 4. The Catholic Bishops, according to Putnam, were recalled from their exile the same year (519). 5. Heretics of all denominations were excluded from all employments, both civil and military. 6. The Emperor and the Pope did, in compelling the Bishops to sign those articles, take away liberty of conscience. And in granting no toleration to heretics, as they were called, fulfilled 2d Thess. 2—"He shall sit in the temple of God, showing himself to be God."—7. Those who would not yield obedience to the decree of the Emperor, viz. receive the articles which were approved by the Senate, (civil power), and dictated by the Pope, (ecclesiastical power), were regarded as schismatics and heretics; and as such, many of them were scourged, imprisoned and put to death. 8. That from this date, (519) the witnesses began to prophesy in sackloth, the holy city is trodden under foot, and the woman flees into the wilderness, into her place, (the mountains) where she is nourished 1260 days (years).

Here then, in A. D. 519, I must, as a matter of truth and consistency, consider the abomination that MAKETH DESOLATE (Dan. 12: 11) was SET UP; and the Prophet was informed from the time it was set up there would be 1290 days—years. "And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High; and they (power according to the Sep. ver.) shall be given into his hands until a time and times and the dividing of time," (Dan. 7: 25). Critics are by no means agreed on the numerical value of the expression, "the dividing of time." But we turn to the instruction given by the Angel, to ascertain, if possible, the length of that period.

Upon a critical examination of Dan. 7: 23, 24, we learn that the power into whose hands the saints were to be given, is 1. To pluck up three of TEN CONTEMPORARY KINGDOMS. 2. That the times laws and saints are to be given into his hands for a "time and times and the dividing of time." 3. That he is to "wear out the saints," &c.

In Dan. 11: 31–35 we read:

"And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate.

And such as do wickedly against the covenant shall be corrupt by flatteries: but the people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits.

And they that understand among the people shall instruct many; yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days.

Now when they shall fall, they shall be holpen with a little help: but many shall cleave to them with flatteries.

And some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge, and to make them white, even to the time of the end: because, it is yet for a time appointed."

In the above there are three specifications. 1. The abomination is to be placed 2. The people that do know their God "shall fall by the sword and by flame, by captivity and by spoil, many days." 3. They shall fall until "the time of the end; because it is yet for a time appointed."

We now turn to Dan. 12: 11. "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days."

Here are two particulars. 1. The abomination is set up. 2. There shall be ... days.

In Matt. 24: 15 and 21 we read:

"When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth, let him understand.)

For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be."

In the above there are three points.—1. The abomination of Daniel shall be set up. 2. When it is set up there shall be great tribulation. 3. There are days (time) during which that affliction is to last.

In order to show the parallelisms of the above passages, we present them in succession as follows:—

I.

Dan. 7: 25. And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand.

2 Thess., 2: 8. And then shall that Wicked be revealed.

Dan. 7. And shall wear out the saints of the Most High, until a time and times and the dividing of time.

26. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and to destroy it unto the end.

II.

Dan. 11: 31. And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate.

They shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days.

35. And some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge, and to make them white, even to the time of the end: because it is yet for a time appointed.

III.

Dan. 12: 11. And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up.

Rev. 13: 7. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them.

Dan. 12. There shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days.

IV.

Rev. 13: 6. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven.

Matt. 24: 15. When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth, let him understand.)

21. For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be.

Rev. 13: 10. He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword, must be killed with the sword.

2 Thess. 2: 4. Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.

6. And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time.

Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth.

Without specifying every point in the above, we may remark, that the power denominated the little horn, (Dan. 7) is to "wear out the saints;" and they are to "fall by the sword and by flame, by captivity and by spoil," (Dan. 11), "and he shall make war with the saints," (Rev. 13), "and then shall be great tribulation," (Matt. 24.)

Again in the seventh chapter we read the saints, times and laws are to be given into the hands of this power for a "time and times and the dividing of time."—Agreeably to chapter 11 the abomination is to be set up, and the saints are to "fall until the time of the end;" and according to Dan. 12, from the time the abomination is set up, "there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." It must, we think, appear evident to every unprejudiced mind, that the power spoken of in the 7th, 11th and 12th chapters of Dan. is the same—that the "little horn" power and "the abomination, that maketh desolate" are identical; and inasmuch as Daniel declares, (chapter 7) "It shall be for a time and times and the dividing of time," and in the 12th chapter, for "a thousand two hundred and ninety days," from the setting up of the abomination, we are led to believe that the periods in chapter 7 and 12 are one and the same.

In relation to the period denoted by "the dividing of time," as we make no pretensions to understanding the Hebrew or Chaldaic, we submit to the criticism of Prof. Vail, in reply to an article written on the subject, from which article he quotes under the head of No. 1, 2, 3, &c.

"1st. The word translated dividing, in Dan. vii. 25, is not the same as the word rendered divided, in Gen. x. 25."

Niphleghah, in Gen. x. 25, is the verb in the Niphae praet. 3d sing., from palag—it was divided. The word in Dan. vii. 25 is p'lagh—a dividing—and is the Chaldaic noun from the same root, the root letters being the same in both Chaldee and Hebrew. The simple difference between the words is, that one is a verb and the other a noun. They are just as much the same words as the English words dividing and was divided, both being from the same root, and of course having the same radical meaning, the only difference being that one is a verb and the other is a Chaldaic noun from the same root.

"2d. The word in Gen. x. 25, is pahlag, a Hebrew word, signifying to cleave, (or split,) to divide, and is thus rendered by the Vulgate, and other versions."

This is not quite correct. The words pelegh and niphleghah occur in this sense, and only these from the root—palagh—he divided.

"3. The word in Dan. vii. 25, is not a Hebrew but a Chaldee word."

Very true; but it is the same word as the Hebrew pelegh, the only difference being that it has a Chaldaic pronunciation, p'legh, instead of pelegh.

"4th. It is not pahlag, but p'lag."

There is no such word as "pahlag," either in Hebrew or Chaldee. The writer should have spelt it, if he meant the Hebrew noun, pelegh, as above; or, if he meant the root, he should have spelt it palagh. The writer seems to leave the impression on the mind of one unacquainted with the original tongues, that the words are radically different, but their radical and common significations are the same.

"5. It never occurs in any other place in the Bible."

Very true, in this particular form, as a noun, it does not occur. But then, it does occur as a participle, from the same root in Dan. ii. 41.

"6. It never means anything but just a half. This is the only signification given to it by Gesenius, or any one else that I know of."

That it means a half here, (Dan. vii. 25,) is generally conceded. It is not true, however, as we are left to infer, that palagh means to divide into two equal parts only. See Gen. x. 25; 1. Chron. i. 19. The division of the earth here mentioned was doubtless the division among the descendants of the three sons of Noah—Shem, Ham and Japheth.

"7th. When the Bible was translated into Greek, about two thousands years ago, they translated p'lag by the Greek word hemisu, the only meaning of which is a half.

"8. The word translated half in Dan. xii. 7, is the Hebrew word chetsee, or chatsee; it is defined—1. half, the half part; 2. the middle, midst, [illegible]

To these remarks I would take no exception.

"9. It has no other meaning; it never means an unequal division.

"10. It is translated half in ninety-nine places, and mid, or midst, in the other fifteen where it occurs.

"11. It is translated into Greek by hemisu, just as the other word is. ...

The 9th remark refers to the word chatsi, in Dan. xii. 7. What is said of this word in the following remarks is probably true. But it must be admitted that the root from which it is derived—to divide into two, three or more parts.—See Gen. xxxiii. 1. "And he (Jacob) divided the children unto Leah, and unto Rachael, and unto the two handmaids."—Here is a division, certainly, into three parts, and not into two equal parts.—Judg. vii. 16. "And he divided the three hundred men into three companies."

As the 10th and 11th remarks, I take no exception.

Yours, truly,

STEPHEN W. VAIL.

Concord, Sept. 3, 1853."

From the above criticism we learn that the original term rendered "dividing," does not necessarily imply a division into two equal parts. As Prof. Vail referred to Gen. 33: 1. to illustrate the usus loquendi of the root, from which the original word chetsi is derived, we will present that verse together with the context.

"And Jacob lifted up his eyes and looked, and behold, Esau came, and with him four hundred men. And he divided the children unto Leah, and unto Rachel, and unto the two handmaids.

And he put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindermost.

And he passed over before them, and bowed himself to the ground seven times, ...

And Esau ran to meet him, and embraced him, and fell on his neck, and kissed him; and they wept.

And he lifted up his eyes, and saw the women and the children, and said, Who are those with thee? And he said, The children which God hath graciously given thy servant.

Then the handmaidens came near, they and their children, and they bowed themselves.

And Leah also with her children came near, and bowed themselves; and after came Joseph near and Rachel, and they bowed themselves."—[Gen. 33: 1–7.

We perceive from the above passage, that Jacob divided his children into three parts. The first division was assigned to Leah, the second to Rachel, the third to the two handmaids, (v. 1.) 1. He put the handmaids and their children foremost.—2. Leah and her children after. 3. Rachel and Joseph hindermost, (v. 2.)—Again, 1. The handmaidens came near, they and their children, and bowed themselves 2. And Leah also with her children came near, and bowed themselves.—3. After came Joseph near and Rachel, and they bowed themselves.

That the criticism of Prof. Vail is correct, is evident from Daniel 12th, where the little horn power of Daniel 7th is referred to as "the abomination that maketh desolate," & the period of its dominion is given as 1290 days.

OUR PRESENT POSITION is truly an interesting one. We are only a few ... from this end of the ... The world which the Prophets ... identified as being ... the righteous should dwell, ... the place of this present ... cursed earth. But a little while, and he that is to come will come, and will not tarry. That thrilling scene, the resurrection of the dead, is soon to be realized! Paul declared plainly, "if the dead rise not, they which are fallen asleep in Christ have perished; but now Christ is risen from the dead, and became the first fruits of them that slept." "Christ being the first fruits," says Paul, "afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end." As Paul based his hope of future life and immortality wholly upon the resurrection of the dead at Christ's coming, so likewise have all the saints of God, who have lived and died ... from that day down to ... we shall see their hopes realized; Paul will soon obtain his crown of life, which shall never fade away. faith, we shall soon behold in reality, with our own eyes. Job declared that he should see his Redeemer at the latter day upon the earth, even though he returned to dust like those before him, yet in his flesh should he see God, and see him for himself and not another. Abraham was made to understand the resurrection by offering up his son Isaac, his only child,—a lively type of Christ, being a child of promise,—and in offering up that beloved son,—who, to Abraham had become as one dead, from whence he received him in a figure,—he saw plainly the way in which he himself would gain that city, whose builder and maker is God, in connection with that countless multitude, of which he is called the father.

Those exceeding great and precious promises, made thousands of years ago, will now soon be fulfilled. The hour is rolling rapidly on when death shall be spoliated of its victims, and no longer permitted to reign and triumph over the just; when the captive millions will "go free,

And keep the eternal Jubilee."

In view of the consummation of this blessed hope, can we not endure a little longer, knowing that the word of the Lord will never fail? Can we not labor diligently in the vineyard of the Lord the few remaining hours allotted to us here? Can we not raise the cry, and by the help of the Lord, sound it far and wide, "BEHOLD THE BRIDEGROOM COMETH!" and with all the energy possible,—having our hearts filled with love to our fellow-men,—beseech them to join the happy company that will soon stand on Zion's height, and sing the song of redemption, and give praise, and glory, honor and might, power and dominion unto him who sitteth on the throne and to the Lamb forever! The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, FEBRUARY 1, 1854.

Tarrying of the Vision.—No. 2.

In a previous communication, I endeavored to show that the Prophets, to whom the Lord revealed things to come, reaching down through the vista of coming time, and terminating in the glories of the [illegible] the Prophets saw in vision the trial of our faith; they saw that prior to the organization of that heavenly kingdom, the saints, who look and long for the approach of that day, would see the land, not as they beheld it "afar off," but "nigh at hand"—that its balmy zephrs bearing fragrance on their wings, and wafting the gentle, life-giving element of heaven, would cheer and delight them with their genial influences, and that the opening twilight, as it were, of everlasting day would burst in such charms upon their enraptured vision, that the sailors on the six thousand years' voyage, would cry out land ahead; and in the joyousness of hearts being high with hope and warm with the fervor of divine love they would expect to make the land before the actual expiration of the time. The Prophets, Habakkuk and Ezekiel, beheld the disappointment of waiting Israel, and the triumphs of the ungodly in consequence of the delays, also, thank God, they saw the second message, the rallying again of the faithful, their reassurance in the faith, and the speaking of the vision at the end. The days are no more prolonged, there is no more vain vision,—the word that God speaks in the days of that rebellious and unbelieving house comes to pass, and every vision spoken by the mouth of all His Prophets is at last fulfilled.

When the Lamb of God, who suffered in our behalf, was "in the days of His flesh," He reannounced the disappointment of the Church, and confirmed the word of the Prophets by the Parable of the ten Virgins, (Matt. 25) illustrating the condition of the believing children of God just prior to His Advent in the glory of the Father.

"Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom."

The word "then" is an adverb of time. The first definition of the original word translated "then," according to Liddell and Scott is, "at that time."

There is therefore a period of time referred to, when the history of the Church would compare with the movement of the ten virgins in going forth to meet the bridegroom at a nuptial ceremony. The word rendered "shall be likened," is rendered by Whiting, Coverdale, and in the Douay, "shall be like." It properly signifies shall resemble; not that it shall simply be compared to ten Virgins, but bear the likeness or resemblance to ten Virgins. We must therefore look for a striking coincidence to take place between the moral action of the Church, and the physical movements of the virgins in their illuminated procession going forth with blazing torches to meet the Bridegroom and enter with him to the marriage feast.

As there must be some boundary to mark the commencement and close of the period denoted by the term "then," between which two points the circumstances set forth in the Parable are to transpire, we will look for the termins of the period.

In respect to the closing terminus, as the Parable involves the actual coming of Christ, and does not extend beyond the admission of the wise virgins into the marriage of the Lamb, and the expulsion of the foolish from the same blessed, glorious entertainment, we have no hesitancy in fixing the boundary of the period here; and to this it seems all must assent.

We now search for the other bound; and if we can find a monument here, then we have the two extremes between which the events shadowed forth must transpire.

To decide on this point, we must examine the symbols presented in the Parable, and ascertain what movement of the Church is shadowed forth by the action of the virgins, in connection with the symbols presented.

1. The Virgins. Says Paul, 2 Cor. 11: 2 to 4.

"For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy: for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.

But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.

For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him."

Says Solomon; Cant. 1:2; "Because thy name is as ointment poured forth, Therefore do the Virgins love thee."

Says John, Rev. 14:4.

"These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb."

We therefore understand that inasmuch as the whole Parable sets forth a movement in the kingdom of heaven (Church,) and by comparing spiritual things with [illegible] uses the term "virgins" to symbolize those who are identified with Christ as believers in His Gospel and subjects to His authority, we doubt not the virgins in the Parable represent a class of believers, who by confiding in and obeying the truth, go forth to meet the Lord.

2. Lamps. Says Solomon, Prov. 6:23.

"For the commandment is a lamp; and the law is light; and reproofs of instruction are the way of life."

In Zech. 4, we have a scenic representation of "the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel," and a portion of this scenery consists of seven lamps. Says the Psalmist, Ps. 119: 130,

"The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."

And again, 105th verse,

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."

We therefore conclude the word of God, contained in the scriptures of the Old and New Testament, is presented in this parable under the beautiful emblem of a "lamp," or more properly, according to the original, a torch or flambeau. As the flambeau in an illuminated procession throws around a brilliant light, and dispels the darkness of the way, so the word of God, and particularly the prophetic delineations, dispel the moral darkness, and light up the pilgrims pathway with the hope of glory. This is in accordance with the idea presented by Paul in 2 Pet. 1: 19,

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts."

The light of prophecy is represented by the Apostle as dissipating the darkness of the present evil world, and pointing the believer onward to that blessed hope of the Christian which entereth to that within the vale, which causes him to purify himself even as He (Christ) is pure, in expectation of being made like Him, when He comes, and experiencing final deliverance and complete salvation in the kingdom of God. This, then, is the blazing torch, the brilliant flambeau that lights up the pathway of the virgins, even the entrance of God's word that giveth light. It is the golden beams of heavenly light, that shine forth from the oracles of God, dissipating the darkness that covers a sin-cursed earth, and the gross darkness that envelopes a disobedient people, that shows the path of the just shining more and more unto the perfect day. All, who were in heart identified with the Advent movement a few years in the past, will not fail to recognize in this idea of the lamp, something analogous to their experience in '43-4 and previous. What made every Adventist bind up the testimony and seal the law, among themselves, and wait upon the Lord, and look for Him? (Is. 8: 16-17.) What induced them thus to bind the heavenly oracles to their hearts, as a priceless treasure? Why did they all exclaim, as with one voice, the bible has become a new book? What was it but the radiant light that enveloped their persons, as it were, and filled their souls with joy unspeakable and full of glory? No individual interested in the movement will deny it was the removing of the veil from our hearts, so that when the Prophets were read, the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ should shine unto them; so that our minds were no longer blinded, but "we all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of God, were changed into the same image from glory to glory."

"For then will I turn to the People a Pure Language."—[Zeph. 3: 9.

NO. 1.

The language of an individual is the outflowing of his heart—an index of thought—a channel of communication, by which he interchanges thought and feeling with another. Says our Saviour, "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." And the language of a man just as naturally indicates the character of that man, both intellectually and spiritually, as the outgushing fountain tells of its sweet or bitter, its fresh or saline waters, by the streams it sends forth. Hence Jesus says, "By thy words thou shalt be condemned." The justice of such a decision is based on the fact that words are an index of character—that the tongue moves in unison ordinarily with the heart. To particularize,—a man partakes of the spirit of the world,—gold is his idol,—accumulation is the object of supreme desire. Listen to his conversation; it is on the value of stocks, the price current of the Market, or something in relation to earthly gains or the affairs of the world.—Follow the devotees of earthly pleasure, and you will find their conversation relates to sensual and voluptuous enjoyment.

But when the heart is cleansed from all "filthiness of the flesh and spirit," and the world barred out,—God and heaven enters, and grace reigns triumphant within,—the affections become refined and spiritualized—the man is transformed into the likeness of Christ—and out of the abundance of the heart proceed pure and holy sentiments. Imbued with the spirit of Jesus, he breathes forth the language of tenderness and love,—being heavenly minded, his conversation is seasoned with grace, and a holy influence is constantly going forth from his lips, to the edification and comfort of the saint, and the salvation of the sinner. The words of Jesus on this subject are very remarkable. After the Pharisees had uttered the blasphemous sentiment: "This fellow doth not cast out Devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the Devils," Jesus spake the following ever memorable words: Matt. 12: 31-37,—

"Wherefore I say unto you, alll manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men.

And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come.

Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt; for the tree is known by his fruit.

O generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, speak good things? for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.

A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things; and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things.

But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment.

For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned.

The Saviour in this passage makes the words of a man an index of moral character, as the fruit of a tree is indicative of the nature of the tree. If so, a degree of importance is attached to ordinary conversation, of which few people are aware.—If by our words we are to be justified, and by our words to be condemned; if the decisions of the last day hang on the words of our lips, how momentous are the interests at stake; how vast are the consequences involved in the use of the tongue! Many individuals conceive their tongues are their own, and that they have a right to employ them as they please; little do they realize that "for every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."—Startling declaration proclaimed by the Son of God—whose word stands firmer than the pillars of the earth. The time is rapidly approaching when God will "turn to the people a pure language;" for all whose language is corrupt will have their portion in a burning world; and into the renewed creation "there shall in no wise enter any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life."

Says James, (Ch. 3: 2,) "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." The principle is here advanced, that the last member brought into subjection is usually the tongue. If therefore the tongue is under the entire control of Christian principle, it may be inferred all other members are also in subjection to the will of Christ. The idea seems to be this, it is so much more difficult to exercise control over the tongue, than other members, that provided one obtains a complete victory over that unruly member, there must necessarily be such a predominance of Christian graces, such a spirit of entire consecration to the sovereign Head, that the man is a spiritual, holy, devout, and godly man, throughout his entire being.

It is such an easy thing to transgress with the lips, it is such a small matter to utter an idle word, that it is not to be expected that one, unless his spiritual vision is very acute, should detect such minute faults as they are usually considered, such trifling derelictions from the path of rectitude. But when one stands in the open sunshine of heaven—in the full blaze of the divine presence—every mote becomes visible in the sunbeams of spiritual light It requires however divine illumination to discover spiritual objects in their true light. When the heart is under the influence of grace, those evils which are regarded as comparatively trivial, and of little moment, become as distinctly visible as the mote that floats in a sunbeam shining through a small aperture into a dark room; and when a man is thus illuminated, and his conscience sensitive to every violation of God's commands, it may be said of him "the same is a perfect man"—he is supremely dedicated to the work and will of God. If he is so perfectly obedient, so entirely submissive to the holy pleasure of God that he does not even offend by the utterance of a single expression of anger, or impatience, or folly, then the finishing stroke is given to his Christian character, and he becomes indeed a child of God throughout.

The foreign intelligence received by the last arrival is far more confirmatory of our present position than any thing we have heard before. It is evident the gigantic, nay COLOSSAL power of the North is making its most desperate effort for conquest and martial glory in the coming season.—In fact the representation of the papers is, that all the pecuniary resources and physical energies of that mighty empire are being put in requisition to overwhelm the Turks, and dry up the river Euphrates, (break down the Mohammedan power,) early in the Spring. Indeed some columns of the Russian troops have already taken up their line of march for the centre of operations; and the closing scene in the Drama of earth is about to be opened in its fearful carnage and universal desolation. It is remarkable that while the sympathies of the world are almost all on the side of Turkey, no power, as yet, extraneous to her own dominion, has struck a blow in her behalf. The combined fleets have at last attempted to enter the Black Sea; but providence interfered by a tempest, and they are obliged to return.

France is making provision for the expected emergency by additional contingents, and arming eighty thousand men for the conflict in Turkey, while Norway is fitting out a squadron of 12 ships. Breadstuffs are every where rising rapidly in price, and we learn that in Boston flour is $14 per barrel. All these occurrences show what is impending even in view of the world, and cannot we, who have long looked for just such developments to transpire in the earth, see in them the finger of God? So clear and unmistakeable are the signs that appear on every hand, that it seems as though all must understand.—But alas! "the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise," thank the Lord, "shall understand." Those who are identified with the economy of grace will move round with the wheel of providence, and advance with the light of truth, and thus be "children of the day" and not of the night.—May God prepare us to escape all those things that are coming on the earth and to stand before the Son of man when He shall come the second time without sin unto salvation, and accomplish the deliverance of His saints.

Later From Europe!

Russia and Turkey. The Atlantic brings little definite intelligence to add to the important news brought by the Niagara. It is confirmed that on the 30th of December part of the allied fleet made an attempt to enter the Black Sea, but were prevented by the tempestuous weather.

Up to the latest dates Russian Ambassadors had not withdrawn from London or Paris.

M. Kiseleff, Russian Minister at Paris, is reported to have said that he would await further instructions from his government.

There is a report that the Turks had stormed Karakal; although it is likely, it is not yet confirmed.

The Russians have warned their shipping not to venture out of their ports, except under the protection of a convoy. Convoys are to be organized to their different ports.

The Pacha of Egypt, hearing of the Sinope disaster, immediately ordered the equipment of six frigates, two corvettes, and three brigs, to replace those destroyed.

From Vienna it is stated seemingly authentically that Austria asked Russia if she would consent to an European protectorate over the Christians in Turkey. To this the Czar replied that he would consent to no interference whatever between himself and Turkey.

On the Danube little was doing, owing to the weather. There had been three slight affairs, one between an escort and some Cossacks—another a sally from Sislowa—and the third, an action between a steamer, two gun-boats, and the shore of the Danube. In all three cases the Turks were successful.

It is confirmed that the Wallachian peasantry are in insurrection.

Lord Dudley Stuart has had an interview with the Sultan of Turkey respecting the employment of Poles.

It is reported that the British Charge has resumed negotiations with Persia. The Persians and Teherans having broken out in a tumult against the Russians.

A letter from Christina states that Norway had decided on fitting out a squadron of twelve ships, in view of approaching events. But little sympathy is felt for Russia by the Norwegians.

The sailors of the Russian Baltic fleet who are on leave are summoned to return to service.

England. The enormous rise in the price of food caused apprehensions in England of riots among the laboring classes. Bread riots had already commenced in parts of Devonshire.

At Topshal mobs of women threatened the bakers in consequence of the latter raising the price of bread. At Crediton, also, bands of women and children paraded the streets, and attacked some of the bakers' shops, demolishing the doors and windows, and doing other damage.

The market people were also molested, and their produce kicked about the streets. The police were unable to put down the disturbance and it was not until the report that soldiers were coming that quiet was restored.

France. France has called out an additional contingent of 80,000 men, to replace 70,000 men destined for Turkey.

Belgium. King Leopold of Belgium has sent an autograph letter by special messenger to Napoleon, on the subject of war prospects. It has not transpired, but it is variously surmised as being another decree of the Czar to gain time or a bona fide proposal on the part of Belgium.

Prussia is concerting a course of action with Denmark and Sweden, in view of a coming war.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE. Paris, Monday.—Our direct advices from Constantinople are to the 20th of December.

News had been received the day before by the Trebizonde steamer of a fresh defeat of the Tuskish forces near Kars but within the Turkish frontier.

The Turkish troops were represented to have numbered 25,000 men; they were attacked by a Russian force of 18,000 strong. The right wing and centre of the Turkish army for some time defended itself well, but the left wing was with difficulty restrained from surrendering without a blow. All the exertions however of the officers in command could not prevent them from disbanding.

The latest accounts from the Danubian Principalities confirm the report of an insurrection amongst the peasants of Lower Wallachia.—The insurrection was extending, and may cause the Russians serious trouble.

A report was current in Jassy relative to the death of Prince Woronzow.

Official accounts had been received there announcing the death of Admiral Ozman Pacha, who was wounded and made prisoner at Sinope.

All accounts from St. Petersburgh confirm the impression that in Russia the army, the church, and people are flinging into this war all the national energy they possess, and throughout the empire the preparations are on the largest scale of which the Government is capable.

St. Petersburgh, Dec. 30. The sixth corps, stationed at Moscow and the environs, has had orders to move towards the South; the first columns are already in motion. The 1st corps, composed of grenadiers, is cantoned in Finland—Lavonia, Esthonia, and Courland. The German nobility of Courland professing the Lutheran religion and oppressed in the Baltic provinces, have solicited to send their children as volunteers at their own expense to combat for the Orthodox faith.

☞ We give place to the following letter from Bro. Paine, as it is in regard to the present interesting state of affairs in Salem to which we alluded last week:—

SALEM, MASS., Jan. 30, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—I have been here most of the time since I came (Jan. 12) with Bro. J. G. Hook, whose labors have been greatly blessed, in arousing the Virgins and convicting sinners. Quite a number have confessed that they have found peace in believing, and the interest still increases. The meetings are to continue afternoons and evenings, through this week. Many members of the different churches have become interested, and some of them have confessed their faith in the Lord's coming in 1854. There is so much of an ear to hear, that last evening, probably not one half that came to the house could get in. That the Lord may save all that are within the reach of mercy, is the Prayer of thy Brother, JOHN B. PAINE.

☞ In the last number of Brownson's Review, a Catholic publication, its Editor takes the side of Russia against Turkey, affirms the temporal authority of the Pope, by divine right, over all sovereigns, and denies that religious liberty is consistent with the teachings of the Christian religion.

European Affairs.

The complexion of the latest advices from Europe is more warlike than ever, relieved only by a report that peace propositions have been made to Louis Napoleon by the Czar, through the King of Belgium. On the other hand, immense preparations are going forward in Russia to carry on the war, and the government continues to adopt every means to arouse the people to enthusiasm—to nerve them to a contest which they are given to understand is impending—and preparations for which are making in all quarters of the empire. The Emperor Nicholas may desire to negotiate with Louis Napoleon, but it is to gain further time for preparations—to induce the belief that he is anxious to maintain peace—and thus to postpone the time when the allies shall gird themselves for the contest until he is ready to take the field with an overwhelming force.

But the veil has now fallen from the eyes of the Western diplomatists. They are beginning to see things in their true light—to take note of the preparations which Russia is making for war—to realize that war cannot now be averted.—Tardy preparations are making to meet the crisis. France is arming, and has called out her contingents. The preparations of England are confined principally to an increase of her naval force. It is the intention of the government to raise the number of seamen and marines for the current year to 53,500 men, which is an increase of about 8000 to the number voted for last year, and a total increase of the navy since 1852 of 13,000 men. The raising of this force, however, will be a work of some difficulty on account of the scarcity of and great demand for seamen. The London Times expresses the hope that not a moment will be wasted in raising this necessary force, by whatever means may be required for the purpose.—There seems to be but two ways of doing this—either by impressment or by giving bounties. Of the former the Times says:

"To the disgrace of our age and our civilization, the right of impressment still exists, but woe to the Government that shall rely on such an aid, and to the country, if it trusts to such means for defending its shores. The law of impressment is as completely obsolete as if it had been expunged from our code, and we are anxious this matter should be clearly and distinctly understood, in order that an emergency, which can be met by no other means, may not arise and tempt us to an outrage in the perpetration of which we should most assuredly and deservedly fall."

"If the present rate of wages be not found sufficient, by all means," says the Times, "let a bounty be given to induce enlistment. The Government comes into the field as a competitor with the merchant service, and must, if it means to succeed in the competition, offer more favorable terms."

It is worthy of remark that the whole tone of the London Times has changed within a few weeks. It no longer ridicules the idea of a general war, or seeks to prejudice the Turkish cause. It acknowledges the imminence of the danger, and urges the government and the people to prepare to meet the crisis which it now thinks cannot be averted. Reviewing the whole subject, "the thunderer," after admitting that the task about to be undertaken by France and England is no easy one, says:

"The civilization and independence of all Europe are at stake, and, from the nature of this contest, it is one in which Russia cannot succeed without reducing not only the East, but the West, into subjection. The Russian Empire is difficult to attack on its frontiers, impregnable in the recesses of the interior. Its people are disciplined rather than debilitated by absolute government, and the force of a single will is never more serviceable than in such a struggle.

Throughout the Empire preparations for war are made on the largest scale of which the Government is capable. Confident as we are in the ultimate triumph of the cause defended by England and France, the honor of those countries demands that no half-measures should be taken; and that, if we are led to engage in war at all, it should be with a full consciousness that we have a proud and powerful antagonist to overcome."

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT AND GREAT LOSS OF LIFE AT RAVENSWOOD, L. I.—New York, January 29. The ball cartridge factory of Mr. French, at Ravenswood, Long Island, a few miles down the East River, exploded yesterday, causing a terrible loss of life—blowing the bodies into fragments and scattering them in every direction. It is believed that from 20 to 25 persons were killed, as thirty hands are usually employed in the building, and all who were inside at the time were killed, excepting two. They were mostly boys and girls employed in filling the cartridges. The scene at the ruins was terrible. The building itself was blown to atoms, the fragments and machinery, with mutilated bodies and disjointed limbs of the human victims being scattered about the fields. The remains of thirteen bodies were so far recovered and fitted together as to be identified.

"These things Speak."

We are frequently met by different persons who remark to us, "if you will stop talking about the Lord's coming, and labor more for the salvation of souls, I could go with you heart and hand, and there would be no divisions among us—we could all worship God together in peace, and see sinners converted," &c. Really, as for one, I am always glad to see people turning from their sins to serve God, and the news of a good revival always cheers my heart. But, shall we drop the great fundamental principles and truths contained in the Bible, for the sake of keeping in unison with all classes of professors, and endeavor, after having so done, to convert the sinner from the error of his way, and thus operate under a standard of our own? Suppose that after coming down to the standard of men that sinners should be converted; would they be converted to God? Would they really be brought from nature's darkness to the marvellous light of the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ, when in fact, they were not instructed as to what is taught in that Gospel, and even made to understand that certain portions of that Gospel was of no account to them? Certainly, all such conversions as would take place under such blind teaching, would only tend to increase the blindness both of the teacher and the taught. How then shall God's minister labor, in order to bring people to a knowledge of the truth, even the whole truth? Simply by obeying the directions of the very Gospel they present to others to observe and obey, as being the only way by which to gain eternal life. And if part of the Gospel teaches us to look for the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, then it is the duty of all who profess to preach the Gospel, to instruct their hearers accordingly, and thus observe the admonition of Paul, "These things speak."

And again; when the angel of the Lord opened the prison doors and set the apostles free, his counsel was, "Go, stand and speak in the Temple, to the people ALL the words of this life," and like faithful men of God, they did not shun to declare the whole truth; and even taught that the consumation of the believer's hope would not be realized until the appearing of Jesus Christ, the second time, without sin unto salvation. Again, the instruction of Jesus Christ to his disciples, was, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations * * to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Then of course, Jesus intended that no part of his Gospel should be dropped for the sake of keeping in unison with any class of men; and in giving his revelation to the Apostle John on the Isle of Patmos, (who is told to send it unto the seven churches), He declares, "Behold he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him"; and in many places in this same revelation, when speaking of his second coming, and of the time at which he should appear, he pronounces a blessing on all who shall be found watching and waiting for him.

In view of these things, what else can we do, while endeavoring to bring men to a knowledge of the truth, but simply to speak according to the oracles of God? If we attempt to alter the Gospel to accommodate our fellow-men shall we, in so doing, meet the approbation of Jehovah? All acquainted with the principles of that God who is the Judge of the earth, well know that in order to avoid His judgments, His word must be obeyed. How can we, then, as individuals looking for such an event as the appearing of Jesus Christ, and well knowing that when that day shall come, all men will be called to give account of the deeds done in the body, and to receive their reward,—go quietly along without giving a single admonition to our fellow-men—without beseeching them by the mercies of Jesus Christ to repent, and be converted to God, that their "sins may be blotted out," and their names registered in the book of life, that thus they may escape the impending wrath that will fall upon all "who know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

RUSSIAN PREPARATIONS FOR WAR.—The London Observer learns from a private source in which it places entire confidence, that the Russian Railway enterprises are all to be stopped for the present, and the money and men required to carry them on, devoted to carrying on the expected war with Turkey and her allies. And further, that agents of Russia are at the present moment engaged in England and the United States in search of ships and warlike stores. The Observer warns all English subjects of the danger of engaging in any such commerce with Russia, for to do this in time of actual peace would subject one to severe penalties; but in case of war, the crime and the punishment would be perilously increased.

Dear Bro. Merriam: I wish to offer a few thoughts through the medium of "The World's Crisis," the first number of which has within a few days come to hand. I have had deep and anxious feelings with regard to the propriety of issuing a new paper. But it is done—and my prayer and heartfelt solicitude is, that God may be glorified. The number received breathes a most lovely spirit, and I was greatly refreshed in reading its columns of well selected and interesting matter.

I trust that while it heralds the Day and approach of the Great Battle of God Almighty, it may ever proclaim "peace and good will to men." With profound and deep solemnity, we exclaim, O, what a day we live in! The opening scenes of dire calamities upon all the kingdoms of the world, so long foretold by holy seers, are now rushing in upon the world with appalling and terrific swiftness.

Men's hearts are beginning to "fail them, for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."—Hear some of them testify. Says one, "the voice of God is speaking thsough his providence in solemn, awful and encouraging terms." Another,—"The constitutions, the politics, the powers, and the dominations of this world which we have been accustomed to, are heaving with unwonted throes, when the old foundations seem to be all broken up, when historic thrones are tottering, and imperial sceptres are shaking, we do receive the most solemn and the most thrilling warnings, as far as relates to our individual capacities, to strengthen our foundation upon the ROCK OF AGES." Another,—"There is an undefinable impression abroad upon all spirits, of a coming crisis and a better day; all things seem to travel onward to a general crisis and a new era." Another, "The black clouds of despotism still lower with fearful import, over the destinies of Europe, and threaten to break in thunderbolts of war and revolution." Another,—"A moral and political earthquake is maturing, and the heaving of the earth shows that the elements are in motion. It is the preparation and commencement of the great battle of Armageddon, the breaking up of absolute powers." Another,—"Important scenes are about to be opened to the view of an astonished world." Another,—"The world is making huge efforts to die."—Another,—"All things are now ready for the sounding of the seventh trumpet."—Another,—"The signs of the times are portentous, and clearly indicate the approaching downfall of the nations, and the overturning of kingdoms, empires and republics, preparatory to the coming of Christ, and his personal reign on the earth." Another,—"Do not shut your eyes before the finger of God pointing to the mene-tekel upharsin, written with gigantic letters upon the sky of Europe"—Another,—"Between twenty-five and thirty of the kingdoms of Europe were swept with the tide of revolution, and shaken to their very centre. And now the nations are angry, and prepared for war upon a scale of grandeur hitherto unknown; and the hearts of men fail them when they anticipate the result of the awful struggle." Another,—"There is perhaps no one European government, the rulers of which are not at their wits' end to keep under the raging spirit of democracy and anarchy." All agree that the present state of society is like the heaving of a volcano; and no one knows but at the next moment its terrific elements may burst forth." Another,—"Eyer since the French revolution, the peculiar signs, both moral and political, which is predicted to mark the time of the end, have been developing. The preparation is making for a great and fearful crisis; the kings and rulers of the earth are leaguing, and becoming more and more involved in their ambitious schemes; and the Lord is sealing his people, pouring out his spirit, and gathering his elect. Verily, we must be blind if we cannot discern the signs of the times." Another,—"The present concussion of the nations; the simultaneous shaking of the Ottoman and Papal empires; the reign and domioancy of infidelity; the extensive propagation of the gospel beyond the limits of the Western Roman empire; the state of feeling and excitement in the Jewish nation; the infidel indifference of the world; the deathlike slumber of the church, and the midnight cry that has been recently raised, and that is now ringing in the ears of the infidel world, and a sleeping church, all indicate that the 1260 years have run out their course; and when ye see these things, know that the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Another,—"The horizon reddens with the menace of UNIVERSAL CONFLAGRATION. We do not hail the omen with pleasure; we can draw no smiling horoscope for the now probable convulsion." Another,—"There is a Canaan before the democracy of Europe; but the RED SEA must have swallowed the chariots and the horsemen of Pharaoh before the promised land can be enjoyed." Another, "The year 1854 bids fair to transcend 1848 in events of momentous and universal interest. According to present appearances, the WHOLE CONTINENT is likely to be again involved in the conflagration of a general war,—not simply between the unarmed and undisciplined people and their mailed oppressors, but between great nations themselves, the representatives respectively of freedom and of despotism, the great issue which the events of many years have been preparing, seems at last to have been joined, and the final contest is at hand." Another,—"The year 1854 opens with fearful indications of future commotions. Wars and rumors of wars are heard, and the nations of the earth are in commotion." Another, "No doubt a better than paradise is coming; but what is coming first? What is before that paradise? What is nearest—yea, nigh at hand to this secure, unthinking, dreaming world? The tempest cloud of heaven's judgment! The filling up of God's wrath! The last vial already trembling in the angel's hand!—that baptism of fire."

The above are a few of the testimonies in my possession on the coming events that now cast their shadows before, causidg men's hearts to fail with fear.

Such are the shadows of the evening stretched out; such is a direct fulfilment of what is written in the book. Such are the unerring precursors of that which hasteth greatly. Such are the evening portents of the closing up of the Gospel dispensation. Reader, "prepare to meet thy God." He is coming; the Judgment, the Judgment comes with lightning speed; prepare to meet it! Amen.

S. S. BREWER.

Lincolnville, Me., Jan. 25, 1854, the year of Jubilee.

☞ We publish the following letter for two reasons; first, on account of its cheering news, and secondly, the call for help which it contains, hoping that some of God's watchmen may feel it duty to visit that section of country and comply with the writer's request.

PLAINVILLE, N. Y., Jan. 23, '54.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—There are a few virgins in this region, that have had the privilege of hearing the glorious sound of the midnight cry, (as presented by bro. J. Smith, of Meredith Neck, N. H., and his comrade bro. J. K. Palmer of Concord, N. H., with their wives,) and the result, praise the Lord, is that they have been waked up from their lethargic state. Men and women have been led to believe God's word; sinners have been converted to God; backsliders have been reclaimed, and are now rejoicing in hope of soon seeing Jesus and being made like him.—Yesterday, nine willing souls went down into the liquid grave, and were buried and brought up from that grave, by bro. Smith, in hopes that soon they will be brought up by a mighter hand. Glory to God, we repeat, that ONE that said "I am the resurrection and the life," will come this year to perform that glorious work, of which baptism is only a representation. Yesterday some friends from Van Buren, (about nine miles from this place) came here to meeting, as we had a conference appointed here, and brought with them two or three fly-sheets called the World's Crisis. Seeing that it was just what was needed, I went right to work to ascertain who wanted the same, and received a number of subscribers, and also their mites to support the paper, and my prayer is that God will bless the means. But in relation to the meeting in this place, the work is but just begun. Still they come and ask God's children to pray for them. Brethren, we need help now. Bro. Smith has labored, and faithfully too, but has had to be laid aside a few days. Thank God he is blowing the trumpet again. We have prayed that God would put it into the hearts of some of his watchmen who are not afraid to give meat in due season to the household of faith, and warn the world of the approaching judgment, to come over and help us. Doors are open all around. The harvest is truly great, but the laborers are few.

I drop these lines in haste, between meetings, and accompany them with my prayer, that the good Lord will assist you in your labors of love; and that the warning cry may go forth upon those fly-sheets, and men be convinced of the truth, and be saved in the coming kingdom.

Yours, looking for immortality to be given soon.

JOHN T. ONGLEY.

The Pilgrim's Jubilee Hymn.

BY S. S. BREWER.

Dear brethren and sisters, thou poor despised band,
Like Christians bear your trials,
You soon shall reach the land,
You soon shall reach the land,
Where peace shall reign forever
In Beulah's happy land.

The sixth seal long since opened—the earthquake marked the time,
Earth trembled to her centre,
The sun refused to shine,
The sun refused to shine;
The tribulation ended,
That reign of blood and crime:

See nations getting angry—hark, from the distant shore,
Like troubled waters surging,
They are gathering for war,
They are gathering for war,
To wage the final conflict
Of cruel bloody war!

The midnight cry is sounding—the Judge of earth draws near,
The heavens soon will open,
The great white throne appear,
The great white throne appear;
The nations will assemble,
Their final doom to hear!

In lingering tones of mercy now sounds the midnight cry,
The virgins hail with rapture
The heavenly bridegroom nigh,
The heavenly bridegroom nigh;
With lamps well trimmed and burning
They hail redemption nigh.

We soon shall gain our Eden—and sing on Zion's height,
With all the blood-washed millions,
In spotless robes of white,
In spotless robes of white,
And waive the palm of victory,
In realms of endless light.

There, with admiring myriads, we'll join to shout and sing,
While hills break forth in singing,
Fair Salem's walls will ring,
Fair Salem's walls will ring;
Throughout eternal ages
We'll paise our God and King.

There see creation blooming—sweet fragrance fills the air,
While gushing strains of melody
Hangs trembling in the air,
Hangs trembling in the air,
Creation blends in harmony
God's glory to declare.

The land—the land is nearing—where joys are ever new,
The everlasting kingdom,
The city is in view,
The city is in view,
With prophets, saints and angels,
God's shining retinue!

Blow, blow then gentle breezes—the land I long to see,
And hear the mighty trumpet
Proclaim the jubilee,
Proclaim the jubilee!
O come, thou mighty Conqueror,
Bring Immortality.

☞ The new work from the pen of Bro. F. H. Berick, entitled "THE GRAND CRISIS IN HUMAN AFFAIRS; THE LORD SOON TO COME," will be ready for delivery by Saturday, February 11. It embodies all the principle features in the argument on time, both Historical, Chronological and Biblical. It contains between 380 and 400 pages, and will be offered at the following rates: Bound in paper covers, $37,00 per hundred. Muslin binding, $45,00 per hundred. Retail price, paper covers, 50 cents, muslin, 58 cents.

We believe that all who desire information in regard to the great events about to take place will find this publication, to be just what they need.

We hope and trust that it will be speedily scattered far and wide, that it may be the means, under the blessing of God, of doing good, and bringing many to a knowledge of the truth.

All orders for the above work should be sent to the "World's Crisis," Lowell, Mass., and they will insure prompt attention.

PAPISTS AND PROTESTANTS. There is unquestionably a most acrimonious and revengeful state of feeling steadily growing throughout the country, and particularly in our larger cities, between Protestants and Catholics, which justly excites serious apprehensions of future evil. In New York and Cincinnati this denominational strife has threatened the most serious consequences—the mass on both sides being incited through an inflammatory and intemperate press, propagating narrow and selfish views, and encouraged by ecclesiastical functionaries, holding high positions in the church. An ominous circumstance to be considered in connection with this subject, is the rapid organization of Societies, (adopting secret signs,) with the avowed purpose of opposing the Roman Catholics in case of a collision. Occasionally, all the mechanics in manufacturing or other establishments join these organizations en masse. Prominent among these, we may mention the "Order of United Americans," the "Guard of Liberty," and the "Know Nothings," coinciding and cooperating with all of whom, in the essential point of crusading, are a large body of Germans, Orangemen, or Irish Protestants, and many Italians.

The social incongruity here presented, of one portion of citizens arrayed against another with hostile intent, may be the precursor of untold evils. By no possibility can any good result from it. Better that a thousand lives were lost by casualty or disease, than one in religious strife.—[Boston Mail.

☞ So numerous and cheering have been the testimonials from brethren and sisters in relation to "The Crisis," that I feel bound to record to the glory of God's grace the general interest that has been manifested on the subject. It is not we but the grace of God, that accomplishes the work. I could but feel overwhelmed with a sense of the divine goodness in feeding the household "with food convenient for them," and melted to tears by the kind and grateful expressions of beloved brethren and sisters in their letters. Says the Apostle, "neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase."—All glory to His name, that He is pleased to shine upon such worms of the dust, and permit them to reflect the light of His truth, and the glory of His salvation. If our heavenly Father is pleased to recognise and bless our feeble instrumentality in edifying the Church, and arousing the Virgins to their last effort in His service, we will praise Him for His wondrous grace.

The general outburst of gratitude and sympathy that has come spontaneously from the pens of so many brethren and sisters has more than compensated their unworthy Editor for all the care and toil and responsibility under which he has labored, and sometimes been ready to sink. We have given extracts from some of those letters, but many more remain on hand to be noticed so far as may be proper in future.

I visited the brethren in Providence, R. I., last Sabbath and found things in a happy and flourishing state. Their numbers are increasing. God is reviving His work among them and they are strong in the faith giving glory to God. It was a heavenly atmosphere to breathe.

I also learn that revivals of religion are enjoyed in other places in R. I., particularly one of a very interesting character in a Church consisting partly of colored brethren at Warwick Plains.

THE STRENGTH OF THE ENGLISH AND FRENCH FLEETS, now in the Bosphorus, amounts to 44 sail, including line-of-battle ships, frigates, and steamers. Of these the French and English have each three three-deckers; we have seven two-deckers (including the Agamemnon) to five French two-deckers, the French 90-gun screw-ship Napoleon having, unfortunately, been sent back to Toulon for repairs. Each flag has, or will soon have, 11 paddle-wheel steamers. The Sanspareil (English) and Charlemange (French) two-deckers have auxiliary steam power.

In addition to this powerful fleet, there are in the Bosphorus at least seven Turkish and Egyptian line-of-battle ships, besides frigates and steamers; so that the combined force may be taken at about 60 sail. From the large amount of steam power, the weight of guns, the size of these ships in proportion to their rating, and the perfection to which naval gunnery has now been carried both in the English and French navies, this is, beyond doubt, the finest naval armament ever sent to sea.

Verily Austria is given over to an age of iron.

"Before she can have liberty the Liguorians and Jesuits must be gotten rid of. They say that there is no hope for the Empire but in the Catholic Church, while every sensible man knows that there is no hope of her salvation until the insolvent pride and power of the priests are humbled. Here, in Vienna, the Jesuits and Liguorians, dressed in long robes, walk through the streets with a kind of omnipotence.—But, at the same time, they are supremely hated by those who understand them.—Let them beware. At the same time it may be well for those who fear the future supremacy of Catholicism in the United States, to remember that in her European strongholds she can only keep her head above the waves of revolution by clinging, with the grasp of death, to the bayonets of temporal power."

THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE. The Ottoman Empire extends over a part of Europe, Asia and Africa, embracing an area of about 913,000 square miles. There are now also about 2,000 Protestants domiciled in Turkey. They are divided into ten communities; three belong to Constantinople and the suburbs, and the other seven to Brussa, Ismid, Adabazar, Merziphun, Trebizond, Erzeroum, and Aintab.

RECRUITS FOR EUROPEAN NAVIES. It is stated in the N. Y. Sun that agents of the British and French Governments are actively engaged in our principal cities in enlisting recruits for the navies of those countries, to be engaged in the approaching contest. The operations are confined chiefly among the foreign population.

☞ We would request all persons sending in subscribers' names for the paper to write them so that they can be read plainly; and in giving the name of any town, to be sure and give the State also.

Conferences.

A Conference will commence at Waterbury, Con., Thursday evening, Feb. 16, and continue over the Sabbath.

Also, at New York City, to commence Wednesday evening, Feb. 22, and continue over the Sabbath.

Also, at Newark, N. J., to commence Wednesday evening, March 1, and continue over the Sabbath.

F. H. BERRICK.
EDWIN BURNHAM.

A Conference will be held at Hubbardston, Mass., to commence on Friday, March 10, and continue one week. Br. Grant is expected to attend. S. G. MATHEWSON.

Providence permitting, there will be a Conference at Greenfield, Mass. commencing Thursday, Feb. 9th, and continue over the Sabbath. Brother J. Hemenway will be in attendance. H. PRATT.

CONFERENCE AT NEW BEDFORD, MASS. There will be a Conference at New Bedford, to commence Wednesday, February 8th, and continue over the Sabbath, where a course of Lectures will be delivered on Time, by Brethren F. H. Berrick and Edwin Burnham. Let there be a general gathering at this meeting to hear on this great subject. HENRY V. DAVIS.

There will be a Conference at Orrington, to commence the Thursday before the first Sabbath in February. J. COUCH.

There will be a Conference in Hermon, Me., every first Saturday and Sunday of each month. In Holden and Prospect every second Saturday and Sunday, and in Orrington the third Saturday and Sunday following.

We hope the brethren coming this way to preach the word will give timely notice in the Crisis, so that brethren and sisters can attend the different appointments. WM. CHAPIN.

Appointments.

The Lord willing, I will preach at Lake Village, the second Sabbath in February. JOHN COUCH.

The Lord willing, I will preach at Nashua, N. H., Sabbath, Feb. 5. J. WESTON.

There will be a discussion held on the question of the Immortality of the Soul, at East Cunnington, Mass., to commence Wednesday evening, February 15, to continue as long as may be deemed proper. J. HEMENWAY.

Providence permitting, I will be at Templeton, Mass., Sabbath, Feb. 5. J. HEMENWAY.

By leave of Providence, I will visit the brethren in Exeter, N. H., next Sabbath. JONAS MERRIAM.

Bro. F. H. BERRICK will preach at Kirk St. Chapel, Sabbath, Feb. 5, Lord willing.

ELD. GEORGE BROWN will commence a series of Meetings in Whitefield, Me. (Partridge neighborhood) Thursday before the second Sabbath in February, and continue through the week, and on the Sabbath at Turner Hill.

S. G. Mathewson will preach at New Bedford, Mass., the first Sabbath in February, and at Providence, R. I., the second.

Brethren Mathewson and Grant will hold a Conference at Ashburnham, commencing March 2d, and to continue one week. ISAAC NEWTON.

☞ Those who wish for a supply of The Pilgrim's Songster, Investigation of the 1260, 1290 and 1335 days of Daniel and John, by F. H. Berick, or The Lithographic Charts, published by Bro. Cummings, can be supplied by directing orders to J. French, Office of the World's Crisis.

The Lithographic Charts can be sent by mail for 12 1-2 cents anywhere within 500 miles.—Price of the Charts, $3,00. "Bible vs. Tradition," can also be obtained of Bro. French.

Speak no Ill.

Nay, speak no ill—a kindly word
Can never leave a sting behind,
And O! to breathe each tale we've heard,
Is far below a noble mind,
Full oft a better seed is sown
By acting on the better plan,
For if but little good be known,
Still let us speak THE BEST WE CAN.
Give me the love that fain would hide,
Would gladly others faults efface,
How can it please our human pride,
To prove humanity but base?
No, let us reach a higher mood,
A nobler estimate of man;
Be earnest in the search for good,
And speak of all THE BEST WE CAN.
Then speak no ill,—but tender be
To others' feelings as your own,
If you're the first a fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known,
For life is but a passing day,
No lip can tell how brief its span;
Then, O, the little time we stay,
We'll speak of all the best we can.

Dear Brother:—My faith in the speedy establishment of Christ's everlasting kingdom, is unwavering. Indeed it is strengthening continually. Never did so much light emanate from the prophetic word, as now. It is indeed a light shining in a dark place, and increasing in brightness as we approximate the perfect day. The virgins went forth at an appointed time, to meet the Bridegroom. He tarried. They all slumbered and slept. At midnight a cry was made: "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him!" We hear the cry. The virgins are awaking. The wise are pouring fresh oil into their lamps. The light brightens. The vision is speaking. The "yet appointed time" is written out, and made plain upon tables (charts.) It will not again tarry.

The little book has been eaten. Its bitterness has been experienced. Hope deferred has made the heart sick. That the word to John was, "Thou must prophecy again concerning (see Whiting) many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings." This prophecying (or teaching) again, has commenced. One prominent theme connected therewith, is the coming struggle among the nations,—the gathering of the kings of earth to the battle of Armageddon.

The measuring reed has been laid upon the people of God, instead of Pagan worship. Said the Angel to John, "These, measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein, but leave out the court of the Gentiles." The question here arises, what is meant by the temple of God, &c. Evidently the same referred to by Paul when he wrote his first epistle to the saints at Corinth.—"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God?" &c. What length of time shall I measure off? Forty-two months. What is this period marked off for? To show the length of time in which the church of God would be trodden under foot. Where shall I begin to measure? Just where Daniel was told to commence. Where was that? "From the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up."

But Daniel was told that it should be 1290 days (years). Can you explain this? Let us see. The Prophet had just before been told that the words must be closed up and sealed "till the time of the end;" and as he desired to understand it more definitely, the length of the period from the setting up of the abomination to the "time of the end" was given him. The treading down of the holy city does not then extend to that time. No; for if this were the case, more of the elect would be saved; "but for their sakes, the days shall be shortened," or in other words, the "great tribulation" shall be limited to 1260 days (years).

Now this point is plain, but I wish to know something more about this "temple" and "altar." Very well. Daniel was informed respecting the same, only the terms "sanctuary" and "daily" are given him, instead of "temple" and "altar."—The "sanctuary" refers to the temple of God, which under the Jewish dispensation was established at Jerusalem, but under the Christian has reference to the church of God.

Now we will see if we can understand more about this "daily," or "altar." We find nothing corresponding with this, in connection with the service of the sanctuary, but the morning and evening sacrifices. See Heb. 10: 11. And every priest "standeth daily, ministering, and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices," &c. After the abolition of the sacrifices under the Mosaic economy, do we find any thing corresponding to them in the Christian dispensation? Let us see.—[illegible] have we an High Priest? Heb. 10: 21. "Having an High Priest over the house of God," &c. Who is the High Priest over the "house" or "temple [illegible] Heb. 7: 22 [illegible] "By so much [illegible] ment. This man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable Priesthood. For such an High Priest became us," &c. Here the Apostle plainly teaches that Jesus has become the High Priest of the church of God.

In 1 Peter 2: 5, we find the saints are denominated a "spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God, by Christ Jesus."—Here we find the temple, the common priests—the sacrifices, and the High Prest, all brought to view, but nothing said about an altar. Can we find an altar connected with Christian worship? Heb. 13: 10, we find this language: "We," says the Apostle, "have an altar, whereof they have no right to eat who serve the tabernacle." By the service of the tabernacle, is evidently meant the Jewish offerings.—Those who still adhered to these, were under the old covenant, and therefore could not partake of the blessings of the new. Here is an assurance that the Christian church have an altar, but are not informed respecting its location. This is an important point, for, as under the Jewish economy, the sacrifice had to be presented upon the "altar which sanctifieth the gift," in order to be acceptable; so the Christian's offering must needs be offered upon the hallowed altar established for it, in order to be holy and acceptable to God." Turn to Rev. 8: 3. Here we find an angel offering incense with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar before the throne. And the smoke of the incense which came, ascended with the prayers of saints up before God, out of the angel's hand." Now we learn the location of the Christian's altar—before the throne of God, in heaven! O, how blessed! There stands the High Priest, with his golden censor, offering incense with the prayers of all saints, upon the altar before the throne! He ever liveth to make intercession for them!

Can we learn any thing definite respecting the nature of the sacrifices requisite to be offered? We have already seen that they must be spiritual. Rom. 12: 1. "I beseech you therefore brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God," &c. Here we find a very important portion of the sacrifice. Instead of offering the bodies of beasts; those of the saints are instituted, and said to be an acceptable offering. Phil. 4: 18. "I have all, and abound; I am full, having received the things which were sent from you, an odor of a sweet smell, (incense) a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing to God." Thus we see that the contributions made for sustaining of the minister of God was called an acceptable offering—one with which God was well pleased. Heb. 12: 15. The Apostle after showing that Christ is the sanctifying agent, purifying his people with his own blood, instead of that of slain beasts, adds: "By him, therefore, let us offe the sacrifice of praise to God continually, (or "daily") that is, the fruit of our lips giving thanks unto his name." Here we find the thank-offering; the fruit of the lip substituted for the fruit of the field. The Apostle does not, however, stop here. "But to do good, and to communicate, forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased."

Thus we are not left in the dark respecting the character of the sacrifices to be offered by the Christian worshipper. Such offerings find lodgement upon the "golden altar before the throne," and the prayer of such an worshipper ascends with incense from the golden censor, before God. Now is it not clear that there is a perfect correspondence between the worship under the Mosaic economy, and the Christian? As we find old Jerusalem to be the place of the sanctuary, the seat of the Jewish ritual, so we find the New Jerusalem answering thereto, and personified by Paul, as the mother of the true children of God. This is located in heaven, but as the citizens of the old Jerusalem were addressed by that name, so here the "new" are denominated "the holy city." 42 months was it to be trodden under foot, or 1260 days, 30 days to a month, each day for a year. This treading down of the "sanctuary," or "temple," is represented in the following chapter by a woman fleeing into the wilderness, for a time, times and a half, or 1260 years. During this time the two witnesses were to prophecy in sackcloth. The truth of God cast to the ground. The man of sin took his seat in the temple of God, and he polluted it by abolishing the true worship and instituting, in its stead, that abominable system of false religion, which was to undermine and desolate the Church, by perverting the pure principles of Christianity. He assumed to himself titles and honors that belonged to none but Christ. He showed no lenity to those who would not subscribe to the Catholic faith. Sixty millions of martyrs were offered as victims upon the bloody altars of the man of sin.

But God had said: "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther." He would not leave himself without a witness. He raised up a Luther, to revive and bring back again into action the enfeebled and almost expiring principles of Christianity. The light began to shine forth from obscurity. Other men, valiant for the truth, girded on the Christian armour, and with the sharp two-edged sword of the Spirit, went forth to fight the battles of the Lord. The wheels of the Reformation rolled on, while the "dreadful and terrible beast" roared in his den, and gnashed his "great iron teeth" with rage. Some of the ten kingdoms felt the influence of the Reformation and greater lenity was shown toward Protestants, and the dungeons of the Inquision were no longer filled with heretics —nor their fires lighted for their destruction. The earth began to help the woman. "An edict went forth from the Austrian Emperor granting to all members of the Greek and Protestant Churches, the free exercise of their religion. He declared "all Christians, of every denomination, equally citizens." Now the Church begins to "come up out of the wilderness leaning on her beloved." He ordered a new translation of the Bible.—Now the sackcloth begins to fall off. Was the sanctuary cleansed at that time? No. That was to be at the end of 2300 days (years).

Daniel had a vision in which he sees a power arise that waxes exceedingly great, and magnifies itself against the prince of the host (Christ) takes away the daily sacrifice—casts the truth down to the ground, and treads the sanctuary and host under foot. He hears one saint inquiring of another saint, "How long the vision concerning the daily and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?" that is, he desired to understand the length of the entire vision, commencing with the re-establishment, of the daily sacrifice, to the termination of the desolating power.—This was a subject of so much importance, that "even the angels desired to look into" and comprehend it. They were not rebuked for their inquiry—they were not told that it was "prying into the secrets of the Almighty," but, on the contrary, a definite time was given them, even "2300 days, then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

By an examination of the book of Nehemiah, we find an account of the re-establishment of the Jewish offerings—the purification of the people and the priests, and a solemn covenant made with God, and sealed by the princes, Levites and priests. The chronology given by Usher in the margin of the Polyglott Bible, is B. C. in 445. From this point then, if he is correct, we may date the commencement of the 2300 days, or years. After continuing about 964 years, it was taken away to give place to the "abomination of desolation." Then the man of sin took his seat in the temple of God, and thus polluted the "sanctuary of strength."

This abomination was to continue even to the coming of Christ. "I beheld," says Daniel, "and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of Days come, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Although at the end of 1290 years the judgment was to sit on this power, and the civil authority of the man of sin be broken, or "taken away," yet he was to continue to exercise a degree of power, even to the end. This he does by suffrance, and from motives of policy. He is to be destroyed says Paul, "by the brightness of Christ's coming."—"It any man defile the temple of God, him will God destroy." The man of sin has defiled the temple of God—he has polluted the sanctuary of strength—but when he is destroyed, with all his pernicious doctrines, it will be cleansed. The Church of Christ will be presented spotless before the throne.

In Daniel 12 we find a time of trouble brought to view in connection with the standing up of Michael, or the reign of Christ. It is evident from the 11th chapter, 2–4 vs., that to "stand up," means to reign. In connection with this reign, the resurrection is spoken of, and the reward of the righteous. Daniel is then commanded to "shut up the words and seal the book even to the time of the end," when many would "run to and fro, and instruct in relation to these things." Then the prophet hears one saint inquire of another saint—"How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" The one clothed in linen, to whom the question was propounded, lifting up his hand to heaven, sware by him that liveth forever, that it shall be for a time, times and an half, (or part, margin) and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished." The Septuagint gives a clearer light on this point. The question seems to be given in relation to the sealing up of the vision. How long before these wonders shall be understood? The answer is given in accordance with this view. It is this: that it shall be for a time, times and an half in accomplishing the dispersion of the sanctified people, and all these things SHALL BE UNDERSTOOD."

Daniel heard, but understood not. He is then told that the words are "sealed up unto the time of the end," and to make it more clear, he gave him first the time in which this vision was to be sealed up, burying him to the time of the end, and then the entire period of 1335 days, extending to the end itself. The 1290 must, it seems to me, be a part of the 1335 days, and commence at the same time, otherwise their introduction here, seems superfluous. The Bishop's Bible, has a marginal note connected with the 12th verse, which reads thus, "He addeth a month and an half to the former number." A month, 30 days, half a month, 15 days, making 45 days added to the 1290. The 1290 marks the supremacy of the civil authority of the man of sin—the "dispersion by flame, captivity and sword," of the "sanctified people," although prior to the termination of the days, they were "holpen with a little help," yet "some of them of understanding" were to "fall even to the time of the end." Now it is evident, if we could find the year when the daily sacrifice was taken away—and the abomination of desolation set up, we could ascertain when the 1335 days would end. The evidence is conclusive to my mind, that 519 was the time when the work was done—when the little horn having mouth and eyes, appeared upon the panorama—when the beast with leopard body (symbol of Greece, see Dan 7: 6) came upon the stage of action, to whom power was given to continue 42 months—when the woman took her seat upon the scarlet colored beast, and the church was driven into the wilderness, there to be nourished for 1260 days. Those were the days of "great tribulation," and the darkening of the sun and moon (May 19, 1780,) was "immediately after" they had ended.

In 1809, the dominion of the Pope was taken away by Bonaparte and his allies, as there is abundant evidence to prove; both from history, and living witnesses.—O how near are we then to the great day of God! A few more months, and all is over. The sinners' probation ended—their sun forever set in darkness. The trials of the faithful ended—and joy eternal, their glorious portion. "O hail happy day, blest morn of Zion's glory!"

Dear Brother Merriam:—I hereby acknowledge the receipt of 25 Nos. of "The World's Crisis," which I took to our place of worship this day. Our brethren were very glad to see them, and after examining them, were much pleased with the paper; the only fault found was that there was not enough to serve all that wanted.—I think we can dispose of fifty every Lord's day, and at other times. Many are wanting light on the time. I am fully satisfied this is just such a paper as we want to diffuse the light that now begins to shine from the lamp of the word. Our lamps have been trimmed, and ignited by the match of the Holy Spirit which our blessed Lord is so sweetly and powerfully diffusing into the hearts of his willing and obedient, faithful and believing children. The virgins are taking heed to the sure word of prophecy, which is now being so fully developed in the various scenes that are transpiring in the earth. O how deeply interesting is our position. It is, and shall be, the humble prayer of your poor pilgrim brother, that our blessed Lord may keep us unto His coming and Kingdom.

G. Marsh Wadsworth.

January 21st., 1854.

My beloved brother—We have received four Nos. of your paper. Thank you for your kind remembrance of us. I need not tell you what a feast it was to our hungry souls. I do thank the blessed Lord, who put it into the hearts of the brethren to send out such a message in these last days. God speed this little messenger, until all shall hear the sound, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet Him." I feel it in my soul that our beloved Saviour will come this year. O, blessed hope,—my heart leaps with joy at the thought of seeing my best, my dearest Friend this year. Precious Saviour, come quickly.

> Thou dearest Friend man ever had,
> Thy constancy I've tried;
> When all were false I've found thee true,
> My counsellor, my guide.

May the Lord bless and sustain you in your endeavour and undertaking, and present you faultless before His presence, is the prayer of your unworthy Sister in Christ.

Landaff, N. H., Jan. 21, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—"The World's Crisis" came to our isolated home, as a messenger of good tidings, and we did not fail to eat heartily of the portion of meat due us, and thank the Lord that we are thus permitted to enjoy it. Although deprived of associations dear to us as life, and of hearing the glad tidings of the coming King at hand; yet our hearts rejoice that a brighter day is soon to dawn upon this fallen world, when God's scattered flock will meet, and Christ himself shall serve them. What a sublime promise; that Christ will gird himself and sit down to meat with his disciples. Why may we not rejoice as we near such a glorious home? The voyage has been a long painful one. Our friends have passed away from us, and fallen like the mown grass; and when their last pulse had beaten, and the eye that was wont to beam on us so fondly was closed in death, then our bleeding hearts turned away, sighing for the day to come when there would be no more sorrow, pain or death. For six thousands years has this earth groaned under the curse, and been one continued scene of suffering and death, but there is an eye above, which never slumbers or sleeps, and his ear is open to the cry of every living thing, but how can His compassionate heart feel towards those who profess to love him, while they ridicule or put far away the day of Jesus' coming; for He is then coming to beautify the place of his sanctuary—to restore all things promised—to bring day without night—pleasure without pain—and rest in everlasting glory. While we see the light of that cloudless day about to dawn, we will take heed to the Apostle's words: "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and Godliness." When we remember what things are to be dissolved we do not wonder Peter would impress upon the mind the importance of holy living; and especially all holy conversation. He saw down through the vista of time. "The Day of the Lord" coming "as a thief in the night;" in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also and the works therein shall be burned up. "Nevertheless we according to his promise look for a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." A few more days of watching, and our King will be here in all his glory, to give immortality and eternal life to all who love his appearing.

The budding fig trees do not indicate, with greater certainty, the approach of summer, than do the signs of the times the speedy appearing of David's royal son. May we watch, and be ready to hail our King with joy.

Yours in hope,
Mary M. Eastman.

Sugar Hill, Jan. 18th, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—Yesterday the new paper, "The World's Crisis," came to hand, and I hasten to let you know it is received with thanksgiving. I have perused its columns, and I can say to the praise of God, I am delighted with its contents. It is truly meat in due season. God speed "The World's Crisis" through the land, is my prayer.

Levi Mussey.

Sugar Hill, Jan. 18, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—It is with a heart of thankfulness that I write at this time.—God is good, and my soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit doth rejoice in God my saviour, while I have been perusing the first No. of "The World's Crisis." My heart burns within me; for my soul beats in union with its contents. I believe the doctrine it advocates—that I shall see my blessed Lord and Master this year; and I feel that I stand on the rock of ages; glory to God. I expect to stand here till the Trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. I have been asking myself the question, while reading and feasting, can it be that I shall have such food as this from week to week until my Lord shall come? If so, I will render thanksgiving and praise to God through the long dark time of trial and tarrying of the vision.—My trials have been most severe, but God has kept me from falling, and now while I hear the Midnight Cry sounding, it thrills through my soul, arousing every drowsy power. My soul cries out, Glory to God in the highest for the light which is shining in the pilgrim's pathway! Oh yes, light from God's word tells us this is the year of Jubilee—Hallelujah, praise the Lord; my soul rejoices in the freedom of the Gospel.

How strikingly our experience corresponds to the Parable of the ten virgins who went forth to meet the Bridegroom on time in '43–44. But we were disappointed—he did not come—we slumbered and slept on time—we did not know when he would come, and we lost our energy. But hark! "what sound is this salutes our ears," resounding o'er the mountains, and through the vales, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh (in 1854), go ye out to meet him?" Is it not the midnight cry? I do believe it is. God will have a pure Church, that will go out to meet Jesus; and she will meet him this time as sure as his word is true; and he will present her to his Father without spot or wrinkle, glory to God! "I will be in this band, hallelujah." Is it so? Our trials to end this year? Can it be we shall see Jesus Christ the Son of God so soon? Can it be we shall meet all the dear saints this year in glory? I I do believe it with all my heart, and if ever my soul was filled with the love and glory of God, it has been since I believed this truth. It is like "fire shut up in my bones;" glory to God. That all the saints may meet in God's kingdom this year, is my prayer.

Abigail Mussey.

Bradford, N. H., Jan. 23, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—Glory to God! This year the last trump will sound, the dead be raised, the living changed. Father's family all get home—praise the Lord for this hope. I am bound for the kingdom, cost what it may. It is coming this year. That we may be all ready to hail it with joy, is the prayer of your sister looking for Christ.

S. J. Buswell.

☞ Extracts from the Portsmouth Chronicle:—

"Not many days ago, a learned and talented clergyman, one who dealt kindly and fairly with all whom he named, in his sermon alluded to the Adventists in this manner:

"Ten or twelve years since, there were a large number of Christian people around us, who believed that a general dissolution of all things earthly was about to take place, that the dead were then to be raised and judged, the sinners destroyed, and the saints to dwell and reign with their Savior on the new earth; and believing as they did, the speaker said, their prayers which they put up for preparation of themselves and others, were consistent and proper.

"The learned and truly catholic preacher did not seem to be aware of the fact that the sect or denomination of the Adventists, instead of becoming extinct, have been sifted and consolidated, and are now preaching up the doctrine that the great Prophecies of Daniel, and of the Revelation to St. John, are so nearly fulfilled, that they expect the Lord Jesus to reappear this year, 1854. Yet such is the fact; and the writer of this article listened recently to a very earnest discourse, wherein the preacher placed before his hearers a view of the resurrection, general judgment, and the utter destruction of the present mundane system, as probable this year, but not certain. Others are more positive. The Portland Advertiser has this paragraph:

The Fools not all Dead.—The new paper at Lowell, established to advocate the Second Advent doctrine, starts with a circulation of 5000.

"Now we would protest against such a name as Fools, being applied to the Adventists exclusively, when so large a portion of the visible church, aside from them, profess to believe nearly the same things, except the time only,—and when some of the most esteemed and widely read commentators agree with them very [illegible], both as to the events, and as to time.

The Adventists believe in the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures; believe that the Prophecy of Daniel and the Book of Revelation are parts of the inspired Scripture; that the most important prophecies of both books are yet to be fulfilled; that these prophecies not only predict certain events, but fix and measure off the times for their occurrence; and that, as they expound the Prophecy by the History of the World for the last 1200 or 1300 years, there is little now left to be done in fulfilment, but to burn the earth, raise the dead, and judge the world.

Well; says the reader,—we know that the Adventists did believe these things, and some of them do now, perhaps;—but who else believes them? The writer answers, Sir Isaac Newton, Bishop Newton, and after them thousands of other divines, including most of our New England ministers of a past period. And we must add, that nearly all the standard books of the principal evangelical denominations contain their grand doctrine as to the events, and not a few of them agree with their time also."

Exposition of Daniel, Chap. 7.

BY F. H. B.

(Concluded.)

"But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and to destroy unto the end." The taking away of the dominion of this power is a work to be effected at the expiration of the 1290 days (years.) During this period of 1290 years, this anti-christian power exalted itself above all laws human and divine, and the saints, times and laws being given into his hand, no less than fifty millions of the Church perished by persecution. Never was the world afflicted with such a curse before, and never will it be again.

But the question occurs, when was his dominion taken away? To answer this question satisfactorily we must have recourse to history. We remark that the events of 519 fully justify us in dating from this point the 1290 days. Hence we are to look to the year 1809 as the time when they expire; for between A. D. 519 and A. D. 1809 there are 1290 years.—There is abundant testimony to show that the event referred to transpired in 1809; and for the confirmation of this subject, we submit the following historical proof:

"Napoleon dated from Vienna, 1809 a decree depriving his holiness of his temoralities, and annexing Rome to its dependencies to the kingdom of Italy. The consequences of a new struggle between A POPE AND AN EMPEROR, will shortly be told; they were of a very different character from those which followed the attempt of Henry IV. to dispute the supremacy of Gregory VII. eight centuries before."—[Horne's Napoleon, vol. 2, p. 127.

"Bonaparte issued a decree dated Rome, (July 10) 1809, by which a great number of special tribunals were abolished, as well AS EVERY TEMPORAL JURISDICTION HITHERTO POSSESSED BY THE CLERGY, SECULAR OR REGULAR."—[New Annual Register 1809, principal occurrence, p. 99.

"On the 17th May, 1809, Napoleon issued his famous decree, which declared the PAPAL DOMINIONS UNITED to the French empire.

"Besides the disgrace which the pope experienced from that course, he had the mortification to be seized in his palace, and was conducted as an EXILE to the city of Savona."—[Bower, vol. 3, p. 424.

"In 1809, Napoleon appeared once more victorious in Vienna, where he proclaimed, May 17th, THE END OF THE SECULAR AUTHORITY of the POPES, and the UNION of the STATES of the CHURCH with France."—[Maunder, vol. 2, p. 241.

"During Napoleon's residence at Vienna, (1809) he ABOLISHED THE TEMPORAL POWER of the POPE, and united the remaining territories of the states of the church with France, and the city of Rome was declared an IMPERIAL and free city.

The pope was conducted to Fontainbleau, where Napoleon concluded a second concordat with him, in which, though the pope did not resume his temporal jurisdiction, he obtained the right to keep embassadors at foreign courts, to receive embassadors, and to appoint certain bishoprics."—[Maun., v. 2, p. 99.

"Bonaparte published a decree at Schoenbrunn, May 17th, 1809, by which the states of the pope were annexed to the French empire, and the city of Rome declared a free and imperial city. The union did take place.

When the decree was put in execution, June 11th, the pope published a bull of excommunication against Bonaparte, his adherents, counsellors and coadjutors. From that moment the venerable captive was more closely imprisoned. On the night of the 5th of July, he was forcibly removed from Rome."—Koch, p. 509.

"Bonaparte decreed, May 17th, 1809, that the states of the pope are united to the French empire. The city of Rome, so interesting from its recollections and the first seat of Christianity, is declared an imperial and free city, and that these changes should take effect on the first of June following.

On the 10th of June, these decrees were announced from the castle of St. Angelo, by the discharge of artillery, and the hoisting of the tri-colored flag on its walls, instead of the venerable pontifical standard.

The pope, after exclaiming, "consumatum est," (he) the dethroned pontiff, issued a bull, [June 10th, 1809—Bower, v. 3, p. 434]—excommunicating Bonaparte and all concerned in that spoliation, which was affixed upon the churches.

"On July 5th, 1809, the pope (Pius VII.) was taken captive by Gen. Rade', under Bonaparte, and carried to France, in company with cardinal Pacca.

Being solicited for a donation, they (the pope and cardinal) found that they had but ten-pence between them. Said the pope, 'Behold, General, all that we possess of our principality.'"—[Allison, vol. 3, p. 282-3-6.

"Pope Pius VII. had given countenance to the enemies of France, and threatened Napoleon with the thunders of the Vatican. The French entered Rome, the pope realized his menace by a bull, (June 10, 1809) he was DETHRONED from his TEMPORAL SOVEREIGNTY, and CONSIGNED to CAPTIVITY while Rome was made the capital of a French department."—[Frost's Hist. of the World, 3d part, p. 338.

"On the 17th May, 1809, Napoleon issued his FAMOUS DECREE, which declared the STATES of the CHURCH RE-UNITED to the French empire."—[DeCormenin's History of the Popes, vol. 2, p. 421.

"1809, May 17th, Bonaparte declared the papal states part of the French empire."—[American Text-Book of Popery, p. 124.

"In the course of the Austrian war he (Bonaparte) had annihilated, in the most violent manner, the temporal empire of the pope.—[Rotteck, vol. 4, p. 216.

Such is the historical testimony in relation to the events of 1809; and who cannot see that this, above all other years, constituted an important epoch in the history of the papacy? We have nothing like it before or since; and as this corresponds with the development of present truth, in its widest range, we are constrained to believe that in the year 1809 was fulfilled the declaration, "The judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and to destroy it unto the end."

But not only is the papacy, as such, to be humbled, but the power that supported the Church—the sixth head (Rev. 13) of the beast must be "wounded, as it were, unto death."

We find that Austria previous to this time did, in an especial manner, support the Catholic Church; and that she made every effort to restore the Pope to his temporal dominion, as the following extract will show.

Part of a Proclamation of John, Archduke of Austria, May 27, 1809. "If God protect the virtuous exertions of the emperor Francis, and his mighty allies, Italy shall be AGAIN happy and ONCE MORE respected in Europe. The head of the church will possess AGAIN his FREEDOM and his DOMINIONS."—[New Annual Register for 1809, Art. Puplic Papers, 1st p. 268, 2d p. 272. Scott, p. 256–7.

From the above testimony we learn not only that Austria made every effort to restore the Pope, but also that a confession was made on the part of the Archduke John, that Bonaparte had taken away his temporalities. Austria however was not sufficiently powerful to restore his Holiness. On the other hand, Bonaparte was exasperated at the conduct of Austria, and determined to humble her at once, which determination he carried into effect. On this subject Rotteck remarks:

"But the issue was deplorable. The Austrian armies had passed the Inn and Isar and occupied Munich (April 16th), whilst Bellegarde and Kollowrath broke out of Bohemia through the Upper Palitanate, in order to reach hand to the main army on the Danube. At the same time, General Chateller had marched into Tyrol, and by the most zealous assistance of the inhabitants became speedily master of the greatest part of the country. The Tyrolese overpowered in general insurrection the Bavarians, who had stimulated the old national hatred by unsparing treatment of their recently acquired country, and as many of the French as were to be reached, and proclaimed in triumph the return of the Austrain dominion. The equally honest and courageous Andrew Hofer, innkeeper at Passeyer, put himself at the head of this popular movement. All Tyrol, with the exception of Kufstein, as well as Vorarlberg, fell into the power of the valiant country-people. The Bavarians and French lost about ten thousand men in opposing them.

"But all this courage and love was lost through the reverses of the main army.—Napoleon fell with the impetuosity of a tempest upon the army, which was progressing auspiciously. In a five days' battle, called with greater truth a five days' campaign, Napoleon that THUNDERBOLT of war, SHIVERED the AUSTRIAN POWER. Pfaffenhofen, Tann and Rohr, Abensberg, Landshut, and the most decisively, Eckmuehl and Ratisbon (April 19th—23d) were the theatres of complete defeats of the Austrian army. The genius and fortune of Napoleon frustrated all the efforts of his enemy, and forced the noble archduke to a sad retreat towards Behemia, whereby the southern Danube country, as far as Vienna, was abandoned to the discretion of the French.

"The French marched precipitately towards the dismayed capital. One month after the beginning of the war Napoleon made his entry into Vienna (May 13th), 1809."—[Rotteck's History of the World, vol. 4, p. 208-9.

Again,—

"But notwithstanding the success with which the French arms seemed to be thus every where crowned, still the resistance which they had met with in Spain, and perhaps still more the open injustice of the aggression on so old and faithful an ally, once more awakened the slumbering spirit of the other powers of the continent.—The pope had been long dissatisfied.—The commercial interests of the whole of Europe were almost ruined by the effect of those decrees which precluded, or at least extremely embarrassed, the trade with England; and the emperor of Austria was impatient under his past losses, and eager to redeem them. In the spring of 1809 the Tyrol revolted. The Westphalians expelled king Jerome from his new dominions, and it was believed that Prussia, notwithstanding the smart of her late misfortunes, would be glad to take advantage of the first reverses of Napoleon to join her forces to those of the Austrians. But the French emperor returning instantly from Madrid, crossed the Rhine, and penetrated into the heart of Germany. He gained successive victories at Eckmuhl and Essling: he a second time took possession of Vienna; and though worsted in an obstinate battle at Asperne, he a short time afterward conquered at Wagram.—He then dictated a peace, called the peace of Vienna, which was signed Oct. 14, 1809.

"The continent was now again PROSTRATE at the feet of Napoleon. The Tyrol was given up to devastation; THE POPE WAS DETHRONED; Bernadotte, a French general, was elected successor to the throne of Sweden; and Louis, king of Holland, although brother to the French emperor, yet being thought to allow of a freer intercourse with England than the jealousy of Napoleon would tolerate, was dispossessed of his kingdom, and the Dutch territories were incorporated with France." [Markham's History of France, p. 548–9.

It was in October, according to the above extracts, when Austria, together with the greater part of Europe, lay prostrate at the feet of Napoleon; and the Pope, the representative of the Catholic power, was dethroned. The papal supremacy was not anihilated in a moment; it required many efforts on the part of the French Emperor; but his Holiness was ultimately obliged to succumb.

"They," says the Prophet, "shall take away his dominion." But who are represented by the pronoun "they?" The powers, governments (kingdoms) of the continent, who were fully represented in the person of Napoleon Bonaparte. The Pope understood this subject when he issued his bull of excommunication. Says Koch,

"When the decree was put in execution, June 11th, the Pope published a bull of excommunication against Bonaparte, his ADHERENTS, COUNSELLORS and COADJUTORS. From that moment the venerable captive was more closely imprisoned. On the night of the 5th of July, he was forcibly removed from Rome."—[p. 509.

The countries under the dictation of Bonaparte at this time, according to Mosheim's history, were Sweden, Holland, France, Spain, Italy, Austria, &c.—In fact the European Continent was prostrate at the feet of that "thunderbolt of war," the Emperor of the French.

The question has often been asked, in what part of the year 1809 did the 1290 years end? To this we reply: we cannot tell. That it was in that year we have not the least lingering doubt, but at what point in the year we cannot positively determine. There are several points of interest during the year, to which we will now refer.

1. On the 17th of May Napoleon published the Imperial decree at Vienna, by which he declared the temporal power of the Pope abolished.

2. This decree, according to Koch, was not put into execution until June 11th.—[p. 509.

3. "On July 5th, 1809, the pope (Pius VII.) was taken captive by Gen. Radet, under Bonaparte, and carried to France, in company with cardinal Pacca.

Being solicited for a donation, they (the pope and cardinal) found that they had but ten-pence between them. Said the pope, 'Behold, General, all that we possess of our principality.'"—[Allison, vol. 3, p. 282-3-6.

4. "Bonaparte issued a decree dated Rome, (July 10) 1809, by which a great number of special tribunals were abolished, as well as every temporal jurisdiction hitherto possessed by the clergy, secular or regular."—[New Annual Register 1809, principal occurrence, p. 99.

5. The treaty of Schoenbrunn, which was ratified on the 4th of October, (White's Univ. His., p. 500,) and which, by the way, we regard as most important of all. This, as remarked above, is the point where the Austrian power was SHIVERED. Popery could no longer stand, for the arm that hitherto had sustrained it was palsied. The Woman could no longer sit upon the sixth head, or government of the Beast, for that head was, "as it were, wounded to death," and imperial papacy, as it is called, no longer sits in the temple of God, showing itself that it is God.

The mother of harlots may vaunt herself, and dream of pleasures to come; yea, she may boast of her anticipated supremacy of the world, and say, "I sit a Queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow," but inspiration declares, in thunder tones, "Thou are weighed in the balances, and art found wanting." The glory has indeed departed. The papacy has never recovered from the blow she received from France. Her power agreeably to the prophecy has been on the wane ever since. Says the Prophet, "They shall take away his (the little horn's) dominion to consume and to destroy it unto the end." Then will the Almighty, with one decisive stroke, annihilate every vestige that remains. And upon the very soil that has been saturated with the blood of fifty millions of martyrs, the Lord will, in a renewed and regenerate form, establish His everlasting kingdom. Forty-five years from the end of the 1290 will bring Daniel and all the saints from the tomb; and that we believe will be realized this year. The present year is full of interest to the weary, way-worn pilgrim. No year in the entire history of the Church has been fraught with such mighty events.

Each breeze, that sweeps the ocean
Brings tidings from afar
Of nations in commotion.

"THE BATTLE OF THAT GREAT DAY OF GOD ALMIGHTY" comes on, and "blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days."

"John to the seven churches which are in Asia."—Rev. 1 : 4.

In speaking from the above scripture, we will first notice what we are to understand by the churches; secondly, give some reasons why we believe the seven churches to be prophetic; and thirdly apply their history.

1. What are we to understand by the Church?

We reply it is that portion of God's people that moves in the order of his providence in fulfilling present truth, let them be ever so few.

The Scripture speaks of Israel in coming out of Egypt as the Church, yet there is no doubt but there were good people in the world beside them; for instance Jethro, the priest of Midian, we cannot doubt, was a very good man, and perhaps many others there as he was their priest.—Neither are we to understand that all that carry out present truth are good, for God was much displeased with Israel in the wilderness on account of their sins. In the days of our Savior the true Church was represented by him and his disciples, and even one of them was a deceiver, but they carried out present truth, and we cannot doubt but there were some good people in the Jewish Church even then.

Also in the days of Papal persecution, the true Church fled into the wilderness, she fulfilled prophecy, and moved in the order of providence, but there were even then some good people in the Catholic Church, such as Thomas a'Kempis and Lady Guyon.

At the last the true Church is likened unto ten virgins, that took their lamps and went forth to meet the Bridegroom; and they are represented as the one half of them being foolish, but they fulfilled present truth in moving in accordance with the prophetic chart. We have no doubt but there are some good people in the different sects now; yet, we believe they do not understand the will of God concerning them; for it is His will that they should move in accordance with present truth, and suffer all the reproach connected with it, which has always been so from the beginning. This is what we understand to be the Church, to move in accordance with the prophetic chart in carrying out present truth.

We shall now give some reasons why we think those churches prophetic.

First, it is in keeping with the analogy of Revelation, which is one of the most prophetic and highly figurative books in the Bible. Secondly, this view harmonizes with the other lines of prophetic symbols—namely, the seals, the trumpets and the plagues, which all are agreed reach down to the end of the gospel dispensation. Thirdly, if there was not something in the names of those churches appropriate to different changes through which she passed, why should so many of the churches in Asia be left out, and some of them more important than those brought to view—such as Corinth and Antioch? But the very words that precede the text, prove those churches prophetic—"Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy." Dr. Scott admits that most writers have considered those churches symbolic, but he believes them to be literal, "because the last one is the worst of all, whereas to be in accordance with the Scripture, it should teach the conversion of the world." But some consider them literal because they think the Scripture will not warrant them to make a symbol of a symbol, that is the seven candlesticks are symbolic of seven churches. I should suppose that no one would dispute that Palestine was a typical land, as much so as the Jews were a typical people. Let us try this rule of double symbols. Rev. 11 : 3—"And I will give power unto my two witnesses;" but who are these two witnesses? They are the olive trees.—What, two literal olive trees? No. What are they then? They are the two candlesticks. What, literal candlesticks? No. Zech. 4 : 14 says they are the two anointed ones. Here, then, are four symbols of symbols, and we are left behind them all to find the literal interpretation. Again, Rev. 17 : 9, The seven heads are seven mountains; certainly not literal mountains; for it reads (Rev. 13,) that one of those heads was "wounded, as it were, to death." The Douay translation reads: "And they are seven Kings." So the heads are explained to be mountains, and the mountains are explained to be Kings, and I suppose we should explain the Kings to be Kingdoms. The law, therefore, of analogy, drawn from the book of Revelation, would justify the principle of symbolization here advanced.

We will now commence the history of those churches. The first is the church of Ephesus, the signification of which is, "Desirable, Chief." This church is commended for her labor and patience, and for her strict discipline of those that were evil; and she had power to try them that said they were Apostles and were liars. If the church had retained this power all the way down, it would have saved her from a vast number of imposters. But there is something against her. She has left her first love, and she is admonished to repent and do her first works, or else her candlestick would be removed out of its place. This apostolic church came out at the first with a high state of love. She had all things common, and had a community, for a short time, on a grand scale. Some say this state of things was not designed to continue in the church; that it would have been always subject to imposition. But God would have protected her as He did in the case of Ananias and Sapphire. If her love had continued, the same power would have continued to detect liars and hypocrites through every age of the church.

But we have no account that she returned to her first love; and about 31 years after the crucifixion her candlestick was removed, and dreadful persecutions ensued.

This brings us to the second church, which is Smyrna, signifying "myrrh."—This age extends from Nero to A. D. 313, embracing ten general persecutions.—There is nothing against this church. She is seen in tribulation and poverty, and exhorted to be faithful unto death, and she shall have a crown of life. Notwithstanding her poverty, the Lord says she is rich. She is commanded to fear none of those things which she should suffer; for the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried, and ye shall have tribulation ten days. Some have supposed that those days referred to the ten general persecutions; the first under Nero, A. D. 64, the second under Domitian, A. D. 95, the third began the third year of Trajan, A. D. 100, the fourth under Antonius, the fifth under Severus, A. D. 127, the sixth under Maximinus, A. D. 235, the seventh under Decius, A. D. 250, the eighth under Valerian, A. D. 257, the ninth under Aurelian, A. D. 274, the tenth commenced in the 19th year of Diocletian, A. D. 303, and continued ten years, to A. D. 313.—This was the most dreadful of all. In the province of Egypt alone, in the last persecution, no less than 844,000 suffered death. In other parts of the Empire, houses filled with Christians were set on fire, and whole droves of them were tied together with ropes and thrown into the sea. I think this last persecution is the one referred to in the prophecy; for it reads some of them should suffer tribulation ten days. It is remarkable that it commenced by a decree in A. D. 303, in the 19th year of Diocletian, and was abolished by a decree from Constantine in A. D. 313, granting all free toleration throughout the empire,—just fulfilling the prophecy, reckoning a day for a year.

The next is the Church of Pergamos, signifying "Exalted." She is charged with many things. One specification is dwelling in Satan's seat. That must be the Roman government; for the Dragon gave the Beast "his seat" (Rome.) The Church was then raised from a state of persecution to honor and respectability, and to hold offices in the civil government. But she is also charged with the doctrine Balaam. He caused Israel and the moabites to come together; and they worshipped their gods and committed whoredoms, for which the anger of the Lord was kindled, and caused the plague to destroy 24,000 of Israel, (Num. 25.) From this we see the awful consequences accruing to the Church from connection with civil government.

There is another charge against her, viz.: holding the doctrine of the Nicolaitans. The first Church is commended for hating this doctrine, and the Lord says he hates it. Whether it means unlawful connection with the state government, or the plurality of wives I do not pretend to say; but I think it is the former; for I know of no history that speak of the Church going into the latter of that time. There was a sect in the first age of the Church that pretended to be the followers of one Nicholas of Antioch. He joined the Church at Jerusalem, and was chosen deacon. It is not believed that he was the author of this practice; but from his zeal and devotion that they chose his name.

The Church of Pergamos notwithstanding has some good characteristics left.—She did not deny the Lord's name, nor his faith; and she has the credit of one martyr where Satan dwelleth. But the whole account of this Church shows clearly that she was united to the world, and fast departing from God. What a dark day this was for her, which some men have called the setting up of the kingdom. She lost her power and her reputation as a chaste virgin, and fearful judgments awaited her, and were gathering over her devoted head; she went from this state into tribulation, such as never was, nor ever shall be.—This state of the Church continued for 206 years, from 313 to 519. The next is the Church of Thyatira, signifying "a perfume or sacrifice of contrition." This state of the Church continued from 519 to 1779, for 1260 years. Her charity, service, faith, and patience are spoken of, and [illegible] last to be more than the first. [illegible] time is brought to view Dan 11 [illegible]

While many are [illegible] the people that know their God [illegible] be strong, and do exploits [illegible] instruct many [illegible] with the [illegible] of this church [illegible]

We have in both places two parties brought to view, one that is corrupted or seduced, and the other that is pure.

But it is said of this church, that the last is better than the first. In this dark night of papal persecution, towards the last of it, the day began to dawn. Reformers arose up in every direction, and took a bold stand for the truth, in opposing the pretensions of papacy, and in scattering the light throughout the world.

The charge against her is, that she suffers that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols. She had a long space to repent, but she repented not; therefore she was cast into a bed, and they that commit adultery with her. But who is this Jezebel, that pretends to be a prophetess? I answer, it is the Roman Antichrist that is represented by an abandoned harlot. Jezebel, a Zidonian, and a zealous idolator, being married to the king of Israel, contrary to law, used all her influence to seduce the Israelites from the worship of God into idolatry, in which the vilest licentiousness was committed. I. Kings, 16: 31-32. Here we have a marriage between the head of God's chosen people and the royal blood of the Zidonians, who were heathen.—She also shed the blood of the prophets. God was so much displeased, that in answer to the prayer of Elijah, he withheld the rain of heaven for the space of three years and a half. We leave the reader to judge if we have any thing as an antitype to this unholy marriage, and the withdrawal of rain during the 1260 days of the prophesying of the two witnesses. Rev. 11: 6. "These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy."

The rain of grace always follows the true church. During this time she fled into the wilderness, where she was nourished with the streams from the fountain of life, while in the provinces of the harlot the waters of salvation were dried up. We think her portrait is too well taken to mistake it.

The next is the church of Sardis—signifying a prince of joy—that which remains. This is that portion of God's people that remained after the days of Papal persecution. This state of the church continues from 1779 until the trying message was proclaimed of the coming of her Lord. She rejects it, just as the Jewish church rejected his first coming. She is charged with having a name to live while she is dead, and admonished to "strengthen the things that remain and are ready to die," for her works are not found perfect before God. She is also threatened that if she would "not watch," the Lord would come on her "as a thief," and she should "not know what hour" he would come upon her. There are "a few names in Sardis that have not defiled their garments, that will walk with Christ in white." God has often tried the church with liberty and prosperity; but she has in every instance departed from him, become dead and formal, proud and lifted up, conforming to the world, and thinking herself so wise that she could manage church matters very well herself. And now she has got so proud and haughty that she cannot bear to hear of the coming of her Lord; although she is admonished to watch, yet she heeds not the admonition, therefore he will come upon her "as a thief," while unconscious of her danger. How can she be saved in her pride, without a moment's warning, only that sounding from the waked-up virgins? But she treats this premonition with contempt, and she will be taken in the snare. Awful and unparalleled disappointment both to ministers and people. The next is the church of Philadelphia, signifying "brotherly love." This church fills up that portion of time spoken of in Matt. 26, as the going forth of the virgins. He that has the keys of David, that openeth and no man shutteth, unseals the sacred book, and sets before this church an open door that no man can shut. All the efforts put forth by the sects to stop this first movement, only served to open the door still wider; and every thing that rose up against it seemed to be confounded. Many of the weak were made strong, and they bore a faithful testimony both in labors and in sacrifice. It is said to this church, "Thou hast a little strength; and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name, and hast kept the word of my patience; I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come on all the world to try them." What unbounded patience it must require in the Saviour, with this vast family who profess to love him and have no desire to see him? But how does this church keep the Saviour's word? I answer, she goes out to meet him according to the prophetic chart, and moves in the order of Providence. Then let us go without the camp, if need be, solitary and alone, bearing his reproach. Very soon they will have to acknowledge that the Master has loved us, and this is not all, for he says he will make us pillars in the Temple, to go no more out forever. Then let us hold fast whereunto we have attained. "Let no man take our crown." The 7th and last, is the church of the Laodiceans, signifying "Justice or Judgment." This church fills up that portion of time while the bridegroom tarries, and the virgins slumber and sleep.

We shall notice first the propriety of applying two churches to the advent movement. In looking back on the history of those churches, we see there is no regard paid to the portions of time they occupy, but simply noticing the important changes through which she passes, and how she is affected by those changes.

If the first movement be the action of the Philadelphia church, of which there can be no reasonable doubt, then the slumbering and sleeping time must be the Laodicean; for one always succeeds another, and also comes out of the other. But a more important change has never passed over the church than that which she passed through at the commencement of the tarrying time; for after moving the world by her faithfulness and zeal, in a few days she becomes a perfect shipwreck. The great and leading feature of this last state of the church is, that she is neither cold nor hot; and in her sleep she dreams she is rich and increased in goods and has need of nothing. She thinks she is all posted up on doctrines, and far ahead of all other churches in understanding the Bible. But God paints out her true colors, that she is wretched, miserable, poor, blind and naked. This is an awful picture, but it is drawn by a skilful hand, and not exaggerated. The Lord counsels her to buy of him the true gold, that she may be rich, that is, possess a treasure in the heart; and white raiment that she may be clothed. This includes all outward righteousness, and makes the dress complete both inward and outward, just what she needs. But is there any thing more?—Yes, the Lord says she is blind, and he has eye-salve to remove this blindness of mind. This agrees with the parable of the sleeping virgins; for people see but little in their sleep excepting dreams. But how important that we buy this eye-salve, that we may see. There is so much of home manufacture in the market, that there is but little demand for the genuine article. If we would only become meek and lowly in heart, the Master would impart to us the true light that we might walk out on the prophetic vision. But those that remain lukewarm, neither cold nor hot, he "will spew out of his mouth." "But as many as I love, I rebuke and chasten; be zealous therefore and repent. Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with me." Blessed promise! Jesus, in this last hour of probation, represents himself as standing at the door knocking to wake up his sleeping church, and to obtain an entrance into her cold, formal, lukewarm heart. It will soon be known how many will hear his voice and open the door. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches." ABRAHAM FLAVELL.

Newark, N. J.

SALISBURY, N. H., Jan. 28, 1854.

Respected Reader:—Let me solicit your attention a few moments. Having no regular political or religious newspaper to bear the news of the day, I sit down to copy a few broken thoughts. "The intercession of the spirit with groanings that cannot be uttered," constrains me to take up my pen and write. The present is a time of great interest, both to church and state. You will inqure why. I will give my reason soon. The Lork is coming.—"Awake thou that sleepest." You have been wasting your moments at the shop, at the bar; perhaps at the ball-room, at the card-table, the store-room, at the rooms of filth and debauchery; or perhaps you have been more reserved in life and spent your time in a more careful manner, and economised in the things of this world, to shore up against your last day. What, peace? No! The sweets of a reconciled conscience to God? No! Life? No! An eternal home with the redeemed of the Lord? No! A seat in the kingdom of God? No! One of those mansions of rest promised to Christ's followers? No, no! Are you now laying up treasure in heaven, in compliance with God's present truth? Do you answer in the negative still? Then, my voice is to you now—You are the person of whom I would ask a few moments reflection, after having detached your thoughts from the things of this world. I have one more request to offer. When you retire for repose this night, let this inquiry be made; What have I laid up on which I can safely rest? The quicksands of time, on which your bark has been beating, are about to strand your vessel upon the rocks and barren coast, where naught but hunger, starvation, and the fiery indignation of God's wrath will rest No father, no mother, no brother or sister to administer to your wants, and relieve from distress. There is just barely time for you to arouse and prepare to meet God. If you would not be found speechless in that day, prepare to receive the wedding garment. O, reader, the last day is rolling on—the last meandering scenes of life are almost past,—the last warning voice is being given; the last truths of God's word in thunder-tones peal through earth, and the vaulted skies reverberate the tones, and earth is rent, while convulsed nature groans for you.—O, reader, stop, STOP! One moment's pause. The pealing tones of the last trump of God, is about to awaken you, when it will be too late to cry for mercy, and in vain to cry for the "rocks and mountains to fall on us and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. For the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?" H. COUCH.

LOWELL, FEBRUARY 8, 1854.

Tarrying of the Vision.—No. 3.

Having endeavored to show that the ten virgins in the parable of Matt. 25, represent the church who are identified with present truth, and the lamps the word of God contained in the oracles; and having fixed the closing terminus of the parable at the personal revelation of the Saviour, we now proceed to enquire for the commencing terminus of that period, or in other words, to ascertain when the church went forth intelligently in expectation of meeting their Lord.

Some affirm that the going forth has been in a process of fulfilment ever since the opening of the Messianic dispensation.

For illustration on this point, let me suppose some historian, writing on the revolutionary war, should remark that the armies of the United States went forth to meet the forces of Great Britain—that the victory was for a long time doubtful—but at length they conquered, and the independence of the nation was obtained. Now, says one, that expression of the historian implies that ever since the first settlement of America, enemies to the English government have been rising up and contending against the power of England. But this idea does not meet the case. The representation of the writer is that a crisis arrives in the history of the United States, that a simultaneous movement is made by American troops, that the war is somewhat protracted, victory doubtful, till at last it turns in favor of America. It is not an individual effort simply, but a national movement; not at any and at all times, but at a given time the war begins, and from that given time the independence of the nation is delayed, and the war continues till our independence was recognized by a treaty of peace between the two powers. When that victory was gained, the rejoicing that spread over the land was indescribable—the continent rang with shouts of freemen. Said those patriots, "We have won the day—the country is ours." But this great revolution was not in progress ever since the settlement of America, it was a simultaneous movement throughout the country, an actual warfare carried on by the national force. This the church of Christ under the government of Prince Immanuel, went forth in hope of possessing the land—in hope of gaining their independence. It was not an individual effort here and there all over the world, and in all ages of the Christian dispensation, without union or concert,—that would be far from corresponding to the representation of the parable. The idea presented in the parable is, that at a given time, a special development in the church is to occur—that there will then be a united simultaneous movement in the ranks of Zion—that the expected victory would be delayed, and that simultaneously they would slumber and sleep on that effort, (faith in the time) and that subsequently another parallel movement would take place in which there would be concert and simultaneous action—and then, as our sires of the revolution shouted over the independence of the nation, so will the church, the soldiers of the cross, utter their acclamations of joy, their songs of victory, and shouts of praise, when they obtain that perfect freedom of the sons of God—that independence of the righteous nation which keepeth the truth to be enjoyed in the kingdom of God. When the saints possess the kingdom under the whole heaven, the renewed earth will ring with louder shouts than were ever heard in behalf of the political freedom of our favored land.

It appears evident, therefore, it is not a single handed individual effort, made at no particular time, but a grand national movement on the part of the citizens of the New Jerusalem in expectation of the reign of the Prince of Peace.

But some may present the subject in another form. They might perhaps affirm the church went forth in the Apostolic age to meet the Lord, and then fell asleep till they were aroused by the preaching of time in 1843, and that was the midnight cry. It is admitted that there was in the primitive age of Christianity an expectation of the coming of Christ, but that general expectation has also prevailed in the church subsequently to the Apostolic age.

About one thousand years from the beginning of the Christian era, there was a powerful excitement, and almost universal movement in the church, in regard to the coming of Christ. Professional Christians sold their possessions, and depositing the proceeds in the churches, went on pilgrimages to the holy land. In the time of Luther, light seemed to break in upon the church in relation to the personal reign of Christ.

In Germany and in England, there have been wide-spread and powerful excitements on this subject, but never a well settled faith, rooted and grounded in Scripture truth, till the movement connected with the '43 time. At that time there was a spontaneous, heartfelt and united action on the part of believers in the speedy coming of our King—a spiritual movement, a concentrated faith and developement of that faith in the life, such as the world never saw before, and which in all its features appears to be an exact counterpart to the parable. The likeness, not only in its outlines, but in the minute points and shades, in the filling up and perfecting of the picture, precisely corresponds to the original, drawn by the Divine hand, and seems not so much like the portrature of a limner, as the exact, perfect resemblance of a daguerreotype likeness, face answering to face, and feature to feature. But such a resemblance we find not before in the history of the Church.

This article should have been extended further, but a special Providence having detained me in the cars, want of time prevents.

"For then will I turn to the People a Pure Language."—[Zeph. 3: 9.

NO. II.

"Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body.

"Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, withersoever the governor listeth.

"Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things."—James 3: 3-5.

The Apostle by a most striking comparison, here presents the idea of the immense power and influence of the tongue. As the prancing steed is controlled and directed by the bridle,—or a vessel bounding over the billows of ocean driven by the tempests, yields to the influence of a little rudder, and is turned about in its career at the will of the helmsman, so the tongue is a small organ, but its action affects mighty results—its influence and power over the entire moral being of an individual is astonishly great.

"Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth." This imagery if possible is still more striking than the formor. A little fire, A MERE SPARK will ignite a combustible substance, and that fire will spread from object to object till the productions of nature, or the works of art are enveloped in one vast sheet of devouring flame, so that one may exclaim, as did the Emperor Napoleon at seeing Moscow wrapped in the element of destruction, "AN OCEAN OF FLAME." All this it may be from the spark elicited by the collision of steel.—Thus a community may be excited, and their evil passions inflamed, till an influence analogous to devouring fire extends far and wide; and all, it may be, from an indiscreet or angry word, carelessly dropped from some one's lips. "And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell." The Apostle here speaks in most severe terms of reprobation in reference to the improper use of the tongue.—He attaches to the subject an importance of which men ordinarily have not the least conception. He represents that little member as an engine of tremendous power, when wielded by the influence of Satan.—Indeed he regards it as an organ of communication, by which the powers of darkness convey their diabolical influences to man. It is like applying a fire-brand from a burning mass to kindle the same destructive flame in the beautiful fabrications of man—to burn and destroy and devour them. "It defileth the whole body." It is a vehicle of pollution, it is an agent of destruction. Nay says James, "It is a WORLD of iniquity." How emphatic this declaration! The tongue, though so small a member, is so wonderfully contaminating, that when set in motion by the unholy influences of the adversary, it is said to be a WORLD of iniquity. No language could be stronger to warn us against the evil consequences of a perverse tongue.

But thank the Lord, the tongue is as capable of being set on fire of heaven as of hell. It is an instrument of great power as well in the service of Christ as of Satan; and when it is kindled up with the fires of divine love, it sets on fire not the course of nature, but the elements of grace It enkindles the spiritual affections, it lights up the flame of love in the hearts of men. Hence we are bound to consecrate all our members, including that little but mighty one, which is capable of effecting so much either for weal or wo. May God help us all to realize our responsibility in this respect, that we may ever be prudent and circumspect in our expressions—avoiding every idle word, every foolish and improper remark—that our conversation may be "in heaven," whence also we look for our Savior to appear in His glory, remembering He has said that by our words we shall be justified, and by our words we shall be condemned. If, then, we are "without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing," we shall be "presented faultless before His presence with exceeding joy."

When we observe the condition of a world lying in wickedness, and find that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, we can but deplore the awfully corrupt and depraved state of society, as indicated by the perverse languagethat naturally issues from pollution within. We hear the language of profanity on every hand, the song of revelry mingles with the hosannas of the saints—the voice of blasphemy succeeds that of devotion—intonations of anger, and expressions of hatred, and epithets of contempt often take the place of kindly and tender expressions of Christian love. The hearts of men, for some six thousand years in the past, have been filled with the waters of bitterness; and the streams flowing from such fountains must of course be bitter. But praise the Lord, the time is rapidly rolling on when "He will turn to the people a pure language." Yes, thank God, the fountain will be cleansed from its pollution, and the streams will no longer be impure,—the waters will no longer be bitter,—all will be pure and sweet and clear as crystal like the waters of life.

O how blessed to think of that land of perfect purity where the profane tongue or wanton lip will be forever unknown—where no bold blasphemer, defying the vengeance of heaven, will ever be admitted,—where the enchanting songs of the redeemed shall not be interrupted by the bachanalian's nightly revels. The language of that blessed world will be in keeping with its moral purity,—every idle word, every unhallowed expression, will be expunged from the dialect of Canaan—not a profane word—not a harsh or opprobious epithet will find a place in the vocabulary of heaven. No terms of anger or contempt will ever fall from the lips of that holy and peaceful society. What a heavenly scene to contemplate! It is a place where love abounds, where harmony reigns, where peace spreads over all her balmy wings, where they speak the language of love, where they sing their sacred songs of harmony, and utter their shouts of thanksgiving and praise. Shall we beloved readers have an inheritaece there? Shall we possess such purity of heart and such holiness of life as to see our God in peace? Shall we be such manner of persons in all holy conversation and godliness as to hail our deliverer when he comes, and say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."

☞ I visited the brethren in Exeter, N. H., last Sabbath, and was gratified to find so deep an interest felt in relation to the immediate coming of the day of God.—Their interest is developed in the profound attention of their assemblies, and in an effort to spread light and truth by holding meetings, at some distance from the village, in various directions. May God bless their efforts, and build them up in the most holy faith, and preserve them blameless unto His coming and kingdom.

To Correspondents.

We have received many interesting communications, and feel that the spirit of God aids the writers in their various productions; and we earnestly desire that every one who writes for the paper may be divested of every selfish or unhallowed feeling, having an eye single to the GLORY OF GOD. We hope, inasmuch as time is emphatically short, and our responsibility great, that no one will send us a public communication without imploring Divin aid and direction, and accompanying the same with fervant prayers that it may prove a blessing to the household of faith—that it may feed the flock of God, and convict the sinner of the error of his ways, and turn many to righteousness, that they may shine as stars in the coming kingdom forever and ever. We hope that correspondents will continue to write, as they have done, in the spirit of meekness, that becomes the followers of Him who was "meek and lowly in heart." We have no desire to round off the corners of truth, or blunt the edge of the sword: far from it; no, let naked truth cut its way to the heart, and arouse the conscience of unbelievers, and alarm the impenitent to flee from the wrath to come; but what we do desire is that the truth may be spoken in love—that the tender sympathising spirit of Him who sacrificed His life for His persecutors may be breathed forth in all the communications received—that men may be admonished, if need be, for their sins, and apprised of their danger for their own highest good, as we would affectionately warn a blind man of the danger of falling down a precipice. To sum up the whole in a word, we wish all to be under the control of the spirit of God, "for God is love," and His spirit fills the heart with love both to friend and foe.

We desire that no harsh or opprobrious epithets may be applied any farther than truth demands, that no personal controversy may be indulged in. We want our fly-sheets to go forth on wings of mercy and errands of love—that in the genuine spirit of the Gospel we may sound the alarm in God's holy mountain, and blow the trumpet in Zion.

Your humble Editor especially needs the prayers of the Church in relation to selecting for the paper such articles as will be most conducive to the general welfare of Zion, and the salvation of sinners. We hope correspondents will consider the multitude of letters and communications that are constantly flowing in, of which it would be impossible to publish all—that therefore some must be rejected and others abridged. We however respect the feelings of all, and would be pleased to gratify all so far as the general good will permit.

Have the goodness to write in a legible hand, and prepare the communication for the press s far as is convenient.

☞ As we desire to have a conscience void of offence before God and man, we wish to have every statement made in the Paper as correct as possible. From some misunderstanding it was stated in the Crisis of Jan. 25, that about 20 persons were recently converted in Salem, Mass. But we have since learned, that that was the number that rose for prayers. We are however happy to learn, that if the conversion of a score was not then present truth, there is every prospect that it soon will be. God speed the day when a multitude shall be turned from darkness to light, and from the service of dumb idols to serve the living God, and to wate for His Son from heaven.

OBITUARY. We learn with regret, that our beloved Bro. Silas Tabor, of Gardiner, Maine, has been deeply afflicted by the loss of his companion, who died on the 28th of Jan. ult. She, however, left behind her the savor of a Christian reputation, and the consolation to her friends that they need not mourn without hope.—She was a firm believer in the immediate coming of Christ. Bro. Tabor writes that, on the occasion of her funeral obsequies, a discourse was delivered by Bro. Burnham. truly "cheering to the hearts of those who have friends in the tomb waiting for the resurrection."

ERRATA. On our outside, about thirty lines from the foot of the third column, for "Mosheim's" history, read Markham's history. Fourth column, ten lines from the top, instead of "4th of October," read "14th of October." We would here remark in connection with this, that Putnam, in his Dictionary of Dates, page 585, speaking of the battle of Wagram, says:—"This battle led to an armistice, signed on the 12th, (July) and on Oct. 24, to a treaty of peace."

WEST WINSTED, Feb. 4, 1854.

Dear Brother Merriam:—I am rejoiced to see the newspaper. Said the brother who handed me the first number, "It is the best paper I ever read." I trust the remaining numbers will be equally well loaded with good things, which will truly be "meat in due season" to "those who love the appearing of the Lord."

I am thankful for the light now shining upon the pathway of the pilgrim, which has been so long obscured by storm-clouds, dark and dreary.

I think the feeling now enjoyed is some like that of the mariner, who, when he has sailed many days against tides and head-winds, gulf-stream and tempest, with compass lost—no sun for the day or moon for the night, by which to tell his place upon the briny deep; beholds again the morning sun sparkling over the wave, while the gentle breeze wafts his noble bark proudly on, with sails well spread, to the quiet haven, where, in the distance he beholds, with eye-glass well directed, the loved ones anxiously waiting for the happy greeting. O praise the Lord for the bright prospect just before us. Soon the last tear will be shed by the lonely and weary, tempted and tried, down-trodden and despised ones, who are looking with longing eyes for the return of their best friend. "Blessed are those who are found watching."

"We'll be there, we'll be there in a little while."

The Lord has been kind to me in showing to my mind the necessity of this last great proclamation—"Behold the Bride groom cometh," and in not leaving me, when I raised my puny arm to oppose the friends who first sounded the alarm to disturb my slumbering.

I thought myself fully awake, but have since found that a man in sleep is not the best judge of his true condition; and although somewhat cross when first aroused, because I thought the alarm unwise and unnecessary, as well as out of season, I am now rejoicing that,

"The long dark night of time is passed,
And soon the morning will dawn."

Let us be kind to those who see not as we do, and by love do what we can to win them to the Saviour whose coming is so near.

Thank the Lord, the time is at hand when that lonely widow will loose all her sorrows and cares, and have a home with the King of Kings in the promised land of the good and the blest. Soon the orphan's tears and sighs will be exchanged for the songs of the redeemed upon the bright plains of glory.

"O hail happy day," when from the north and south, east and west, the sons of paradise are gathered home to the world's jubilee in Eden's elysian fields.

Your brother in Christ.

MILES GRANT.

WESTBORO, Jan. 31, 1854.

As one of old has written, "That as cold water to a thirsty soul so is good news from a far country," so I can truly add is good news from kindred hearts that beat in unison for the kingdom of glory. And O, brethren and sisters, have we not many of us, within the past year, received "good news, glad tidings of great joy"? Thank the Lord, my ears have caught the sound,—my eyes have seen a gleam of light kindled, I believe, by none other than that Omnipotent hand which has ever guided the Church safely through darkness and tempest severe. While the Bridegroom tarried the Church became weary, their eyes became heavy; they were almost ready to let go their watch,—were almost ready to drop their lamps, and even some of them were dreaming of years to come—of wealth that might be acquired; others of honors that might be gained, another class of pleasures that might be enjoyed; still others of combined associations that might be formed, while there were some that now and then were stirred by some national movement, or some prophetical light, yet relapsing again into perhaps sounder sleep than before, till truly it was midnight, when suddenly a light was seen—a cry heard. Some roused and listened; they knew the voice; it was that welcome sound, "Behold he cometh." The warning was given; a few more were stirred; the light became brighter, the evidences became stronger, and much clearer could be seen the fulfilment of prophecy in the political world, and also in the moral, physical and religious world all combined speaking to the observer and student of prophecy in tones of thunder not to be misunderstood, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." And now what do we behold? A company with eyes wide open watching every movement—hearts beating with interest—neglected lamps trimmed up—armors being girded on anew—and a company that is determined never to quit the field till victory is won. A feeling of solemnity is now settling down upon them in view of the approaching crisis—feeling truly their all must be upon the altar to secure their acceptance with Him who is so soon to come to judge the quick and dead. O, I feel that the last dispensational truth is being given. Soon that sealing Angel, ascending from the east, will have accomplished his work—the last servant of God will be sealed. Soon the midnight cry of "Mercy" will have been fully sounded—then the closing part of that parable of the virgin will have its fulfilment. Then the foolish will become satisfied that they are destitute of oil, and will then cry for it, but oh, it is TOO LATE. "While they went to buy, the Bridegroom came; they that were ready went in, and the door was shut.' O that many more may yet be benefitted by this last cry of mercy. My prayer has been, and still is, that prejudice may vanish before the glaring light of prophecy like dew before the sun; that while the last notes of warning are dying away upon the ears of the careless multitude, many of those who were once all interested in searching the word, (the midnight hour witnessed the scene) may again be aroused and go forth yet once more.

"But," says one, "I don't believe in making this a test. If we are only ready it is enough." I answer, truth has been in all ages important to that generation living at the time it became due. This being truth, is important also, to sanctify and constitute a readiness. Time will decide.

O, brethren and sisters, awake; Jesus is coming! Prepare, O, prepare! Ye tried and tempted ones, keep up good courage; a little longer, deliverance will come. Yes, a little longer and we'll join in that song of triumph:

"We'll sing upon that shore,
Saying "Jesus has redeemed me,
To suffer never more."

And casting our eyes backward on the race that we have run—

"We'll shout aloud in glory,
Deliverance has come."

The kingdom in all its glory and beauty, will be our happy home forever and ever. O let us see to it, that when those four angels let go their hold, (and according to present evidence they are almost ready to dissolve their union and let those winds of war and commotion blow upon this world) that our names may be written in the Lamb's book of Life, and be among those that shall have deliverance. That this may be our happy portion, is the prayer of one that believes according to evidence, that Jesus will come this year. L. M. B.

The News from Europe.

Arrival of the Arabia.

HALIFAX, Feb. 5. The royal mail steamship Arabia, from Liverpool Saturday the 21st ult., arrived at Halifax at about a quarter past twelve o'clock, on Saturday.

The Turkish War.

We have, by this arrival, further accounts of the battle of Citale, confirming the turkish success. It appears that the Russians were concentrating their forces at Citale, in order to attack Kalafat on the 13th; but on the 6th, 15,000 Turks marched out of Kalafat, attacked and stormed Citale; resumed the conflict with the Russians in the field on the 7th, and renewed the attack on the 8th, ending in the evening with the total discomfiture of the Russians, who confess of having one thousand killed in the affair, besides 4,000 wounded, including therein their Generals, Auress and Tuinout.

On the 9th, the Turks having remained over night in the field beyond Citale, attacked a reserve of Russians, and drove them back upon Krajova, with loss of some of their cannon, and an immense slaughter on both sides.

On the 10th, the Turks, having razed the Russian fortifications, returned to Kalafat. The Turks were commanded in the action by Selim Pacha, Zedlinsky and Mehemed Pacha, one of whom, Mehemed probably, is reported to be killed.

The above victories are officially announced to the Turkish, French and British Embassies.

By this arrival we have but very little from Asia. A letter dated Trebizond 16th Dec., says that Schamyl had organized a Polish Rifle regiment, 1200 strong; that he has plenty of provisions and ammunition; and that he is organizing an army in Daghistan. The Abysinians are in alliance with them. The Hungarians and Poles, who had been waiting at Constantinople for employment, were shipped Jan. 2d for the Asian army. General Klapka declined an Asiatic command, but offers to serve in Europe.

The Allied Fleets.

On the 5th of January the whole of the allied fleet was on the Blacd Sea. Two ships had been sent with the following to the Russian Governor of Sebastopol:

"To the Governor of Sebastopol:—Conformably with orders of our governments, the British squadron, in concert with that of France, is on the point of appearing in the Black Sea. The object of this movement is to protect the Ottoman territory from aggression or hostile acts—We apprise you thereof with a view to prevent all collissions tending to disturb the Amicable relations existing between our governments, which we are desirous of preserving, and which no doubt you are equally anxious to maintain. To this end we should feel happy to learn that you, animated by these sentiments, had deemed it expedient to give the requisite instructions to the Admiral commanding the Russian forces on the Black Sea, so as to obviate any occurrence calculated to endanger peace.

(Signed) STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE,
BARAGUAY D'HILLIERS."

It was at first intended to send only a portion of the allied fleet into the Black Sea, but a rumor having reached Constantinople that the whole Russian fleet had sailed from Sebastopool, it was resolved to order the entire fleet there.

It was further rumored that Russian ships were off Erzeroum, probably expecting to intercept the Turkish convoy which, under the protection of the allies, carries 15,000 men into Asia.

Merchantmen at Constantinople, on the 9th, report not having seen the fleet, consequently they are supposed to have sailed towards Batoum, where it is surmised that the Russians have also gone.

Around Sebastopol and the coast of Crimea, the Russians are erecting batteries, and have extinguished all light-houses.

Still Anxiously Diplomatizing.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 31. The Porte made the following modifications to the note of the four powers:

First—Instead of "evacuation of the Principalities as soon as possible," say within fifteen or twenty days after the acceptance by Russia. Second—The renewal of treaties, to be with special reference to the integrity and independence of Turkey. The Porte will ameliorate her administrative system alone, and spontaneously on its receipt at Vienna, the English, French, Austrian and Prussian representatives met and drew up a protocol, stating that the Porte's terms were good and satisfactory, and were immediately sent off by a courier to St. Petersburg, where he would most likely arrive on the 19th. The Porte demands that the Note shall be definitely accepted or rejected within forty days from January 2d, and the Principalities evacuated within twenty or thirty days of the date of the Czar's letter of acceptance. The demand is on its way to St. Petersburg.

On the 12th inst., the British and French ministers at St Petersburg also communicated to the Russian Minister of Foreign affairs the announcement of the entry of the allies into the Black Sea. The Czar's reply was not known when the Arabia sailed, but all Europe is anxiously waiting it, as indications had already transpired that he would at once withdraw his ambassadors from France and England, and formally declare war. Nothing else is looked for.

Our Liverpool correspondent made arrangements to have telegraphed from Vienna the intelligence of the Czar's reply the instant it was made public there. As no despatch has come, however, the presumption is that the reply had not reached that capital in time to reach the Arabia.

Great Britain.

England is actively recruiting the coast volunteer, artillery and coast defence guard. Ten thousand is the number required.

Exertions are apparently being made to man the navy, and more ships are fitting out, but apparently no land forces are in contemplation of being raised.

France.

The greatest activity prevailed in the French navy yards, the operatives being ordered to work on Sundays, and every ship possible to be fitted for sea immediately.

A levy had been made of all seamen between 20 and 40 years of age, and all the Newfoundland fishermen are drafted into the fleet.

Stores for 40,000 soldiers are ready for shipment to Toulon.

SWITZERLAND. The sessions of the Federal Council of State were opened at Berne on the 9th. In view of the war prospects the executive asks a grant to station a body of troops on the German frontier.

GERMANY. The Baden Diet opened on the 12th. The Duke's speech indicates a desire to settle religious difficulties peaceably.

Letters from Carlsruhe of the 13th say positively that an arrangement has been come to between the church and the government.

AUSTRIA. France is understood to regard as settled that Austria shall preserve the strictest neutrality. In the event of a war France will enforce the neutrality.

It is now said that France will not contract a loan, but devise other means.

ITALY. The Roman States are suffering great scarcity of food, especially at Tanenza and Ravenna.

NAPLES. A scarcity also prevails here.

The case of M. Carbone, an American citizen, remains unsettled. The American Minister has taken it up warmly. The Neapolian government were endeavoring to patch the matter up by bribing M. Carbone to leave.

Latest.

LIVERPOOL, Jan. 21,—Noon. Admiral Dundas' signal on entering the Black Sea was "Our duty is to protect the Ottoman Marine and Territory from all aggressions in the Euxine."

PARIS BOURSE. The rumor that the fleets had returned to the Bosphorus from strees of weather was untrue.

The Turkish War.

It is astonishingly difficult to arrive at anything like the truth from the contradictory statements that perpetually follow each other from the East. Disregarding the positive announcement that on the morning of the 29th December orders reached the fleets to weigh anchor instantly for the Black Sea, and that, ere sunset, only one vessel of each fleet was left in the Bosphorus—we turn to other accounts which appear more reliable. On Dec. 29 or 30, the fleets did receive orders to enter the Euxine, but up to 1st inst. (the date of the last direct letters) they were still at anchor in Beicos Bay, owing to contrary winds and stress of weather.

The telegraph further informs us from Constantinople, 3d inst., that the combined squadrons entered the Black Sea on that day, together, with the first division of the Turco-Egyptian fleet, leaving six vessels at Beicos to guard the entrance of the Bosphorus. The second division of the Ottoman fleet is anchored at Therapia.—It was known at Constantinople on the 26th ult., that a Russian squadron of three sail of the line and several frigates had been cruising for several days near the entrance of the Black Sea. On the 22d they were seen at a distance of three or four miles from the entrance to the Bosphorus. The Russian Commander-in-Chief has already recalled all Russian ships of war in the Black Sea, to rendezvous at Setastopol. It was considered probable that Baltshik, north of Verna is the first place at which the allied fleets will touch.

We have once more to report brilliant successes achieved by Omer Pasha on the Danube. For some days there had been flying rumors that the Turks stormed and Captured Karakal, and had put to flight with great loss the Russian division sent to its relief. As the communication from the seat of war to the commencement of the line of telegraph to Vienna is in the hands of the Russians, it was, of course, unlikely that any confirmation of the intelligence would reach us by that route.—Direct advices have since come to hand giving details of another victory as brilliant as that of Oltenitza! The news had again elated the spirits of the Turks, and the disaster of Sinope is forgotten.

Full information is yet wanting, but, sifting as carefully as we can the accounts that are published, it would appear that on January 6th, a Turkish division 15,000 strong, with 15 pieces of artillery, attacked the entrenched position of Citale, not far from Kalefat, and took it by storm.—The Russians lost 2,500 men. The Turks, learning that a re-enforcement of 18,000 Russians were on march from Karaul, threw themselves in the way, and after a brief but sharp attack, forced them to retrace their steps, leaving 250 dead on the field.

The above affairs took place on the 6th of January, but other and previous successes had been gained by the Turks under command of Omer. On January 1, the Minister of War officially intimated to the different Embassadors at Constantinople that important advantages had been gained by the Ottoman troops at Kalefat. For several days previuos Omer had attacked in succession the different Russian corps with apparently varying success.—At length the Turks intentionally fell back on their counter, and thus lured on the Russians as far as Kalefat, a position now formidably entrenched, but which at a distance seemed to be abandoned. The Turkish batteries suddenly unmasked, causing great carnage among the Russians, while, at the same time, the Ottoman reserve, which had crossed the Danube by night and was masked behind a wood, took them in flank and compelled them to retreat with great loss. The inhabitants of Little Wallachia, who are day by day manifesting themselves more openly in favor of the Turks, contributed not a little to the success of these maneuvres.

The Russian version of the state of affairs gives a later date than the above, and says, via Vienna: "On 7th or 8th instant, a battle was fought near Letati, when the Turks fell back upon Kalefat, with loss of six guns." It is suspicious that the date of a battle in which the enemy lost six guns should not be known to the victors more definitely than the 7th or 8th inst.

In view of their recent victories, it is rather inappropriate to speculate what the Turks would do in case of defeat. The Russian organs, however, assert that if Gen. Luders forces the passages of the Danube at Matshin, the Turks will fall back on Trajan's wall, extending from Czernavoda to Kostendji, that line being very strongly fortified. They admit that in the meantime the Turkish commanders in Europe and Asia are ordered to prosecute the war with vigor.

Prince Menchikoff is making preparations at Odessa for the reception of the Emperor's son, the Archduke Constantine.

Lord Dudley Stuart was to leave Constantinople on the 15th inst., so as to be in England for the meeting of Parliament, when he will undoubtedly bring the whole Eastern question before the British people.

GREAT BRITAIN.—A Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign office, on evening of 10th inst. All the ministry were present and the Council remained in session four hours. A second Council was held on 12th. The public are never enlightened as to the subject of these conferences.

FRANCE.—From France we have but a few scraps of news. The Moniteur mentions the presentation by the Prince de Chimay, of an autograph letter from the King of Belgium to the Emperor, but gives no indication of its contents. Armaments, by land and sea, are going on more actively than ever throughout France. It was reported that the Bank has agreed to loan fifty millions of francs to the Government. An ill effect was produced in Paris by the information that Austria has been supplying Russia with arms and stores. The Austrian Minister, on being applied to, stated that it was a mere commercial transaction—an explanation not deemed satisfactory.

Foreign Items.

The following items are taken from the Manchester (Eng.) Guardian of Jan. 7:—

"A Bucharest letter says, that in accordance with orders from St. Petersburg, the army of the Danubian provinces, which does not now exceed 80,000 men, is about to be increased to an effective strength of 240,000 men. All the accounts from Russia agree as to the enormous warlike preparations, confirming the impression that the Emperor is determined on pursuing his so-called religious crusade in spite of all opposition.

"The expenditure of the Russian government in moving the immense masses of troops, which are already on their march from every part of the empire, and in preparing for war on every frontier of its territories, must be enormous. The Emperor of Russia has raised some millions by withdrawing his property from this country and from France, and voluntary contributions are solicited throughout the empire; but these are temporary resources, and we have yet to learn by what extraordinary means efforts of this kind can be sustained. The whole moneyed interest of Europe is strongly disposed to withhold its assistance from a policy and a power so adverse to the cause of peace, for no profits realised on a Russian loan could be equivalent to the loss caused by the general depreciation of value in all public securities. These obstacles, however, have never yet restrained headstrong and fanatical rulers from the lawless gratification of their ambition; they only serve to render the consequences of their actions more oppressive and intolerable to their subjects. War never occurred at a time when the people of Europe were less disposed to submit to the ravages of armed ambition in addition to the other causes of hardship and distress under which they labor; and we still rest our hopes of an early termination of the struggle on the universal resentment and reprobation it is justly calculated to excite against its author.

"The Emperor of the French has intimated in plain terms to the Austrian cabinet, that any further secession from the intervention to which it has become a party, will be regarded as an indication of meditated hostility; and that in case of war becoming general through its conduct, the French will not decline the alliance of either the Italians or Poles, but that the recognition of those nationalities will become the settled policy of France, and receive her support."

☞ Considerable excitement has been created in various sections of this country on account of the Pope's Nuncio, M. Bedini. It has been suspected that he was here on purpose to help prepare the way for the Catholic supremacy in this country. In many cities the Nuncio has been burnt in Effigy, generally by the German part of our population. A demonstration of this kind was made in Boston last Tuesday.

The visit of this personage to this country has served to greatly increase the animosity which has so long existed between the Catholics and Protestants. The Catholics are daily growing more bold, and in some places they are growing insolent and almost intolerable. The Boston Investigator, in speaking of a recent Catholic demonstration in New York against Mr. Parsons, uses the following language:

"Let the Catholics beware how they attempt in America the abominable persecution that in Rome overrides and crushes the people, or they will be made to feel that retributive vengeance, which, once aroused, it is as sweeping as it is sure!"

This language serves to show in some measure the state of feeling which now exists among a great portion of the American people.

Speaking of the Jesuits in connection with the Parsons affair, the Investigator thus continues:

"It seems that the Catholic outrage in New York against Mr Parsons, was instigated on account of his preaching upon the subject of Jesuitism. Now who are the Jesuits that they must not be preached about? They are the most dangerous foes to Republicanism that ever existed; and if their power was equal to their inclination, they would overthrow the American Republic within twenty-four hours."

☞ The Paris correspondent of the New York Staats Zuitung, under date of Jan. 12th, states as follows:—More than one incident proves that there is no disposition here to step out of the way of war, but rather every intention to be ready for it. The War Minister has published a decree by which an additional levy of 80,000 men is ordered. The fitting out of a third fleet is also decreed. It is to be called the reserve fleet, and will be stationed in the harbor of Brest, where it can be made available for any exigency in either the Baltic Sea or the Atlantic Ocean. In the meanwhile small squadrons of equipped vessels are constantly leaving for the East, and within a day or two an order went off by telegraph to all the port Commandants to put transport ships in readiness. In fact it is publicly reported that a transport of 70,000 men will shortly sail for Constantinople. The larger proportion of this force will consist of French troops, the remainder of English. The rendezvous is Candia. An expedition of 30,000 African troops is also spoken of, and Gen. Bosquet has been sent to organize it from the France soldiery in garrison there.

☞ Dr. Scott, in a recent Lecture on Italy, made the following remarks in regard to its present condition:

"Italy is now in a deplorable condition. Its dungeons are crowded with victims; the letters of Mr Gladstone, M. P., corroborate this statement. The only thing which flourishes in Italy is beggary. The worst governed kingdoms in Italy are the States of the Church. Ignorance sits on the land like an incubus. A few years since, the Pope issued a bull condemning infant schools. The revolution of 1848 revealed the spirit of the people, and utter hatred of the Pope as a civil ruler. He sits now in the Vatican, surrounded by French bayonets, nor can he sit long. A new revolution awaits Italy, and woe to its ecclesiastical despots!

☞ The American Patriot, in speaking of the numerous secret societies of America says:—This is right. Let us be banded together to meet the enemy.—Foreigners are united in secret clubs and associations, so should we be united for our mutual benefit and welfare. There are now at least one hundred thousand true Americans united together.

CATHOLICS IN IRELAND. "During the last six years and a half, 32,000 persons have left the Romish Church, in this country, and become members of Protestant churches, while more than 80,000 have been unsettled in their old opinions."

Conferences.

A Conference will commence at Waterbury, Con., Thursday evening, Feb. 16, and continue over the Sabbath.

Also, at New York City, to commence Wednesday evening, Feb. 22, and continue over the Sabbath.

Also, at Newark, N. J., to commence Wednesday evening, March 1, and continue over the Sabbath.

P. BERRICK,
EDWIN BURNHAM.

There will be a Conference in Hermon, Me., every first Saturday and Sunday of each month, In Holden and Prospect every second Saturday and Sunday, and in Orington the third Saturday and Sunday following.

We hope the brethren coming this way to preach the word will give timely notice in the Crisis, so that brethren and sisters can attend the different appointments. WM. CHAPIN.

CONFERENCE AT NEW BEDFORD, MASS. There will be a Conference at New Bedford, to commence Wednesday, February 8th, and continue over the Sabbath, where a course of Lectures will be delivered on Time, by Brethren F. H. Berrick and Edwin Burnham. Let there be a general gathering at this meeting to hear on this great subject. HENRY V. DAVIS.

A Conference will be held at Hubbardston, Mass., to commence on Friday, March 10, and continue one week. Br. Grant is expected to attend. S. G. MATHEWSON.

Providence permitting, there will be a Conference at Greenfield, Mass. commencing Thursday, Feb. 9th, and continue over the Sabbath. Brother J. Hemenway will be in attendance.

H. PRATT.

Appointments.

The Lord willing I will meet with the Brethren in Westford, Mass, Sunday, Feb. 12th.

At Manchester, N. H., Sunday, 19.

At Grantham, N. H., 26th, where Brother George Fowler may appoint.

BENJ. P. MANNING.

We have in both places two parties brought to view, one that is corrupted or seduced, and the other that is pure.

But it is said of this church, that the last is better than the first. In this dark night of papal persecution, towards the last of it, the day began to dawn. Reformers arose up in every direction, and took a bold stand for the truth, in opposing the pretensions of papacy, and in scattering the light throughout the world.

The charge against her is, that she suffers that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols. She had a long space to repent, but she repented not; therefore she was cast into a bed, and they that commit adultery with her. But who is this Jezebel, that pretends to be a prophetess? I answer, it is the Roman Antichrist that is represented by an abandoned harlot. Jezebel, a Zidonian, and a zealous idolator, being married to the king of Israel, contrary to law, used all her influence to seduce the Israelites from the worship of God into idolatry, in which the vilest licentiousness was committed. I. Kings, 16: 31-32. Here we have a marriage between the head of God's chosen people and the royal blood of the Zidonians, who were heathen.—She also shed the blood of the prophets. God was so much displeased, that in answer to the prayer of Elijah, he withheld the rain of heaven for the space of three years and a half. We leave the reader to judge if we have any thing as an antitype to this unholy marriage, and the withdrawal of rain during the 1260 days of the prophesying of the two witnesses. Rev. 11: 6. "These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy."

The rain of grace always follows the true church. During this time she fled into the wilderness, where she was nourished with the streams from the fountain of life, while in the provinces of the harlot the waters of salvation were dried up. We think her portrait is too well taken to mistake it.

The next is the church of Sardis—signifying a prince of joy—that which remains. This is that portion of God's people that remained after the days of Papal persecution. This state of the church continues from 1779 until the trying message was proclaimed of the coming of her Lord. She rejects it, just as the Jewish church rejected his first coming. She is charged with having a name to live while she is dead, and admonished to "strengthen the things that remain and are ready to die," for her works are not found perfect before God. She is also threatened that if she would "not watch," the Lord would come on her "as a thief," and she should "not know what hour" he would come upon her. There are "a few names in Sardis that have not defiled their garments, that will walk with Christ in white." God has often tried the church with liberty and prosperity; but she has in every instance departed from him, become dead and formal, proud and lifted up, conforming to the world, and thinking herself so wise that she could manage church matters very well herself. And now she has got so proud and haughty that she cannot bear to hear of the coming of her Lord; although she is admonished to watch, yet she heeds not the admonition, therefore he will come upon her "as a thief," while unconscious of her danger. How can she be saved in her pride, without a moment's warning, only that sounding from the waked-up virgins? But she treats this premonition with contempt, and she will be taken in the snare. Awful and unparalleled disappointment both to ministers and people. The next is the church of Philadelphia, signifying "brotherly love." This church fills up that portion of time spoken of in Matt. 26, as the going forth of the virgins. He that has the keys of David, that openeth and no man shutteth, unseals the sacred book, and sets before this church an open door that no man can shut. All the efforts put forth by the sects to stop this first movement, only served to open the door still wider; and every thing that rose up against it seemed to be confounded. Many of the weak were made strong, and they bore a faithful testimony both in labors and in sacrifice. It is said to this church, "Thou hast a little strength; and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name, and hast kept the word of my patience; I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come on all the world to try them." What unbounded patience it must require in the Saviour, with this vast family who profess to love him and have no desire to see him! But how does this church keep the Saviour's word? I answer, she goes out to meet him according to the prophetic chart, and moves in the order of Providence. Then let us go without the camp, if need be, solitary and alone, bearing his reproach. Very soon they will have to acknowledge that the Master has loved us, and this is not all, for he says he will make us pillars in the Temple, to go no more out forever. Then let us hold fast whereunto we have attained. "Let no man take our crown." The 7th and last, is the church of the Laodiceans, signifying "Justice or Judgment." This church fills up that portion of time while the bridegroom tarries, and the virgins slumber and sleep.

We shall notice first the propriety of applying two churches to the advent movement. In looking back on the history of those churches, we see there is no regard paid to the portions of time they occupy, but simply noticing the important changes through which she passes, and how she is affected by those changes.

If the first movement be the action of the Philadelphia church, of which there can be no reasonable doubt, then the slumbering and sleeping time must be the Laodicean; for one always succeeds another, and also comes out of the other. But a more important change has never passed over the church than that which she passed through at the commencement of the tarrying time; for after moving the world by her faithfulness and zeal, in a few days she becomes a perfect shipwreck. The great and leading feature of this last state of the church is, that she is neither cold nor hot; and in her sleep she dreams she is rich and increased in goods and has need of nothing. She thinks she is all posted up on doctrines, and far ahead of all other churches in understanding the Bible. But God points out her true colors, that she is wretched, miserable, poor, blind and naked. This is an awful picture, but it is drawn by a skilful hand, and not exaggerated. The Lord counsels her to buy of him the true gold, that she may be rich, that is, possess a treasure in the heart; and white raiment that she may be clothed. This includes all outward righteousness, and makes the dress complete both inward and outward, just what she needs. But is there any thing more?—Yes, the Lord says she is blind, and he has eye-salve to remove this blindness of mind. This agrees with the parable of the sleeping virgins; for people see but little in their sleep excepting dreams. But how important that we buy this eye-salve, that we may see. There is so much of home manufacture in the market, that there is but little demand for the genuine article. If we would only become meek and lowly in heart, the Master would impart to us the true light that we might walk out on the prophetic vision. But those that remain lukewarm, neither cold nor hot, he "will spew out of his mouth." "But as many as I love, I rebuke and chasten; be zealous therefore and repent. Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with me." Blessed promise! Jesus, in this last hour of probation, represents himself as standing at the door knocking to wake up his sleeping church, and to obtain an entrance into her cold, formal, lukewarm heart. It will soon be known how many will hear his voice and open the door. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches."

ABRAHAM FLAVELL.

Newark, N. J.

SALISBURY, N. H., Jan. 28, 1854.

Respected Reader:—Let me solicit your attention a few moments. Having no regular political or religious newspaper to bear the news of the day, I sit down to copy a few broken thoughts. "The intercession of the spirit with groanings that cannot be uttered," constrains me to take up my pen and write. The present is a time of great interest, both to church and state. You will inquire why. I will give my reason soon. The Lork is coming.—"Awake thou that sleepest." You have been wasting your moments at the shop, at the bar; perhaps at the ball-room, at the card-table, the store-room, at the rooms of filth and debauchery; or perhaps you have been more reserved in life and spent your time in a more careful manner, and economised in the things of this world, to shore up against your last day. What, peace? No! The sweets of a reconciled conscience to God? No! Life? No! An eternal home with the redeemed of the Lord? No! A seat in the kingdom of God? No! One of those mansions of rest promised to Christ's followers? No, no! Are you now laying up treasure in heaven, in compliance with God's present truth? Do you answer in the negative still? Then, my voice is to you now—You are the person of whom I would ask a few moments reflection, after having detached your thoughts from the things of this world. I have one more request to offer. When you retire for repose this night, let this inquiry be made; What have I laid up on which I can safely rest? The quicksands of time, on which your bark has been beating, are about to strand your vessel upon the rocks and barren coast, where naught but hunger, starvation, and the fiery indignation of God's wrath will rest No father, no mother, no brother or sister to administer to your wants, and relieve from distress. There is just barely time for you to arouse and prepare to meet God. If you would not be found speechless in that day, prepare to receive the wedding garment. O, reader, the last day is rolling on—the last meandering scenes of life are almost past,—the last warning voice is being given; the last truths of God's word in thunder-tones peal through earth, and the vaulted skies reverberate the tones, and earth is rent, while convulsed nature groans for you.—O, reader, stop, STOP! One moment's pause. The pealing tones of the last trump of God, is about to awaken you, when it will be too late to cry for mercy, and in vain to cry for the "rocks and mountains to fall on us and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. For the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?"

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, FEBRUARY 8, 1854.

Tarrying of the Vision.—No. 3.

Having endeavored to show that the ten virgins in the parable of Matt. 25, represent the church who are identified with present truth, and the lamps the word of God contained in the oracles; and having fixed the closing terminus of the parable at the personal revelation of the Saviour, we now proceed to enquire for the commencing terminus of that period, or in other words, to ascertain when the church went forth intelligently in expectation of meeting their Lord.

Some affirm that the going forth has been in a process of fulfilment ever since the opening of the Messianic dispensation.

For illustration on this point, let me suppose some historian, writing on the revolutionary war, should remark that the armies of the United States went forth to meet the forces of Great Britain—that the victory was for a long time doubtful—but at length they conquered, and the independence of the nation was obtained. Now, says one, that expression of the historian implies that ever since the first settlement of America, enemies to the English government have been rising up and contending against the power of England. But this idea does not meet the case. The representation of the writer is that a crisis arrives in the history of the United States, that a simultaneous movement is made by American troops, that the war is somewhat protracted, victory doubtful, till at last it turns in favor of America. It is not an individual effort simply, but a national movement; not at any and at all times, but at a given time the war begins, and from that given time the independence of the nation is delayed, and the war continues till our independence was recognized by a treaty of peace between the two powers. When that victory was gained, the rejoicing that spread over the land was indescribable—the continent rang with shouts of freemen. Said those patriots, "We have won the day—the country is ours." But this great revolution was not in progress ever since the settlement of America, it was a simultaneous movement throughout the country, an actual warfare carried on by the national force. This the church of Christ under the government of Prince Immanuel, went forth in hope of possessing the land—in hope of gaining their independence. It was not an individual effort here and there all over the world, and in all ages of the Christian dispensation, without union or concert,—that would be far from corresponding to the representation of the parable. The idea presented in the parable is, that at a given time, a special development in the church is to occur—that there will then be a united simultaneous movement in the ranks of Zion—that the expected victory would be delayed, and that simultaneously they would slumber and sleep on that effort, (faith in the time) and that subsequently another parallel movement would take place in which there would be concert and simultaneous action—and then, as our sires of the revolution shouted over the independence of the nation, so will the church, the soldiers of the cross, utter their acclamations of joy, their songs of victory, and shouts of praise, when they obtain that perfect freedom of the sons of God—that independence of the righteous nation which keepeth the truth to be enjoyed in the kingdom of God. When the saints possess the kingdom under the whole heaven, the renewed earth will ring with louder shouts than were ever heard in behalf of the political freedom of our favored land.

It appears evident, therefore, it is not a single handed individual effort, made at no particular time, but a grand national movement on the part of the citizens of the New Jerusalem in expectation of the reign of the Prince of Peace.

But some may present the subject in another form. They might perhaps affirm the church went forth in the Apostolic age to meet the Lord, and then fell asleep till they were aroused by the preaching of time in 1843, and that was the midnight cry. It is admitted that there was in the primitive age of Christianity an expectation of the coming of Christ, but that general expectation has also prevailed in the church subsequently to the Apostolic age.

About one thousand years from the beginning of the Christian era, there was a powerful excitement, and almost universal movement in the church, in regard to the coming of Christ. Professional Christians sold their possessions, and depositing the proceeds in the churches, went on pilgrimages to the holy land. In the time of Luther, light seemed to break in upon the church in relation to the personal reign of Christ.

In Germany and in England, there have been wide-spread and powerful excitements on this subject, but never a well settled faith, rooted and grounded in Scripture truth, till the movement connected with the '43 time. At that time there was a spontaneous, heartfelt and united action on the part of believers in the speedy coming of our King—a spiritual movement, a concentrated faith and development of that faith in the life, such as the world never saw before, and which in all its features appears to be an exact counterpart to the parable. The likeness, not only in its outlines, but in the minute points and shades, in the filling up and perfecting of the picture, precisely corresponds to the original, drawn by the Divine hand, and seems not so much like the portraiture of a limner, as the exact, perfect resemblance of a daguerreotype likeness, face answering to face, and feature to feature. But such a resemblance we find not before in the history of the Church

This article should have been extended further, but a special Providence having detained me in the cars, want of time prevents.

"For then will I turn to the People a Pure Language."—[Zeph. 3: 9.

NO. II.

"Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body.

"Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, withersoever the governor listeth.

"Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things."—James 3: 3-5.

The Apostle by a most striking comparison, here presents the idea of the immense power and influence of the tongue. As the prancing steed is controlled and directed by the bridle,—or a vessel bounding over the billows of ocean driven by the tempests, yields to the influence of a little rudder, and is turned about in its career at the will of the helmsman, so the tongue is a small organ, but its action affects mighty results—its influence and power over the entire moral being of an individual is astonishly great.

"Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth." This imagery if possible is still more striking than the formor. A little fire, A MERE SPARK will ignite a combustible substance, and that fire will spread from object to object till the productions of nature, or the works of art are enveloped in one vast sheet of devouring flame, so that one may exclaim, as did the Emperor Napoleon at seeing Moscow wrapped in the element of destruction, "AN OCEAN OF FLAME." All this it may be from the spark elicited by the collision of steel.—Thus a community may be excited, and their evil passions inflamed, till an influence analogous to devouring fire extends far and wide; and all, it may be, from an indiscreet or angry word, carelessly dropped from some one's lips. "And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell." The Apostle here speaks in most severe terms of reprobation in reference to the improper use of the tongue.—He attaches to the subject an importance of which men ordinarily have not the least conception. He represents that little member as an engine of tremendous power, when wielded by the influence of Satan.—Indeed he regards it as an organ of communication, by which the powers of darkness convey their diabolical influences to man. It is like applying a fire-brand from a burning mass to kindle the same destructive flame in the beautiful fabrications of man—to burn and destroy and devour them. "It defileth the whole body." It is a vehicle of pollution, it is an agent of destruction. Nay says James, "It is a WORLD of iniquity." How emphatic this declaration! The tongue, though so small a member, is so wonderfully contaminating, that when set in motion by the unholy influences of the adversary, it is said to be a WORLD of iniquity. No language could be stronger to warn us against the evil consequences of a perverse tongue.

But thank the Lord, the tongue is as capable of being set on fire of heaven as of hell. It is an instrument of great power as well in the service of Christ as of Satan; and when it is kindled up with the fires of divine love, it sets on fire not the course of nature, but the elements of grace It enkindles the spiritual affections, it lights up the flame of love in the hearts of men. Hence we are bound to consecrate all our members, including that little but mighty one, which is capable of effecting so much either for weal or wo. May God help us all to realize our responsibility in this respect, that we may ever be prudent and circumspect in our expressions—avoiding every idle word, every foolish and improper remark—that our conversation may be "in heaven," whence also we look for our Savior to appear in His glory, remembering He has said that by our words we shall be justified, and by our words we shall be condemned. If, then, we are "without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing," we shall be "presented faultless before His presence with exceeding joy."

When we observe the condition of a world lying in wickedness, and find that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, we can but deplore the awfully corrupt and depraved state of society, as indicated by the perverse languagethat naturally issues from pollution within. We hear the language of profanity on every hand, the song of revelry mingles with the hosannas of the saints — the voice of blasphemy succeeds that of devotion—intonations of anger, and expressions of hatred, and epithets of contempt often take the place of kindly and tender expressions of Christian love. The hearts of men, for some six thousand years in the past, have been filled with the waters of bitterness; and the streams flowing from such fountains must of course be bitter. But praise the Lord, the time is rapidly rolling on when "He will turn to the people a pure language." Yes, thank God, the fountain will be cleansed from its pollution, and the streams will no longer be impure,—the waters will no longer be bitter,—all will be pure and sweet and clear as crystal like the waters of life.

O how blessed to think of that land of perfect purity where the profane tongue or wanton lip will be forever unknown—where no bold blasphemer, defying the vengeance of heaven, will ever be admitted,—where the enchanting songs of the redeemed shall not be interrupted by the bachanalian's nightly revels. The language of that blessed world will be in keeping with its moral purity,—every idle word, every unhallowed expression, will be expunged from the dialect of Canaan—not a profane word—not a harsh or opprobious epithet will find a place in the vocabulary of heaven. No terms of anger or contempt will ever fall from the lips of that holy and peaceful society. What a heavenly scene to contemplate! It is a place where love abounds, where harmony reigns, where peace spreads over all her balmy wings, where they speak the language of love, where they sing their sacred songs of harmony, and utter their shouts of thanksgiving and praise. Shall we beloved readers have an inheritaece there? Shall we possess such purity of heart and such holiness of life as to see our God in peace? Shall we be such manner of persons in all holy conversation and godliness as to hail our deliverer when he comes, and say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."

☞ I visited the brethren in Exeter, N. H., last Sabbath, and was gratified to find so deep an interest felt in relation to the immediate coming of the day of God.—Their interest is developed in the profound attention of their assemblies, and in an effort to spread light and truth by holding meetings, at some distance from the village, in various directions. May God bless their efforts, and build them up in the most holy faith, and preserve them blameless unto His coming and kingdom.

To Correspondents.

We have received many interesting communications, and feel that the spirit of God aids the writers in their various productions; and we earnestly desire that every one who writes for the paper may be divested of every selfish or unhallowed feeling, having an eye single to the GLORY OF GOD. We hope, inasmuch as time is emphatically short, and our responsibility great, that no one will send us a public communication without imploring Divin aid and direction, and accompanying the same with fervant prayers that it may prove a blessing to the household of faith—that it may feed the flock of God, and convict the sinner of the error of his ways, and turn many to righteousness, that they may shine as stars in the coming kingdom forever and ever. We hope that correspondents will continue to write, as they have done, in the spirit of meekness, that becomes the followers of Him who was "meek and lowly in heart." We have no desire to round off the corners of truth, or blunt the edge of the sword: far from it: no, let naked truth cut its way to the heart, and arouse the conscience of unbelievers, and alarm the impenitent to flee from the wrath to come; but what we do desire is that the truth may be spoken in love—that the tender sympathising spirit of Him who sacrificed His life for His persecutors may be breathed forth in all the communications received—that men may be admonished, if need be, for their sins, and apprised of their danger for their own highest good, as we would affectionately warn a blind man of the danger of falling down a precipice. To sum up the whole in a word, we wish all to be under the control of the spirit of God, "for God is love," and His spirit fills the heart with love both to friend and foe.

We desire that no harsh or opprobrious epithets may be applied any farther than truth demands, that no personal controversy may be indulged in. We want our fly-sheets to go forth on wings of mercy and errands of love—that in the genuine spirit of the Gospel we may sound the alarm in God's holy mountain, and blow the trumpet in Zion.

Your humble Editor especially needs the prayers of the Church in relation to selecting for the paper such articles as will be most conducive to the general welfare of Zion, and the salvation of sinners. We hope correspondents will consider the multitude of letters and communications that are constantly flowing in, of which it would be impossible to publish all—that therefore some must be rejected and others abridged. We however respect the feelings of all, and would be pleased to gratify all so far as the general good will permit.

Have the goodness to write in a legible hand, and prepare the communication for the press s far as is convenient.

☞ As we desire to have a conscience void of offence before God and man, we wish to have every statement made in the Paper as correct as possible. From some misunderstanding it was stated in the Crisis of Jan. 25, that about 20 persons were recently converted in Salem, Mass. But we have since learned, that that was the number that rose for prayers. We are however happy to learn, that if the conversion of a score was not then present truth, there is every prospect that it soon will be. God speed the day when a multitude shall be turned from darkness to light, and from the service of dumb idols to serve the living God, and to wait for His Son from heaven.

OBITUARY. We learn with regret, that our beloved Bro. Silas Tabor, of Gardiner, Maine, has been deeply afflicted by the loss of his companion, who died on the 28th of Jan. ult. She, however, left behind her the savor of a Christian reputation, and the consolation to her friends that they need not mourn without hope.—She was a firm believer in the immediate coming of Christ. Bro. Tabor writes that, on the occasion of her funeral obsequies, a discourse was delivered by Bro. Burnham. truly "cheering to the hearts of those who have friends in the tomb waiting for the resurrection."

ERRATA. On our outside, about thirty lines from the foot of the third column, for "Mosheim's" history, read Markham's history. Fourth column, ten lines from the top, instead of "4th of October," read "14th of October." We would here remark in connection with this, that Putnam, in his Dictionary of Dates, page 585, speaking of the battle of Wagram, says:—"This battle led to an armistice, signed on the 12th, (July) and on Oct. 24, to a treaty of peace."

We have in both places two parties brought to view, one that is corrupted or seduced, and the other that is pure.

But it is said of this church, that the last is better than the first. In this dark night of papal persecution, towards the last of it, the day began to dawn. Reformers arose up in every direction, and took a bold stand for the truth, in opposing the pretensions of papacy, and in scattering the light throughout the world.

The charge against her is, that she suffers that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols. She had a long space to repent, but she repented not; therefore she was cast into a bed, and they that commit adultery with her. But who is this Jezebel, that pretends to be a prophetess? I answer, it is the Roman Antichrist that is represented by an abandoned harlot. Jezebel, a Zidonian, and a zealous idolator, being married to the king of Israel, contrary to law, used all her influence to seduce the Israelites from the worship of God into idolatry, in which the vilest licentiousness was committed. I. Kings, 16: 31-32. Here we have a marriage between the head of God's chosen people and the royal blood of the Zidonians, who were heathen.—She also shed the blood of the prophets. God was so much displeased, that in answer to the prayer of Elijah, he withheld the rain of heaven for the space of three years and a half. We leave the reader to judge if we have any thing as an antitype to this unholy marriage, and the withdrawal of rain during the 1260 days of the prophesying of the two witnesses. Rev. 11: 6. "These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy."

The rain of grace always follows the true church. During this time she fled into the wilderness, where she was nourished with the streams from the fountain of life, while in the provinces of the harlot the waters of salvation were dried up. We think her portrait is too well taken to mistake it.

The next is the church of Sardis—signifying a prince of joy—that which remains. This is that portion of God's people that remained after the days of Papal persecution. This state of the church continues from 1779 until the trying message was proclaimed of the coming of her Lord. She rejects it, just as the Jewish church rejected his first coming. She is charged with having a name to live while she is dead, and admonished to "strengthen the things that remain and are ready to die," for her works are not found perfect before God. She is also threatened that if she would "not watch," the Lord would come on her "as a thief," and she should "not know what hour" he would come upon her. There are "a few names in Sardis that have not defiled their garments, that will walk with Christ in white." God has often tried the church with liberty and prosperity; but she has in every instance departed from him, become dead and formal, proud and lifted up, conforming to the world, and thinking herself so wise that she could manage church matters very well herself. And now she has got so proud and haughty that she cannot bear to hear of the coming of her Lord; although she is admonished to watch, yet she heeds not the admonition, therefore he will come upon her "as a thief," while unconscious of her danger. How can she be saved in her pride, without a moment's warning, only that sounding from the waked-up virgins? But she treats this premonition with contempt, and she will be taken in the snare. Awful and unparalleled disappointment both to ministers and people. The next is tho church of Philadelphia, signifying "brotherly love." This church fills up that portion of time spoken of in Matt. 26, as the going forth of the virgins. He that has the keys of David, that openeth and no man shutteth, unseals the sacred book, and sets before this church an open door that no man can shut. All the efforts put forth by the sects to stop this first movement, only served to open the door still wider; and every thing that rose up against it seemed to be confounded. Many of the weak were made strong, and they bore a faithful testimony both in labors and in sacrifice. It is said to this church, "Thou hast a little strength; and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name, and hast kept the word of my patience; I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come on all the world to try them." What unbounded patience it must require in the Saviour, with this vast family who profess to love him and have no desire to see him! But how does this church keep the Saviour's word? I answer, she goes out to meet him according to the prophetic chart, and moves in the order of Providence. Then let us go without the camp, if need be, solitary and alone, bearing his reproach. Very soon they will have to acknowledge that the Master has loved us, and this is not all, for he says he will make us pillars in the Temple, to go no more out forever. Then let us hold fast whereunto we have attained. "Let no man take our crown." The 7th and last, is the church of the Laodiceans, signifying "Justice or Judgment." This church fills up that portion of time while the bridegroom tarries, and the virgins slumber and sleep.

We shall notice first the propriety of applying two churches to the advent movement. In looking back on the history of those churches, we see there is no regard paid to the portions of time they occupy, but simply noticing the important changes through which she passes, and how she is affected by those changes.

If the first movement be the action of the Philadelphia church, of which there can be no reasonable doubt, then the slumbering and sleeping time must be the Laodicean; for one always succeeds another, and also comes out of the other. But a more important change has never passed over the church than that which she passed through at the commencement of the tarrying time; for after moving the world by her faithfulness and zeal, in a few days she becomes a perfect shipwreck. The great and leading feature of this last state of the church is, that she is neither cold nor hot; and in her sleep she dreams she is rich and increased in goods and has need of nothing. She thinks she is all posted up on doctrines, and far ahead of all other churches in understanding the Bible. But God paints out her true colors, that she is wretched, miserable, poor, blind and naked. This is an awful picture, but it is drawn by a skilful hand, and not exaggerated. The Lord counsels her to buy of him the true gold, that she may be rich, that is, possess a treasure in the heart; and white raiment that she may be clothed. This includes all outward righteousness, and makes the dress complete both inward and outward, just what she needs. But is there any thing more?—Yes, the Lord says she is blind, and he has eye-salve to remove this blindness of mind. This agrees with the parable of the sleeping virgins; for people see but little in their sleep excepting dreams. But how important that we buy this eye-salve, that we may see. There is so much of home manufacture in the market, that there is but little demand for the genuine article. If we would only become meek and lowly in heart, the Master would impart to us the true light that we might walk out on the prophetic vision. But those that remain lukewarm, neither cold nor hot, he "will spew out of his mouth." "But as many as I love, I rebuke and chasten; be zealous therefore and repent. Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with me." Blessed promise! Jesus, in this last hour of probation, represents himself as standing at the door knocking to wake up his sleeping church, and to obtain an entrance into her cold, formal, lukewarm heart. It will soon be known how many will hear his voice and open the door. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches." ABRAHAM FLAVELL.

Newark, N. J.

SALISBURY, N. H., Jan. 28, 1854.

Respected Reader:—Let me solicit your attention a few moments. Having no regular political or religious newspaper to bear the news of the day, I sit down to copy a few broken thoughts. "The intercession of the spirit with groanings that cannot be uttered," constrains me to take up my pen and write. The present is a time of great interest, both to church and state. You will inqure why. I will give my reason soon. The Lork is coming.—"Awake thou that sleepest." You have been wasting your moments at the shop, at the bar; perhaps at the ball-room, at the card-table, the store-room, at the rooms of filth and debauchery; or perhaps you have been more reserved in life and spent your time in a more careful manner, and economised in the things of this world, to shore up against your last day. What, peace? No! The sweets of a reconciled conscience to God? No! Life? No! An eternal home with the redeemed of the Lord? No! A seat in the kingdom of God? No! One of those mansions of rest promised to Christ's followers? No, no! Are you now laying up treasure in heaven, in compliance with God's present truth? Do you answer in the negative still? Then, my voice is to you now—You are the person of whom I would ask a few moments reflection, after having detached your thoughts from the things of this world. I have one more request to offer. When you retire for repose this night, let this inquiry be made: What have I laid up on which I can safely rest? The quicksands of time, on which your bark has been beating, are about to strand your vessel upon the rocks and barren coast, where naught but hunger, starvation, and the fiery indignation of God's wrath will rest No father, no mother, no brother or sister to administer to your wants, and relieve from distress. There is just barely time for you to arouse and prepare to meet God. If you would not be found speechless in that day, prepare to receive the wedding garment. O, reader, the last day is rolling on—the last meandering scenes of life are almost past,—the last warning voice is being given; the last truths of God's word in thunder-tones peal through earth, and the vaulted skies reverberate the tones, and earth is rent, while convulsed nature groans for you.—O, reader, stop, STOP! One moment's pause. The pealing tones of the last trump of God, is about to awaken you, when it will be too late to cry for mercy, and in vain to cry for the "rocks and mountains to fall on us and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. For the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?" H. COUCH

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, FEBRUARY 8, 1854.

Tarrying of the Vision.—No. 3.

Having endeavored to show that the ten virgins in the parable of Matt. 25, represent the church who are identified with present truth, and the lamps the word of God contained in the oracles; and having fixed the closing terminus of the parable at the personal revelation of the Saviour, we now proceed to enquire for the commencing terminus of that period, or in other words, to ascertain when the church went forth intelligently in expectation of meeting their Lord.

Some affirm that the going forth has been in a process of fulfilment ever since the opening of the Messianic dispensation

For illustration on this point, let me suppose some historian, writing on the revolutionary war, should remark that the armies of the United States went forth to meet the forces of Great Britain—that the victory was for a long time doubtful—but at length they conquered, and the independence of the nation was obtained. Now, says one, that expression of the historian implies that ever since the first settlement of America, enemies to the English government have been rising up and contending against the power of England. But this idea does not meet the case. The representation of the writer is that a crisis arrives in the history of the United States, that a simultaneous movement is made by American troops, that the war is somewhat protracted, victory doubtful, till at last it turns in favor of America. It is not an individual effort simply, but a national movement; not at any and at all times, but at a given time the war begins, and from that given time the independence of the nation is delayed, and the war continues till our independence was recognized by a treaty of peace between the two powers. When that victory was gained, the rejoicing that spread over the land was indescribable—the continent rang with shouts of freemen. Said those patriots, "We have won the day—the country is ours." But this great revolution was not in progress ever since the settlement of America, it was a simultaneous movement throughout the country, an actual warfare carried on by the national force. This the church of Christ under the government of Prince Immanuel, went forth in hope of possessing the land—in hope of gaining their independence. It was not an individual effort here and there all over the world, and in all ages of the Christian dispensation, without union or concert,—that would be far from corresponding to the representation of the parable. The idea presented in the parable is, that at a given time, a special development in the church is to occur—that there will then be a united simultaneous movement in the ranks of Zion—that the expected victory would be delayed, and that simultaneously they would slumber and sleep on that effort, (faith in the time) and that subsequently another parallel movement would take place in which there would be concert and simultaneous action—and then, as our sires of the revolution shouted over the independence of the nation, so will the church, the soldiers of the cross, utter their acclamations of joy, their songs of victory, and shouts of praise, when they obtain that perfect freedom of the sons of God—that independence of the righteous nation which keepeth the truth to be enjoyed in the kingdom of God. When the saints possess the kingdom under the whole heaven, the renewed earth will ring with louder shouts than were ever heard in behalf of the political freedom of our favored land.

It appears evident, therefore, it is not a single handed individual effort, made at no particular time, but a grand national movement on the part of the citizens of the New Jerusalem in expectation of the reign of the Prince of Peace.

But some may present the subject in another form. They might perhaps affirm the church went forth in the Apostolic age to meet the Lord, and then fell asleep till they were aroused by the preaching of time in 1843, and that was the midnight cry. It is admitted that there was in the primitive age of Christianity an expectation of the coming of Christ, but that general expectation has also prevailed in the church subsequently to the Apostolic age.

About one thousand years from the beginning of the Christian era, there was a powerful excitement, and almost universal movement in the church, in regard to the coming of Christ. Professional Christians sold their possessions, and depositing the proceeds in the churches, went on pilgrimages to the holy land. In the time of Luther, light seemed to break in upon the church in relation to the personal reign of Christ.

In Germany and in England, there have been wide-spread and powerful excitements on this subject, but never a well settled faith, rooted and grounded in Scripture truth, till the movement connected with the '43 time. At that time there was a spontaneous, heartfelt and united action on the part of believers in the speedy coming of our King—a spiritual movement, a concentrated faith and developement of that faith in the life, such as the world never saw before, and which in all its features appears to be an exact counterpart to the parable. The likeness, not only in its outlines, but in the minute points and shades, in the filling up and perfecting of the picture, precisely corresponds to the original, drawn by the Divine hand, and seems not so much like the portrature of a limner, as the exact, perfect resemblance of a daguerreotype likeness, face answering to face, and feature to feature. But such a resemblance we find not before in the history of the Church

This article should have been extended further, but a special Providence having detained me in the cars, want of time prevents.

"For then will I turn to the People a Pure Language."—[Zeph. 3: 9.

NO. II.

"Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body.

"Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, withersoever the governor listeth.

"Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things."—James 3: 3–5.

The Apostle by a most striking comparison, here presents the idea of the immense power and influence of the tongue. As the prancing steed is controlled and directed by the bridle,—or a vessel bounding over the billows of ocean driven by the tempests, yields to the influence of a little rudder, and is turned about in its career at the will of the helmsman, so the tongue is a small organ, but its action affects mighty results—its influence and power over the entire moral being of an individual is astonishly great.

"Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth." We hope, inasmuch as time is emphatically short, and our responsibility great, that no one will send us a public communication without imploring Divin aid and direction, and accompanying the same with fervant prayers that it may prove a blessing to the household of faith—that it may feed the flock of God, and convict the sinner of the error of his ways, and turn many to righteousness, that they may shine as stars in the coming kingdom forever and ever. We hope that correspondents will continue to write, as they have done, in the spirit of meekness, that becomes the followers of Him who was "meek and lowly in heart." We have no desire to round off the corners of truth, or blunt the edge of the sword: far from it: no, let naked truth cut its way to the heart, and arouse the conscience of unbelievers, and alarm the impenitent to flee from the wrath to come; but what we do desire is that the truth may be spoken in love—that the tender sympathising spirit of Him who sacrificed His life for His persecutors may be breathed forth in all the communications received—that men may be admonished, if need be, for their sins, and apprised of their danger for their own highest good, as we would affectionately warn a blind man of the danger of falling down a precipice. To sum up the whole in a word, we wish all to be under the control of the spirit of God, "for God is love," and His spirit fills the heart with love both to friend and foe.

We desire that no harsh or opprobrious epithets may be applied any farther than truth demands, that no personal controversy may be indulged in. We want our fly-sheets to go forth on wings of mercy and errands of love—that in the genuine spirit of the Gospel we may sound the alarm in God's holy mountain, and blow the trumpet in Zion.

Your humble Editor especially needs the prayers of the Church in relation to selecting for the paper such articles as will be most conducive to the general welfare of Zion, and the salvation of sinners. We hope correspondents will consider the multitude of letters and communications that are constantly flowing in, of which it would be impossible to publish all—that therefore some must be rejected and others abridged. We however respect the feelings of all, and would be pleased to gratify all so far as the general good will permit.

Have the goodness to write in a legible hand, and prepare the communication for the press s far as is convenient.

☞ As we desire to have a conscience void of offence before God and man, we wish to have every statement made in the Paper as correct as possible. From some misunderstanding it was stated in the Crisis of Jan. 25, that about 20 persons were recently converted in Salem, Mass. But we have since learned, that that was the number that rose for prayers. We are however happy to learn, that if the conversion of a score was not then present truth, there is every prospect that it soon will be. God speed the day when a multitude shall be turned from darkness to light, and from the service of dumb idols to serve the living God, and to wate for His Son from heaven.

OBITUARY. We learn with regret, that our beloved Bro. Silas Tabor, of Gardiner, Maine, has been deeply afflicted by the loss of his companion, who died on the 28th of Jan. ult. She, however, left behind her the savor of a Christian reputation, and the consolation to her friends that they need not mourn without hope.—She was a firm believer in the immediate coming of Christ. Bro. Tabor writes that, on the occasion of her funeral obsequies, a discourse was delivered by Bro. Burnham. truly "cheering to the hearts of those who have friends in the tomb waiting for the resurrection."

ERRATA. On our outside, about thirty lines from the foot of the third column, for "Mosheim's" history, read Markham's history. Fourth column, ten lines from the top, instead of "4th of October," read "14th of October." We would here remark in connection with this, that Putnam, in his Dictionary of Dates, page 585, speaking of the battle of Wagram, says:—"This battle led to an armistice, signed on the 12th, (July) and on Oct. 24, to a treaty of peace."

WEST WINSTED, Feb. 4, 1854.

Dear Brother Merriam:—I am rejoiced to see the newspaper. Said the brother who handed me the first number, "It is the best paper I ever read." I trust the remaining numbers will be equally well loaded with good things, which will truly be "meat in due season" to "those who love the appearing of the Lord."

I am thankful for the light now shining upon the pathway of the pilgrim, which has been so long obscured by storm-clouds, dark and dreary.

I think the feeling now enjoyed is some like that of the mariner, who, when he has sailed many days against tides and head-winds, gulf-stream and tempest, with compass lost—no sun for the day or moon for the night, by which to tell his place upon the briny deep; beholds again the morning sun sparkling over the wave, while the gentle breeze wafts his noble bark proudly on, with sails well spread, to the quiet haven, where, in the distance he beholds, with eye-glass well directed, the loved ones anxiously waiting for the happy greeting. O praise the Lord for the bright prospect just before us. Soon the last tear will be shed by the lonely and weary, tempted and tried, down-trodden and despised ones, who are looking with longing eyes for the return of their best friend. "Blessed are those who are found watching."

"We'll be there, we'll be there in a little while."

The Lord has been kind to me in showing to my mind the necessity of this last great proclamation—"Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and in not leaving me, when I raised my puny arm to oppose the friends who first sounded the alarm to disturb my slumbering.

I thought myself fully awake, but have since found that a man in sleep is not the best judge of his true condition; and although somewhat cross when first aroused, because I thought the alarm unwise and unnecessary, as well as out of season, I am now rejoicing that,

"The long dark night of time is passed,
And soon the morning will dawn."

Let us be kind to those who see not as we do, and by love do what we can to win them to the Saviour whose coming is so near.

Thank the Lord, the time is at hand when that lonely widow will loose all her sorrows and cares, and have a home with the King of Kings in the promised land of the good and the blest. Soon the orphan's tears and sighs will be exchanged for the songs of the redeemed upon the bright plains of glory.

"O hail happy day," when from the north and south, east and west, the sons of paradise are gathered home to the world's jubilee in Eden's elysian fields.

Your brother in Christ.

MILES GRANT.

WESTBORO, Jan. 31, 1854.

As one of old has written, "That as cold water to a thirsty soul so is good news from a far country," so I can truly add is good news from kindred hearts that beat in unison for the kingdom of glory. And O, brethren and sisters, have we not many of us, within the past year, received "good news, glad tidings of great joy"? Thank the Lord, my ears have caught the sound,—my eyes have seen a gleam of light kindled, I believe, by none other than that Omnipotent hand which has ever guided the Church safely through darkness and tempest severe. While the Bridegroom tarried the Church became weary, their eyes became heavy; they were almost ready to let go their watch,—were almost ready to drop their lamps, and even some of them were dreaming of years to come—of wealth that might be acquired; others of honors that might be gained, another class of pleasures that might be enjoyed; still others of combined associations that might be formed, while there were some that now and then were stirred by some national movement, or some prophetical light, yet relapsing again into perhaps sounder sleep than before, till truly it was midnight, when suddenly a light was seen—a cry heard. Some roused and listened; they knew the voice; it was that welcome sound, "Behold he cometh." The warning was given; a few more were stirred; the light became brighter, the evidences became stronger, and much clearer could be seen the fulfilment of prophecy in the political world, and also in the moral, physical and religious world all combined speaking to the observer and student of prophecy in tones of thunder not to be misunderstood, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." And now what do we behold? A company with eyes wide open watching every movement—hearts beating with interest—neglected lamps trimmed up—armors being girded on anew—and a company that is determined never to quit the field till victory is won. A feeling of solemnity is now settling down upon them in view of the approaching crisis—feeling truly their all must be upon the altar to secure their acceptance with Him who is so soon to come to judge the quick and dead. O, I feel that the last dispensational truth is being given. Soon that sealing Angel, ascending from the east, will have accomplished his work—the last servant of God will be sealed. Soon the midnight cry of "Mercy" will have been fully sounded—then the closing part of that parable of the virgin will have its fulfilment. Then the foolish will become satisfied that they are destitute of oil, and will then cry for it, but oh, it is TOO LATE. "While they went to buy, the Bridegroom came; they that were ready went in, and the door was shut." O that many more may yet be benefitted by this last cry of mercy. My prayer has been, and still is, that prejudice may vanish before the glaring light of prophecy like dew before the sun; that while the last notes of warning are dying away upon the ears of the careless multitude, many of those who were once all interested in searching the word, (the midnight hour witnessed the scene) may again be aroused and go forth yet once more.

"But," says one, "I don't believe in making this a test. If we are only ready it is enough." I answer, truth has been in all ages important to that generation living at the time it became due. This being truth, is important also, to sanctify and constitute a readiness. Time will decide.

O, brethren and sisters, awake; Jesus is coming! Prepare, O, prepare! Ye tried and tempted ones, keep up good courage; a little longer, deliverance will come. Yes, a little longer and we'll join in that song of triumph:

"We'll sing upon that shore,
Saying "Jesus has redeemed me,
To suffer never more."

And casting our eyes backward on the race that we have run—

"We'll shout aloud in glory,
Deliverance has come."

The kingdom in all its glory and beauty, will be our happy home forever and ever. O let us see to it, that when those four angels let go their hold, (and according to present evidence they are almost ready to dissolve their union and let those winds of war and commotion blow upon this world) that our names may be written in the Lamb's book of Life, and be among those that shall have deliverance. That this may be our happy portion, is the prayer of one that believes according to evidence, that Jesus will come this year. L. M. B.

The News from Europe.

Arrival of the Arabia.

HALIFAX, Feb. 5. The royal mail steamship Arabia, from Liverpool Saturday the 21st ult., arrived at Halifax at about a quarter past twelve o'clock, on Saturday.

The Turkish War.

We have, by this arrival, further accounts of the battle of Citale, confirming the turkish success. It appears that the Russians were concentrating their forces at Citale, in order to attack Kalafat on the 13th; but on the 6th, 15,000 Turks marched out of Kalafat, attacked and stormed Citale; resumed the conflict with the Russians in the field on the 7th, and renewed the attack on the 8th, ending in the evening with the total discomfiture of the Russians, who confess of having one thousand killed in the affair, besides 4,000 wounded, including therein their Generals, Auress and Tuinout.

On the 9th, the Turks having remained over night in the field beyond Citale, attacked a reserve of Russians, and drove them back upon Krajova, with loss of some of their cannon, and an immense slaughter on both sides.

On the 10th, the Turks, having razed the Russian fortifications, returned to Kalafat. The Turks were commanded in the action by Selim Pacha, Zedlinsky and Mehemed Pacha, one of whom, Mehemed probably, is reported to be killed.

The above victories are officially announced to the Turkish, French and British Embassies.

By this arrival we have but very little from Asia. A letter dated Trebizond 16th Dec., says that Schamyl had organized a Polish Rifle regiment, 1200 strong; that he has plenty of provisions and ammunition; and that he is organizing an army in Daghistan. The Abysinians are in alliance with them. The Hungarians and Poles, who had been waiting at Constantinople for employment, were shipped Jan. 2d for the Asian army. General Klapka declined an Asiatic command, but offers to serve in Europe.

The Allied Fleets.

On the 5th of January the whole of the allied fleet was on the Blacd Sea. Two ships had been sent with the following to the Russian Governor of Sebastopol:

"To the Governor of Sebastopol:—Conformably with orders of our governments, the British squadron, in concert with that of France, is on the point of appearing in the Black Sea. The object of this movement is to protect the Ottoman territory from aggression or hostile acts.—We apprise you thereof with a view to prevent all collissions tending to disturb the Amicable relations existing between our governments, which we are desirous of preserving, and which no doubt you are equally anxious to maintain. To this end we should feel happy to learn that you, animated by these sentiments, had deemed it expedient to give the requisite instructions to the Admiral commanding the Russian forces on the Black Sea, so as to obviate any occurrence calculated to endanger peace.

(Signed) STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE,
BARAGUAY D'HILLIERS."

It was at first intended to send only a portion of the allied fleet into the Black Sea, but a rumor having reached Constantinople that the whole Russian fleet had sailed from Sebastopool, it was resolved to order the entire fleet there.

It was further rumored that Russian ships were off Erzeroum, probably expecting to intercept the Turkish convoy which, under the protection of the allies, carries 15,000 men into Asia.

Merchantmen at Constantinople, on the 9th, report not having seen the fleet, consequently they are supposed to have sailed towards Batoum, where it is surmised that the Russians have also gone.

Around Sebastopol and the coast of Crimea, the Russians are erecting batteries, and have extinguished all light-houses.

Still Anxiously Diplomatizing.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 31. The Porte made the following modifications to the note of the four powers:

First—Instead of "evacuation of the Principalities as soon as possible," say within fifteen or twenty days after the acceptance by Russia. Second—The renewal of treaties, to be with special reference to the integrity and independence of Turkey. The Porte will ameliorate her administrative system alone, and spontaneously on its receipt at Vienna, the English, French, Austrian and Prussian representatives met and drew up a protocol, stating that the Porte's terms were good and satisfactory, and were immediately sent off by a courier to St. Petersburg, where he would most likely arrive on the 19th. The Porte demands that the Note shall be difinitely accepted or rejected within forty days from January 2d, and the Principalities evacuated within twenty or thirty days of the date of the Czar's letter of acceptance. The demand is on its way to St. Petersburg.

On the 12th inst., the British and French ministers at St Petersburg also communicated to the Russian Minister of Foreign affairs the announcement of the entry of the allies into the Black Sea. The Czar's reply was not known when the Arabia sailed, but all Europe is anxiously waiting it, as indications had already transpired that he would at once withdraw his ambassadors from France and England, and formally declare war. Nothing else is looked for.

Our Liverpool correspondent made arrangements to have telegraphed from Vienna the intelligence of the Czar's reply the instant it was made public there. As no despatch has come, however, the presumption is that the reply had not reached that capital in time to reach the Arabia.

Great Britain.

England is actively recruiting the coast volunteer, artillery and coast defence guard. Ten thousand is the number required.

Exertions are apparently being made to man the navy, and more ships are fitting out, but apparently no land forces are in contemplation of being raised.

France.

The greatest activity prevailed in the French navy yards, the operatives being ordered to work on Sundays, and every ship possible to be fitted for sea immediately.

A levy had been made of all seamen between 20 and 40 years of age, and all the Newfoundland fishermen are drafted into the fleet.

Stores for 40,000 soldiers are ready for shipment to Toulon.

SWITZERLAND. The sessions of the Federal Council of State were opened at Berne on the 9th. In view of the war prospects the executive asks a grant to station a body of troops on the German frontier.

GERMANY. The Baden Diet opened on the 12th. The Duke's speech indicates a desire to settle religious difficulties peaceably.

Letters from Carlsruhe of the 14th say positively that an arrangement has been come to between the church and the government.

AUSTRIA. France is understood to regard as settled that Austria shall preserve the strictest neutrality. In the event of a war France will enforce the neutrality.

It is now said that France will not contract a loan, but devise other means.

ITALY. The Roman States are suffering great scarcity of food, especially at Tanenza and Ravenna.

NAPLES. A scarcity also prevails here.

The case of M. Carbone, an American citizen, remains unsettled. The American Minister has taken it up warmly. The Neapolitan government were endeavoring to patch the matter up by bribing M. Carbone to leave.

Latest.

LIVERPOOL, Jan. 21,—Noon. Admiral Dundas' signal on entering the Black Sea was "Our duty is to protect the Ottoman Marine and Territory from all aggressions in the Euxine."

PARIS BOURSE. The rumor that the fleets had returned to the Bosphorus from strees of weather was untrue.

The Turkish War.

It is astonishingly difficult to arrive at anything like the truth from the contradictory statements that perpetually follow each other from the East. Disregarding the positive announcement that on the morning of the 29th December orders reached the fleets to weigh anchor instantly for the Black Sea, and that, ere sunset, only one vessel of each fleet was left in the Bosphorus—we turn to other accounts which appear more reliable. On Dec. 29 or 30, the fleets did receive orders to enter the Euxine, but up to 1st inst. (the date of the last direct letters) they were still at anchor in Beicos Bay, owing to contrary winds and stress of weather.

The telegraph further informs us from Constantinople, 3d inst., that the combined squadrons entered the Black Sea on that day, together, with the first division of the Turco-Egyptian fleet, leaving six vessels at Beicos to guard the entrance of the Bosphorus. The second division of the Ottoman fleet is anchored at Therapia.—It was known at Constantinople on the 26th ult., that a Russian squadron of three sail of the line and several frigates had been cruising for several days near the entrance of the Black Sea. On the 22d they were seen at a distance of three or four miles from the entrance to the Bosphorus. The Russian Commander-in-Chief has already recalled all Russian ships of war in the Black Sea, to rendezvous at Setastopol. It was considered probable that Baltshik, north of Verna is the first place at which the allied fleets will touch.

We have once more to report brilliant successes achieved by Omer Pasha on the Danube. For some days there had been flying rumors that the Turks stormed and Captured Karakal, and had put to flight with great loss the Russian division sent to its relief. As the communication from the seat of war to the commencement of the line of telegraph to Vienna is in the hands of the Russians, it was, of course, unlikely that any confirmation of the intelligence would reach us by that route.—Direct advices have since come to hand giving details of another victory as brilliant as that of Oltenitza! The news had again elated the spirits of the Turks, and the disaster of Sinope is forgotten.

Full information is yet wanting, but, sifting as carefully as we can the accounts that are published, it would appear that on January 6th, a Turkish division 15,000 strong, with 15 pieces of artillery, attacked the entrenched position of Citale, not far from Kalefat, and took it by storm.—The Russians lost 2,500 men. The Turks, learning that a re-enforcement of 18,000 Russians were on march from Karaul, threw themselves in the way, and after a brief but sharp attack, forced them to retrace their steps, leaving 250 dead on the field.

The above affairs took place on the 6th of January, but other and previous successes had been gained by the Turks under command of Omer. On January 1, the Minister of War officially intimated to the different Embassadors at Constantinople that important advantages had been gained by the Ottoman troops at Kalefat. For several days previuos Omer had attacked in succession the different Russian corps with apparently varying success.—At length the Turks intentionally fell back on their counter, and thus lured on the Russians as far as Kalefat, a position now formidably entrenched, but which at a distance seemed to be abandoned. The Turkish batteries suddenly unmasked, causing great carnage among the Russians, while, at the same time, the Ottoman reserve, which had crossed the Danube by night and was masked behind a wood, took them in flank and compelled them to retreat with great loss. The inhabitants of Little Wallachia, who are day by day manifesting themselves more openly in favor of the Turks, contributed not a little to the success of these maneuvres.

The Russian version of the state of affairs gives a later date than the above, and says, via Vienna: "On 7th or 8th instant, a battle was fought near Letati, when the Turks fell back upon Kalefat, with loss of six guns." It is suspicious that the date of a battle in which the enemy lost six guns should not be known to the victors more definitely than the 7th or 8th inst.

In view of their recent victories, it is rather inappropriate to speculate what the Turks would do in case of defeat. The Russian organs, however, assert that if Gen. Luders forces the passages of the Danube at Matshin, the Turks will fall back on Trajan's wall, extending from Czernavoda to Kostendji, that line being very strongly fortified. They admit that in the meantime the Turkish commanders in Europe and Asia are ordered to prosecute the war with vigor.

Prince Menchikoff is making preparations at Odessa for the reception of the Emperor's son, the Archduke Constantine.

Lord Dudley Stuart was to leave Constantinople on the 15th inst., so as to be in England for the meeting of Parliament, when he will undoubtedly bring the whole Eastern question before the British people.

GREAT BRITAIN.—A Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign office, on evening of 10th inst. All the ministry were present and the Council remained in session four hours. A second Council was held on 12th. The public are never enlightened as to the subject of these conferences.

FRANCE.—From France we have but a few scraps of news. The Moniteur mentions the presentation by the Prince de Chimay, of an autograph letter from the King of Belgium to the Emperor, but gives no indication of its contents. Armaments, by land and sea, are going on more actively than ever throughout France. It was reported that the Bank has agreed to loan fifty millions of francs to the Government. An ill effect was produced in Paris by the information that Austria has been supplying Russia with arms and stores. The Austrian Minister, on being applied to, stated that it was a mere commercial transaction—an explanation not deemed satisfactory.

Foreign Items.

The following items are taken from the Manchester (Eng.) Guardian of Jan. 7:—

"A Bucharest letter says, that in accordance with orders from St. Petersburg, the army of the Danubian provinces, which does not now exceed 80,000 men, is about to be increased to an effective strength of 240,000 men. All the accounts from Russia agree as to the enormous warlike preparations, confirming the impression that the Emperor is determined on pursuing his so-called religious crusade in spite of all opposition.

"The expenditure of the Russian government in moving the immense masses of troops, which are already on their march from every part of the empire, and in preparing for war on every frontier of its territories, must be enormous. The Emperor of Russia has raised some millions by withdrawing his property from this country and from France, and voluntary contributions are solicited throughout the empire; but these are temporary resources, and we have yet to learn by what extraordinary means efforts of this kind can be sustained. The whole moneyed interest of Europe is strongly disposed to withhold its assistance from a policy and a power so adverse to the cause of peace, for no profits realised on a Russian loan could be equivalent to the loss caused by the general depreciation of value in all public securities. These obstacles, however, have never yet restrained headstrong and fanatical rulers from the lawless gratification of their ambition; they only serve to render the consequences of their actions more oppressive and intolerable to their subjects. War never occurred at a time when the people of Europe were less disposed to submit to the ravages of armed ambition in addition to the other causes of hardship and distress under which they labor; and we still rest our hopes of an early termination of the struggle on the universal resentment and reprobation it is justly calculated to excite against its author.

"The Emperor of the French has intimated in plain terms to the Austrian cabinet, that any further secession from the intervention to which it has become a party, will be regarded as an indication of meditated hostility; and that in case of war becoming general through its conduct, the French will not decline the alliance of either the Italians or Poles, but that the recognition of those nationalities will become the settled policy of France, and receive her support."

☞ Considerable excitement has been created in various sections of this country on account of the Pope's Nuncio, M. Bedini. It has been suspected that he was here on purpose to help prepare the way for the Catholic supremacy in this country. In many cities the Nuncio has been burnt in Effigy, generally by the German part of our population. A demonstration of this kind was made in Boston last Tuesday.

The visit of this personage to this country has served to greatly increase the animosity which has so long existed between the Catholics and Protestants. The Catholics are daily growing more bold, and in some places they are growing insolent and almost intolerable. The Boston Investigator, in speaking of a recent Catholic demonstration in New York against Mr. Parsons, uses the following language:

"Let the Catholics beware how they attempt in America the abominable persecution that in Rome overrides and crushes the people, or they will be made to feel that retributive vengeance, which, once aroused, it is as sweeping as it is sure!"

This language serves to show in some measure the state of feeling which now exists among a great portion of the American people.

Speaking of the Jesuits in connection with the Parsons affair, the Investigator thus continues:

"It seems that the Catholic outrage in New York against Mr Parsons, was instigated on account of his preaching upon the subject of Jesuitism. Now who are the Jesuits that they must not be preached about? They are the most dangerous foes to Republicanism that ever existed; and if their power was equal to their inclination, they would overthrow the American Republic within twenty-four hours."

☞ The Paris correspondent of the New York Staats Zuitung, under date of Jan. 12th, states as follows:—More than one incident proves that there is no disposition here to step out of the way of war, but rather every intention to be ready for it. The War Minister has published a decree by which an additional levy of 80,000 men is ordered. The fitting out of a third fleet is also decreed. It is to be called the reserve fleet, and will be stationed in the harbor of Brest, where it can be made available for any exigency in either the Baltic Sea or the Atlantic Ocean. In the meanwhile small squadrons of equipped vessels are constantly leaving for the East, and within a day or two an order went off by telegraph to all the port Commandants to put transport ships in readiness. In fact it is publicly reported that a transport of 70,000 men will shortly sail for Constantinople. The larger proportion of this force will consist of French troops, the remainder of English. The rendezvous is Candia. An expedition of 30,000 African troops is also spoken of, and Gen. Bosquet has been sent to organize it from the France soldiery in garrison there.

☞ Dr. Scott, in a recent Lecture on Italy, made the following remarks in regard to its present condition:

"Italy is now in a deplorable condition. Its dungeons are crowded with victims; the letters of Mr Gladstone, M. P., corroborate this statement. The only thing which flourishes in Italy is beggary. The worst governed kingdoms in Italy are the States of the Church. Ignorance sits on the land like an incubus. A few years since, the Pope issued a bull condemning infant schools. The revolution of 1848 revealed the spirit of the people, and utter hatred of the Pope as a civil ruler. He sits now in the Vatican, surrounded by French bayonets, nor can he sit long. A new revolution awaits Italy, and woe to its ecclesiastical despots!

☞ The American Patriot, in speaking of the numerous secret societies of America says:—This is right. Let us be banded together to meet the enemy.—Foreigners are united in secret clubs and associations, so should we be united for our mutual benefit and welfare. There are now at least one hundred thousand true Americans united together.

CATHOLICS IN IRELAND. "During the last six years and a half, 32,000 persons have left the Romish Church, in this country, and become members of Protestant churches, while more than 60,000 have been unsettled in their old opinions."

Anticipation.

BY S. S. BREWER.

We're going to the land,
To the land of pure delight,
Where the sky is ever clear,
And the sun is ever bright.
Where the gentle zephyrs play,
All laden with perfume,
Where the grass is ever green,
And the flowers are in bloom,—
When we reach that blessed land,
Our happy Eden home,
The restituted earth,
And throughout creation roam,
We will join the heavenly host,
And make the kingdom ring,
With all the blood washed throng,
To praise our God and King.

We're going to the land,
The land of sacred rest,
To greet the loved of earth,
The holy and the blest.
Where all hearts shall thrill with joy,
All tears be wiped away,
Where glory ever beams,
In those bright realms of day.
We're going to our home,
The new Jerusalem,
With gates so richly set
With brilliant diadems,
With streets of purest gold,
Behold fair Salem stand,
Built by the God of love,
In Beulah's peaceful land.

We're going to the land,
The land of sacred song,
Where the enraptured host,
The choral strains prolong,
Where immortal breezes blow
Across fair Edens plains,
Where the river of life flows
And the King in beauty reigns.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.—No. 1.

That this is a parable, and a parable only, is very evident, It is the most intricate among the many the Saviour taught during his brief sojourn among men. By way of introduction, I will present to the reader a few comments of some of the great and good men, whose names many delight to honor:

Dr. Adam Clark remarks on Matt. 5: 26—"Let it be remembered, that by the general consent of all, (except the basely interested,) no metaphor is ever to be produced in proof of a doctrine. In the things that concern our eternal salvation, we need the most pointed and express evidence on which to establish the faith of our souls." Bishop Lowth says—"Parable is that kind of allegory which consists of a continued narration of fictitious or accommodated events, applied to the illustration of some important truth."

LIGHTFOOT. "Whoever believes this not to be a parable, but a true story, let him believe also those little friars, whose trade it is to show the monuments at Jerusalem to pilgrims, and point exactly to the place where the house of the 'rich glutton' stood. Most accurate keepers of antiquity, indeed, who, after so many hundreds of years, such overthrows of Jerusalem, such devastations and changes, can rake out of the rubbish the place of so private a house, and such a one, too, that never had any being, but merely in parable. And that it was a parable, not only the consent of all expositors may assure us, but the thing itself speaks it.

WHITBY. "That this is only a parable, and not a real history of what was actually done, is evident: 1. Because we find this very parable in the Gemara Babylonicum, whence it is cited by Mr. Sheringham, in the preface to his Joma. 2. From the circumstances of it, viz., the rich man's lifting up his eyes in hell, and seeing Lazarus in Abraham's bosom, his discourse with Abraham, his complaint of being tormented with flames, and his desire that Lazarus might be sent to cool his tongue; and if all this be confessedly parable, why should the rest, which is the very parable in the Gemara, be accounted history?" Annot. in loc.

WAKEFIELD. Ver. 23, "In the grave; or to hades, and, conformably to this representation, he is spoken of as having a body, ver. 24. It must be remembered, that hades nowhere means hell—gehenna—in any author whatsoever, sacred or profane; and also, that our Lord is giving his hearers a parable, (Matt. xiii. 34,) and not a piece of real history. To them who regard the narration as a reality, it must stand as an unanswerable argument for the purgatory of the papists. The universal meaning of hades is the state of death; because the term sepulchrum or grave, is not strictly applicable to such as have been consumed by fire, &c. See ver. 30)." Note in loc.

JAMES BATE, M. A., Rector of Deptford, says:—"We will suppose, then, the rich man who fared so sumptuously, to be the Jew, so amply enriched with the heavenly treasure of divine revelation. The poor beggar who lay at his gate, in so miserable a plight, was the poor Gentile, now reduced to the last degree of want, in regard to religious knowledge. The crumbs which fell from the rich man's table, and which the beggar was so desirous of picking up, were such fragments of patriarchal and Jewish traditions, as their traveling philosophers were able to pick up with their utmost care and diligence. And those philosophers were also the dogs that licked the sores of heathenism, and endeavored to supply the wants of divine revelation, by such schemes and hypotheses, concerning the nature of the gods, and the obligation of moral duties, as (due allowance for their ignorance and frailties) did no small honor to human nature, and yet thereby plainly showed, how little a way unassisted reason could go, without some supernatural help, as one of the wisest of them frankly confessed. About one and the same time, the beggar dies, and is carried by the Angels (i. e., God's spiritual messengers to mankind,) into Abraham's bosom; that is, he is engrafted into the church of God. The people whom he parabolically represents, are miserably destroyed by the Romans, and the wretched remains of them, driven into exile over the face of the earth, were vagabonds, with a kind of mark set upon them, like Cain, their prototype, for a like crime; and which mark may perhaps be their adherence to the law. Whereby it came amazingly to pass, that these people, though dispersed, yet still dwelt alone and separate, not being reckoned among the nations, as Balaam foretold. The rich man being reduced to this state of misery, complains bitterly of his hard fate, but is told by Abraham, that he slipped his opportunity, while Lazarus laid hold on his, and now receives the comfort of it. The Jew complains of the want of more evidence, to convince his countrymen, the five brethren, and would fain have Lazarus sent from the dead to convert them. But Abraham tells them, that if their own scriptures cannot convince them of their error, neither would they be persuaded though one rose from the dead. And exactly so it proved in the event. For this parable was delivered towards the end of the third year of our Lord's ministry; and in the fourth, or following year of it, the words put into the mouth of Abraham, as the conclusion of the parable, are most literally verified, by our Lord's raising another Lazarus from the dead. And we may presume, that the beggar had the fictitious name of Lazarus given him in the parable, not without some reason, since the supposed request of the rich man was fully answered, by our Lord's raising another, and a real Lazarus, from the dead. But what was the consequence? Did this notorious miracle convince the rich man's brethren? No, truly. His visit to them from the dead, was so far from convincing them, that they actually consulted together, that they might put Lazarus also to death; because that, by reason of him, many of the Jews went away and believed on Jesus.

To my mind, the teaching of the Saviour on this occasion, is simply this. The time was fast approaching, and would very soon arrive, when the Law would become a dead letter,—and the Priesthood would die with it.

Just turn to Luke xvi., 19th, and read the parable. You will then observe—1st, a rich man; 2nd, a beggar; 3rd, father Abraham; 4th, the dogs; 5th, the five brethren; 6th, the gulf; 7th, the hell.—The question now arises, what are we to understand by the above seven points? I understand them in the following manner: First, the rich man to be the priesthood.—He was clothed in purple and fine linen. Turn to EX. XXVIII., 1st to 9th. "These are the garments which we shall make a breastplate, an ephod, and a robe, and a broidered coat, a mitre, and a girdle; and they shall make holy garments for Aaron, and his sons, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office—and they shall take gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet and fine linen," &c. See also EX. XXXIX, 1st to 6th verses—"And of the blue, and purple, and scarlet they made clothes of service to do service in the holy place; and made holy garments for Aaron as the Lord commanded Moses," &c.

The above is the rich man,—he fared sumptuously every day. The following is the feasting or sumptuous faring of the rich man. Please turn and read from the 1st to the 14th verse of DEUT. XXVIII.—They had the feast of Passover, the feast of Pentacost, the feast of Tabernacles, the feast of Trumpets, which was celebrated on what was called their civil year, being ushered in by the blowing of trumpets,—the feast of the new moon, which was celebrated on the first day the moon appeared after the change,—the feast of expiation, which was celebrated on the 10th day of Tisri,—the feast of Lots and Purim,—the feast of Dedication,—the feast of Branches, to commemorate the taking of Jericho,—the feast of Collections on the 10th day of Sept, when they made contribution for the temple,—and the feast of Sabbatical year. Besides the above mentioned feasts, they had all the fulness af God's blessing spoken of in the 28th of DEUT. Truly, they fared sumptuously every day.

And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus. Permit me here to introduce a criticism of Adam Clark's, the celebrated commentator, Clark says, "The word Lazarus is a contraction of the word Eleazer, which signifies the help or assistance of God," a name properly given to a man who was both poor and afflicted, and had no help but that which came from God. Such was Jesus Christ. Mark, reader, the Saviour sometimes introduces himself as a vine, a door, an heir, a stone. Why should it be thought strange that he should be the beggar, or the Lazarus of this parable? He is, in my humble opinion, the Lazarus of this parable.

The dogs are the Gentiles. Father Abraham—God the Father. Why such an application? See Matt. xxi: 33d.—There the "certain house holder" is assuredly God the Father. So I understand it in this instance. Now then let us make an application of the parable. "And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by the Angels into Abraham's bosom. The rich man ALSO died, and was buried." When Jesus died on the cross, the rich man, i. e., the priesthood, died also. Yes, it is a fact, the priesthood lost all their peculiar blessings. See Col. ii: 14, 15; also Rom. vii: 4, "Ye are become dead to the law by the body of Christ," &c.

The rich man ~~(priesthood)~~ dies a political death. His dispensation ceases, never to be raised to his former favor—rejected from being any longer the peculiar son of God. "In Hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments." By this I understand that Father Abraham, or God the Father, now permits all the awful calamities foretold by the prophets to come upon them as the fruit of their rejection of the Messiah. "I will kindle a fire in mine anger that shall burn to the lowest Hell" "I will burn you with hunger." "The Lord shall smite thee with a consumption, and with a fever, and with an extreme burning, and with the sword," &c. Please turn and read Deut. xxxii: 21 to 28; same xxviii 21 to 30: Jer. xv: 14. When rejected of God, scattered, torn to pieces, all their national privileges destroyed, hated, unpitied; their city destroyed, tormented by all nations, starving with hunger—these are the torments, this truly the hell spoken of in Deut. thirty-second, twenty-second. Jonah cries out of the Belly Hell. Ch. 2: 2. God there casts him into Hell in the whale's belly. God casts the Jews into a Hell of national calamities. Such to my mind, is the Hell in the parable.—The priesthood rejected Jesus; they did not believe in him; they are still looking for him to make his first advent; they would not believe their prophets. They are suffering God's displeasure, and hence the Savior charges home their unbelief by stating they would not believe though one rose from the dead.

They are represented as crying to Father Abraham, to alleviate their sufferings. Now mark the answer—"Son, remember that thou, in thy life time, receivedst thy good things. And likewise Lazarus evil things—now he is comforted, and thou art tormented." During all your priesthood you received your good things, but Lazarus, the Savior, in his sojourning on earth, evil things; now he is comforted and you are tormented. He then tells the reason of the sufferings they endure, by the gulf fixed between him and them, which is a fact in reality, that we cannot pass from hence, from the gospel back under the law; neither can you while you reject the Messiah pass to us. He feels a solicitude on the part of his five brethren. Probably the five brethren are some of the tribes that did not consent, or have any part or lot in putting Christ to death. I do not consider the five brethren in this instance, a specific number any more than I do the five wise and five foolish virgins. What, you may enquire, is the probable meaning of the beggar being fed with the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table? I understand it as follows:

All those parts of Scripture that spoke of the manner, the time, and the life and character of Jesus—i. e., Lazarus—they rejected, treated them just as a person would, in affluent circumstances, small fragments or crumbs from their table.

But Jesus was fed with them. How often he addresses them thus: "Did ye never read in the Scriptures?" (See MAT. xxi: 42) Or, to make an application of present truth, see how many of the rich preachers of the present day treat those portions of Scripture concerning the time and event of Christ's second coming. O, say they, they will do for the Millerites—Well, thank God, they do well for us; they are precious crumbs; we are fed by them; they are meat in due season. Just so it seems to me, with respect to the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table. Finally he tells them, "neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."

Behold, Lazarus rose from the dead; yes, Jesus, the Lazarus of the parable, rose from the dead, and they would not believe. S. S. BREWER.

WEST GREAT WORKS, Jan. 23, 1854.

Readers of the Crisis:—Grace be unto you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. I am looking for and confidently expecting the King in his beauty will come this year, and bestow glory, honor, immortality and eternal life upon all the patient well-doers. This is truly heart-cheering to the toil-worn pilgrim, who, for many long years, has been looking for that blessed hope, and loving the appearing of the dear Savior. O how blessed, how glorious to contemplate the coming of the King of kings, attended by countless millions of bright shining angels—the heavens departing—the trumpet sounding—together with the Archangel—the dead awaking from earth and sea—angels descending with speed of lightning to gather the saints of every age and every clime. See the swift-winged messengers, as from earth they bear away the precious jewels of Jesus, the purchase of his blood; and as they meet him in the nether skies, what shouts of glory, what songs of victory and of praise. Methinks that every voice, both of men and angels, will unite, and such a song shall then be sung as earth nor heaven ever heard before. Borne onward still, the City now appears in view. Its jasper walls how bright, how clear. Its gates of pearl on every side how beautiful. And now a voice is heard:

"The gates on every side wide open fling," and now the King of Glory, with His spotless Church enter in. Behold the perfection of beauty, life's fair tree, in living verdure clad, and fruit abundant, all may partake its fruits and welcome be. Life's river, too, is seen—how beautiful. Drink Bro. Pilgrim and thirst no more. And now behold, the mansions all of pure gold and by the Savior prepared for you.—What love! infinite—no tongue can utter it. Amen. Here then, with Jesus, our blessed Savior, with Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles and all the blood-bought and blood-washed throng,

"While endless ages are onward rolling," we shall be loving and admiring God and the Lamb for that infinite love and boundless grace manifested in the plan and work of redemption. Glory to God in the highest. Amen and Amen.

"All hail the power of Jesus name,
Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all."

And now, brother pilgrims, let us gird the armor close, and fight the good fight of faith, that we may lay hold on eternal life. Soon, very soon, eternal victory shall be ours. Come, then, tired and tempted, desponding one; renew the conflict, cheer up, Jesus says I will never leave, I will never forsake thee. Believe it. Let his promises have a place in thy heart. Have faith in God; a crown, a glittering crown of glory awaits thee. Up then, and engage in the work of the Lord, watch, pray, live, and live so that thy life shall tell for truth and God. I have just returned from a five weeks tour. The cause is prospering. I have labored some in new fields, and have seen some turn to the Lord.

I have the World's Crisis before me.—My heart is cheered by the spirit manifested, and by the truth uttered. Thank the good Lord; I hope the spirit of truth will guide both the Editor, and all who write for its columns. Amen.

N. G. REED.

E. BOWDOINHAM, Jan. 21, 1854.

Readers of the Crisis—I thank the Lord for the reception of a dozen copies of the first No. of the Crisis. I do admire the spirit of the No. received: It seems to breathe the same heavenly influence that pervaded the Conference recently held in Lowell; and its columns breathe the same loving spirit, that emanated from the hearts of the dear brethren and sisters who took part in that excellent meeting. My prayer is, that all who may write for the Crisis will keep themselves in the love of God. Then we shall have a paper, the influence of which will be God-like, whose columns breathe the spirit that pervades the hearts of every disciple and humble follower of Jesus Christ. What is done for this world must be done quickly. I do believe, without a doubt, that, the Lord is speedily coming to judge the world. I hope and pray, that all the brethren and sisters that can write, will feel their responsibility to God and their fellows, and use their pen, as well as voice, in warning this world of the immediate coming of Jesus, and the infinite importance of a speedy preparation to meet him with joy when he comes. Your brother expecting the kingdom this year. D. SPARKS

FAIR HAVEN, Jan. 23, 1854.

Readers of the Crisis—I received a bundle of of papers entitled "The World's Crisis." They were welcome messengers; for I can say I was blessed even in the reception of them, and much more in perusing their columns. The spirit it manifests, and the principle it professes to adopt, meet my approbation fully, for contention and strife has already too long appeared to be the leading spirit in the great body of professed Advent believers, and if we can have a medium of communication that will step aside from strife and controversy, and confine itself to promulgating the truth for the benefit and edification of the Church, it shall have my sympathy; and I shall feel obligated to do all I can for its support in a pecuniary sense; and I do feel thankful to God that "The World's Crisis" is in circulation. It is needed to herald the truth, and scatter light in these last moments of time. O that God may direct every pen in truth, and by His spirit, that the Church may be blessed, and God glorified through its instrumentality. I did not intend to go to the Winsted camp-meeting for it was a time meeting, but still, for some reason, I could not stay away. Praise God forever that I went. I heard—I watched closely for some point of failure, but not one.—The scales began to fall from my eyes—truly the morning star had arisen—the Sun's rays were spreading their radiance over the horizon, the midnight darkness had fled before the light of God's holy word. The light is still clearer and brighter, the night is far spent, the day is at hand. I believe the midnight cry in mercy sounds, that this year we shall see the King in his beauty!! O blessed thought; in a few months more and we shall be delivered from the cares and trials of this life. O praise God, can it be true that we are so soon going home? How blessed the word home sounds. This world is not our home—we are pilgrims and strangers here; but sweet thought, almost through! What this year be immortalized—be made equal to the angels of heaven? Yes, Glory to God! I do believe it. Praise heaven, I feel it. O shall we be ready? the Lord help us. It is a great work, the Church will be presented to the father, holy, and without spot. May the Lord help us to lay ourselves a living sacrifice on his altar; and if we profess to believe, let the acts of our lives preach—then our words will have a powerful effect.

Your brother in Christ,

ARDIN HOTCHKISS.

BRIMFIELD, Jan. 24, 1854.

Readers of the Crisis—We have received the "World's Crisis," and we bless God for it. It is hailed with joy by the Pilgrim band here. It is just what we need in these last "perilous times." It is truly a time of trial and peril to the little flock; but blessed be God there is a church that is built upon the rock, and the gates of hell cannot prevail against it. It is a peculiar time in which we live; the winds are blowing from all quarters, and all who are not upon the rock will be moved. May God bless the Editor abundantly, and all that have to do with the paper. May God guide and direct them all; and may it ever be what it now is, like "a heavenly laden merchant vessel," to bear to the "scattered flock" the truth of the Lord's coming this year.

EDWARD W. GRIGGS.

Readers of the Crisis—I am glad that there are some in this world of unbelief, that dare to believe God. O if ever there was a time when the question was, who will believe God? it is now. Infidelity is stalking abroad in the land, with giant steps. O that we may not be of those that say, as did Israel of old, is the Lord among us or not? Surely the Lord is with us, and whom He delights in, He will bring into the goodly land. O let us not bring an evil report of the land, nor fear the tall sons of Anak. No, our Joshua will bring us in, glory be to God.

Your Sister, looking for our King this year,

L. P. HASTINGS.

LOWELL, Jan. 27, 1854.

Readers of the Crisis—I have just returned from the labor a week in Providence, R. I., and the Lord was with us indeed. Several indulged a hope in the pardoning love of Christ, with the expectation of soon seeing him, whom they now love. Some backsliders were reclaimed, and many of the impenitent, and members of other churches were deeply convicted of the truth that the Lord is coming this year. Several arose for prayers last evening. It was a deeply solemn meeting. Nothing but a previous appointment prevented my staying a few weeks. I think the Lord will do a great work in Providence. The brethren and sisters are whole-souled in the work. God grant that they may abound more and more.

They need preaching every Sabbath—I hope that some one will visit them as often as they can. Call on brother Hiram W. Chase, No. 35 Pine st., or Caleb Thompson, No 175 High st.

If ever we needed to pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into his harvest, it is now. Time will soon close, and there are but few laborers to arouse the Virgins and the world.

If the Lord open the way, I mean to go soon, to my former scene of labors at the West, and do what I can to awake up the slumbering people. Your's, expecting redemption this year, J. WESTON.

EAST CLARENDON, Jan. 22, '54.

Dear Bro. Merriam.—I do rejoice that the brethren have started a paper, that is to carry the glad tidings to the household of faith, of a coming Saviour in fifty-four. I do believe it is God's eternal truth, even the midnight cry. We, as advent believers, owe our identity to time. We unitedly took our lamps in forty-three and four, and went forth to meet the bridegroom; but we met a sad disappointment—the bridegroom tarried—we have slumbered and slept. At the time of this midnight darkness, some of the faithful watchmen upon their watch tower, discovered a ray of light from the eternal world. They commenced blowing the trumpet anew in Zion, giving it a certain sound. The virgins are trimming their lamps, and preparing themselves for the battle. May the glad tidings ring throughout the entire camp. May each soldier unfurl his banner to the breeze, and let his colours be seen. When we turn our eyes to the East, we see the storm-cloud rising, charged with the thunder bolts of God's wrath, soon to be poured out upon the nations of the earth. Their thrones begin to totter on their base, and will soon give place to the kingdom of God.

Cheer up, ye way-worn pilgrims, the old ship has caught a fresh gale from the eternal world; its heavenly breeze is wafting her towards the other shore. She will soon land in heaven's broad bay, and her crew be at rest. T. A. CHENEY.

Know Thyself.

It would be well for people, when they find themselves, in time of excitement and persecution, carried away by anger and resentment, if, instead of throwing the blame on the events and circumstances, they would take the blame home to themselves, and suspect the state of their souls. We have no right to reckon ourselves any better than we prove to be in times of trial. We are not to reckon our religious attainments according to what we feel in our meetings, nor according to the pleasure we find in reading good books; but according to the decision with which we choose the good and reject the evil in time of temptation, and according to the firmness with which we pass through reproach and persecution, and the perseverance with which we pursue the path of arduous duty. If we would know ourselves, we must ask ourselves what we are in our families when our children try us, and when our husbands and wives disappoint and grieve us; and not what we are when sitting under a sermon from a favorite preacher, or when reading a book of our favorite author. We must ask ourselves what we are when we meet with rebukes, as well as when we meet with commendations—when we are betrayed, insulted, and reviled, as well as when we are surrounded by a host of smiling friends. We must reckon ourselves to have just so much religion as we exhibit in the hour of trial. If we do right no longer than all things around us go on pleasantly, we have no right to reckon ourselves to have any religion at all. If we are good tempered only so long as no one injures or insults us; if we are calm and kind only so long as we are allowed to go on without persecution and disappointment, we have no right to reckon ourselves good tempered, or patient, or kind, or calm, at all.

The Twelve Prophetic Periods, Chronologically Considered, and Presented in accordance with History and Astronomy: With Sketches of the Chronology of the World, extending from the Creation to the End of Six Thousand Years. "O Fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the Prophets have spoken."—[Luke 24:25.

Advertisement. Should the eye of a Chronologer fall on the following humble pages, and he should deign to look them through; and (as I lay no claims to infallibility,) he should discover any mistake, or error of any kind, if he will kindly point it out to the editor of "The World's Crisis," he will confer a favor on the writer. The little work has been presented before "scientific men," but it is not impossible that some error may have escaped their notice.

Preface. To show that the end of all things is at hand, that the prophetic periods are all verging to one crisis, and that its distance from this cannot be but a few months in the future, is the great object of the following pages.

For this purpose it becomes necessary to take a view of these periods in a Chronological and Historical form, that they may be presented in accordance with both ancient and modern astronomical calculations.

The best writers base their position on inspiration and existing facts. We may be edified with the opinions of others; but as they disagree in opinion, our only alternative is to choose and select those whom, under existing circumstances, we believe to be the most candid, truthful, competent and careful, to present facts and their attending circumstances.

Believing that the truth is among us, and leaving it to others to determine which has presented it in the clearest and most convincing manner, the writer will quote from those, if within reach, who lived nearest the time the events occurred, who had the greatest opportunity to know and record facts, and from those who have had the greatest access to the best ancient Historians; and though I do not promise myself that I shall succeed better than others, I shall present these views in a different form; and by obedience to the Spirit that presses me to it, at least satisfy my own mind that I am not far out of the way, though I feel inadequate to the task which I have undertaken.

One great object is, to remove, if possible, some of the obscurity that has always attended the era of the birth of Christ, by adjusting the principal eras to each other, and by concurrence of remarkable events which synchronise with different years of these eras.

The Historians that I shall follow mainly, are Josephus, Raleigh's History of the World, in 4 volumes, Butler's Universal History, Gibbon's Fall of Rome, Prince's Chronological History of New England, Rollin's Ancient History, Goldsmith's History of Rome, and others; and with Bliss' Anal. Sacred Chronicles I hope to produce a collection of facts that will satisfy the minds of some that the prophecies are yet to be fulfilled, without altering the present translation of the Bible.

I expect to incur the charges of invading the territories of the knowing ones, and of disarranging Chronology; but as all Chronologers agree that the era of the birth of Christ was incorrectly dated, if, by adjusting those eras to each other, from the era of the Olympiads, the era of Rome, and that of Nabonassar, and carrying them all forward to the Era of Diocletian, we find no less years, and no more, than is given in the vulgar era, why not place the events of the infant years of Christ, in their proper place? for I see no reason why we may not as well be right as wrong.

The Seven Periods of Daniel's Vision Of 2300 days.—Dan. 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12th Chapters.

Much has been said and written on the above mentioned interesting vision of the Prophet Daniel, to the consideration of which my mind has for the last year been especially called; and without expressing my opinion of the views of others, I wish to give to the world the light which I feel assured I have received on this all-absorbing subject. Some have commenced this vision so early that these day-years have long since run out; some have made the "Seventy Weeks" a period altogether separate from them; by which they have no key to unlock this great vision, there being but one starting point for both revealed by inspiration.

I can discern but one way whereby these years, at each of the periods assigned them, can ever be fulfilled, viz: the seven weeks, the sixty-two weeks, and the one week, divided; in the midst of which the sacrifice and oblation should cease;—and the 1260, 1290, and 1335 days, to fill up the vision, raise the dead, and "cleanse the Sanctuary."

The Prophet Daniel, when he saw this vision, was personally in the Palace, at Shushan; but his mind was borne away in the visions of God to the banks of the River Ulai, where "he saw a ram with two horns, and the two horns were high; but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last."—Dan. 8:3. Now, as the two horns were the Kings of Media and Persia, and as Media was known to be superior to Persia at the conquest of Babylon, it follows, that the vision commenced at a time when the Persian Kingdom had superseded the Median, and was in its full splendor; for he says not that he saw the horn when they were equal even, but when that which came up last, had become "higher" than the former.

Says the Angel, "Seventy Weeks are determined," ('cut off from the 2300 days," says Professor Whiting; "Adv Shield,") "to make an end of sin-offering, to make atonement for iniquity, to bring in everlasting righteousness, to anoint the Most Holy One, and Seal the Prophetic Vision,"—Dan 9:24.

I think it must be evident to all, that the explanation of the evening and the morning, was here commenced, by the Angel, and that it was continued to the end of the Book of Daniel, who affirmed that it should be to "the end," and that "the end" should be "at the time appointed," which appointment must be this vision.

Now, as this prophecy is voluntarily chronological, it involves the special honor of God to fulfil it; and I cannot so trifle with the Word of God, as to express an opinion derogatory to its sacred records; and as there is but one right way for anything, we may be very sure that that way is best, if we can but find it. Says the Angel, "Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the Commandment to restore, and build Jerusalem, unto Messiah, the Prince, shall be Seven Weeks and three-score and two Weeks; the Street shall be built, and the Wall, even in troublous time; and after three-score and two Weeks, shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself;"

"And He shall make a firm Covenant with many, for one Week; and in a part of the Week, he shall cause the sacrifice and offering to cease,"—Prof. Whiting's translation, (Adv. Shield.) The Commandment to build Jerusalem is here fixed by inspiration, as the commencing point of this vision; but as there were four decrees to that effect, many have caught upon one, and another, and another, till all had gone by; but one Cyrus, in his first year, issued one; Darius Hystaspes, in his second year, another; and Artaxerxes, in his seventh, another; and as the 2300 years, if commenced from either of the foregoing, have all run out, and proved those starting points wrong by the extension of the vision, it follows that we must look for another and later decree, which we find given in the 20th year of Artaxerxes, which was the last ever issued from thence, and which, consequently, must be the only decree that can fulfil the words of the Heavenly Messenger.

For the first Period, viz, the seven Weeks, we read, "the Street shall be built again, and the walls, even in troublous times."

Here the building of the walls being mentioned particularly by the Angel, and this being the particular work that Nehemiah accomplished, and in such perilous times, too, that of every man who labored on the walls, it is said, "With one of his hands he wrought in the work, and with the other hand he held a weapon,"—Neh. 4:17. And it likewise being a time when the Persian Kingdom was in its glory, it appears forcibly clear that the 20th year of Artaxerxes was the true epoch for the commencement of this vision; and that Nehemiah's Administration, as Governor of Judea, began here, and continued forty-nine years, to the end of the first Period, B. C. 398-7.

The next thing to settle is, which year before Christ was the 20th of Artaxerxes? Petavius, Rollin, Usher and others, date this vision, that is, the Seventy Weeks, from the 20th of Artaxerxes, and believe it to have been B. C. 454; but as I shall have opportunity to speak of this more fully hereafter; I will only say here, that one of my Bibles dates B. C. 414, and the other 446, B. C., which latter year I think commenced in the course of the 20th year of Artaxerxes, as I hope to be able to show by presenting a Chronological table of the Persian Kings, adjusted to the Era of Rome, the Era of Nabonassar, and that of the Olympiads.

The Saviour said, when he began to preach, "The time is fulfilled," (the sixty-nine Weeks are completed). "The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor. He hath sent me to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised. "To preach the acceptable year of the Lord."

As there must be time enough to fulfil the prophecies of God, I do fully believe that the 20th year of Artaxerxes was 446 full years before the birth of Christ; and that the decree was issued in the first Jewish month, Neh. 2:1, and that the 483 full years, or sixty-nine weeks, were completed when he was 37 years old; 446 added to 37 make 483, at which time he was baptized, in the spring of A. D. 38. This period I cannot find fulfilled in any other way, consistent with the other periods of the vision; and am compelled to place the baptism of Christ in the first Jewish month of A. D. 38; but as the vulgar era was inaccurately dated, I shall present a table of the Roman Emperors, for near three centuries after Christ, the number of years that each reigned, and the authority I have for the number of years reckoned to each. At the baptism of Christ the most Holy One was anointed, and the second period fulfilled in A. D. 38, when he was 37 years of age.

The Saviour went about doing good, healing the sick, preaching the gospel, and even raising the dead, for more than three years; when having completed his ministry, he yielded up his life, a sacrifice for a world of sinners, in, or near the first Jewish month, of A. D. 41. This comes into the midst of the week, and gives over 486 full Solar years, completed at the passover; when at his death the sacrifice and oblation ceased, the vision was sealed, and the third period fulfilled, A. D. 41, when he was 40 years old—446+40+1814=2300, which will be completed at the end of the Jewish years, A. D. 1844. In addition to the above views, it may be remarked that Augustus Cæsar in whose reign Christ was born, reigned 43 years, 11 months, and 17 days, after the battle of Actium, and died August 19th, year of Rome, 763 A. D. 18, and that Tiberius reigned alone, after his father's death, 22 years, 9 months and 5 days to May 24th, and died A. D. 41, and I believe that Jesus was born in the first Jewish month, of the 27th year of Augustus, (after the battle of Actium;) and that he was 17 years, 4 months and 25 days old, at Augustus' death; and in the spring of the 15th year of Tiberius, when John began to preach, he was 32 years old, that John preached five years, to the spring of Tiberius' 20th year, and baptized him at the age of 37 years; that after Jesus had preached three years, and from March to the passover, he sealed the vision with his life, at the age of a little over 40 years, in the first Jewish month of A. D. 41.

Now in order to establish the above position, it will be necessary to show that facts exist, in accordance with these views; that Herod, and Pontius Pilate, and Annias, and Caiaphas, and Tiberius, were all living, and in office, at the time of the crucifixion; for all Historians believe that the Savior suffered in the reign of Tiberius; but Cornelius Tacitus affirms it to be so. (History of the World.) We know, by the 2d chapter of Matthew, that Jesus was born "King of the Jews." Josephus mention the cruelty of Herod, even in his last illness, toward some Jews that had thrown down "a golden eagle," which he had placed over the portico of the temple.

Herod was so furious as soon as he heard of it, that he deposed Mathias the High priest, and ordered that 40 of them, should be burned alive; and that night, says Josephus, there was an eclipse of the moon; which according to modern astronomical calculations happened the 13th of March, in the year of Rome 750. Josephus likewise mentions Herod's death, not long after; and the division of his kingdom, between his sons; of which Herod Antipas held Gallilee; Philip, Iturea, and Trachonitis and Archelius, Judea.

Josephus says: "Philip reigned over his part of the kingdom 37 years, and died in the 20th year of the reign of Tiberius; and as the Saviour was born before Philip obtained his tetrarchy, it proves beyond all dispute, that Jesus was born more than thirty-seven years before that event, and that Tiberius' 20th year must be A. D. 38.

It is now my perilous task to adjust some of the principal eras to each other, and if possible, find the true year of the birth of Christ, and the distance from that, to the present time. Raleigh says, "Romulus built Rome in the first year of the seventh Olympiad, B. C. 776, 25 years before the building of Rome;" and Cato says, "Rome was built at an era that corresponds with B. C. 751. The era of Nabonassar has not been so much in use as those of Greece, and Rome, but all historians agree that it began Feb. 19th B C. 747, at noon, and in its history gives a catalogue of the Babylonian and Persian kings, and the number of years, months, and days, that each king personally reigned, and is a year later than that of Rome, and 29 years later than that of the Olympiad.

With this adjustment, it will be easy to discover any mistakes that may be made in the following pages.

There are several interesting and valuable synchronisms mentioned by Mr. Bliss in his Anal. Sac. Chronology, to which this will adjust; and also every eclipse that I find there, or elsewhere, that is sustained by any proof, or the name of any astronomer. Gibbon says there was a tradition that the crucifixion was in A. D., 29. "This date," he says, "seems as probable as the vulgar era at least, which is placed (I know not from what conjectures,) four years later, vol. 1st, page 252, and it is on this account that I wish to fix the era of his birth, where it happened, and let the events that transpired in his early years be placed at the time they occurred.

In Luke 2d, we read the decree of Augustus that all the world should be taxed, was made "when Cyrenius was governor of Syria." I cannot find that Cyrenius was president of Syria, till about A. D. 1. Josephus says he was sent then to seize Archelaus' money; but I find no account of him in Josephus till that time.

Sir Walter Raleigh says Quintilius Varus was president of Syria at the time of the birth of Christ; and Josephus mentions Quintilius Varus as president of Syria, at the time of Antipater's trial; and it appears evident that there is either a wrong translation, or a mistake of the transcriber; and Quintilius and Quirinus being somewhat alike, might be the cause of the mistake, as it is evident there is one somewhere.

Cato says Rome was built in the year of the world 3253, that is B. C. 751, and he is followed by Talent, Swan, Rollin, and Helvicus, and here I shall place the birth of Christ; and as Thomas says the Roman year began, March 25th, till the style was altered, A. D. 1752, and as the Jewish year began near that time, I shall, to prevent mistake, invariably commence both the Jewish and Roman year, March 25th.

He is a powerful man who governs his passions, and he is rich who is content.—To refrain from doing what is wrong is impossible, while we are neglecting to do what is right.

"The Day of the Lord Cometh."

When the Son of God had about closed His mission upon earth, he retired from the city He so much loved, and sat down upon the mount of Olives, in sight of the spot made doubly dear to Him by being the birth place of so many holy men of God, of whom the world was not worthy. Many mighty miracles had been wrought there—its very dust made hallowed by Angel-feet. But now He had left their house desolate, because they had rejected Him their promised Mesiah, and knew not the time of their visitation. Though He had oft wept over them, and would have folded them in His arms of compassion, yet they spurned all His offered mercy, and even then were thirsting for His blood. Jesus said unto His disciples, "Verily I say unto you, there shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." Then they came unto Him privately saying, "Tell us when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world? The Saviour answered these questions—told them about the destruction of Jerusalem, and then of the signs of His second coming in glory. He charged us, saying, "Take heed that no man deceive you, for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many; ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars, see that ye be not troubled, for the end is not yet;" and thus He goes on giving them instruction of what shall come to pass, and says, "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the Prophet, stand in the holy place, whoso readeth let him understand." Now when we see a power desolating the Church of God for 1260 years, putting to death more than 50,000,000 of the saints, we may understand what abomination our Saviour means.—Again Daniel says, "The wise shall understand," and praise God we believe they will, and light is now shining upon the word of God, and the prophecies are being understood. And the children of God may "lift up their heads and rejoice that the day of their redemption is at hand." Most surely, the day of God's preparation has come, when Nahum's chariots justle one against another in the broad ways, and run like the lightning. The munition is being kept—the way watched—their power mightily fortified. The shield of the mighty men are made red, and truly we are > "Living in an age on ages telling,

> To be living is sublime."

The last great conflict is to be fought with the prince of darkness, and he is filled with wrath, knowing his time is short, and hence the contest must be a most awful struggle. Too long has he usurped authority over the children of men to be subdued without a bloody scene. But the Mighty Conqueror, the Lord Jesus Christ, will shortly come and destroy Satan under His feet; and the ultimatum will be the overthrow of all earthly Monarchies, and Christ will set up his everlasting Kingdom under the whole heaven.

We cannot be mistaken, that the day of the Lord is at hand, and hasteth greatly. Paul says, "But ye brethren are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." Thousands who are anticipating salvation, will be drawn into the whirlpool of deception—the conflict of nations,—and will not be able to stand in the time of trouble. His coming is to be sudden, like the lightning, when He "cometh out of His place to punish the inhabitants of earth for their iniquity." "The Lord shall roar from on high, and utter His voice from His holy habitation. He shall give a shout, as they that tread the grapes against all the inhabitants of the earth.—A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth, for the Lord hath a controversy with all nations, He will plead with all flesh, He will give them that are wicked to the sword," saith the Lord, "and the slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of heaven to the other." Such a scene as this must soon be witnessed. The strife has already commenced, and will not end until the wicked are cut off from the land. There shall "nothing hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord."—And how solemn the thought, that we are standing within a short space of that awful day! when the secrets of all hearts will be made known. "Cleanse thou me from secret faults," and give me a hiding place when the storm of vengeance falls. But alas! for the thoughtless multitude who are dreaming of better days, of a happy millenium, that day will most surely come [illegible] take all such as a snare. The Saviour has no where taught, nor any of His Apostles, or [illegible] would be saved, but that "many would seek and would not be able." Again, He says "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the coming of the Son of Man." All that did not know the flood was coming perished, and those that believed, it was counted unto them for righteousness, and they escaped the deluge.

Now all things will pass on, and seem to the wicked to continue as they were. The different churches may be assembled, listening to the cry of peace and safety, and not of the nearness of a judgment day—of the glorious new heaven and a new earth—of the resurrection from the dead; and anon, the rumblings of his chariot wheels may be heard, and the Judge of quick and dead is here, [illegible]; the righteous caught away to meet the Lord in the air, and the wicked given to the burning flame! Every sign and landmark spoken of by our Saviour and Apostles has been witnessed, and we have passed the last one; and now the very heavens gather blackness. The political heavens also are foreshadowing some awful woe, and impending evil upon the inhabitants of earth. The three unclean spirits are busy gathering the kings of the earth, and the whole world to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. The angel's cry is being sounded, "Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come"—the virgins are awaking—the faithful servant is giving the household "meat in due season," and the evil servant saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming." O that we might be wise, and secure eternal life without delay. Our days are numbered, and how swiftly they fly away! The last one will soon come! Now is the wine-cup being given to all nations, and God says they must certainly drink and be mad. Evil is going from nation to nation—a great whirlwind being raised up, which will fan all the world in one universal blaze of war and commotion. The awful crisis is coming—quickly coming! O that the wicked would turn from his evil way and live. "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?" The moments are precious, and time flies. Soon the last child will be sealed, and the four angels let go their hold upon the winds, and the awful conflict of all nations will then commence, and behold a world in ruin lies!

> "Fly, fly on wings of morning,
> Ye who the truth can tell,
> And sound the awful warning
> To rescue souls from hell."

There Will be no Night There.

No night, with its gloomy darkness and fearful raging tempest. How it howls about our casement and tears in fury among the leafless branches. The thunder utters its fearful anger, and the ghastly lightning glares vividly about us. But these storms will sweep over the soul. All will be serene and pure; as the [illegible] bursting in beauty over the tranquil lake; as the midnight sky gazing silently and solemnly upon the repose of nature, when the wind has hushed its breath and the little stars hold converse in gentle whispers.

No night there! with its long and tedious hours of anxious care, of [illegible] and pain.

No night there! with its unconscious stupor; with its forgetfulness of the past and unconcern for the future; with its dreams of terror, and sudden alarm. The soul will be all awake there. We shall know as we are known; know the depths of that love that saved us, the immensity of that power which redeemed us.

No night there! and therefore no darkness; [illegible] His banner over us will be love.

He will wipe away all tears. [illegible] long dark night of [illegible] and the day of [illegible] from age to age, [illegible] and splendor.

THE TWELVE PROPHETIC PERIODS, Chronologically Considered, and Presented in accordance with History and Astronomy: With Sketches of the Chronology of the World, extending from the Creation to the End of Six Thousand Years. "O Fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the Prophets have spoken."—[Luke 24 : 25.

ADVERTISEMENT. Should the eye of a Chronologer fall on the following humble pages, and he should deign to look them through; and (as I lay no claims to infallibility,) he should discover any mistake, or error of any kind, if he will kindly point it out to the editor of "The World's Crisis," he will confer a favor on the writer. The little work has been presented before "scientific men," but it is not impossible that some error may have escaped their notice.

PREFACE. To show that the end of all things is at hand, that the prophetic periods are all verging to one crisis, and that its distance from this cannot be but a few months in the future, is the great object of the following pages.

For this purpose it becomes necessary to take a view of these periods in a Chronological and Historical form, that they may be presented in accordance with both ancient and modern astronomical calculations.

The best writers base their position on inspiration and existing facts. We may be edified with the opinions of others; but as they disagree in opinion, our only alternative is to choose and select those whom, under existing circumstances, we believe to be the most candid, truthful, competent and careful, to present facts and their attending circumstances.

Believing that the truth is among us, and leaving it to others to determine which has presented it in the clearest and most convincing manner, the writer will quote from those, if within reach, who lived nearest the time the events occurred, who had the greatest opportunity to know and record facts, and from those who have had the greatest access to the best ancient Historians; and though I do not promise myself that I shall succeed better than others, I shall present these views in a different form; and by obedience to the Spirit that presses me to it, at least satisfy my own mind that I am not far out of the way, though I feel inadequate to the task which I have undertaken.

One great object is, to remove, if possible, some of the obscurity that has always attended the era of the birth of Christ, by adjusting the principal eras to each other, and by concurrence of remarkable events which synchronise with different years of these eras.

The Historians that I shall follow mainly, are Josephus, Raleigh's History of the World, in 4 volumes, Butler's Universal History, Gibbon's Fall of Rome, Prince's Chronological History of New England, Rollin's Ancient History, Goldsmith's History of Rome, and others; and with Bliss' Anal. Sacred Chronicles I hope to produce a collection of facts that will satisfy the minds of some that the prohecies are yet to be fulfilled, without altering the present translation of the Bible.

I expect to incur the charges of invading the territories of the knowing ones, and of disarranging Chronology; but as all Chronologers agree that the era of the birth of Christ was incorrectly dated, if, by adjusting those eras to each other, from the era of the Olympiads, the era of Rome, and that of Nabonassar, and carrying them all forward to the Era of Diocletian, we find no less years, and no more, than is given in the vulgar era, why not place the events of the infant years of Christ, in their proper place? for I see no reason why we may not as well be right as wrong.

The Seven Periods Of Daniel's Vision Of 2300 days,—Dan. 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12th Chapters.

Much has been said and written on the above mentioned interesting vision of the Prophet Daniel, to the consideration of which my mind has for the last year been especially called; and without expressing my opinion of the views of others, I wish to give to the world the light which I feel assured I have received on this all-absorbing subject. Some have commenced this vision so early that these day-years have long since run out; some have made the "Seventy Weeks" a period altogether separate from them; by which they have no key to unlock this great vision, there being but one starting point for both revealed by inspiration.

I can discern but one way whereby these years, at each of the periods assigned them, can ever be fulfilled, viz: the seven weeks, the sixty-two weeks, and the one week, divided; in the midst of which the sacrifice and oblation should cease;—and the 1260, 1290, and 1335 days, to fill up the vision, raise the dead, and "cleanse the Sanctuary."

The Prophet Daniel, when he saw this vision, was personally in the Palace, at Shushan; but his mind was borne away in the visions of God to the banks of the River Ulai, where "he saw a ram with two horns, and the two horns were high; but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last,"—Dan. 8 : 3. Now, as the two horns were the Kings of Media and Persia, and as Media was known to be superior to Persia at the conquest of Babylon, it follows, that the vision commenced at a time when the Persian Kingdom had superseded the Median, and was in its full splendor; for he says not that he saw the horn when they were equal even, but when that which came up last, had become "higher" than the former.

Says the Angel, "Seventy Weeks are determined," ('cut off from the 2300 days," says Professor Whiting; "Adv Shield,") "to make an end of sin-offering, to make atonement for iniquity, to bring in everlasting righteousness, to anoint the Most Holy One, and Seal the Prophetic Vision,"—Dan 9 : 24.

I think it must be evident to all, that the explanation of the evening and the morning, was here commenced, by the Angel, and that it was continued to the end of the Book of Daniel, who affirmed that it should be to "the end," and that "the end" should be "at the time appointed," which appointment must be this vision.

Now, as this prophecy is voluntarily chronological, it involves the special honor of God to fulfil it; and I cannot so trifle with the Word of God, as to express an opinion derogatory to its sacred records; and as there is but one right way for anything, we may be very sure that that way is best, if we can but find it. Says the Angel, "Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the Commandment to restore, and build Jerusalem, unto Messiah, the Prince, shall be Seven Weeks and three-score and two Weeks; the Street shall be built, and the Wall, even in troublous time; and after three-score and two Weeks, shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself;"

"And He shall make a firm Covenant with many, for one Week; and in a part of the Week, he shall cause the sacrifice and offering to cease,"—Prof. Whiting's translation, (Adv. Shield.) The Commandment to build Jerusalem is here fixed by inspiration, as the commencing point of this vision; but as there were four decrees to that effect, many have caught upon one, and another, and another, till all had gone by; but one Cyrus, in his first year, issued one; Darius Hystaspes, in his second year, another; and Artaxerxes, in his seventh, another; and as the 2300 years, if commenced from either of the foregoing, have all run out, and proved those starting points wrong by the extension of the vision, it follows that we must look for another and later decree, which we find given in the 20th year of Artaxerxes, which was the last ever issued from thence, and which, consequently, must be the only decree that can fulfil the words of the Heavenly Messenger.

For the first Period, viz, the seven Weeks, we read, "the Street shall be built again, and the walls, even in troublous times."

Here the building of the walls being mentioned particularly by the Angel, and this being the particular work that Nehemiah accomplished, and in such perilous times, too, that of every man who labored on the walls, it is said, "With one of his hands he wrought in the work, and with the other hand he held a weapon,"—Neh. 4 : 17. And it likewise being a time when the Persian Kingdom was in its glory, it appears forcibly clear that the 20th year of Artaxerxes was the true epoch for the commencement of this vision; and that Nehemiah's Administration, as Governor of Judea, began here, and continued forty-nine years, to the end of the first Period, B. C. 398–7.

The next thing to settle is, which year before Christ was the 20th of Artaxerxes? Petavius, Rollin, Usher and others, date this vision, that is, the Seventy Weeks, from the 20th of Artaxerxes, and believe it to have been B. C. 454; but as I shall have opportunity to speak of this more fully hereafter; I will only say here, that one of my Bibles dates B. C. 414, and the other 446, B. C., which latter year I think commenced in the course of the 20th year of Artaxerxes, as I hope to be able to show by presenting a Chronological table of the Persian Kings, adjusted to the Era of Rome, the Era of Nabonassar, and that of the Olympiads.

The Saviour said, when he began to preach, "The time is fulfilled," (the sixty-nine Weeks are completed). "The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor. He hath sent me to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised. "To preach the acceptable year of the Lord."

As there must be time enough to fulfil the prophecies of God, I do fully believe that the 20th year of Artaxerxes was 446 full years before the birth of Christ; and that the decree was issued in the first Jewish month, Neh. 2 : 1, and that the 483 full years, or sixty-nine weeks, were completed when he was 37 years old; 446 added to 37 make 483, at which time he was baptized, in the spring of A. D. 38. This period I cannot find fulfilled in any other way, consistent with the other periods of the vision; and am compelled to place the baptism of Christ in the first Jewish month of A. D. 38; but as the vulgar era was inaccurately dated, I shall present a table of the Roman Emperors, for near three centuries after Christ, the number of years that each reigned, and the authority I have for the number of years reckoned to each. At the baptism of Christ the most Holy One was anointed, and the second period fulfilled in A. D. 38, when he was 37 years of age.

The Saviour went about doing good, healing the sick, preaching the gospel, and even raising the dead, for more than three years; when having completed his ministry, he yielded up his life, a sacrifice for a world of sinners, in, or near the first Jewish month, of A. D. 41. This comes into the midst of the week, and gives over 486 full Solar years, completed at the passover; when at his death the sacrifice and oblation ceased, the vision was sealed, and the third period fulfilled, A. D. 41, when he was 40 years old—446 + 40 + 1814 = 2300, which will be completed at the end of the Jewish years, A. D. 1844. In addition to the above views, it may be remarked that Augustus Cæsar in whose reign Christ was born, reigned 43 years, 11 months, and 17 days, after the battle of Actium, and died August 19th, year of Rome, 763 A. D. 18, and that Tiberius reigned alone, after his father's death, 22 years, 9 months and 5 days to May 24th, and died A. D. 41, and I believe that Jesus was born in the first Jewish month, of the 27th year of Augustus, (after the battle of Actium;) and that he was 17 years, 4 months and 25 days old, at Augustus' death; and in the spring of the 15th year of Tiberius, when John began to preach, he was 32 years old, that John preached five years, to the spring of Tiberius' 20th year, and baptized him at the age of 37 years; that after Jesus had preached three years, and from March to the passover, he sealed the vision with his life, at the age of a little over 40 years, in the first Jewish month of A. D. 41.

Now in order to establish the above position, it will be necessary to show that facts exist, in accordance with these views; that Herod, and Pontius Pilate, and Ananias, and Caiaphas, and Tiberius, were all living, and in office, at the time of the crucifixion; for all Historians believe that the Savior suffered in the reign of Tiberius; but Cornelius Tacitus affirms it to be so. (History of the World.) We know by the 2d chapter of Matthew, that Jesus was born "King of the Jews." Josephus mention the cruelty of Herod, even in his last illness, toward some Jews that had thrown down "a golden eagle," which he had placed over the portico of the temple.

Herod was so furious as soon as he heard of it, that he deposed Mathias the High priest, and ordered that 40 of them, should be burned alive; and that night, says Josephus, there was an eclipse of the moon; which according to modern astronomical calculations happened the 13th of March, in the year of Rome 750. Josephus likewise mentions Herod's death, not long after; and the division of his kingdom, between his sons; of which Herod Antipas held Gallilee; Philip, Iturea, and Trachonitis and Archelius, Judea.

Josephus says: "Philip reigned over his part of the kingdom 37 years, and died in the 20th year of the reign of Tiberius; and as the Saviour was born before Philip obtained his tetrarchy, it proves beyond all dispute that Jesus was born more than thirty-seven years before that event, and that Tiberius' 20th year must be A. D. 38.

It is now my perilous task to adjust some of the principal eras to each other, and if possible, find the true year of the birth of Christ, and the distance from that, to the present time. Raleigh says, "Romulus built Rome in the first year of the seventh Olympiad, B. C. 7 76, 25 years before the building of Rome;" and Cato says, "Rome was built at an era that corresponds with B.C. 751. The era of Nabonassar has not been so much in use as those of Greece, and [illegible], but all historians agree that it began Feb. 19th B C. 747, at noon, and in its history gives a catalogue of the Babylonian and Persian kings, and the number of years, months, and days, that each king personally reigned, and is a year later than that of Rome, and 29 years later than that of the Olympiad.

With this adjustment, it will be easy to discover any mistakes that may be made in the following pages.

There are several interesting and valuable synchronisms mentioned by Mr. Bliss in his Anal. Sac. Chronology, to which this will adjust; and also every eclipse that I find there, or elsewhere, that is sustained by any proof, or the name of any astronomer. Gibbon says there was a tradition that the crucifixion was in A.D., 29. "This date," he says, "seems as probable as the vulgar era at least, which is placed (I know not from what conjectures,) four years later, vol. 1st, page 252, and it is on this account that I wish to fix the era of his birth, where it happened, and let the events that transpired in his early years be placed at the time they occurred.

In Luke 2d, we read the decree of Augustus that all the world should be taxed, was made "when Cyrenius was governor of Syria." I cannot find that Cyrenius was president of Syria, till about A. D. 1. Josephus says he was sent then to seize Archelaus' money; but I find no account of him in Josephus till that time.

Sir Walter Raleigh says Quintilius Varus was president of Syria at the time of the birth of Christ; and Josephus mentions Quintilius Varus as president of Syria, at the time of Antipater's trial; and it appears evident that there is either a wrong translation, or a mistake of the transcriber; and Quintilius and Quirinus being somewhat alike, might be the cause of the mistake, as it is evident there is one somewhere.

Cato says Rome was built in the year of the world 3253, that is B. C. 751, and he is followed by Talent, Swan, Rollin, and Helvicus, and here I shall place the birth of Christ; and as Thomas says the Roman year began, March 25th, till the style was altered, A. D. 1752, and as the Jewish year began near that time, I shall, to prevent mistake, invariably commence both the Jewish and Roman year, March 25th.

He is a powerful man who governs his passions, and he is rich who is content.—To refrain from doing what is wrong is impossible, while we are neglecting to do what is right.

"The Day of the Lord Cometh."

When the Son of God had about closed His mission upon earth, he retired from the city He so much loved, and sat down upon the mount of Olives, in sight of the spot made doubly dear to Him by being the birth place of so many holy men of God, of whom the world was not worthy. Many mighty miracles had been wrought there—its very dust made hallowed by Angel-feet. But now He had left their house desolate, because they had rejected Him their promised Mesiah, and knew not the time of their visitation. Though He had oft wept over them, and would have folded them in His arms of compassion, yet they spurned all His offered mercy, and even then were thirsting for His blood. Jesus said unto His disciples, "Verily I say unto you, there shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." Then they came unto Him privately saying, "Tell us when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world? The Saviour answered these questions—told them about the destruction of Jerusalem, and then of the signs of His second coming in glory. He charged us, saying, "Take heed that no man deceive you, for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many; ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars, see that ye be not troubled, for the end is not yet;" and thus He goes on giving them instruction of what shall come to pass, and says, "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the Prophet, stand in the holy place, whoso readeth let him understand." Now when we see a power desolating the Church of God for 1260 years, putting to death more than 50,000,000 of the saints, we may understand what abomination our Saviour means.—Again Daniel says, "The wise shall understand," and praise God we believe they will, and light is now shining upon the word of God, and the prophecies are being understood. And the children of God may "lift up their heads and rejoice that the day of their redemption is at hand." Most surely, the day of God's preparation has come, when Nahum's chariots justle one against another in the broad ways, and run like the lightning. The munition is being kept—the way watched—their power mightily fortified. The shield of the mighty men are made red, and truly we are "Living in an age on ages telling,

To be living is sublime."

The last great conflict is to be fought with the prince of darkness, and he is filled with wrath, knowing his time is short, and hence the contest must be a most awful struggle. Too long has he usurped authority over the children of men to be subdued without a bloody scene. But the Mighty Conqueror, the Lord Jesus Christ, will shortly come and destroy Satan under His feet; and the ultimatum will be the overthrow of all earthly Monarchies, and Christ will set up his everlasting Kingdom under the whole heaven.

We cannot be mistaken, that the day of the Lord is at hand, and hasteth greatly. Paul says, "But ye brethren are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." Thousands who are anticipating salvation, will be drawn into the whirlpool of deception—the conflict of nations,—and will not be able to stand in the time of trouble. His coming is to be sudden, like the lightning, when He "cometh out of His place to punish the inhabitants of earth for their iniquity." "The Lord shall roar from on high, and utter His voice from His holy habitation. He shall give a shout, as they that tread the grapes against all the inhabitants of the earth.—A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth, for the Lord hath a controversy with all nations, He will plead with all flesh, He will give them that are wicked to the sword," saith the Lord, "and the slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of heaven to the other." Such a scene as this must soon be witnessed. The strife has already commenced, and will not end until the wicked are cut off from the land. There shall "nothing hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord."—And how solemn the thought, that we are standing within a short space of that awful day! when the secrets of all hearts will be made known. "Cleanse thou me from secrets faults," and give me a hiding place when the storm of vengeance falls. But alas! for the thoughtless multitude who are dreaming of better days, of a happy millenium, that day will most surely overtake all such as a snare. The Saviour has no where taught such a doctrine, or any of His Apostles, or that many would be saved, but that "many would seek and would not be able." Again, He says, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the coming of the Son of Man." All that did not know the flood was coming perished, and those that believed, it was counted unto them for righteousness, and they escaped the deluge.

Now all things will pass on, and seem to the wicked to continue as they were. The different churches may be assembled, listening to the cry of peace and safety, and not of the nearness of a judgment day—of the glorious new heaven and a new earth—of the resurrection from the dead; and anon, the rumblings of his chariot-wheels may be heard, and the Judge of quick and dead is here, and mercy gone; the righteous caught away to meet the Lord in the air, and the wicked given to the burning flame! Every sign and landmark spoken of by our Saviour and Apostles has been witnessed, and we have passed the last one; and now the very heavens gather blackness. The political heavens also are foreshadowing some awful woe, and impending evil upon the inhabitants of earth. The three unclean spirits are busy gathering the kings of the earth, and the whole world to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. The angel's cry is being sounded, "Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come"—the virgins are awaking—the faithful servant is giving the household "meat in due season," and the evil servant saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming." O that we might be wise, and secure eternal life without delay. Our days are numbered, and how swiftly they fly away! The last one will soon come! Now is the wine-cup being given to all nations, and God says they must certainly drink and be mad. Evil is going from nation to nation—a great whirlwind being raised up, which will fan all the world in one universal blaze of war and commotion. The awful crisis is coming—quickly coming! O that the wicked would turn from his evil way and live. "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?" The moments are precious, and time flies. Soon the last child will be sealed, and the four angels let go their hold upon the winds, and the awful conflict of all nations will then commence, and behold a world in ruin lies!

"Fly, fly on wings of morning,
Ye who the truth can tell,
And sound the awful warning
To rescue souls from hell."

Landaff, N. H., Feb. 8, 1854.

There Will be no Night There.

No night, with its gloomy darkness and fearful raging tempest. How it howls about our casement and tears in fury among the leafless branches. The thunder mutters its fearful anger, and the ghastly lightning glares vividly about us. But there no storms will sweep over the soul. All will be serene and pure; as the morning sun bursting in beauty over the tranquil lake; as the midnight sky gazing silently and solemnly upon the repose of nature, when the wind has hushed its breath and the little stars hold converse in gentle whispers.

No night there! with its long and tedious hours of anxious care, of restlessness and pain.

No night there! with its unconscious stupor; with its forgetfulness of the past and unconcern for the future; with its dreams of terror, and sudden alarm. The soul will be all awake there. We shall know as we are known; know the depths of that love that saved us; the immensity of that power which redeemed us.

No night there! and therefore no darkness; no darkness and therefore no [illegible]. His banner over us will be love.

He will wipe away all tears. No more sorrowing scenes to be witnessed,—for the long dark night of [illegible] is passed forever, and the day of [illegible] from age to age, in all its [illegible] and splendor.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, FEBRUARY 16, 1854.

BROTHER MERRIAM:—I would like to see your views in the Crisis upon the first verse of the 7th chapter of Revelation.

M. M. E.

"And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree.

"And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea,

"Saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads."—Vs. 1–3.

The rushing of a mighty wind prostrating the works of nature, sweeping every thing in its course, and carrying havoc and devastation all around, is an apt emblem of the desolating fury of the sword.—When men rush forth to war, overturning established governments and existing civil institutions, spreading terror, desolation, and ruin all around, their work is so nearly allied to that of a terrific whirlwind, that the comparison between the two is frequently presented in the Bible. Says Daniel,

"I saw in my vision by night, and behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea.

"And four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another." (Dan. 7: 2, 3.)

This imagery, it will be admitted, symbolizes the establishment and subsequent overthrow of the four universal monarchies of the world. The four great beasts stand for symbols of the four kingdoms. The instrumentality employed by the hand of Providence to accomplish those mighty events was military force. By the power of the sword one government was overturned and another organized upon its ruins. The four winds therefore in this prophecy represent commotions in the political world. The waters of the great sea represent the masses of people or the nations of the earth; the action of the four winds on the waters, agitating them with violence, aptly represents the warlike elements that throw the masses of men into violent commotion; the nations dashing like mighty billows. And as four great beasts came up in consequence of the commotions, so the four great monarchies of earth have successively risen and fallen in the drama of the world's history.

To illustrate farther the use of the term "four winds," refer to Jer. 49: 36, 37:

"And upon Elam will I bring the four winds from the four quarters of heaven, and will scatter them toward all those winds; and there shall be no nation whither the outcasts of Elam shall not come.

"For I will cause Elam to be dismayed before their enemies, and before them that seek their life: and I will bring evil upon them, even my fierce anger, saith the Lord; and I will send the sword after them, till I have consumed them."

This is a demonstration that the scriptural use of this symbol justifies the application of it to the events of war; for the four winds of heaven were to be brought upon Elam, or Persia till they were scattered, or carried away captive among all nations, and their own government broken down and destroyed.

Again, Zech. 7: 14: "But I scattered them with a whirlwind among all the nations whom they knew not." The four winds of heaven, centering at a given point, would naturally produce a whirlwind; and this whirlwind of war scattered the nation of the Jews as the four winds scattered the Persians. If then, agreeably to Bible usage, this symbol has reference to war, we have no authority to change its signification unless the context demands it.

We understand, therefore, that the "four winds," spoken of in Rev. 7: 1, symbolize war; and if so, it is perfectly easy to decide what is intended by the four Angels; for we know what is symbolized by an Angel when we ascertain what work is accomplished by that Angel. If then the work of these four Angels is to restrain the fury of war, and they have the power to hurt the earth by war, there can be no question that the agencies symbolized by the Angels are those powers that control the elements of war, or in other words the powers in whom are vested the authority to declare war, or to treat for peace, viz: the civil governments.

It is not a little remarkable that four powers, or governments, have for a number of years, been combined together for this very purpose, viz: "to keep the peace of the world." This was the great object of the Holy Alliance formed in 1815.—Napoleon Bonaparte was going on conquering the nations of the earth, and [illegible] intended to have formed a consolidated Empire that would have ruled the world. The kingdoms were reeling and falling beneath the power of the French Emperor, but at length the four great sovereigns of Europe were called together for the purpose of defeating his designs, and preserving the balance of power in Europe, and maintaining the peace of the world.

Since that time the Advent doctrine, beginning at the East, has been going through the world and preparing a people to God's praise; for those who "have this hope in them purify themselves even as He (Christ) is pure."

The sealing of the servants is accomplished by the truth; for it is the truth that sanctifies and makes us free.

The proclamation of the coming of Christ about A. D. 1843 might have commenced the work of the sealing Angel, but that work could not be consummated—the finishing stroke could not be given to one's Christian character till the last truth is developed; for when the last doctrine is promulgated, the last Gospel light elicited from the oracles, if that be rejected, they hear not the voice of the shepherd, they reject the true light, and how can they be the sanctified, chosen ones, "that follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth"? I believe that that which places the seal of the living God on the heart, that which enstamps the impress of a Saviour's image on the moral being of the man, is the reception of the last message, or dispensational truth, presented to the Church in the Gospel age.—This truth we understand to be the mid night cry, and although we have no desire to prejudge the Virgins, or limit the time given for the reception or rejection of the truth, yet as sure as God's word is true, the midnight cry will split the ranks of the Advent host; and ultimately many, who once rejoiced in the blessed, glorious light of the Advent faith, and walked out on the truth identified with the Virgins, will be found wanting in vital, evangelical faith; and therefore, according to the parable, the servants (Virgins) cannot be sealed till the proclamation of that which actually heralds in the Bridegroom.

When the sealing Messenger commences His work, the four angels (powers) are in the act of holding the winds. This implies that force is requisite to restrain their violence. It is a somewhat striking fact, that all the efforts at negotiation in Europe, are made by what is termed "the four powers," and since the dissemination of what we term present truth, the four powers have been obliged to exert all their strength to curb the fury of the warlike spirit. Conference on Conference has been held, proposition after proposition has been submitted, and every possible exertion has been made by these governments, and all the arts of diplomacy have been exhausted to devise some method of pacificating the world. They have been holding the winds while the midnight cry has been sounding. When difficulties arose between the Sultan and the Autocrat the four powers endeavored to mediate, and thus preserve the equilibrum of Europe, and the peace of the world. When Omer Pacha's troops on the Danube were full of the fury of war, the four powers despatched a messenger to induce him to restrain the violence of his soldiers, and thus hold the winds of war. When the masses of the people at Constantinople became so belligerent that the government was in danger of being overturned by popular outbreaks, because the Sultan did not declare war, the four powers ordered steamers up the Dardanelles to protect the capital from the violence of Mohammedan subjects, and thus hold the winds of war. And now that war is declared, and hostilities commenced, still the effort continues on the part those four powers, represented by four Angels, to hold the winds. But such is the internal commotion of those elements, and the violence of their expansive force, that they cannot longer be restrained—they begin to rush and sweep in desolating fury over a portion of the earth.

But the question comes up, have the four winds been let loose to destroy the earth, showing that the servants of God are sealed and the work of grace completed? I think not from the fact that the Angels or powers are unitedly exerting their power to restrain the explosive agencies, and secondly because I understand the four winds to represent all the winds of heaven agreeably to the ideas of the ancients.—They had a particular name for each of the four winds. Notus, the south wind, Eurus, the east wind, Boreas, the north wind and Zephyrus the west wind. When, therefore, there is a universal rush of all the winds of heaven, or the spirit of war among the nations, I understand the four winds are let loose in desolating fury to destroy the governments of earth—to sweep away all human principalities and powers, thrones and dominions, that the Prince of peace may have the fifth universal kingdom under the whole heaven. This I understand to be the battle of Armageddon. The existing war, however, between Russia and Turkey is merely a preparatory step to bring on the final tempest of wrath, which in its hurricane fury will sweep the wide earth, overturning the governments, as the natural whirlwind in its resistless power overturns the mountain oaks, and desolates every thing in its course.

The present movement I believe to be the action of the three unclean spirits, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. This movement under the sixth vial prepares the way for the action of the seventh vial by drying up the river Euphrates (Mohammedan power,) and when the seventh vial is poured into the air (the seat of the winds,) the work of grace is finished; and a voice comes from the temple, saying, "It is done." Under this vial there is an "earthquake, such as never was since men were upon earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great." An earthquake is explained by Commentators to be a revolution; and doubtless when that earthquake comes it will be the outbursting of those explosive elements with which the political world is charged, or in other words, the movement of the revolutionary forces—that will break down all the governments of the habitable globe, and deluge the earth with a sea of blood.

I have thought as the Angel pours out his vial into the air, that it might perhaps have been more appropriate if the Greek word rendered, "earthquake," had been translated whirlwind. The word means simply a shaking, or commotion, which when applied to the earth would signify an earthquake, but when applied to the air would indicate a whirlwind or tornado. My impression is, that the outpouring of the seventh vial on the AIR, affects that locality in a symbolical sense—that the results are, figuratively speaking, atmosperic phenomena. The first effect mentioned is "voices," but as the word more appropriately signifies "roarings," and as that term would harmonize with the scenic representation of the passage, it seems to me it should have been thus rendered.—We then get the idea of the commotions in the political atmosphere, which are the precursors of the coming struggle, as the roaring of the wind precedes the tempest. This is an atmospheric phenomenon in the symbol. The next mentioned is "thunders," also atmospheric—the next "lightnings" also atmospheric, and in the 21st v. "hail" another atmospheric phenomenon. In keeping with these representations, it seems to me, peculiarly appropriate that the Greek word rendered "earthquake" should have been translated "whirlwind." This rendering however does not alter the significance of the symbol at all.

My idea therefore is, that when the four Angels let go their hold entirely, and the four winds rush impetuously over the earth, that they coming in contact, so to speak, produce that resistless whirlwind of God's anger against the guilty nations, which will desolate the world by "the sword that He will send among them"—that as the Mohammedan power goes down, the flood gates of war are opened to deluge the earth, which will be like the scourge that fell first on the house of God at Jerusalem, of which it is said, "And the end thereof shall be with a flood and unto the end of the war desolations are determined," or in other words, it will be the fulfilment of the events under the seventh Angel's vial. The roaring of the tempest will then be heard, accompanied with the thunders and lightnings of heaven's vindictive justice—the hail of destruction will fall upon the impenitent and incorrigible transgressor—the outburst of popular fury to destroy their oppressors, and wrench the sceptre from their grasp, the civil commotions in attempting to revolutionize the governments will be like a sweeping and horrible tempest to devastate the earth. It will be "the whirlwind of the Lord goeth forth with fury, a continuing whirlwind: it shall fall with pain upon the head of the wicked. The fierce anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have done it, and until he have performed the intents of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it." Jer. 30: 23, 24, or as represented in Jer. 25, where the Prophet speaking of the destruction of all nations with the sword, says: "A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth; for the Lord hath a controversy with the nations, he will plead with all flesh; he will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the Lord. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth. And the slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth: they shall not be lamented, neither gathered, nor buried; they shall be dung upon the ground." Jer. 25: 31–33.

Then will be fulfilled Haggai 2: 21, 22, "Speak to Zerubbabel, governor of Judah, saying, I will shake the heavens and the earth; And I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother." Says Paul this word "yet once more signifieth the removal of those things that are shaken;" i. e. the kingdoms of the world will be dashed in pieces, and they shall come down every man by the sword of his brother; and Zechariah says "And it shall come to pass in that day, that a great tumult from the Lord shall be among them; and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbor, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbor." Zech. 14: 13. These passages ssem to imply that civil war, and popular outbreaks will destroy the kingdoms by internal violence.

When the ten kings "hate the Harlot and shall make her desolate and naked and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire," then "great Babylon comes in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of His wrath." Then will the islands flee away, and the mountains (governments) will not be found; for the winds will carry them away and no place shall be found for them.

The premonitory throes of the mighty earthquake are already upheaving the political world; and the revolutionary forces under Kossuth, Mazzini, Gavazzi, &c., are arming for the final struggle. Flee to the ark, whoever is not at peace with God.—Live in conformity to the divine mind and will, and the Lord will spare you as a man spareth His own son that serveth him, and you may be counted among the jewels to shine in the kingdom of heaven in that great day—a special treasure to be preserved in the storehouse of the Lord, which cannot be devoured by those fires that will burn up the wicked "root and branch," as the stubble is consumed by devouring flame.

European Affairs.

We have reason to believe, from the latest arrivals, that the warlike spirit is stirring up all the elements of wrath in Europe. How amazingly christendom has been deceived by the siren song of peace and safety! Just at this time, when many have supposed we were on the eve of a millenial epoch, a time of universal peace among the nations,—just now when the pacific influence was thought to be gathering strength, and its balmy wings were supposed to be hovering over a world about to be reformed and regenerated,—just at the moment when men, as was believed, were beating their "swords into plow-shares, and their spears into pruning hooks," to see now a general outburst of the warlike spirit,—to see the continent of Europe upheaving by the anger of the nations, and those volcanic elements which were supposed to be quiet and powerless, bursting forth in fearful violence, to deluge the kingdoms as with a fiery flood of vengeance, must surprise the believers in a millenium of peaceful and prosperous governments.

Never, it is believed, was there such an excess of the belligerent principle,—never was there such a demonstration in the earth of a determination on the part of nations to stand on the basis of the sword, as there is at the present time. The preparations for war were never on so broad a scale, the world over, as at present. Look at the extensive armament of Russia. It is said by a Liverpool paper, that she has 40 line-of-battle ships. These vessels are of the largest class, and carry the heaviest ordinance that float in any waters. But on the land the preparations made by the Emperor Nicholas are almost unparalleled in modern times. The whole power of the Church is thrown into the scale to aid the Czar in defending the interests of the Greek religion. The work of recruiting is prosecuted with great vigour throughout that vast empire; and the papers state that all accounts concur in representing the preparation for war on the part of the Russians to be "enormous;" so that if anticipations prove correct, there may be some 800,000 or a million of soldiers to accomplish the work of drying up the river Euphrates at an early day in the coming season.

Look at Austria, in her distressed and insolvent state, exerting every nerve to sustain her military establishment, and maintain her ascendancy over Hungary and other disaffected provinces of the empire. It was said, not long since, that the railroad cars were prevented by the government from conveying passengers for a number of days; and the locomotives were employed in transporting munitions of war to Hungary, in order to be prepared for an insurrection of the Magyars.

Look at Turkey. Her pecuniary resources are put in requisition in every department of the empire, and troops are supplied with wonderful alacrity till the army on the Danube and in Asia is increased to some 300,000 men, with a prospect of having 600,000 in the spring.

Look at France. The Emperor Napoleon is making arrangements for a mighty army to be called out as soon as occasion requires. He is also fitting out his third naval armament; and the last news we received from France was, that telegraphic despatches were communicated to the various ports, requiring other vessels to be equipped for sea.

England also is active and energetic in her work of preparation for the coming struggle. She is now about to launch some ten or twelve vessels of war, mostly line-of-battle ships of the largest size, two of them carry, 120 guns each, one 100 guns, six 90 guns each. Thus in a few months their heaviest ships of the line will be doubled in number, and all prepared with the improvements in the enginery of war, and the mechanical inventions of modern science in the art of gunnery.

Whither have the principles of peace fled? Where, now, is the boasted fellowship of nations? Does not the present aspect of the world look much more like beating plow-shares into swords and pruning-hooks into spears than the reverse? O how long will men pervert the truths of God's word? How long will they turn darkness into light and bitter into sweet? How long will they transform the threatenings of God against the wicked into promises of heaven's blessings? The proclamation of Joel,—"Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up; beat your plow-shares into swords and your pruning-hooks into spears,"—has been made by both the powers in favor of absolute government, and those in favor of Republican institutions. Kossuth, Mazzini and Gavazzi, with their associates, have acted faithfully their part in this scene of the drama, and now we see the actual preparation for war being made; not only is the proclamation heralded, but the requisition is responded to by the governments of earth.

From Europe.

New York, Feb. 9. The steamship Pacific, from Liverpool, Wednesday, the 25th ult., arrived at 3 o'clock, this P. M.

The Turkish War.—No official reply is received from the Czar of Russia, relative to the Eastern question. There is no abatement in actual hostilities, and the preparations for war are continued, but no further battles are reported, either on the Danube or in Asia.

The allied fleets were last seen steering for Batoum, with a fair wind. The Russian fleet was also at sea.

The very latest despatch on the morning of the Pacific's sailing, says, on the authority of the London Times, "that the Czar has not proceeded to extreme measures, on learning of the entry of the allies into the Black Sea. He replies by a question, 'Are the fleets to observe strict neutrality, or take active part with Turkey.'"

The answer to the above is of little importance, as the Czar's final reply to the note of Vienna must ere now be on its way to the Western governments." The above, however, had a favorable influence on the Paris Bourse.

Military movements continue along the Danube, but no further battles reported.

The English people, seeing the imminence of war, appear to have made up their minds to the necessity, and quietly accept it.

A telegraphic despatch from Vienna states that it has transpired that the Czar's final reply, will be a contemptuous refusal of the Vienna note; also referring Turkey to Prince Gortschakoff for further particulars, asserting positively that Russia will not give up one jot of Prince Menschikoff's first demand.

Paris, Tuesday. The Constitutionel publishes the following expressions of the Czar:

"When the Emperor learnt the entrance of the allied fleet into the Black Sea, he displayed perfect calmness, and said to those about him, 'I expected the resolution taken by England and France, and am not unprepared for it. When battle is offered, Russia accepts. She can afford to mourn for the loss of a fleet, but not for the honor of the nation.'"

The Czar has instructed his ambassadors to demand whether by the entrance of the allied fleets into the Black Sea it is intended to take part with Turkey or simply to observe strict neutrality. If the former is the case, they are to demand their passports.

Berlin, Monday Eve. The Czar insists, as a preliminary condition of negotiations, that the neutrality of the allied fleet in the Black Sea shall be declared in a formal document.

Austria is said to have notified Russia of her fixed determination to maintain an armed neutrality, provided the Czar adheres to his engagement, that he aims at no territorial aggrandizement. If this pledge is broken, Austria would assume a hostile attitude towards Russia.

Ireland.—Another famine is threatened in Ireland. Provisions are enormously high, and still going upward. In some parts of Limerick the people are suffering deplorably from want of food.

London, Jan. 25.—The Times' Paris correspondent writes that the Emperor of Russia's reply, though not couched in very strong language, and demanding explanations, is of such a character as leaves but little hope of a change in the Emperor's mind. It is stated that the popular excitement at St. Petersburgh is indescribable, and the French government anticipates that an explosion of such a kind may take place as shall force the Emperor to make a formal declaration of war before even his plans are arranged. It is believed that 10,000 or 15,000 Russians have crossed the Danube.

Constantinople. Jan. 20. It is said that the answer of Russia on the declaration of neutrality has arrived. Russia refuses her assent, and demands that Denmark shall side with one of the parties.

The Affairs of the East.

Darker than ever looks the political horizon in the East. The Pacific's despatches contained speeches of the Czar, to which we give little credit. Men of might, whether princes or peasants, do not utter great and theatrical sentences in the heat and pressure of emergencies. But from the presence of facts in History we can draw unmistakable auguries. There is going the rounds of the French press, a paragraph, which unhappily we have not at hand to quote literally, purporting to be from the will of Peter the Great. That Napoleon of the Russians left it as his legacy to his successors, that Constantinople should be the goal of their ends and aims. The Bosphorus now, and the commerce of the world with the gold of India was theirs and their heirs forever. It is needless to say that that has been the inspiration of the Muscovite dynasty ever since, and is now being acted upon with the large and tenacious will of the present Emperor. It is the fashion of John Bull to underrate his adversaries. It has taken centuries of bloody battle-fields to convince him that one Englishman cannot beat three Frenchmen in fair fight. It will take another century to convince him that the empire of the physical and intellectual world is not the right divine of his little Island. But we, the children, see more truly than our fathers, and we know that the Russian is a foe to dread, and that protocol and diplomatize as we will, he is terribly in earnest.

The present position of affairs is this. The fleets are in the Black Sea steering where they can find a foe. The Russian Admiral has answered the note of the coalesced ministers at Stamboul, that he shall until orders from St. Petersburg, sail where he will, and none shall stop him. The sea of the Euxine is his and by right.—The army in the Principalities lies in its old position. The last battle was fought in an attempt of the Russian right wing to force the passage of the Danube on the Turkish left at Kalafat. The two armies are face to face. The Russian stretching from Servia to Bessarabia, its head-quarters at Bucharest, the Turkish on the opposite shore of the Danube. The lines extend nearly two hundred miles, a larger space than either can defend. The consequence must be a concentration of forces at some point between Widdin and Ismail (near the mouth of the Danube,) and an attempt to pass. It is not to be supposed that the Russians will commit the palpable military blunder of crossing in small divisions at distant points into a country strongly fortified and filled with hostile forces. It seems generally conceded that the Danube has been passed on the Russian left, near Ismail, but this is conjectured to be a feint preparatory to a movement of the centre upon Rustchuk. The attack at Citalé was evidently a ruse to concentrate the Turkish forces at one point and then to outflank them by a general movement either near the coast or at the centre. We may be, very likely are, mistaken as to the intention of these movements in a military point of view. This is mere conjecture, to which the reader is welcome at what it is worth. But as to the political significance, we think there can be no mistake. The Russian army is merely carrying out the orders which sent it across the Pruth. Their original destination was Constantinople, and if gunpowder and bayonet can carry them there they will go.

There is another significant fact in the intelligence. Denmark has been notified that it cannot be permitted to remain neutral. The immense alliance of the Northern powers which Russia has been riveting during twenty years is now to be tested.—In a general conflict of the first rate powers of Europe the lesser kingdoms must elect at their perils. Prussia tried a temporizing neutrality with Napoleon during the campaign of Austerlitz, and the result was that one day at Jena and Auerstadt laid the Prussian monarchy in the dust.—Denmark holds the keys of the Baltic and must be for or against the Russian movement. All this is ominous. EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FOUR must witness the extremes of conflict, unless the Autocrat is allowed to grasp his prey unmolested by interference. In spite of the temporizing of England and the doubtful politics of France we do not believe the latter. They are too deeply interested in the result to allow of doubt. India lost to Britain, France a third rate power in continental polities, would be the result, and neither the frank heroism of the Gaul nor the sturdy independence of the Anglo Saxon will readily yield to such depression in the scale of the nations.—[Mercury.

A Request.

The brethren and sisters in this place are desirous of having a series of meetings in order to spread the truth before the people once more before the Lord Jesus Christ shall come to judge the world in righteousness. We feel that, under God, good may be accomplished, and a few more souls sealed for the kingdom. We therefore urgently request bro. S. S Brewer and wife to come and labor with us a few days, as early as convenient. We have had but very little preaching amongst us since the Tent meeting in October, and meat in due season is needed. Come brethren in the ministry ;. come in the name of the Lord, all that can, and help us. Will bro. S. S. Brewer please respond. Address, David Sparks, East Bowdoinham, Me.

Price Reduced.

LONDON, Friday, Jan. 20, 1854.

The battle of Tshetale, which lasted for three days and ended with the complete victory of the Turks over the forces of Gen. Anrep, is, in many respects, of the utmost importance. From the time that the diplomatic intrigues of the Embassadors at Constantinople succeeded in prevailing upon the Porte to order Omer Pasha to remain on the defensive, and not only not to follow up his first success at Oltenitza, but even to recross the Danube, the Russians have constantly prepared themselves for a great blow which would afford to the Czar an opportunity of displaying his "maguanimity by accepting the proposals of the Four Powers." The naval victory at Sinope, and the successes in Asia were to be crowned by a great feat of arms in Europe. A triumph over the picked troops of Omer Pasha would have easily induced the Sultan to yield to the Czar, so much the more as Lord Radcliffe continued to bully the ministers at Constantinople, while the fleet remained for so long a time in a most treacherous attitude in the port of Constantinople.—The blow was to be struck on the Russians New Year's Day ; the Danube was to be crossed at its upper bend above Widdin and Kalefat, and the Turkish camp attacked on both sides, while the appearance of a Russian army in Servia might have led to an insurrection at least of some districts in the Principality. But Omer Pasha has defeated all those plans with a bold attack. The excitement at Constantinople and the riot of the Softas forced the Divan to give orders to carry on the war with energy. Omer Pasha being thus allowed to take the offensive, on the 6th of January marched from Kalefat to Tshetale, where Gen. Anrep was entrenching himself, in order to get a fortified tete de pont for crossing the Danube. The Turks stormed the entrenchments, carried them on the 7th, and on the 8th repelled the furious attacks of the Russians, who had got reenforcements from Krajova. The Russians themselves confess a loss of 1,000 men in killed, among them one general and several staff officers, and 4,000 wounded, among whom we see the commander of their troops in Lesser Wallachia, Gen. Anrep himself. Tactically this victory is very important. The Turkish army has now proved that even when unprotected by trenches it is superior in prowess to the Muscovites, and that it can carry trenches with the bayonet. The loss of two Russian generals and many superior officers is again an evidence that the Russian soldiers must have been unwilling to fight, and that the officers had themselves to advance in order to give courage to the rank and file. The moral impression of the victory must have been immense both on the Turks and Russians. But strategetically, the victory of Omer Pacha is of little importance ; he has defeated the schemes of the Russians, but he has not gained ground ; it is a defensive victory only. The Turks immediately destroyed the works of the Russians, but they did not follow them up to Krajova. The political results of the battle are much more important. The army of the Czar, which had occupied the Danubian Principalities by stealth, while the European diplomatists succeeded in prevailing upon the Divan not to oppose this flagrant breach of treaties, has until now always been defeated, whenever the Turks have chosen to attack it. The prestige of Russia and her influence on the Christian populations of Europe, has severely suffered by such a display of weakness. The Czar cannot consent to negotiate so long as this stain on the honor of the Russian arms is not blotted out by some signal victory, But if the settlement does not take place in a few days, it will be altogether impossible.—Parliament meets on the 31st inst., and the acts of the Ministry will not bear the light of publicity. Lord Radcliffe had instructions to make peace at any price up to the 12th of February, and the success of these negotiations alone can give Lord Aberdeen courage to face Parliament. He had nearly succeeded ; his persuasions and his threats had a baneful effect in Constantinople ; but the battle of Tshetale has come just in time to make it impossible for the Czar to give up the war.

The Russian bulletins on this battle are so shameless that even the Austrian Government has not officially published them. According to these reports the Turks were signally defeated for three days, and as the result of the slaughter, each army remained in its original position. Prince Gorchakoff is furious at his ill luck, and will once more try to dislodge the Turks from Kalefat and to cross the Danube in order to avenge these defeats and respond to the threatening attitude of the combined fleet. According to the news from Constantinople, Admiral Dundas left the Bosphorus on the 4th, together with a Turkish squadron, carrying 15,000 men and ammunition to Batun. The entrance of the fleet into the Black Sea is, therefore, more than a bravado. England and France are actually participating in hostile measures by protecting the Turkish fleet while it carries reinforcements to Asia. Probably the Emperor of Russia will take this protection for actual war. The withdrawal of the Embassadors from London and Paris is thus almost certain.

Though no official answer has yet been given by the Czar to the Vienna note as modified by the Divan, nor even to the French Circular announcing the entrance of the combined fleet into the Black Sea, nobody can doubt any longer that the answer will be a rejection of all the propositions. The Exchange feels it, and the funds accordingly go down. Even Lord Aberdeen begins to believe that war is inevitable ; his only hope is in the possibility of Austria's remaining neutral. But the Emperor of Austria is so much bound to the Czar, that neutrality is disagreeable to him, as soon as such a neutrality is no longer of any importance for Russia: On the other hand, the Emperor of France is not satisfied with the vague declaration of Austria, that she desires to remain neutral, but insists upon a clear definition of that neutrality, and the Austrian Government is in the greatest difficulty about the answer. The Emperor does not like to pledge himself to anything that might be construed as unfriendly to Russia, since he has the intention of openly going with the Czar as soon as the Czar shall require it. People here in England point to the desperate state of the Austrian finances as to a pledge of peace, but those who know anything of Austrian policy see in these very financial embarrassments an incitement to war. The position is so desperate, that bankruptcy cannot be avoided ; but if a state must declare that it cannot meet its obligations, it is less dishonorable to it during war, than in time of peace.—At such moments war becomes a pretext for bankruptcy.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.

The steamship Africa, from Liverpool, Jan. 28, arrived below at 7 o'clock this evening.

The Czar of Russia's final answer to the last note of the Western Powers was not expected to be given before the middle of February. His conduct is evasive. He pretends not to regard the entry of the allied fleets into the Black Sea as a declaration of war, but has appointed Count Orloff to visit the Courts of Vienna, Berlin, Paris and London to explain on what terms he really will treat. By all this he gains delay.

A quiet tone is observable in the Russian organs, but appearances of peace are no nearer.

On the Danube ostentatious preparations are being made by the Rusians to attack Kalafat, although they admit it would cost them ten thousand men.

Omar Pacha continues to fall on the Russians whenever opportunity offers—his tactics being to put it out of the power of the Russians to fight a great battle. Seven skirmishes have taken place. No actions of importance have occured in Asia.

The allied fleets were last seen a part near Sinope, and a part near Batoum ; but they are since reported as having sailed for Varna.

The Russian squadron was off the sea of Azof.

Servia is much agitated by the intrigues of the Russian Consul General. Izzet Pacha, of Belgrade, has sworn to arrest him unless he minds his own business.

The Emporor of Austria has ordered in great haste 40,000 troops to Hungary.

The Genoese intend to welcome Captain Ingraham with a public reception.

A British naval force is blockading the Persian port of Bushire in the Persian gulf.

LATEST. Vienna dispatches hint that good news from St. Petersburg has reached the Austrian Government.

The Shah of Persia has promised neutrality to Turkey.

A few Thoughts on Objections to the Midnight Cry.

In what respect does it not harmonize with the parable, Mat. 25: 1? We are not willing to recognize anything but what the word establishes. I understand the kingdom of heaven in this clause, to represent those that possess vital power of faith in God and his word.—(See Luke 17: 21; 9: 2; 8: 10; 12: 33.) Mat. 25: 1. "Took their lamps and went forth to meet the Bridegroom." Who did this? The professed church did not in '44, but treated both the doctrine and its believers with contempt; and what has been the result of this rejection of truth? Where has been the lasting revival of religion in that professed church since? Pride, formality, and darkness, (in which they are now living) always accompanies the unbelief of God's word. "Lest seeing they might perceive, and hearing they might understand." The faith had departed from among them, and that small number that still believed God, might well be compared to "ten" in the parable. What, but entire confidence and ardent zeal to be in harmony with that divine truth, could have induced the step? They must leave all behind—friends and the church to which they had long been endeared, exhibiting their strongest love for God and his word—their willingness to suffer all reproach for his honor; this consecration would bring them to a near and inseparable relation.

Thus they went forth, and in proportion to their faith, were disappointed in their anticipations of the then personal return of their best and dearest Friend, who is the source of all their hopes and joy,—more thab the disappointment of not receiving at the time expected, a cherished and long-absent friend. In anticipation of such an event, they made no arrangement for a tarrying time, but distributed their possessions to such as had need; and I have not learned of any suffering in so doing, whose faith has remained unshaken in His promise, and who are still patiently waiting, while the vision tarries,—for He was to tarry and they were to slumber nnd sleep. Though many, we truly fear, have fallen, there have others enlisted during the "trial," who will be, doubtless, hardy and valiant soldiers, willing to take the lot of a Matthias. At midnight the cry arose, "behold the Bridegroom cometh!" and dark indeed had been the time while the hour of trial was passing with the faithful.—"Go forth to meet him." That cheering sound awakes the virgins, and drowsiness is dispelled before the light of the "day-star" harbinger. The "trimming" time has arrived; the Bible is searched and re-searched for its inexhaustible treasures, and while the "oil" is dealt to the wise it is offered to the foolish also, that they may be without excuse when the Bridegroom rises up and shuts the door. Sad will be the fate of those who neglect to obtain oil until too late, for they must forever remain without, to share the fate of the foolish virgins, who, though reading, seeing and hearing, will not desiringly call for "oil," until the realities of that awful event bursts upon their sight, with all its fearful consequences. O, heed the warning the parable conveys, lest you call in despair on that blessed Saviour for compassion, when his long—entreating mercy is over.

If this is not the "time of the end," why this complete harmony with the fulfilment of the word? and when will the signs be witnessed again? O, ye who are His witnesses, truly be not weary in watching awhile longer, for it is your "father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." I have always regarded time as one of the first and leading characteristics of the advent faith; and it seems that they who have stepped aside from it, are not in harmony with the plan of God, but have greatly digressed—returning back to their first estate. O, let us advance as the light of truth diffuses its gladdening rays upon the path of the just, till the coming of our King shall usher us into perfect day.

Yours, in faith of the promised inheritance.

"Behold he Cometh with Clouds."

Reader, in what state do you suppose the Lord Jesus Christ will find this world, when he comes in the clouds? Will the "earth be filled with the knowledge of the Lord?" Will "all know him, from the least unto the greatest?" You may have been taught so, and perhaps will be disappointed to learn that the Bible gives no countenance to such teaching. It does indeed teach that the earth will be "full of the knowledge of the Lord," &c., but not at His coming. Far otherwise.

The Bible teaches that a wicked persecuting and blasphemous power will exist and prevail until the judgment shall set—Until the Ancient of days shall come—until the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom and possess it. See Dan. 7: 21—22. In chap. 8: 9, 15, the same power is described, and its duration measured. It shall defile the sanctuary 2300 days (or years) until it be cleansed or purified by fire, and the saints take and possess the kingdom forever.

When will the saints take and possess the kingdom? At the coming of the Son of Man in power and great glory, with all the holy angels. Matt. 16: 27; when the wheat and tares are separated. Matt. 13: 30. When all nations are separated as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats—then shall the King say to them on his right hand, inherit the kingdom prepared for you. Matt. 25: 34. Then, and not until then, this wicked power will cease. Paul describes this same power, 2 Thess 2: 7—9, as destroyed only by the coming of the Lord. In chap. 1: 7—9, this coming of the Lord is said to be in flaming fire, to take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. So you see the world will not be converted, for some will be ignorant of God—and some disobedient.

When the Lord "comes in the clouds," the mass of the world will be irreligious. "As the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." Matt. 24: 37. Then the earth was filled with violence, and all flesh had corrupted his way before the Lord. Gen. 6: 10, 11.—So shall it be when the Son of Man cometh.

As it was in the days of Lot—even so shall it be when the Son of Man is revealed. Luke 17: 29, 30. Long had Lot been vexed with their filthy conversation, (2 Pet. 2: 8,) When in the midst of a holiday of sensuality and violence, Gen. 19: in an awful flaming storm God swept the Sodomites at once, from life and hope forever. So will it be when the Son of Man is revealed! When he comes in the clouds "every eye shall see him,—and all the kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." Rev. 1: 7. This wailing is not to be the employment of those "who love his appearing." There will therefore be wicked on the earth, in such multitudes, that they are styled "all the kindreds of the earth." The scene of the coming of the Son of Man, described in Rev. 6: 12—leaves no doubt on this subject. When the sun becomes black as sackcloth of hair and the moon turns to blood—the stars of heaven fall—and the heavens themselves depart as a scroll, when rolled together; when every mountain and island is moved out of its place; then the great men and the rich men, the chief captains and the mighty men—and every bond-man and every free man, will seek, in sudden consternation, to avoid the awful presence of the Judge. They will call upon mountains and racks to fall upon them and hide them.

How different this state of things, from that taught by the popular churches, and expected by a wicked world! O may the fatal charm be broken, before a corrupt church and ruined world together, be swept away with their "refuges of lies." Reader, now is an accepted time! to-morrow may be too late! O, fly to Christ your only hope, tarry not, lest the storm overtake you.

What writhings must that heart know—what anguish unutterable, whose doom is sealed—never more to know hope! Then sinners will pray—but such prayers were never heard before. Prov. 1: 26—31.

Scoffers will cease to scoff—and triflers to trifle. The infidel believes, but like devils to tremble.

But O, what language can describe the scene, in the contemplation of which, imagination fails? Awake! O sleeper, and call upon thy God!—awake now!—then you must awake—then the roar of a thousand thunders, will reveal a God in grandeur, and a world on fire. Come Lord Jesus.—[Selected.

☞ A correspondent of the Franklin County, Vt., Herald, while stopping at a hotel in one of the most populous towns in Vermont, took pains to count the oaths which were spoken in his hearing. The names of the Deity were profanely spoken on Monday 136 times; Tuesday 297; Wednesday 148; Thursday 369; Friday 191; Saturday 205, and Sunday 331. The prevalence of this vice is a disgraceful feature of the age.

Query—How much does the above show the near approach of a millenium?

MARINE LOSSES. The New York Courier and Enquirer states that during the last three months nearly one thousand vessels have suffered damage at sea, and during the same period the losses sustained by the Wall street offices exceed four millions five hundred thousand dollars. Many vessels that have been exposed to the gales which swept the ocean in December and January have yet to be heard from, and when heard from, may help to swell the enormous sum which is now known to have been absorbed by losses.

The Crisis.

BY S. S. BREWER.

Borne on the breeze from distant nations,
Distress and sad perplexity;
Deep throes of anguish heaves creation,
While loudly roars the waves and sea.
Haste and get ready,
List to the cry;
Loud it swells—it is the knell—
The close of Gospel day.

All things foretold by holy prophets,
In grand review are passing by;
God speaks that men by these may profit,
And quick to Christ for shelter fly.

See how the men of might are waking;
Weak nations now becoming strong;
All things bespeak their final shaking;
'Tis God speeds now the war cry on.

Now hasten famine, death and mourning;
God's wrath upon the Harlot power;
The smoke is rising, see her burning,—
Down, down she sinks to rise no more.

☞ A Vienna correspondent of the N. Y. Staata Zeitung says:

"The Hungarian soldiers in the Austrian army still form a centre of constant anxiety for the meditations of their commanders. In vain have officers and sub-officers selected from the Sclavic regiments, been placed among them; their inextinguishable hatred soon broke out against this method of repression. In two Infantry barracks in the suburbs, fierce riots have taken place, in which the 'officers and sub-officers from Bohemia,' as they are styled, were set upon and beaten to death by their troops. This has occurred three times. In vain has the Commanding General forbidden the soldiers of the Hungarian regiments, 'Prince of Warsaw,' and 'Prince Emilius,' to visit the wine shops; in vain have the soldiers been consigned to their quarters for weeks together. The bloodiest affrays occurred inside of the barracks, and the Government has at length been compelled to displace the sub-officers and increase the pay of the privates in the hope of calming this agitation. It may be stated as a characteristic token of the feeling among these Hungarian troops, that they fell upon their officers with the cry—'Elgen Kossuth; Long live Kossuth!'"

TABLE MOVING NOT A NEW DISCOVERY. A Russian paper, the Abeille, says that the supposed Yankee invention of table moving has been long known and practiced among the priests of Buddha.—When a priest is applied to by an individual who has lost something of value, and is desirous of knowing where to look for it, he sits down before a small table, and placing his hands upon it, commences repeating a passage from some religious book. Soon he rises, and moving backwards and forwards, closely followed or preceded by the table, which seems to be suspended in the air. After a certain time the table gives a whirl and falls to the ground, and the seeker is directed to look for the object of his search in that direction. On one occasion the table was known to move eighty feet through the air before falling. On the same day a Russian peasant living near by committed suicide. The act created suspicion, and upon search the stolen property was found in his domicil. The country people have the most implicit faith in the efficacy of this mode of search, and their constancy of belief is such that it cannot be shaken by repeated failures.

Distinguished Company.—A private letter from London, dated Jan. 20, says:—"Last night we dined with Mr Sanders, the U. S. Consul, and there met, among other distinguished men, Kossuth, Mazzini, Pulksky and Ujhazy. It was a treat rarely to be enjoyed, to hear these men, in a domestic, familiar way, warm up upon the subject of European politics, and the apparent prospects of Hungary and Italy.

Deaths.

In Bowdoinham, Me., Jan. 22d, 1854, Benj., son of Br. Wm. Dinsmore, aged 31 years.

Br. Benjamin professed religion during his last sickness, and left a good evidence with his friends that he "died in the Lord." A discourse was preached on the occasion by F. H. Berick, from Job 14: 10,—"But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" Five days subsequent, Jan. 27th, Br. Dinsmore was stricken again with a wound, more distressing and harder to be borne, (if possible,) than the former. The wife of his bosom was torn from him by death's cruel grasp, and he is left for a few days to brave the ills of a cold world alone. As a preacher could not be procured at the appointed time for burial, the 15th chapter of 1st Cor. was read, and an appropriate and touching prayer was made by Br. Samuel Graves. Funeral sermon Feb. 6th, an heart cheering discourse by Br. I. L. Howard, from 1st Cor., 15: 20,—"But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." Sister Dinsmore struggled long with consumption, but it gained the ascendency at last, and she sleeps; but oh, consoling thought; the time is emphatically near when she, with all of Christ's jewels, will live again to die no more.

With heavenly weapons saints have fought
The battles of the Lord;
Finished their course and kept the faith,
And wait the sure reward.

There is secured in heaven for such,
A crown that cannot fade;
The righteous Judge at that great day,
Will place it on their head.

Oh yes, they wait, but wait not long,
For soon the King will come,
Destroying death, the chief of foes,
And take his children home.

Then our dear brother will not weep,
As those no hope do gain;
But think it is immortal [illegible]
He'll meet his friends again.

Religion—What is it?

Is it to go to church to-day,
To look devout and seem to pray,
And e'er to-morrow's sun goes down,
Be dealing slander through the town?

Does every sanctimonious face
Denote the certain reign of grace?
Does not a phiz that scowls at sin
Oft veil hypocrisy within?

Is it to make our daily walk,
And of our own good deeds to talk,
Yet often practice secret crime,
And thus mis-spend our precious time?

Is it for sect and creed to fight,
To call our zeal the rule of right
When what we wish is, at the best,
To see our church excel the rest?

Is it to wear the Christian dress,
And love to all mankind profess,
To treat with scorn the humble poor,
And bar against them every door!

O, no! Religion means not this,
Its fruit more sweet and fairer is—
Its precept this—to others do
As you would have them do to you.

It grieves to hear an ill report,
And scorns with human woes to sport—
Of others' deeds it speaks no ill,
But tells of good, or else keeps still.

And does religion this impart?
Then may its influence fill my heart;
O! haste the blissful, joyful day,
When all the earth may own its sway.

Eternal Punishment, Or, remarks on Matthew 25: 26.

"These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

This text is supposed by many to sustain the theory of the immortality of the human soul, and the endless misery of the wicked.

It is said—"If the everlasting misery of the wicked may come to an end, so may the everlasting bliss of the righteous, as the self same word is employed to express the duration of the misery of the one class as the happiness of the other."

We answer—The text saith not a word of the "happiness" of the one nor of the "misery" of the other. But if it did, it would avail nothing to the advocate of the common theory, unless he could prove the two classes equally undying, and immortal.

The term aionion—translated eternal and everlasting, in this text—does not, of itself, prove either the righteous or wicked would have a perpetual and unending existence, because it does not necessarily mean without end. This can easily be shown by its use, and the use of its corresponding word—oulom—in Hebrew; which latter word occurs, in some of its forms, more than three hundred times in the Old Testament, and in a large majority of cases will be found to express a period, longer or shorter, that will have an end. Thus the Aaronical ministry is called an "everlasting priesthood:" the hills are called "everlasting hills."

Those who think, because the same term expressing duration is applied to both classes, in the text under consideration, it is made certain that the wicked will exist as long as the righteous, may be taught that they reason both inconclusively and dangerously. Take the following text, "The everlasting God." Isaiah 40: 25; and compare it with Heb. 3: 6, "The everlasting mountains." Shall the mountains continue as long as God? How will the advocates of unending misery evade the conclusion, on their premises, that the mountains will continue as long as God? Will they say, "We know the mountains will melt in the final conflagration?"—True; and we know the wicked will be "burned up, and be left neither root nor branch," because, "Thus saith the Lord of Hosts:" Mal. 4: 1. But the Bible declares that God is "the King immortal:" not subject to be dissolved: while the everlasting mountains will be scattered and melted.

What is the argument, then, that the righteous are to continue in life while the wicked perish from life? It is not alone in the expression everlasting, or eternal, in the text; but in the fact that other texts assure us the righteous "put on immortality, incorruption," at the resurrection; 1 Cor. 15; and, saith Jesus, "Neither can they die any more:" Luke 20. Thus their perpetuity in life is settled by language that can have no other sense than that of unending life and being; while no such language occurs in relation to the wicked. On the contrary, they are to be "consumed, devoured, burned up, be destroyed, utterly destroyed, soul and body," &c. Such expressions, in the absence of any text affirming the immortality of wicked men, must settle the question, if testimony can settle any point.

The stumbling stone of our opposers is, in their assumption that protracted pain and punishment are necessarily identical. But this assumption is false in fact. What is the highest crime known in human law? It is murder. What is the punishment for that crime? Is it the most protracted pain? Or, is it the deprivation of life? It is the latter; and that is called the "capital punishment;" not because the criminal endures more pain, or as much as he might by some other; but because he is cut off from life.

If it be attempted to evade this point by saying—"The criminal feels horribly, while awaiting the day of execution,"—we say, if his feelings are any part of the penalty of the law? Certainly not. They may be a consequence of his crime; but the law does not say he shall feel bad, but that he shall die. But, say the advocates of the common idea of pain, as essential to punishment, "there is the dreadful hereafter to the criminal." We reply, what ever may be hereafter to him, that is no part of the penalty of the law under which he dies. So the Judge understands it, who pronounces the dying sentence; for he concludes by saying, "May God have mercy on your soul:" i. e., "May you not be hurt hereafter." Thus, turn which way our opposers may, they meet a two edged sword that hews in pieces their notion of protracted pain and punishment being necessarily identical.

In the text under consideration, the Savior expresses the idea of punishment, without any necessary idea of protracted pain. The word here translated punishment is kolasin: and it is never used, on any other occasion, in any of our Lord's discources, as recorded in the Bible.—When he speaks of torment, as he often does in the Gospels and in Revelation, he most uniformly uses the word basanois, but never, kolasin. Kolasin properly expresses punishment; and, strictly, the kind of punishment; as one meaning of the term is "cut off." The righteous enter into life eternal: the wicked are eternally cut off from life.

But we have an inspired Commentator on this declaration of our Lord; viz., Paul, the apostle. Whatever scene is described Matt. 25, and whatever time is spoken of, the same, in both respects, Paul speaks of 2 Thess. 1. They are both laid in one scene. Compare them together, "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him." Matt. 25: 31. "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels." 2 Thess. 1: 7. Is here any mistake? Is not the scene the same in both texts? Is it possible to separate them? Again, "These shall go away into everlasting punishment." Matt. 25: 46. "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction." 2 Thess. 1: 9.

Here is no room to doubt but what Paul is speaking of the same punishment as Jesus; and the apostle declares the punishment is "destruction," not preservation under any circumstances; and the apostle tells us this destruction is "from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." This last expression may have the sense of "out of his presence," but we are inclined to believe it a reference to the consuming fire that sometimes came out from the presence of the Lord, under the law given by Moses; as for example, in Lev. 10: 1, 2, "Nadab and Abihu, sons of Aaron, took either of them his censor, and put fire therein, and put incense thereon, and offered strange fire before the Lord, which he commanded them not: and there went out fire from the Lord, and devoured them, and they died before the Lord." Or, take the case of those who, in the rebellion of Korah (Numb. 16: 35,) had taken their censors to appear before the Lord, "And there came out a fire from the Lord, and consumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense." Here was no preservation, but a being consumed, devoured; so that they "died." To this, most likely, Paul refers. The presence of Christ in his glory, with his holy angels, will so overpower and fill with terror the wicked, who behold him, that they will die—be destroyed—by the sight. If Daniel, Dan. 10th, and John, the beloved disciple, Rev. 1, both "fell as dead" at the sight of the glory manifested to them, and recovered not till a hand was laid on them, with a voice saying "fear not," how then shall Christ's enemies live when he shall appear in glory? They cannot: they have cultivated such a disregard for Christ, and contempt of him, in his absence, that when he appears in his glory his presence will fill them with such fear as to destroy them forever. No hand is to be laid on them, nor voice heard, to soothe their fears; and they are "utterly consumed with terror." Their punishment is "death—the wages of sin:" and it is irrevocable—it is eternal. Thus Paul gives us a sure interpretation of Jesus' words, and enables us to speak with certainty as to the kind of punishment that is to be the portion of wicked men.

How death, from which there is no recovery, can be an eternal punishment, we will further illustrate. The highest punishment known in the law of God or man is loss of life, or death. The deprivation of life may be attended with pain or it may not. If it is, it is not the punishment; it is merely an accident attending the punishment. This truth is self-evident to the reflecting mind; because, however much the murderer might suffer in dying, that would not meet the claim of the law, or answer its penalty, unless his life is extinguished: he must "be hung by the neck until he is dead," saith the law.

If this man, when dead, could be restored to life in one year after, with the right to life, his punishment would be of only one year's duration. If a thousand years after, then it would have been of a thousand years duration: not of pain, but of loss of life. If he is never to be restored, but to remain eternally dead, then how long is his punishment? Is it not eternal, in the strictest sense? It is an eternal deprivation of life. Such is the Bible teaching in relation to the punishment of wicked men. And if we would live eternally we must come to Christ for that life. God has given to us eternal life, but that life is in His Son, and not in ourselves: See 1 John 5: 11, 12. It is the life-giving Spirit of God, bestowed on those, and those only, who come to Christ for it. This is that Spirit which raised up Christ from the dead, and by which, only, can any man be quickened to immortality and incorruptibility: (Rom. 8: 11, with 1 Cor. 15: 45, 54:) without it men perish—are destroyed—die, and "shall be no more." Psalms 104: 35. "Be as though they had not been:" Obadiah 16; "for the wages of sin is death;" Romans 6: 23; and, "all the wicked will God destroy;" Psalms 145: 20; yea, "They shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Psalms 37: 20.—[Bible Examiner, edited by Geo. Storrs.

Extracts from Letters.

New Hartford, Feb. 2, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—I left Cheshire yesterday. The good work of the Lord was going on when I left. I baptized seven on Tuesday, and I expect a number more will soon follow. Twenty-five or thirty, I should judge, came forward in the evening for prayers, and I hope the work may still progress and many more become servants of the Lord. I am fully satisfied that what is done must be done speedily; for the condition of the nations is such that the angels will soon let go the four winds, and the great battle commence, and the doom of the world fixed. Yes, men will soon believe the Advent doctrine; but they will believe when it is too late. All things speak in thunder-tones, that the day of Judgment is fast approaching, when the poor way-worn pilgrims will be forever at rest. O blessed day! O glorious hope! to think this year will end all our trials, and that these vile bodies will be made to shine in the kingdom of God, is enough to stimulate us to discharge faithfully every duty.

S. J. Mathewson.

South Orrington, Me., Feb. 3, '54.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I have in the mercy of God, been permitted to see and enjoy some precious seasons from the presence of the Lord here, away down east.

The gladly solemn sound of the coming of the Just One, is having a most heavenly and precious effect on the minds of all that hear it, so far as my knowledge extends. In many places the citizens admit the congregations to be the largest ever assembled on any occasion.

I have seen many converted during my travels. In some places, entire families are coming home to God. In China, on Deer-hill, there is a sweeping work of grace; in South Hope, also, and at Hermon. In all these places, between thirty and forty are the subjects of converting grace. "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, and good will to men."

I have been principally in new places. But I am now enjoying a privilege of meeting with the saints in this place. The conference commenced yesterday,—house crowded,—had a good time in presenting a portion of God's truth last night. A Bro. sitting by me, states there is also a powerful work in Buxton, also in Bristol. Praise the Lord, O my soul! Sinners are coming home.

Love to all the saints scattered abroad.

West Poland, Feb. 1, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—I have just finished the perusal of the last number of the World's Crisis; and surely it has been a "feast of fat things" to me. While I read the cheering letters of the brethren and sisters, and observed their frequent exclamations of praise and glory to God, my heart thrilled with emotion, and I was led to respond amen and amen. This is the fruit of genuine faith! The cloudy pillar is moving onward toward the heavenly Canaan, and our Joshua will soon give his people everlasting rest.

But, as it was with those who came out of Egypt, many, yes, very many failed to enter the promised land; not because they doubted that God had led them forth, and been with them through the wilderness, and wrought mighty works for them, but it was their unbelief when near the borders of Canaan, that proved them, and caused their destruction. So with many who went forth to meet the Lord in '43; while the vision has tarried, they have cast away their confidence and have not patiently waited for the fulfilment of the promise—have not endured unto the end, but have gone hither and thither; many of them have turned back, not merely in their hearts, but personally, into Egypt; and now, while the hosts of Israel are marshaling anew, and forming their ranks, to follow the pillar of light in its onward course, they are left behind to wander in darkness and perish in the wilderness.

The spirit of conviction is all abroad, and many hearts are failing them for fear of those things that are coming on the earth. Were it not for the reproach connected with this truth, many would embrace it. But here comes the cross, and many, to escape it, have gone with the churches, and endeavored there to seek the Lord, hoping to climb up some easier way than to pass through the straight gate. But O how fearful the delusion! They are caught in the net thus artfully spread by Satan, and will find when too late, their hope is like a spider's web. And O how fearful the doom of the shepherd who has lulled their fears, and preached to them smooth things. There will be a howling in the day of the Lord, among the shepherds and the principal of the flock.

If God has raised up faithful watchmen to cry aloud "the morning cometh and also the night," it becomes the duty of those who hear, to believe the message, and act in accordance with it. If they are authorized to proclaim, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him!" he has not left it optional with us so obey or not, and yet be saved. God does not thus trifle with his truth. He has made us responsible how we hear, and if we refuse to hear, when we have an opportunity for so doing, we are responsible for that, and need not think that by closing our eyes and shutting our ears, we shall be excused. The willingly ignorant will not escape condemnation. We hear much said about texts. I believe we have no right to detach certain portions of the Scripture, and say these are the only texts—for how can it be otherwise than that which belongs to dispensational truth, is all of a testing character? Whatever God requires his servants to preach, he requires us to believe.

I do love to see one in earnest to have the truth, let it cost what it may, and lead where it will. But O, the excuses that are made by those who do not have the love of it in their hearts. They do not want to be convinced, because they know well that they cannot be as worldly, as popular, as covetous as now. There is my nice farm—my enterprising business—that speculation which promises so great success—my high post of honor—my wide-spread reputation—all would have to be sacrificed if I believed these things, and I should be counted a fanatic, weak-minded, deluded, and be turned out of the church probably; and I cannot submit to all that; and I rather think it is only an excitement got up for a little while, and will all blow over, just as it did in '43 and '44. They were just as sure the Lord would come then as they are now, and proved it just as clearly; but that was all delusion, and this will all fail too, I think; at any rate, I will not go with them, but try and do about right, and risk it."

Says another, "This looks just like the truth, but if it is so, why don't elder A—— believe it? He has read history a great deal, and understands it much better than these men, and if he said it was truth, I would believe it." "Have any of the rulers, or of the Pharisees believed on him? These men who know not the law, are accursed."

"There is good brother B——," says another, "who is very devoted, and he says that he has made it a special subject of prayer, and he cannot obtain any evidence that it is truth, and I do believe that God would reveal it to him if it was so." As to that, my friend, if good brother A—— expects a direct revelation from God in regard to the truth of any doctrine, he will most assuredly be disappointed; for, as saith the Apostle, "Faith cometh by hearing, (not praying) and hearing by the word of God." All the light God has for the church is there, and our prayer should be, "Lord, open thou the eyes of my understanding, that I may understand the Scriptures." I have known individuals to pray a great deal to ascertain whether it was their duty to be baptized or not, when the Lord has already told them in the word. So it is not so much our duty to ask the Lord if he is coming immediately, as it is to search the Scriptures, to see if the signs of his advent are in the past.

Says another, as he reads the news from the East, and learns that Russia is on the move, that she is bringing her armies to bear against Turkey, "really, this looks just like what that Advent minister said two or three years ago, would take place. I don't know but he may be right, after all; but I will not be in a hurry about believing it; I will wait and see if the Czar defeats the Porte, and if the Alliance is broken, as they say it will be; and if these things take place, I will begin then in good earnest to get ready for the judgment."

As well might the Antediluvians have waited until the first drops of the deluge were fallen, ere they believed Noah's message; as well might the inhabitants of the plain have waited for the shower of fire to begin to descend, as for any to wait until the Alliance is broken and the winds let loose, for when that takes place, the sealing angel has performed his work, and probation ceased forever.

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time."

The watchmen are doing their last work for a doomed world. The last invitation to supper is being given. The last note of warning is being sounded. 'Tis the last call of mercy to the sinner. The spirit is awakening the conscience, for the last time. It lingers but a moment, and is gone, forever gone, from those who heard not its reproving voice. Faithfully has God warned this generation by signs in the sun, moon, and stars, and on the earth. Every variety of sign that could be required has been given, that all might be left without excuse, yet how few there are who believe them!

The political press is preaching loudly to me the coming of the Lord, this spring. Every steam-ship that arrives brings news that confirms this expectation.

The storm clouds arising o'er the far distant sea
Denote our approach to the land of the free;—
Ere long we shall anchor in Eden's broad bay,
Where reigns one eternal, and unclouded day.

Though sad are those tokens, we hail them with joy,
For they speak of a land where there's naught will annoy;
'Tis the land of sweet rest, the home of the meek—
The land that the "strangers and pilgrims" did seek.

No sickness is there, neither sorrow nor pain;
Eternal the life its inhabitants gain;—
Immortal their joys, and unending their bliss—
O who would not sigh for an Eden like this?

Mary D. Wellcome.

From Sister Chisam:—I am glad that you are publishing a paper, that tells of the near coming of the thrice blessed One. The vision, which has so long tarried, seems to beam upon us with more conspicuousness. O, me thinks, I already begin to hear the rumbling of His chariot wheels. I seem to see with an eye of faith the bright beams of that illustrious day! Glory to God's blessed name, that I live in the days of the Son of man. Be encouraged, Brethren, we shall soon sing,

"The long dark night of time is past
And the morn of eternity's come at last."

Palermo, Me., Jan. 29, '54.

From Bro. S. M. Carr:—When I heard that you had entered into this labor of love, to send out light and truth to the scattered flock of Christ, and to all the human race, I felt in my heart to give thanks to God, and pray that He would bless you with His Spirit and power to carry forward this work until He comes.

Lowell, Feb. 9, 1854.

Readers of the Crisis:—I do thank the Lord that he ever moved upon the hearts of his people to publish such a paper as the "World's Crisis" has already proved to be. The good it may do in cheering the weary pilgrim on his journey, and in alarming the impenitent, eternity alone will disclose. Such a sheet in these last moments of time, was greatly needed, in order to spread the light far and near, that now shines on the prophetic periods.—The truth it advocates, I believe; namely, the coming of the Lord this year; and I can say God speed the "World's Crisis," for I am anxious that all may hear the glad news of a Saviour's speedy return. Many centuries have rolled away since he informed his afflicted followers if he went away he would come again, and before ascending, assured them that he would descend in like manner. The church have ever since been longing for the day to dawn, when the words he then uttered should be fulfilled. The Prophets and Patriarchs have "desired to see the day, but died without the sight." In all ages, the earnest breathing of God's faithful few have been, "Thy kingdom come." Their prayers are soon to be answered, their hopes realized, and they will take the kingdom under the whole heavens and possess it forever, even forever and ever. How cheering the thought that the last prophetic day has dawned, and its hours are fast passing away. God's word declares these things are so. The church will understand and believe. The signs are in the past; the state of nature and every thing around us speak in thunder-tones that "the day of the Lord is near and hasteth greatly." O, solemn moment in which we live; how full of interest! Soon we shall exchange this dreary earth, this cold and friendless world, for a bright and better land, where sin cannot enter to disturb the harmony of the saints, as they tune their harps to the praise of Him who died to redeem them; or we shall be left with the wicked to "cry for rocks and mountains to cover us" from the face of an angry judge. Our destiny we soon shall know. That we may have a part in the first resurrection, is my prayer. What endless beauties hang around this event! How sublime the thought that in a few short months, at longest, the grave-yard will be robbed of its victims, and friends who have fallen asleep in Jesus and been slumbering in the cold, dark grave, will soon be awakened by the last loud trump of God, and come forth, blooming with immortality. Yes—

"With joy they'll leave the dreary tomb,
Glowing with life's immortal bloom,—
Redeemed from sin, and heirs of light,
Arrayed in robes of spotless white."—

"To die no more." O, glad morning of the resurrection, we'll hail thee with joy!—for not only those who have dwelt in the dust so long will awake and sing, but the living saint will be remembered; together they'll arise and meet their coming King, and so forever be with the Lord. These things are to be realized, we believe, this year. Truly, this is an animating thought. Let us be faithful, and endure the perils of these last days like good soldiers, that "when He who is our life shall appear, we may also appear with him in glory.

Yours, expecting immortality and eternal life in 1854. Mary A. Pote.

Landaff, N. H., Feb. 3, 1854.

Dear Brother Merriam:—I am much interested in reading the "Crisis" and hope it may be circulated through the land, that all may be reminded of the evidences of the speedy coming of the Lord Jesus Christ to judge the world in righteousness. How solemn and awful is that great day, which is now "near, even at the door," when "the earth and heaven shall flee away," and no place be found for them, when God, by his angels, shall "sever the wicked from among the just." A day of terror and destruction to all the wicked, but glorious to all the righteous, who have toiled and suffered in faithfulness here, for then shall all tears be wiped from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain," immortality and eternal life shall be their reward. How welcome is the truth of Jesus' coming to all the pure in heart. I do rejoice that I have not been left to reject his word, but long to see that day. O I do hope for redemption this year. Let all the saints praise the Lord. Yours, truly,

O. D. Eastman.

European Affairs.

The current of popular feeling in England seems to set strongly in favor of Turkey. Large public meetings have been held to discuss the subject at Manchester and Glasgow. At the former place Admiral Sir Charles Napier made a speech, pointing to the fact that Russia, by being allowed to retain the Principalities, would be increasing her Austrian frontier, now but eighty miles, to three or four hundred; and that her next movement would be to seize on Constantinople. This would seriously endanger the English possessions in India, and ought, therefore, to be resolutely and promptly resisted by Great Britain. Too much weight should not be given to the French alliance, since she might prove faithless. The Admiral urged the importance of increasing the navy, and being prepared at all points for war. The meeting at Glasgow, held on the 24th of November, was chiefly noticeable on account of a letter from M. Kossuth, in reply to an invitation to attend it. The chief object of the letter was to show that all the great interests, political and martial of Great Britain, impelled her to sustain Turkey, not by half way measures, nor by a merely passive attitude, but by open, manly, and effective aid. The great question at stake, he said, was simply the sovereign right of every nation to manage its own concerns; and if Russia should succeed in her present attempt upon Turkey, she would exercise an absolute predominance over the whole of Europe, and England would lose irrecoverably her position of a first-rate power. The dispute about the Greek Church, the asylum afforded to political exiles, and the wounded dignity of the Czar were only trifling matters, and had nothing to do with the main issue. The real object of Russia was to obtain supremacy in Europe—to make herself a great maritime power, and this could only be done by acquiring possession of Turkey. M. Kossuth adds, that Austria dare not take ground against the Czar, for if she should, he could by a single word raise the Sclavonic population of the empire against her—and he declared that the Hungarians would join with Russia rather than submit to Austria, whenever the choice should be offered. The Turkish empire, he said, could have no more valuable ally in its present struggle, and no better guarantee against future encroachments than the Hungarian nation. At a meeting of the Polish Revolutionary Committee in London, a brief but stirring letter from Mazzini was read, declaring his unyielding devotion to the cause of liberty, and exhorting the people of England to war, as absolutely necessary to decide whether Europe is to be given over forever to despotism, or whether it shall be free, orderly, and peacefully progressive. Another indication of an awakening interest in the movements of the day on the part of Poland, is found in an address issued to his countrymen by Prince Czartoryski, who has been, since the downfall of his country, a resident of Paris. It is able and dignified. Its main object is to inspire the Poles with the belief that the hour of their redemption will arrive, that patience, calmness, and above all, confidence and union are essential to final success; that the excesses of revolution are to be avoided, and that obedience to his directions, as their rightful head, is more than ever essential.

The Emperor (Nicholas) is described by those who have an opportunity of observing his movements, as living in a state of religious exaltation, regarding himself as the chosen instrument, under the hand of God, to drive the Moslem from Europe, and only regretting that he should have allowed so many years to pass by without fulfilling his destiny.

The Seven Periods of Daniel's Vision of 2300 days: Dan. 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12th Chapters.

Continued.

I shall take the eclipse mentioned by Josephus, which Kepler says occurred on the 13th of March, U. C. 750, as a starting point, from near the birth of Christ, as that must have happened in the neighborhood of that event; and likewise of the death of Herod—and so suppose that Jesus was born on the 25th of March; the same March in which the eclipse occurred; but as the 25th of March is new year's day, it will be U. C. 751, the first day of the year; and as Josephus says that Philip reigned 37 years after his father Herod's death, and died in the 20th year of Tiberius, it follows that Augustus lived over 17 years after the birth of Jesus and the death of Herod the Great; Ant. B. 16, Chap. 5, Sec. 6, which establishes the fact that Augustus died U. C. 768, for if, as all historians agree, (especially Goldsmith and Bliss,) that Julius was slain in U. C. 710, Augustus' reign must have extended to U. C. 768, in order to allow him 57 years, 6 months and 2 days, as Josephus says he reigned that number of years: and if Augustus died in U. C. 768, it was A. D. 18; for if we commence the Christian era the 751st of Rome, the 1st day of the year, then in Aug. 19 U. C. 768, the time of Augustus' death, would be A. D. 18, that is the 18th current year after his birth, so that his birth was in the 41st year after the death of Julius, and 27th after the battle of Actium; which agrees with the chronology of Butler and Doddridge and others.

As to the death of Herod, it may be observed that Archbishop Usher and Mr. Whiston place it in Nov., after the eclipse mentioned by Josephus; but many other writers think he died before the first passover, after the eclipse: which Mr. Prince says was April 11th: but if Jesus was born March 25th, and circumcised April 2d, it would be rather a short time for the murder of the infants of Bethlehem. At present I feel inclined to adopt the opinion of Usher and Whiston, and place it in November, which will give ample time for the pilgrimage of "The Wise Men from the East" to worship the Infant Saviour, "The Flight of the Holy Family into Egypt," and for the monster to glut his rage and fury on the harmless, defenceless babes of Bethlehem.

That U. C. 751 is rightly assigned as the year of the birth of Christ is proved by the reign of Herod, for Josephus says he was just appointed King, by the Senate of Rome, when Calvinus and Pollio were Consuls, and Dio, a contemporary writer, says these were Consuls in the year of Rome, 714; and Prince says that Herod reigned to his 37th year, which added to 714, gives the 751st. These facts being settled as strongly as human authority can settle them, I shall now proceed to give a Table of Chronology, and to adjust the Eras to each other; but first give a brief rehearsal of the early patriarchal ages, from the Creation to the Flood, and from thence to the death of Eli; and in this part I shall follow Mr Bliss, believing that his "Anal. Sac. Chronology" gives the most accurate computations of these years of any chronologer I have ever yet met with, till he comes to the administration of Samuel, which he includes in the 450 years of the Judges: in this I must beg leave to differ from him, for although Samuel was both a Prophet and a Judge, and "judged Israel all the days of his life," still I think the 450 years were filled up at the death of Eli; for Paul says, Acts, 13: 20, "until Samuel, the Prophet, and afterwards;" he does not tell us how long afterwards, but leaves us to learn that from other parts of inspiration; which I think we can find in I Samuel, chapter 7, which is very convincing that Samuel reigned considerably over 20 years.

[Thus far, S. Bliss' Analysis.]

This period must have extended to the death of Eli; and Samuel succeeded him, and I think judged Israel 26 years.

The Ark of the Covenant, which was taken by the Philistines on the day of Eli's death, was not restored "to the house of Abinadab," till the end of 7 months; and it remained in the house of Abinadab twenty years, to "the day of mourning at Mizpeh;" and after the overthrow of the Philistines, Samuel went in circuit, from year to year, to Bethel, and Gilgal, and Mizpeh, and judged Israel. [1 Samuel, Chap. 7.] All this was before Saul was anointed King; which proves that it is not unreasonable to assign to him, at least 26 years; which added to A. M. 3010, reaches to A. M. 3036.

Mr. Bliss commences the reign of Saul at B. C. 1110, which I shall also adopt; and computes the following years to the first year of Cyrus, at 574 years, I think rightly.

From the commencement of the reign of Saul, to the time the temple of Solomon was dedicated, is a period of 91 years, and brings us to B. C. 1019, and reaches to A. M. 3127.

The Dedication, it appears, commenced in the 7th Jewish month, Tisri; the first day of the month,—Lev. 23: 24,—answering, in part, to our October, when the trumpets were sounded, and it was called "a memorial of blowing of trumpets."—(It may here be remarked that Josephus, in his "Jewish War," tells us that at sunset or eve before their Sabbath begins, the Priests, at least one of the course of Priests, stood beneath a covering, on a place built on one corner of the Temple, called "Pastophoria," and gave a signal with a trumpet, that the Sabbath had commenced; and the next eve they sounded again, to notify the people that the Sabbath was ended.) On the 10th day of the 7th month, expiatory offerings were made, and "the High Priest alone went into the Holiest of Holies," to make atonement for the sins of the people. At this time "the Ark of the Covenant" was carried in by the Priests, and set in the place prepared for it; and when the Temple was solemnly consecrated to God, Solomon held a feast, and all Israel, 14 days, and rejoicing greatly, after offering great and unparalleled offerings, returned to their tents with glad hearts.

From the dedication of the Temple to the first year of the first Olympiad, (which Prince says was restored by Iphitus, when "Varro's Historical age begins,") is a period of 243 years, and extends to B. C. 776,—A. M. 3370. This first year of the first Olympiads, which began July 19th, or as Prince says, July 23, B. C. 776, synchronizes with the 34th year of Uzziah, King of Judah, and is called an epoch of undoubted authority, by Newton, Cary, Prince, and others. From the 34th year of Uzziah, King of Judah, the time of the commencement of the Grecian Era, to the the Era of Rome, (which, according to Cato, Rollin, Helvicus, Tallent, Swan and Isaacson, began in the Year of the World 3253, that is, B. C. 751, March 25th,) is a period of 25 years, synchronizing with the 7th year of the reign of Jotham, and is the 26th year from the first Olympiads, and extends to B. C. 751,—A. M. 3395.

Ferguson records an eclipse, which occurred on Wednesday, May 23, B. C. 585. Mr Bliss mentions an eclipse B. C. 791, two years after the death of Jeroboam.—Another solar eclipse April 21st, B. C. 753, another solar July 5, B.C. 753. (Plutarch.) A lunar eclipse occurred March 19, B. C. 721; another March 8, B.C. 720. An eclipse of the sun 715, May 26th, said to mark the death of Romulus. Lunar eclipse B. C. 621, April 21st, fifth year of Nabopolassar. Solar eclipse May 18th, B. C. 603, (Halos.) Another B. C. 547, Oct. 22, total, (Xenophon.)

From the Era of Rome to that of Nabonassar, there is a period of four years, B. C. 747, which synchronizes with the 11th year of Jotham, and extends to the Year of the World 3399. From the 11th year of Jotham to the 31st year of Manasseh, there is a period of 81 years to Manasseh's captivity, B. C. 666, which extends to the Year of the World 3480, and from the first year of the first Olym. 110. From the 31st year of Manasseh to the second year of Zedekiah, there is a period of 70 years, at the opening of the last Jubilee, which the Jews as a nation celebrated, before the captivity, which extends to B. C. 596,—A. M. 3550. From the 2d year of Zedekiah, to the 1st year of Cyrus, there is a period of 60 years, which extends to B. C. 536,—A. M. 3610. U. C. 215.

We have now come down to the reign of the Kingdom of Persia, and as this is an Era of eclipses, it will be expected that our tables will be consistent with the occurrence of these celestial characters.—Cyrus reigned 7 years, to B. C. 529,—A. M. 3617, year of Nabonassar, 218. Josephus says, Cambyses reigned 6 years, and in that time he overthrew Egypt; and when he was come back, he died at Damascus; and the Magi obtained the kingdom for one year; but as he afterwards calls it nine years, to the second year of Darius, I shall call his reign seven years, which extends to B. C. 522,—A. M. 3624.

A lunar eclipse occurred July 17, B. C. 523, the 7th year of Cambyses, recorded by Mr Bliss, to which is attached the name of Ptolemy. Darius Hystaspes, with the Magians, reigned 36 years, to B. C. 486,—A. M. 3660. A lunar eclipse occurred Nov. 19th, B. C. 502, the 20th year of the personal reign of Darius; another April 25th, B. C. 491, 31st year of the personal reign of Darius Hystospes, (Bliss' Analysis.) Xerxes succeeds Darius, and reigns 21 years, to B. C. 465,—A. M. 3681. Solar eclipse B. C. 481, April 19th, marks the invasion of Greece, 295th year of the Olympiads. A solar eclipse occurred Oct. 2d, B. C. 480. Battle of Salamis, (Herodotus,) year of Nabonassar, 267.—Another Feb. 13th, B. C. 478, close of Persian war, (Bliss Anal. Sac. Chron.,) U. C. 273. Artaxerxes Longimanus succeeds Xerxes, and reigns 41 years, to B. C. 424,—A. M. 3721. In the 20th year of this king's reign, the last commandment, to restore and build Jerusalem, went forth from the palace of Shushan, B. C. 446.—This decree was committed to Nehemiah, with a commission to constitute him Governor of Judea for 12 years, first, and afterwards renewed, and extended 49 years, to the 9th year of Artaxerxes Mnemon, as I think I shall be able to show from authority, which I derive mainly from the Bible and Josephus.

Artaxerxes Longimanus began to reign about the first of B. C. 466, and his 19th year consequently would end the last of B. C. 447, and the commission and decree were issued in the first Jewish month after; and he with an armed force proceeded to Jerusalem; and his book records his doings after he arrived there. Josephus says, "Nehemiah received an epistle from the King to the Governor of Syria, Phoenicia, and Samaria, wherein he ordered him to pay all due honours to Nehemiah, and to supply him with what he wanted for his building." "And when Nehemiah had come to Jerusalem, and delivered the epistle, he called the Jews together, and told them how God had assisted him in gaining this authority of the King, to raise up our walls, and to finish that which is wanting in the temple." He exhorted them to trust in God, and "to intermit building, neither night nor day, but to use all dilligence, and to hasten on the work now while we have this especial opportunity for it."

"When he had said this, he gave orders that the rulers should measure the wall and divide the work of it among the people, according to their villages and cities, as every ones ability should require."—And when he had dissolved the assembly, the Jews prepared for the work, and the part that Nehemiah took in it, and the privations and hardships that he suffered during these "troublous times," are amply recorded in his own book. In the 32d years of Artaxerxes Longimanus, Nehemiah returned to the court of Persia and obtained leave of the King to go again to Jerusalem; (Neh. 13: 7.) Says Josephus, "So when Nehemiah had done many other excellent things, and things worthy of commendation, in a glorious manner, he came to a great age, and then died." "He was of a good and righteous disposition, and very ambitious to make his own nation happy;" "and he hath left the walls of Jerusalem, as an eternal monument for himself." This is strong presumptive evidence, that Nehemiah's administration did continue 49 years, to the end of the first period of the vision, and that he died at Jerusalem. This extends to B. C. 398–7.

This is the time supposed by many that the Old Testament prophets, at least Malachi, ceased prophesying, though one of my Bibles dates the last chapter of Malachi B. C. 400, but the other dates B. C. 397.

Xerxes II. succeeded, and then Sodianus, who both reigned not quite a year, and then Darius Nothus, who, together with the former two, reigned 19 years, to B. C. 405—A. M. 3741. Darius Nothus began to reign about Aug. B. C. 424, and after reigning near 12 years he was succeeded by Artaxerxes Mnemon, in the ninth year of whose reign the first period of Daniel's vision was fulfilled. A solar eclipse occurred April 30 B. C 463, which marks the revolt of Egypt from Persia, which, according to this chronology, occurred in the third year of the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus. A Solar eclipse is recorded, which happened Aug. 3 B. C. 431, the first year of the Peloponnesian war by Thucydides, quoted by Bliss.

Another bears the name of Thucydides which occurred March 22d B. C. 424, the 8th year of the war. Still another eclipse Aug. 27th B. C. 413, the 19th year of the war. (Thucydides.) A lunar eclipse occurred [illegible] B. C. 406, the 26 year of the war. (Bliss' Anal.) A solar eclipse occurred Sept. 2 B. C. 404, the last year of the war. (Xenophon.) Thucydides was a mathematician, and a historian, and was born B. C. 470; he was a living witness to those eclipses which bear his name, and consequently his testimony is of the highest authority; and I find that his character as a historian is unimpeachable. He is mentioned by Sir Walter Raleigh as far preferable to Herodotus.

Mr Bliss quotes an article from his pen, of a treaty that was made in the 13th year of Darius Nothus. It was made in the winter of the 20th year of the Peloponnesian war, which began in the spring of B. C. 431, and consequently the 20th year in winter would be the beginning of B. C. 411, and the 337th year of the era of Nabonassar; and 336 and a part, and 410 and a part, added, gives 747 for the commencement of the era. The 20th year of the war began in the spring of B. C. 412, and Darius Nothus' 13th year began about Aug. B. C. 412, and both fall into B. C. 411, on the 4th of December—the Nabonassarian year having been reduced to a solar year—so that the following winter is in the 337th of the era.

This article from the pen of Thucydides, will adjust this chronology in full, and perfect harmony with what is called "the undoubted era of Nabonassar." Such a concurrence of events or dates, happening in any given year, carries the fullest conviction of its truth, and settles the fact to a demonstration, that our chronology is correct. We do not assume the title of Chronologist; but hope to be enabled from the best historians, to count up and adjust the years of the reigns of Kings in their proper places. When we find such a concurrence of events meeting in any given year, it gives us the fullest confidence that thus far we are right; and by following the eras we may learn how to fix other dates, where a definite number of years are recorded. But when we find historians who give different numbers of years to the reign of Kings, (as is often the case,) we must count up and adjust the years to the eras, and I know of no other alternative only to bring them together; and if they agree, we feel sure that we have arrived at the truth: if they do not agree, we must go over the ground again and take numbers from other historians, as their difference is only nominal, and continue to do so till they come right; and when that happens we shall certainly be conscious of it.

Josephus gives the number of High Priests that were appointed by Herod the Great and his successors, after the destruction of the Asamoneans. He says they were 28 up to the destruction of Jerusalem, and that the number of years from the death of Antigonus B. C. 34 to the final desolation of the city and temple, by Titus, was 107 years. This was when Herod was established in his kingdom, by the death of his rival; which reaches to A. D. 73. This I believe is correct, though it seems to have been overlooked by Chronologers; but Josephus could have neither interest nor predjudice to tempt him to misrepresent those years, and he was a living witness of the last 32 of them, and of the calamities of his people at that time. He was a candid historian, and certainly competent to obtain and give the most genuine information on all subjects relating to his own nation at that time, being a living witness. Xenophon mentions a solar eclipse B. C. 394, when the Lacedæmonians were defeated by Conon, Aug. 14th. The fore-mentioned eclipses are all that I find recorded during the Persian Empire, till we arrive at the battle of Arbela, B. C. 331, when a lunar eclipse is recorded by Plutarch—said to have occurred eleven days before that battle; and I find none but what is consistent with, and even confirmatory, to this view of chronology.

From the death of Darius Nothus to the battle of Arbela, is a period of 74 years, and brings us down to B. C. 331—A. M. 3815. From the battle of Arbela to the birth of Julius Cæsar, there is a period of 234 years, and extends to B. C. 97—A. M. 4049. Julius Cæsar was born B. C. 97, the 672 year of the Olympiads—U. C. 654. Pompey takes Jerusalem B. C. 63. An eclipse occurs Oct. 27 U. C. 688.—Augustus Cæsar born B. C. 60—U. C. 691, year of Nabonassar, 687, and lives 77 years. Battle of Pharsalia, defeat, flight and death of Pompey, B. C. 48, lunar eclipse Jan. 18. First Julian year, consisting of 365 days and 6 hours, established by Julius Cæsar, begins the 25th of March B. C. 45, lunar eclipse Nov. 7th—U. C. 706. Julius Cæsar slain in the Senate House, Feb. 17 U. C. 710, (Goldsmith)—B. C. 41, aged 56 years. Herod Antipater appointed King of Judea by the Senate of Rome, B. C. 37—U. C. 714. He is confirmed in the kingdom at the death of Antigonus B. C. 34—U. C. 717, (Josephus). Augustus Cæsar declared Emperor and High Priest by the Senate B. C. 27, (Ree's Encyclopedia and Butler's Universal History). Famine in Judea 13th and 14th years of the reign of Herod, U. C. 729 and 730—B. C. 22 and 21. (Josephus.)

Conspiracy against the life of Augustus Cæsar formed and detected B. C. 15.—Marcus Agrippa divorces his wife and marries Julia, daughter of Augustus, B. C. 14; he dies in Campania, about B. C. 13. (His. of the World.) Horace the prince of lyric poets dies about B. C. 12—U. C. 739. Tiberius marries Julia, then the only child of Augustus, B. C. 9—U. C. 742. Roman census declares 4,233,000 inhabitants B. C. 8—U. C. 743, (Ree's Encyclopedia.) Saturninus appointed President of Syria B. C. 2—U. C. 749, (Josephus.) The temple of Janus shut the third time, and there is peace all over the world B. C. 1. John the Baptist is born, and Augustus issues a decree, that all the world shall be taxed: and Quintilius Varus, becomes President of Syria in the place of Saturninus, who is removed U. C. 750, year of the Olympiads 775. Joseph and Mary return to Bethlehem, preparatory to the enrolment. Matthias, the High Priest of the Jews, deposed by Herod the Great, and Joasar the son of Boethus, appointed in his stead, and 40 men burned alive by order of Herod, for removing his "golden eagle" from the temple; "and that night there was an eclipse of the moon." (Josephus.) This eclipse, which marks the last illness of Herod, (for he was sick at that time,) has been computed by Kepler and Petavius to have occurred March 13, U. C. 750. Jesus is born in Bethlehem, March 25th, the new year's day of the year of Rome, 751, the 27th year after the battle of Actium, the 41st year after the death of Julius Cæsar, and in the 60th year of the life of Augustus, era of Nabonassar, 751. A multitude of the heavenly hosts shout glory to God in the highest. They announce to the Shepherds of Judea a Saviour born this day "in the City of David." The Shepherds go in haste to Bethlehem and ascertain the facts; and return glorifying God for all that they had heard, and seen as it was told them. From the birth of Julius Cæsar to the birth of Jesus is a period of 97 years, and extends to A. D. 1—A. M. 4146, year of the Olympiads 776. Jesus is circumcised April 2, when Simeon and Anna utter those [illegible] prophecies contained in [illegible].

"The wise men came from the east to Jerusalem, and ask, where is he, that is born King of the Jews, for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him."

"When Herod heard this he was troubled and all Jerusalem with him."

"And when he had gathered the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born."

"And they said in Bethlehem, in the land of Judah; for thus it is written by the prophet," (Micah.)

"And thou Bethlehem in the land of Judah, art not the least among the princes of Judah; for out of thee shall come a governor that shall rule my people Israel."

"Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, demanded of them what time the Star appeared."

"And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said go and search diligently for the young Child, and, when you have found him bring me word that I may come and worship him also."

"And when they had heard the King, they departed, and lo the star which they had seen in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over the place where the young Child was."

"And when they saw the Star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy."

"And when they were come into the house, they saw the young Child, with Mary his mother, and fell down and worshiped him; and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh."

"And being warned of God that they should not return to Herod, they departed to their own country, another way."

"And when they were departed, behold the Angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream, saying, 'Arise and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word; for Herod will seek the young child, to destroy him.'"

"When he arose, he took the young child and his mother, by night, and departed into Egypt; and was there until the death of Herod.

"Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the Wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the Wise men."—Matt. 2d.

The idea has been suggested that because this madman slew all the children under two years of age, that Jesus must have been near that age at the flight into Egypt; but the obvious sense of the whole narration is plain, that he was but a very few months old at the time of the massacre of the children; his being called the "young child" so often carries the conviction that he was very young; not more than five or six months old at most, and perhaps not half that. It may be asked why it is said "according to the time, which he had diligently inquired of the Wise men." To this it may be answered, that as we cannot know what the Wise men told him, nor when the star first appeared to them, we may suppose they started as soon after the star appeared to them as they could prepare for their journey; and that this monster destroyed all under two years old, not only to wreak his vengeance on the Wise men by destroying their infant Savior, after they had come so far to worship him; but to rid himself of all competitors for the kingdom of Judea.

One object must have been to satiate his blood-thirsty appetite; else why did he destroy all the children of both sexes? for surely he could fear no rival among the female children of Bethlehem.

But his being so troubled at the announcement of the Wise men when they first inquired where he was who was born "King of the Jews," showed plainly that he was jealous that some rival power was about to supplant him.

It may be asked, how could Herod be so [illegible] of power during his last illness?

To this it may be replied, that he ordered his own son to be slain, only five days before his own death, lest he should [illegible]

The Seven Periods of Daniel's Vision of 2300 days: Dan. 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12th Chapters.

Continued.

I shall take the eclipse mentioned by Josephus, which Kepler says occurred on the 13th of March, U. C. 750, as a starting point, from near the birth of Christ, as that must have happened in the neighborhood of that event; and likewise of the death of Herod—and so suppose that Jesus was born on the 25th of March; the same March in which the eclipse occurred; but as the 25th of March is new year's day, it will be U. C. 751, the first day of the year; and as Josephus says that Philip reigned 37 years after his father Herod's death, and died in the 20th year of Tiberius, it follows that Augustus lived over 17 years after the birth of Jesus and the death of Herod the Great, Ant. B. 16, Chap. 5, Sec. 6, which establishes the fact that Augustus died U. C. 768, for if, as all historians agree, (especially Goldsmith and Bliss,) that Julius was slain in U. C. 710, Augustus' reign must have extended to U. C. 768, in order to allow him 57 years, 6 months and 2 days, as Josephus says he reigned that number of years: and if Augustus died in U. C. 768, it was A. D. 18; for if we commence the Christian era the 751st of Rome, the 1st day of the year, then in Aug. 19 U. C. 768, the time of Augustus' death, would be A. D. 18, that is the 18th current year after his birth, so that his birth was in the 41st year after the death of Julius, and 27th after the battle of Actium; which agrees with the chronology of Butler and Doddridge and others.

As to the death of Herod, it may be observed that Archbishop Usher and Mr Whiston place it in Nov., after the eclipse mentioned by Josephus; but many other writers think he died before the first passover, after the eclipse which Mr. Prince says was April 11th: but if Jesus was born March 25th, and circumcised April 2d, it would be rather a short time for the murder of the infants of Bethlehem. At present I feel inclined to adopt the opinion of Usher and Whiston, and place it in November, which will give ample time for the pilgrimage of "The Wise Men from the East" to worship the Infant Saviour, "The Flight of the Holy Family into Egypt," and for the monster to glut his rage and fury on the harmless, defenceless babes of Bethlehem.

That U. C. 751 is rightly assigned as the year of the birth of Christ is proved by the reign of Herod, for Josephus says he was just appointed King, by the Senate of Rome, when Calvinus and Pollio were Consuls, and Dio, a contemporary writer, says these were Consuls in the year of Rome, 714; and Prince says that Herod reigned to his 37th year, which added to 714, gives the 751st. These facts being settled as strongly as human authority can settle them, I shall now proceed to give a Table of Chronology, and to adjust the Eras to each other; but first give a brief rehearsal of the early patriarchal ages, from the Creation to the Flood, and from thence to the death of Eli; and in this part I shall follow Mr Bliss, believing that his "Anal. Sac. Chronology" gives the most accurate computations of these years of any chronologer I have ever yet met with, till he comes to the administration of Samuel, which he includes in the 450 years of the Judges: in this I must beg leave to differ from him, for although Samuel was both a Prophet and a Judge, and "judged Israel all the days of his life," still I think the 450 years were filled up at the death of Eli; for Paul says, Acts, 13: 20, "until Samuel, the Prophet, and afterwards;" he does not tell us how long afterwards, but leaves us to learn that from other parts of inspiration; which I think we can find in 1 Samuel, chapter 7, which is very convincing that Samuel reigned considerably over 20 years.

[Thus far, S. Bliss' Analysis.]

This period must have extended to the death of Eli; and Samuel succeeded him, and I think judged Israel 26 years.

The Ark of the Covenant, which was taken by the Philistines on the day of Eli's death, was not restored "to the house of Abinadab," till the end of 7 months; and it remained in the house of Abinadab twenty years, to "the day of mourning at Mizpeh," and after the overthrow of the Philistines, Samuel went in circuit, from year to year, to Bethel, and Gilgal, and Mizpeh, and judged Israel. [1 Samuel, Chap. 7.] All this was before Saul was anointed King; which proves that it is not unreasonable to assign to him, at least 26 years; which added to A. M. 3010, reaches to A. M. 3036.

Mr Bliss commences the reign of Saul at B. C. 1110, which I shall also adopt; and computes the following years to the first year of Cyrus, at 574 years, I think rightly.

From the commencement of the reign of Saul, to the time the temple of Solomon was dedicated, is a period of 91 years, and brings us to B. C. 1019, and reaches to A. M. 3127.

The Dedication, it appears, commenced in the 7th Jewish month, Tisri; the first day of the month,—Lev. 23: 24,—answering, in part, to our October, when the trumpets were sounded, and it was called "a memorial of blowing of trumpets."—(It may here be remarked that Josephus, in his "Jewish War" tells us that at sunset or eve before their Sabbath begins, the Priests, at least one of the course of Priests, stood beneath a covering, on a place built on one corner of the Temple, called "Pastophoria," and gave a signal with a trumpet, that the Sabbath had commenced; and the next eve they sounded again, to notify the people that the Sabbath was ended.) On the 10th day of the 7th month, expiatory offerings were made, and "the High Priest alone went into the Holiest of Holies," to make atonement for the sins of the people. At this time "the Ark of the Covenant" was carried in by the Priests, and set in the place prepared for it; and when the Temple was solemnly consecrated to God, Solomon held a feast, and all Israel, 14 days, and rejoicing greatly, after offering great and unparalleled offerings, returned to their tents with glad hearts.

From the dedication of the Temple to the first year of the first Olympiad, (which Prince says was restored by Iphitus, when "Varro's Historical age begins,") is a period of 243 years, and extends to B. C. 776,—A. M. 3370. This first year of the first Olympiads, which began July 19th, or as Prince says, July 23, B. C. 776, synchronizes with the 34th year of Uzziah, King of Judah, and is called an epoch of undoubted authority, by Newton, Cary, Prince, and others. From the 34th year of Uzziah, King of Judah, the time of the commencement of the Grecian Era, to the the Era of Rome, (which, according to Cato, Rollin, Helvicus, Tallent, Swan and Isaacson, began in the Year of the World 3253, that is, B. C. 751, March 25th,) is a period of 25 years, synchronizing with the 7th year of the reign of Jotham, and is the 26th year from the first Olympiads, and extends to B. C. 751,—A. M. 3395.

Ferguson records an eclipse, which occurred on Wednesday, May 23, B. C. 585. Mr Bliss mentions an eclipse B. C. 791, two years after the death of Jeroboam.—Another solar eclipse April 21st, B. C. 753, another solar July 5, B.C. 753. (Plutarch.) A lunar eclips occurred March 19, B. C. 721; another March 8, B.C. 720. An eclipse of the sun 715, May 26th, said to mark the death of Romulus. Lunar eclipse B. C. 621, April 21st, fifth year of Nabopolassar. Solar eclipse May 18th, B. C. 603, (Hales.) Another B. C. 547, Oct. 22, total, (Xenophon.)

From the Era of Rome to that of Nabonassar, there is a period of four years, B. C. 747, which synchronizes with the 11th year of Jotham, and extends to the Year of the World 3399. From the 11th year of Jotham to the 31st year of Manasseh, there is a period of 81 years to Manasseh's captivity, B. C. 666, which extends to the Year of the World 3480, and from the first year of the first Olym. 110. From the 31st year of Manasseh to the second year of Zedekiah, there is a period of 70 years, at the opening of the last Jubilee, which the Jews as a nation celebrated, before the captivity, which extends to B. C. 596,—A. M. 3550. From the 2d year of Zedekiah, to the 1st year of Cyrus, there is a period of 60 years, which extends to B. C. 536,—A. M. 3610 U. C. 215.

We have now come down to the reign of the Kingdom of Persia, and as this is an Era of eclipses, it will be expected that our tables will be consistent with the occurrence of these celestial characters.—Cyrus reigned 7 years, to B. C. 529,—A. M 3617, year of Nabonassar, 218. Josephus says, Cambyses reigned 6 years, and in that time he overthrew Egypt; and when he was come back, he died at Damascus; and the Magi obtained the kingdom for one year; but as he afterwards calls it nine years, to the second year of Darius, I shall call his reign seven years, which extends to B. C 522,—A. M. 3624.

A lunar eclipse occurred July 17, B. C. 523, the 7th year of Cambyses, recorded by Mr Bliss, to which is attached the name of Ptolemy. Darius Hystaspes, with the Magians, reigned 36 years, to B. C 486,—A. M. 3660. A lunar eclipse occurred Nov. 19th, B. C. 502, the 20th year of the personal reign of Darius; another April 25th, B. C. 491, 31st year of the personal reign of Darius Hystaspes, (Bliss' Analysis.) Xerxes succeeds Darius, and reigns 21 years, to B. C. 465.—A. M 3681. Solar eclipse B. C. 481, April 19th, marks the invasion of Greece, 295th year of the Olympiads. A solar eclipse occurred Oct. 2d, B. C. 480. Battle of Salamis, (Herodotus) year of Nabonassar, 267.—Another Feb. 13th, B. C. 478, close of Persian war, (Bliss Anal. Sac. Chron.) U. C. 273. Artaxerxes Longimanus succeeds Xerxes, and reigns 41 years, to B. C. 424,—A. M. 3721. In the 20th year of this king's reign, the last commandment, to restore and build Jerusalem, went forth from the palace of Shushan, B. C 446.—This decree was committed to Nehemiah, with a commission to constitute him Governor of Judea for 12 years, first, and afterwards renewed, and extended 49 years, to the 9th year of Artaxerxes Mnemon, as I think I shall be able to show from authority, which I derive mainly from the Bible and Josephus.

Artaxerxes Longimanus began to reign about the first of B. C. 466, and his 19th year consequently would end the last of B. C. 447, and the commission and decree were issued in the first Jewish month after; and he with an armed force proceeded to Jerusalem; and his book records his doings after he arrived there. Josephus says, "Nehemiah received an epistle from the King to the Governor of Syria, Phoenicia, and Samaria, wherein he ordered him to pay all due honours to Nehemiah, and to supply him with what he wanted for his building." "And when Nehemiah had come to Jerusalem, and delivered the epistle, he called the Jews together, and told them how God had assisted him in gaining this authority of the King, to raise up our walls, and to finish that which is wanting in the temple." He exhorted them to trust in God, and "to intermit building, neither night nor day, but to use all dilligence, and to hasten on the work now while we have this especial opportunity for it."

"When he had said this, he gave orders that the rulers should measure the wall and divide the work of it among the people, according to their villages and cities, as every ones ability should require."—And when he had dissolved the assembly, the Jews prepared for the work, and the part that Nehemiah took in it, and the privations and hardships that he suffered during those "troublous times," are amply recorded in his own book. In the 32d years of Artaxerxes Longimanus, Nehemiah returned to the court of Persia and obtained leave of the King to go again to Jerusalem; (Neh. 13: 7.) Says Josephus, "So when Nehemiah had done many other excellent things, and things worthy of commendation, in a glorious manner, he came to a great age, and then died." "He was of a good and righteous disposition, and very ambitious to make his own nation happy; " " and he hath left the walls of Jerusalem, as an eternal monument for himself." This is strong presumptive evidence, that Nehemiah's administration did continue 49 years, to the end of the first period of the vision, and that he died at Jerusalem. This extends to B. C. 398–7.

This is the time supposed by many that the Old Testament prophets, at least Malachi, ceased prophesying, though one of my Bibles dates the last chapter of Malachi B. C. 400, but the other dates B. C. 397.

Xerxes II. succeeded, and then Sodianus, who both reigned not quite a year, and then Darius Nothus, who, together with the former two, reigned 19 years, to B. C. 405—A. M. 3741. Darius Nothus began to reign about Aug. B. C. 424, and after reigning near 12 years he was succeeded by Artaxerxes Mnemon, in the ninth year of whose reign the first period of Daniel's vision was fulfilled. A solar eclipse occurred April 30 B. C. 463, which marks the revolt of Egypt from Persia, which, according to this chronology, occurred in the third year of the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus. A Solar eclipse is recorded, which happened Aug. 3 B. C. 431, the first year of the Peloponnesian war by Thucydides, quoted by Bliss.

Another bears the name of Thucydides which occurred March 22d B. C. 424, the 8th year of the war. Still another eclipse Aug. 27th B. C. 413, the 19th year of the war. (Thucydides.) A lunar eclipse occurred April 15th B. C. 406, the 26 year of the war. (Bliss' Anal.) A solar eclipse occurred Sept. 2 B. C. 404, the last year of the war. (Xenophon.) Thucydides was a mathematician, and a historian, and was born B. C. 470, he was a living witness to those eclipses which bear his name, and consequently his testimony is of the highest authority; and I find that his character as a historian is unimpeachable. He is mentioned by Sir Walter Raleigh as far preferable to Herodotus.

Mr Bliss quotes an article from his pen, of a treaty that was made in the 13th year of Darius Nothus. It was made in the winter of the 20th year of the Peloponnesian war, which began in the spring of B. C. 431, and consequently the 20th year in winter would be the beginning of B. C. 411, and the 337th year of the era of Nabonassar; and 336 and a part, and 410 and a part, added, gives 747 for the commencement of the era. The 20th year of the war began in the spring of B. C. 412, and Darius Nothus' 13th year began about Aug. B. C. 412, and both fall into B. C. 411, on the 4th of December—the Nabonassarian year having been reduced to a solar year—so that the following winter is in the 337th of the era.

This article from the pen of Thucydides, will adjust this chronology in full, and perfect harmony with what is called "the undoubted era of Nabonassar." Such a concurrence of events or dates, happening in any given year, carries the fullest conviction of its truth, and settles the fact to a demonstration, that our chronology is correct. We do not assume the title of Chronologist; but hope to be enabled from the best historians, to count up and adjust the years of the reigns of Kings in their proper places. When we find such a concurrence of events meeting in any given year, it gives us the fullest confidence that thus far we are right; and by following the eras we may learn how to fix other dates, where a definite number of years are recorded. But when we find historians who give different numbers of years to the reign of Kings, (as is often the case,) we must count up and adjust the years to the eras, and I know of no other alternative only to bring them together; and if they agree, we feel sure that we have arrived at the truth: if they do not agree, we must go over the ground again and take numbers from other historians, as their difference is only nominal, and continue to do so till they come right; and when that happens we shall certainly be conscious of it.

Josephus gives the number of High Priests that were appointed by Herod the Great and his successors, after the destruction of the Asamoneans: He says they were 28 up to the destruction of Jerusalem, and that the number of years from the death of Antigonus B. C. 34 to the final desolation of the city and temple, by Titus, was 107 years. This was when Herod was established in his kingdom, by the death of his rival; which reaches to A. D. 73. This I believe is correct, though it seems to have been overlooked by Chronologers; but Josephus could have neither interest nor predjudice to tempt him to misrepresent those years, and he was a living witness of the last 32 of them, and of the calamities of his people at that time. He was a candid historian, and certainly competent to obtain and give the most genuine information on all subjects relating to his own nation at that time, being a living witness. Xenophon mentions a solar eclipse B. C. 394, when the Lacedæmonians were defeated by Conon, Aug. 14th. The forementioned eclipses are all that I find recorded during the Persian Empire, till we arrive at the battle of Arbela, B. C. 331, when a lunar eclipse is recorded by Plutarch—said to have occurred eleven days before that battle; and I find none but what is consistent with, and even confirmatory, to this view of chronology.

From the death of Darius Nothus to the battle of Arbela, is a period of 74 years, and brings us down to B. C. 331—A. M. 3815. From the battle of Arbela to the birth of Julius Cæsar, there is a period of 234 years, and extends to B. C. 97—A. M. 4049. Julius Cæsar was born B. C. 97, the 672 year of the Olympiads—U. C. 654. Pompey takes Jerusalem B. C. 63. An eclipse occurs Oct. 27 U. C. 688.—Augustus Cæsar born B. C. 60—U. C. 691, year of Nabonassar, 687, and lives 77 years. Battle of Pharsalia, defeat, flight and death of Pompey, B. C. 48, lunar eclipse Jan. 18. First Julian year, consisting of 365 days and 6 hours, established by Julius Cæsar, begins the 25th of March B. C. 45, lunar eclipse Nov. 7th—U. C. 706. Julius Cæsar slain in the Senate House, Feb. 17 U. C. 710, (Goldsmith)—B. C. 41, aged 56 years. Herod Antipater appointed King of Judea by the Senate of Rome, B. C. 37—U. C. 714. He is confirmed in the kingdom at the death of Antigonus B. C. 34—U. C. 717, (Josephus). Augustus Cæsar declared Emperor and High Priest by the Senate B. C. 27, (Ree's Encyclopedia and Butler's Universal History). Famine in Judea 13th and 14th years of the reign of Herod, U. C. 729 and 730—B. C. 22 and 21. (Josephus.)

Conspiracy against the life of Augustus Cæsar formed and detected B. C. 15.—Marcus Agrippa divorces his wife and marries Julia, daughter of Augustus, B. C. 14; he dies in Campania, about B. C. 13. (His. of the World.) Horace the prince of lyric poets dies about B. C. 12—U. C. 739. Tiberius marries Julia, then the only child of Augustus, B. C. 9—U. C. 742. Roman census declares 4,233,000 inhabitants, B. C. 8—U. C. 743, (Ree's Encyclopedia.) Saturninus appointed President of Syria B. C. 2—U. C. 749, (Josephus.) The temple of Janus shut the third time, and there is peace all over the world B. C. 1. John the Baptist is born, and Augustus issues a decree, that all the world shall be taxed: and Quintilius Varus, becomes President of Syria in the place of Saturninus, who is removed U. C. 750, year of the Olympiads 775. Joseph and Mary return to Bethlehem, preparatory to the enrolment. Matthias, the High Priest of the Jews, deposed by Herod the Great, and Jonser the son of Boethus, appointed in his stead, and 40 men burned alive by order of Herod, for removing his "golden eagle" from the temple," "and that night there was an eclipse of the moon." (Josephus.) This eclipse, which marks the last illness of Herod, (for he was sick at that time,) has been computed by Kepler and Petavius to have occurred March 13, U. C. 750. Jesus is born in Bethlehem, March 25th, the new year's day of the year of Rome, 751, the 27th year after the battle of Actium, the 41st year after the death of Julius Cæsar, and in the 60th year of the life of Augustus, era of Nabonassar, 751. A multitude of the heavenly hosts shout glory to God in the highest. They announce to the Shepherds of Judea a Saviour born this day "in the City of David." The Shepherds go in haste to Bethlehem and ascertain the facts; and return glorifying God for all that they had heard, and seen as it was told them. From the birth of Julius Cæsar to the birth of Jesus is a period of 97 years, and extends to A. D. 1—A. M. 4146, year of the Olympiads 776. Jesus is circumcised April 2, when Simeon and Anna utter those valedictory prophecies contained in [illegible].

"The wise men came from the east to Jerusalem, and ask, where is he that is born King of the Jews, for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him."

"When Herod heard this he was troubled and all Jerusalem with him."

"And when he had gathered the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born."

"And they said in Bethlehem, in the land of Judah; for thus it is written by the prophet," (Micah.)

"And thou Bethlehem in the land of Judah, art not the least among the princes of Judah; for out of thee shall come a governor that shall rule my people Israel."

"Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, demanded of them what time the Star appeared."

"And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said go and search diligently for the young Child, and, when you have found him bring me word that I may come and worship him also."

"And when they had heard the King, they departed, and lo the star which they had seen in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over the place where the young Child was."

"And when they saw the Star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy."

"And when they were come into the house, they saw the young Child, with Mary his mother, and fell down and worshiped him; and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh."

"And being warned of God that they should not return to Herod, they departed to their own country, another way."

"And when they were departed, behold the Angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream, saying, 'Arise and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word; for Herod will seek the young child, to destroy him.'"

"When he arose, he took the young child and his mother, by night, and departed into Egypt; and was there until the death of Herod.

"Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the Wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the Wise men."—Matt. 2d.

The idea has been suggested that because this madman slew all the children under two years of age, that Jesus must have been near that age at the flight into Egypt; but the obvious sense of the whole narration is plain, that he was but a very few months old at the time of the massacre of the children; his being called the "young child" so often carries the conviction that he was very young; not more than five or six months old at most, and perhaps not half that. It may be asked why it is said "according to the time, which he had diligently inquired of the Wise men?" To this it may be answered, that as we cannot know what the Wise men told him, nor when the star first appeared to them, we may suppose they started as soon after the star appeared to them as they could prepare for their journey; and that this monster destroyed all under two years old, not only to wreak his vengeance on the Wise men by destroying their infant Savior, after they had come so far to worship him, but to rid himself of all competitors for the kingdom of Judea.

One object must have been to satiate his blood-thirsty appetite; else why did he destroy all the children of both sexes? for surely he could fear no rival among the female children of Bethlehem.

But his being so troubled at the announcement of the Wise men when they first inquired where he was who was born "King of the Jews," showed plainly that he was jealous that some rival power was about to supplant him.

It may be asked, how could Herod be so [illegible]

To this it may be replied, that he [illegible] ed his own son to be slain [illegible] before his own death, lest he should [illegible]

der him, and usurp the kingdom—and this while he had him bound and in prison—notwithstanding he had, long before that, appointed him his successor, and likewise associated him with himself in the government of Judea. (Josephus.)

Some suppose that Herod died before the first Passover, after the eclipse mentioned by Josephus; but Usher and Whiston say it was not before the first Passover, which was April 11, but in November, before the second Passover, which Mr. Whiston says was "not one month, but 13 after the eclipse"; and there were so many things which Josephus says he did, relating how much better he was after his embassy had arrived from Rome; and how he went to Jericho, Jordan and Jerusalem, and visited the hot springs, and baths Callirhoe, besides many acts of blood, which Raleigh says he committed, that it must have taken up the time of several months; so that I believe with Usher and Whiston, that he died in November, after the eclipse, which of course, according to the foregoing premises, will be U. C. 751, A. D. 1.

His disease was of a strange and dreadful kind; an inward burning consumption, with an insatiable appetite; ulcerated bowels, and great melancholy: but by all his sufferings he lost none of his spite against his fellow-men; and even imprisoned some of the noble families of the Jews, and ordered that they should all be slain, and one out of each of all the families of the Jews besides, as soon as the breath left his body. Thus died Herod Antipater, in his 72d year, after a long life of cruelty and impiety. He was self-styled the great, and he certainly was a great—barbarian and monster, and a most loathsome spectacle to behold, before he left the world.

His last commands were not obeyed; and, though destitute of mourners, he had a splendid funeral, which Mr. Whiston thinks it would take at least 25 days to celebrate; and left his son Archelaus his successor in Judea; Herod Antipas, another son, tetrarch of all Galilee, and Philip, another son, tetrarch of Traconitis and several other provinces.

Thus it appears to be proved to a demonstration that the infants of Bethlehem were slain in course of the spring or summer, after the eclipse, and there is no other view of the subject that appears rational or probable; and though Herod was sick during all that summer, he was not so sick but that he could move about from place to place, and, even almost to his last [illegible] cruelty which he had exercised all his life; as appears by the bloody execution of his son Antipater, only five days before himself departed this life. (Josephus.)

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, FEBRUARY 22, 1854.

Tarrying of the Vision.—No. 4.

Having attempted to show the closing and commencing termini of the parable, the next object is to inquire whether there has been any thing in the history of the Church between the two points corresponding to the incidents of the parable. Has there been any delay in relation to the fulfilment of the promise? Have the expectations of the Church been disappointed? All Adventists will exclaim with one voice, yes. We "went forth" by faith in '43 and 4 but the Savior did not make His appearance in the clouds of heaven in all the radiant glories of heaven's King, and attended with the shining retinue of angelic hosts as we anticipated. We did not obtain the reward and the crown of glory, for which our hearts panted—we did not on wings of love and joy bound away into the aerial realms to meet our King in His beauty—we did not hear those shouts and congratulations—those salutations and enchanting songs which we expected to hear reverberating through the vault of heaven. Far otherwise. The days were prolonged—every vision had apparently failed—His chariot wheels delayed, and we were left to meet the scoffs and jeers of a cold-hearted Church and contemptuous world. O the bitterness of that disappointment! Well might it be said, "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick."

"While the bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept." The idea conveyed by the Greek is they all became drowsy and fell asleep. Now if we went forth in the light that shone from the Oracles on time—if time was the grand moving principle that stirred the Advent host to take their position before the world and identify themselves as a class of believers in the immediate coming of Christ, then it is evident that when that which gave a vitality to our faith, and a moral energy to our movement, that which operated as a propelling power to move the ship of Zion—when that ceased to operate, a sluggishness and inaction would be the necessary result—if the propelling power became dormant, activity would cease, and a feeling aptly compared to drowsiness would ensue—the alert, wakeful state of the Church was exchanged for a state of sleepiness and inaction in relation to the immediate coming.

The coming of Christ was not a living reality before their eyes as it had been before, a dimness of vision came on, drowsiness, stupor, insensibility on the subject, compared with their feelings in the past, ensued.

But this slumber, thank God, has been broken. The virgins have been aroused by the proclamation of the Redeemer's coming in 1854, they are startled from their slumbers, and a quickening faith has sprung up again on the subject—their ideas are not dreamy, vague, indefinite as in the tarrying time. A vivid light again bursts from the oracles, a practical power accompanies the word to their hearts, and they are moved again to energetic action in carrying out their faith in their lives, and proclaiming the soul-stirring doctrine to the world. They are begotten again unto a lively hope by a resurrection, as it were, of the Advent faith, and the coming of their Redeemer is once more a vital truth, a living reality, like a visible and tangible substance before their eyes.

What a change has come over the Advent ranks within the year past! After their severe and heart-sickening disappointment in relation to time, it seemed hardly within the compass of possibilities that the Church should in the present generation be rallied again on the subject of time. To accomplish a work so morally impossible must require the effort of a hand divine. If ever the impress of divinity was enstamped upon any movement in the Church, it seems to me, it was on the midnight cry. God's mighty arm has moved the wheels, or human instrumentality must have failed.

The effort to arouse the virgins again has been made under circumstances most unfavorable to success; but, notwithstanding efforts to counteract and destroy the influence of the doctrine, the electric power of the truth has been felt far and wide—the proclamation has been attended with the power and demonstration of the spirit, and the Church is taking her position on the midnight cry, as presented in the Parable. We cannot otherwise than believe, that we are now fulfilling the last items of the Parable, and going out by faith to meet the bridegroom. If we are not now filling up the remaining jots and tittles, it seems evident we have not yet entered into the pathway of the virgins; and if we have not commenced on the fulfillment of the Parable, we have not had the message of the flying angel.—Rev. 14: 6, 7. I believe, however, that the Church has in the main been following the pillar of light that leads to Canaan. That pillar of fire by night, and of a cloud by day, will never desert the hosts that are on the march for the promised land. May the Lord help us to be steadfast in the faith, constant in our obedience, and persevering to the end, that when the bridegroom comes we may be found among those "who are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb"—that we may sit at the royal banquet—at the coronation of the king's son, in company with those who shall return to Zion, with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads, who shall obtain joy and gladness, and from whom sorrow and sighing shall forever flee away.

☞ There is an increasing desire all over the land to hear on the subject of the coming of the Lord. The "Macedonian cry" comes from every quarter. Truly the harvest is great, but the laborers are few. God's spirit seems to be moving the people to hear "the last call of mercy;" and in many places sinners are turning from the error of their ways to serve the living and true God. Truly we are living in an important period of time, when every possible effort should be made, in order to bring some more to a knowledge of the truth. May God enable us all to realize the importance of improving every moment of time that is still allotted for us to work in, for the benefit of our fellow men, for the last hour of time will soon come and the destiny of all men be sealed forever.

☞ Many brethren have written to us for the back numbers of the paper; but we are sorry to inform them that we are all out, excepting about 150 copies of No. 2. The demand is so great for the Crisis that we shall issue 8000 copies this week, and shall continue for the present to issue that number, and more as may be needed or called for.

The Coming of Christ.

Time is closing—Jesus will come;
Signs are fulfilling—earth's pillars groan;
Hark! hear, the trumpet calls, come home,
See earth reeling to her final doom!

See slumbering millions rise from the earth;
Christ calls his children from South to North;
Come home, O my people, time is no more;
I've washed your robes white—your conflicts are o'er.

Hasting to see thee, my soul would arise
To meet my Saviour in yonder skies,
With all the ransomed who have gone before,
There I shall greet them on that peaceful shore

O there'll be glory, joy, peace and love,
Nothing to harm you in that blest world above.
O let us be faithful and we'll be blest,
When Jesus calls us to eternal rest.

European Affairs.

The news by the latest arrivals has been of intense and thrilling interest. While reading the intelligence I could but feel the power of the approaching crisis like electric shocks thrilling through every nerve and fibre of the soul. The dark portentous cloud, that has so long been impending over Europe, is about bursting, and soon we expect the four winds (the entire winds of heaven) will be let loose and rush in fury and desolation over the earth. O how can any one stand and look with indifference on the tremendous scenes that are beginning to transpire? "Blessed are your eyes," says Jesus, "for they see." We have by faith long seen the coming storm even before these movements actually commenced; now it seems that all must see and understand; but alas! "the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand."

Blessed are the Pure in Heart. To be pure is to be separate from all extraneous matter, clear; free from mixture, free from moral defilement; without spot,—unsullied, uncorrupt,—not debased by moral turpitude, holy, genuine, real, true, unadulterated, separate from everything foreign; free from guilt; not vitiated with improper or corrupt words or phrases; chaste; free from vice; clean and unpolluted.

The St Petersburg correspondent of the National Zeitung, writing from that city under date of the 16th inst., says that,— "Judging by the aspect of the Court during the Christmas festivities, as well as the expression of the Emperor's countenance, unfavorable news must have lately arrived. The firm attitude of the Western Powers has compelled Russia to take steps which indicates decisive resolutions. In anticipation of an attack upon the Baltic, an ukase has just been published summoning the crews that had received indefinite leave of absence."

The ukase is dated Dec. 23 (Jan 4), and fixes March 15 (27) as the latest period for them all to be at their posts.—Their concentration has commenced already at Cronstadt, whence they are being draughted off to Revel and Sweborg.

Poor Italy!—The Clergy of the Roman States, including monks and nuns, number sixty thousand. Their united income amounts to ten and a half millions of dollars, annually. The population of the Roman States is about equal to that of the State of New-York. If the aims and objects of the Romish clergy in the United States could be realized, we should be blessed in a like manner here.

European Affairs.

By the arrival of the America we have three days later news. The following are the most interesting items:

Russia and Turkey.—The London Shipping and Mercantile Gazette of the 30th ult. says:

"Telegraphic despatches from Bucharest and Belgrade allude to rumors of a collision having taken place in the Black Sea, off Batoum; but the despatches from Constantinople do not allude to such an occurrene, nor was anything known of it at the Turkish Embassy or Paris last evening.

The Liverpool Times of the 31st. says:

"There is no later news from the Eastern War. There is no doubt that the reply of the French and English governments to the last Russian Note is of a firm and decided character.

"An authentic private letter from Bucharest, of the 13th., states that the advance guard of Osten Sackro arrived at Bucharest on the 4th, and the main body on the 11th. The soldiers were in miserable condition, having been forced to march 50 days over the worst roads, under pelting rain. The mortality was enormous in every regiment. The regiment is not expected before the 20th.

"The position of the troops was rendered worse by the order received to continue their march to Kalafat, after a rest of only three days. General Gortschakoff, having received his official instructions from St. Petersburg, and sent forward his heavy artillery, was preparing to leave Bucharest for Wallachia. The campaign had not assumed a favorable appearance, and it was generally believed that Gortschakoff would not have undertaken the proposed operations had he not had orders to do so from the highest authority. Numerous wagon loads of wounded troops arrived at Krajova. There are fresh insurrections among the Wallachian population, notwithstanding that the Russian General had shot several persons taken with arms fighting for the Sultan, who is their legitimate sovereign. The five Turkish transports have returned, having successfully landed their troops, stores, &c. at Batoum. No Russian vessels have been seen. The fleets are at Sinope."

Letters from St. Petersburg, of Jan. 20, were of a warlike tenor. Extreme measures, it was said, had been resolved upon if the explanation of the Western powers should not be satisfactory

The armaments throughout the whole empire surpass all belief. The organization of all the reserve battalions has been ordered. We learn from Warsaw, under date of the 20th that the 1st corps d'armee of infantry, commanded by General Paniutin, received on the 6th orders to hold itself in readiness to leave. The army of occupation of the kingdom of Poland is at present 43,000 strong, and the garrisons are occupied by an additional force of 24,000 men.

A despatch from Krajova of the 24th Jan states that skirmishes were taking place daily at Rahowa Islas and Tarnul. A despatch from Bucharest, also of the 24th, states that 45,000 Russians were concentrated around Kalafat, and that a great battle was expected there shortly.—[Previous advices stated that the attack on Kalafat was definitely fixed for the 19th Jan., the festival, according to the Russian calendar, of St. John the Baptist. The Russian army, it was said, was to march against the Turks immediately after the celebration of the festival, with a cross at their head, and while yet under the influence of religious fanaticism.]

The London Shipping Gazette says that the following despatch from Galatz, if true, at once puts an end to English neutrality:

"English merchantmen have been chartered to convey Turkish troops to Batoum This is authentic."

Active preparations for the approaching crisis are going on at all the naval depots in England. Several vessels of war intended for the Australian Seas, have been ordered to the Mediterranean.

Paris, Sunday Evening, Jan 29.—A decree calls into active service all the young disposable soldiers of the second portion of the contingent of the class of 1851, to fill up the gaps produced by the discharge of old soldiers of the special corps.

Italy.—There are alarming reports from the Roman States. Famine prevails in several of the legations, and tumults have occurred in consequence.

Greece.—A telegraphic despatch from Corfu to Jan. 22 states that the dearness of food was increasing, and that famine was apprehended.

Additional News.—By the Canada we have 4 days later news than that brought by the America. The Canada sailed from Liverpool, Feb. 4, arriving at Halifax on the 16th. The news is ominous of war.

Great Britain.—Parliament was opened on the 31st ult. in the presence of an unusual crowd. Her Majesty was much cheered, but Prince Albert was occasionally hissed, on their way to the House. The Turkish Minister and several Turks who were in the crowd were loudly cheered.

The following is an extract of the Queen's speech delivered on the occasion:—

My Lords and Gentlemen:—I am always happy to meet you in Parliament, and on the present occasion it is with peculiar satisfaction that I recur to your assistance and advice. The hopes which I expressed at the close of the last session, that a speedy settlement would be effected of the difficulties existing between Russia and the Ottoman Porte have not been realized, and I regret to say that a state of warfare has ensued.

I have continued to act in cordial cooperation with the Emperor of the French, and my endeavors in conjunction with my allies to preserve and to restore peace between the contending parties, and although hitherto unsuccessful, have been unremitting. I will not fail to persevere in these endeavors, but as the continuance of the war may deeply affect the interests of this country and of Europe, I think it requisite to make a further augmentation of my naval and military forces, with the view of supporting my representatives, and of more effectually contributing to the restoration of peace.

France.—A Council was held at the Tuileries, on the 30th, upon the question of sending an expeditionary force to Turkey, which was fully discussed. It is proposed to send 80,000 men, in four bodies under the command of Generals Cawrobut, MacMahon, Bellissier and Bousquet. England will send only a small force, but they will pay half the expense.

Prince Napoleon has been sent to the Court of Belgium, it is reported to impress upon the king the necessity of acting firmly with the allies against Russia, as Belgium cannot maintain her neutrality without incurring the displeasure of France. The Prince will go on a similar mission to Prussia and Germany.

Italy. French influence is increasing in Naples. Great uneasiness exists throughout Northern Italy. An outbreak is far from improbable. A pontificial decree extends to April next the permission to import breadstuffs into the Roman States.—Also gives a forced currency to Roman treasury bonds.

Switzerland. The political excitement exists in the Canton of Zurich. Military precautions are taken.

Prussia. The Prussian Government has not yet spoken, but the crown Prince is reported to have declared strongly in a council of state the necessity of siding with the Western Powers.

Sweden. The temper of the people is increasingly hostile to Russia. The Chambers granted with enthusiasm all extra supplies required to put the country in a state of defence.

Austria. Prince Orloff's interview with the Emperor was brief—it is not known how he succeeded. The people appear more in favor of a western alliance. The concentration of Austrian troops goes on in Romagna.

The War in the East. The answer from Great Britain and France to the Russian inquiries respecting the entry of the fleet, was delivered February 1st, to the Ministers at Paris and London. The terms of the reply did not transpire, but as they could not have differed from the communication already addressed verbally by Sir Hamilton Seymour for Great Britain, and M. Castlebac for France, to the Cabinet of St. Petersburg, it was considered that the Czar's instructions left his Ministers no alternative but to leave London and Paris, although it might not be for some days.

The destinies of Europe are now pending on the decision of Prussia and Austria.

Orders are understood to be sent to the British and French Ambassadors at St Petersburg to demand their passports.

Count Orloff's mission to Vienna is said to be to ask permission for a Russian force to pass through Hungary. It is further reported that if Count Orloff fails, the Czar will himself visit Berlin and Vienna, to use his influence with those courts. No symptoms are apparent that he will yield.

On the Danube, although abstaining from great operations, the Turks allow the Russians no rest. Fighting had occurred at Giurgevo, near Oltenitza, near Kalaresch, Silistria, Turtukai, Matschin, Palanka, Rahodia, Islay, Tornou, &c., &c.

On the 25th there was no change in the state of affairs at Kalafat.

Latest from Vienna. It is said that the Russian Minister has withdrawn from Paris, and that the London Minister was to leave on the day subsequent to the sailing of the Canada.

The English government has sent some small steamers to take soundings at the entrance of the Baltic.

Vienna, Feb. 2. Count Buol has drawn out a declaration of neutrality with a strong leaning towards the views of the western powers, and has given this to Count Orloff as a final answer. Orloff's mission, therefore, has failed. The Czar's proposals were to form a defensive league with all the German powers, and if the western powers attack any one thereof, Russia would make common cause; also would not conclude any peace without consulting the interests of the German powers. The German powers, through Austria, refuse to accede to the proposition. Russia is therefore isolated.

The Western powers are immediately to demand the evacuation of the principalities, and will compel it forthwith.

The Russian Minister at London has paid a final formal visit to the foreign department.

LATER AND HIGHLY IMPORTANT.

Later from Europe.—War Inevitable!—The Baltic arrived at New York on Sunday night, with Liverpool dates to the 8th inst., four days subsequent to our last advices. The cotton trade was good, and provisions had declined slightly in their prices. We have reliable information of the rejection of the Czar's proposals by the allied powers, of the final departure of the Russian ministers at Paris and London, of the utter inevitability of a general European war. The farce of diplomacy has ended, and negotiation has been finally abandoned. France and England are making the most active preparations for war, and have instructed their ministers at St. Petersburg to withdraw immediately. In fact there is a fife-and-drum aspect over all our news. The combined fleets were at Beicos Bay. All the rumors of the ill success of Count Orloff's mission are now confirmed. It is not likely that he will prolong his stay, but will, it is said, leave directly for St. Petersburg; foreseeing the same rebuff at Berlin, he will refrain from visiting that capital.

It is said that the Servian government, yielding to the suggestion of the Russian Consulate at Belgrade, will refuse to accept the two firmans of the Sultan, unless Russia gives her consent.

Russia. It is said that the Emperor, who is fully aware of the position in which he is placed, will endeavor to avoid a general conflagration if he can only preserve his honor and his rights. The influence of Count Nesselrode is again in the ascendant. It is said the Czar is about to write an autograph letter to the Queen of England, in which he will endeavor to prove that he has not been the aggressor.—An imperial ukase confirms the summons to arms of all reserves as well as the soldiers on furlough.

It is stated as a positive fact that several of the Cunard steamers are taken up by the government to carry troops to Constantinople. 6000 men go from England, others will be taken up from the different stations. About 10,000 soldiers will soon be collected to form part of the first expedition. There is no doubt a brigade of guards will form part of the expedition.—The 46th Regiment, that was under orders for Australia, leaving all the old soldiers at home whose time of services would have expired in a few years, is now directed to hold itself in readiness for foreign service; taking all the best men and leaving all young soldiers and recruits at home.

On the 27th of January, six ships again convoyed a Turkish steamer into the Black Sea.—The Russian fleet is understood to be concentrated at Kaffa. A private letter says that the return of the allied fleets was in consequence of a scarcity of provisions at Sinope.

Admiral Chads is appointed to the command of one division of the Baltic fleet. The command in chief is not yet given, but the name of Admiral Seymour as chief, with Sir Charles Napier and Lord Dundonald under him, are mentioned.

The combined fleets returned to their anchorage off Constantinople on the 22d, without having seen a single Russian ship-of-war during a three weeks' cruise. The steamer Niger, which had been sent to countermand the return of the fleets, met them close to the Bosphorus. Fresh troops and ammunition for the army of Asia would sail in a few days, under the escort of the allies.

England. It is understood that four vessels originally taken up by the government to convey troops from Ireland to Malta and from thence to the West Indies, have been taken up on monthly charters, so that they may be available to proceed to any point on the shortest notice.

France. In most departments of the military service, preparations are ordered to continue night and day. Immense orders for ammunition, arms, and accoutrements, are being executed with all haste, and the assembling, organizing, and inspecting of troops goes on ceaselessly.

General Pellisier is selecting 20,000 picked men of the army of Africa, and 80,000 is set down as the French contingent. Great activity had also prevailed in the naval department.

At Brest, four sailing ships will be ready in a short time, and two steamers are only awaiting their engines. Levies of seamen arrived from all parts. The ocean squadron will soon be ready to sail, and the squadron of reserve be in a condition to reinforce it if necessary.

At Toulon, the ships of the line Trident and Ville de Marseilles have been put in commission, and in about six weeks three other sail of the line and a sixty gun frigate will be ready for active service. Orders are given to the French Atlantic squadron to proceed to Toulon.

Orders were recently given by the French Government for three million cannon balls.

Austria. The Austrian government is negotiating for the sale of the State Railroad property, valued at two hundred millions of florins.

The army in Bohemia has not yet moved towards the Servian frontier, and doubts are entertained in some quarters, whether it will be moved at present.

Prussia. At Berlin, February 3d, it was generally believed that the attitude taken by Prussia would prevent Count Orloff from visiting that capital.

Turkey. Omar Pacha had effected a most important movement, having crossed the Danube with 50,000 men, and divided the Russian army, the right wing of which is at Krajova, the left at Galatz, and the centre at Bucharest. Omar Pacha crossed in person at Oltenitza, and at last accounts was only two days' distance from Bucharest, where the Russian force is weak.

A despatch received at the Turkish Embasy indicates preparations for an attack by the Turks on Bucharest.

A Greek conspiracy has been discovered at Widdin.

We present to our readers the following interesting discussion on the Eastern question in the British Parliament.

The Earl of Ellenborough had been always of opinion that this question with Russia could be solved in no way but by war, and he hoped that Ministers would not be deluded by any circumstance into relaxing their preparations for that contingency. He considered that Britain is at the commencement of one of the most formidable wars in which she has ever engaged. He acquitted the country of the guilt of that war, but he could not acquit Ministers if they failed to prepare for a great and arduous struggle. In particular, were they prepared to present a fleet of sufficient force in the Baltic immediately on the breaking up of the ice?

The Marquis of Clanricarde agreed with Lord Ellenborough in believing that the war would be a momentous one, but he could not quite say that ministers were wholly irresponsible for this coming war. Although they had acted with ability, he believed that frequently they had not said the right thing at the right time, and as it was evident, both that the discussion of the matter must have a respective character, and that the present position of affairs could not continue long, he would renew his motion that day week.

Earl Fitzwilliam entirely agreed that the present state of affairs could not continue long. Whether the country, was fully aware of the tremendous character of the conflict in which it is about to engage, he would not stop to discuss, but he would say that there never was a war in which the people would heartily support the Government.

Lord Beaumont complained that the information given by Lord Clarendon was meagre. He would therefore ask whether instructions have been sent for the withdrawal of the British Ambassador from St. Petersburg, and for stopping further negotiations there?

The Earl of Clarendon replied that he was sorry Lord Beaumont thought his information meagre, or that he has held out hopes and expectations that French negotiations may be entered into, and that peace may be preserved. He (Clarendon) held out no such hopes. He had already said that negotiations have been brought to a close at Vienna, that Russia's new proposal could not be transmitted to Constantinople—and there was an end of them; and he had no reason to believe that fresh negotiations on the subject would be renewed. He was unable to state why Count Orloff prolonged his stay in Vienna after having executed his mission relating to the treaties between Austria and Russia.

With respect to the question whether the British Minister is withdrawn from St. Petersburg, he would say that since Baron Brunow's retirement there had not been time to do more than communicate with the French Government, but to-morrow, 7th, instructions would be sent by France and England to Gen. Castlebojeic and Sir George Seymour, their Ministers at St. Petersburg, which will place them on exactly the same footing as the Russian Ministers at Paris and London have adopted; and diplomatic intercourse between the two countries and Russia will be suspended.

This statement by the Government created much excitement in the House.

The Trouble in Europe.

A European letter writer expresses the opinion that the prospect for Europe is, at the present time, gloomy in the extreme. An unusually cold and dreary winter, aggravated by greatly deficient crops, which have sent food up to famine prices; and then the cholera, like a grim fiend, is prowling all over the nations, treading close upon the heel of gaunt famine, and intensifying miseries that overflowed before. Added to this is the apprehension of a terrible and protracted general war, settling down, like a heavy nightmare, upon the people.

In times of prosperity and tranquility, men often fail to discern the hand of Providence in the blessings which surround them, and are in the habit of attributing their success to their own sagacity and power. When misfortunes gather thick and fast upon them, even then, many fail to discern the hand that smites them, sometimes in mercy and sometimes in judgment. It seems to us, however, that no man, who looks philosophically upon the history of the world for the last ten years, can fail to be convinced, that all the efforts of men, even in the highest places of power, do in reality have but little effect in controlling the destinies of the world. There are so many sudden and unexpected contingencies—such a continual changing of times and circumstances, and such a play at cross purposes, among the great and mighty men of the earth, that we find the conviction irresistible, that they are all the instruments of some power which, though invisible, is manifestly present, and can be clearly traced in its influences on events.

The history of the last ten years has been thrillingly eventful, and portentous of great changes in the condition of society. Whether it is for a forward movement in melioration or a retrograde step in disorder and anarchy, we cannot yet tell.—The conservative looks forward with mistrust, and the radical with hope, while the philosophic investigator confesses the hand of God, and earnestly prays that it may be in mercy and not in anger, towards the multitudes of the race who are quivering before the horrors of famine and pestilence, and who to these evils seem now about to be offered up in hecatombs of bloody sacrifices upon the altars of the demon of war.

When this grand drama of the age which has been progressing for several years, and seems now verging towards its consummation, has been played out, it will form one of the most important chapters in the pages of history. We are not aware of the momentous character of the era in which we live, and of the consequences which impend upon the movements of the times, and the little knowledge which even the wisest of men possess at any time of the final issue of the movements in which they are engaged, and which often result contrary to their desires and their efforts which is of itself a proof that the destiny of the world is in mightier hands than those of men.

The present troublous times first broke upon the world in the midst of a long season of prosperity. For a whole generation the melioration of the world had been gradually but steadily progressing. Men had just begun to believe, that the reign of peace was to prevail evermore, that the industrial arts were to pervade the world, and prosperity, happiness and knowledge to reach down their protecting hands into the lowest gradations of the social system. Kings and Emperors and all the rulers of the nations, great and small, were taking part in the meliorating process, and countenanced all the efforts making for the promotion of education, the enlightening of the race, and the development of industrial resources. Even the stern rigor of the Roman church, which has held the tightest and the strongest curb rein upon the steeds of progress, began to relax.—Insensibly and in spite of itself it was melting like the ice bound streams of winter before the genial influences of a vernal sun. The Pope, himself, most unexpectedly and to the marvel of the world, stepped forth and assumed the lead in reform.

But in the midst of these bright and auspicious omens, dark and lowering clouds, rose upon the horizon, and they have not for a moment since ceased to gather blackness, and to come crowding on thick and fast over the heads of an astonished and helpless people, until they have now well nigh reached the zenith, and the rolling of the thunder and the flash of the lightning give warning of a coming strife of the elements such as this generation has never witnessed.

From the hour when the famine in Ireland and the scarcity which pervaded all western Europe, in consequence of the failure of the potato harvest, commenced, a series of unpropitious and unfortunate events has rapidly fallen upon Europe.—The reaction in France and Italy consequent upon the premature and injudicious movements, (to call them by the mildest names) of those who assumed to lead in the cause of reform, struck even more deadly blows to the happiness of the people, and to all their bright prospects of melioration and improvement than even famine and pestilence could have done.

At the present moment the crisis is impending, and where the blows will most heavily fall and who will be crushed by them, none can conjecture. The nations have been impelled towards war just as birds have been fabled to be drawn by the fascinations of a deadly serpent within reach of its poisonous fangs. The monster sits still, with its keen eye placed upon them, while the victims are passing around it in constantly narrowing circles, conscious of their impending fate, but with no power of volition to turn back and escape. It is a strange and horrible dream which seems to have settled over the nations of Europe, and fastened alike upon rulers and people. The people of each nation, who are to suffer the most severe privations by it, are all clamorous to be led on to the slaughter, and writers and orators speculate upon it with a coolness which evinces that they are completely blinded to its horrible and demoralizing results.

Europe once in arms, and infuriated by the shedding of blood, no man can foresee the end. The accident of a moment may change the destinies of empires, and produce new combinations, which shall decide the fate of the world. The death of a sovereign, the decision of a battle, a thousand unknown and hourly changing events will be constantly exerting an influence which cannot be foreseen.—[Newburyport Her.

We take the following from the London Times:

"KRAJOVA, Jan. 18.

"The places already so often mentioned by me, as also Rudari, Giubega, Galicea, Pojana, which lay in the oblong where the series of battles took place, are now nothing but ruins steeped in blood. The most miserable hut on the plain was made to serve as a position either for defence or attack. Most of the inhabitants fled before the engagement began, leaving their winter stores to the mercy of the combatants; many, however, were taken by surprise, and unfortunately lost their lives in the tumult of war. The Russian regiments which suffered most were those called Tobolsk, commanded by Colonel Baumgarten, who was slightly wounded on the 6th, and Odessa. Of the first regiment six officers were killed and 11 wounded. The other, which hastened to the assistance of the regiment Tobolsk on the 6th, was engaged on the 7th, and again on the 8th, when it suffered most. On the 6th it lost two commanders of battalions, and on the 8th the other two. Prince Gortschakoff is inspecting the positions of the different corps operating in this neighborhood, and when he has completed his task a great council of war is to be held at Radovan, on the resolution of which will depend the further operations against Kalafat. Yesterday news arrived from the Romanater district that the Turks had crossed the Danube in force, and were endeavoring to fortify themselves at Islass and Turnu. Islass is on the right and Turnu on the left bank of the Aluta.

"According to the billet lists of the magistracy of the place, 35,000 Russians had, up to 5 o'clock this evening, reached Krajova and marched forward. If some detachments have gone to Karakal, others which did not pass through Krajova, but between that town and Karakal, have joined the corps operating against Kalafat.—As during the engagements near Citate 4,000 men arrived, and 4,000 more are to follow Prince Gortschakoff, the army in Lesser Wallachia will nominally amount to 43,500, but from this number must be deducted more than 4,000 men who fell during the five days's battle, and 1,500 lost in the former rencontres and skirmishes, and by sickness. Thus the army which has to act against Kalafat may be rather more than 36,000 strong.

The communications of the Wallachian correspondent of the Medical Journal are always welcome, as they never fail to give considerable insight into the state of things on the left bank of the Danube. On the 17th of January, he wrote:—

"You will have learned by the papers the entrance of the corps—Osten Sacken's—whose approaching arrival was announced a month since. Not only all our quarters, but even the numerous encampments are literally filled. The troops, as well as the horses, have suffered dreadfully, and the consequence is that our monthly sick list has risen to above 10 per cent. The Pruth and Danube lines are studded with stations for the sick and military hospitals. Typhus and even that kind attended with petchiæ (purple spots on the skin,) dysentery, ague, and gangrene, are not only endemic, but are more malignant than in November. The number of deaths is much greater than in December, being in some stations, such as Galog, Brailon, Gura-Jalomitzi, Kalarasch, and Budeschti, about 37 per cent. I say nothing about the extremely unfavorable state of things on the line of the Danube in Little Wallachia, where the number of killed and wounded is so considerable. The wounds are of such a nature as but too plainly to indicate the fury and deadly animosity of combatants. Since the 27th of December, there has not been an hour's rest along the whole line from Oltenitza up to Turna. Continual surprises, out-post affairs, and skirmishes, have day after day supplied us with considerable numbers of severely wounded patients, for whom we have all necessaries except suitable beds and quarters. Physicians, surgeons, medicaments, and bandages abound, but quiet warm lodgings are everywhere wanting, excepting at Bucharest, where, in addition to the hospitals, private edifices have been turned into infirmaries. All the villages around Krajova up to the Schyl, and along the line to Dobra are filled with stations, crowded with sufferers in the violent collisions, which since the 30th of December, have daily taken place between the troops investing Kalafat and the Turks. There have been three prolonged and general battles, in which 600 fell, and 947 were wounded." [From this passage it is evident that the whole truth has not even been communicated to the physicians.] 'Not a few heads were missing; some were cut off from the dead, others from the living bodies by the Turks. The various vehicles are now in such demand for the active army, that the wounded who would bear transporting cannot be removed to Bucharest. The animosity on both sides is so great, that, in spite of strict orders to the contrary, a day rarely passes without mutual provocations and their inevitable consequences. There are symptoms—as you have before been informed—that the Danube will be crossed in several places, and we are generally inclined to believe that our first destination will be Sophia."

We learn that, in spite of the prohibition recently published by the Russians, the English merchant vessels are busily employed in conveying all kinds of stores from Constantinople to Varna.

"Be led of the Spirit."

It is the glorious privilege of the children of God to be led by his Spirit, to be filled, and to walk in it. Let us then consider the reality of his presence, and cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God, for we "are temples of the Holy Ghost." It is a fearful thing to grieve this Spirit wherewith we are sealed, for if we have not the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his. Do we REALIZE the glory of oneness with Christ, or are we unbelieving? Do we have his spirit daily witnessing with ours, that we ARE the children of God? or is an abstract principle that we concede intellectually, the extent with us of its tangibility? What saith the Scriptures and the testimony of early Christians? We read that Enoch walked with God, and had the testimony that he pleased God. Israel, Moses, Elijah and Daniel, who were subject to like passions with others, had the same witness. Simeon, Anna, and Stephen, and the primitive disciples were full of faith and the Holy Ghost. This leading of the Spirit, and walking with God, is not confined to the prophetical dispensation, for Paul testifies, "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God;" 'there is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, for the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death;" "ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you," and "if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead, dwell in you, HE that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken, (or change) your mortal bodies by his Spirit, that dwelleth in you."

This, then, is the resurrection power, and the same by which those who are alive shall be changed, and caught up to meet the Lord in the air. How essential then, is this indwelling life to those who wait for the coming glory. Through the wild speculations of some, and the unbelief of others, there is great barrenness of faith upon this vital subject. Yet the truth of God, and the testimony of his word, is changeless and sure. Through submission and confidence in God, and an overcoming faith, that receives every word which he hath spoken, we may REALIZE this indwelling power, which abideth and teacheth. We may be led by his love, and kept from sin, through faith unto salvation. And so surely as this is the baptism with which we are baptized, we shall for ourselves experience, that the fruit of the Spirit is—"love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance." If this then is our high and holy calling, let us leave the things that are behind, and "go on unto perfection," and "holiness without which no man can see the Lord." Such was the FAITH, the simple and the strong, of apostolic days, that "the manifestation of the Spirit" was freely "given to every man to profit withal," in "diversities of gifts." In one the indwelling Spirit was manifested in the word of wisdom, and knowledge, for the edification of the brethren. To another faith, prophecy, healing, etc., to every man according to the will of the Spirit. We have no reason to doubt the power and love of that same Spirit now, nor dare we limit the grace of Him, who hath said, "Only believe," "ask and it shall be given unto you," and "lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." But we do doubt much of the professed FAITH of the present day, for the Prophet in a certain place, speaking of the last days, declares "that the land shall be barren of faith," and our Savior intimates the same when he says, "when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Yet He is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, and we believe that there are still a remnant even now, who by FAITH receive the word of wisdom and knowledge, to "understand the vision," and the prophetic will of God, for he hath promised that he will pour out his spirit, and at the time of the end, the wise shall understand. There are some also, who perceive the more excellent way of charity, or perfect love, without which, Paul says, the brightest gifts are but sounding brass, and a tinkling cymbal. Let us then, with faith, desire the gifts of the Spirit, but FOLLOW after that charity which covereth a multitude of sins.—[Selected.

The Coming of Christ in 1854.

My mind is directed to write a few lines for the Crisis, hoping that it will not be altogether in vain; for I desire to do all things to the Glory of God, knowing that the day of the Lord hasteth greatly, when we must give an account to God, who will judge righteous judgment. I am one, that is numbered among the "timeists," as we are called; and thank the good Lord, I'm not ashamed to own it to the world. It is not because others, superior to angels believe it, but because I find the evidence plainly in God's word, and in the signs of the times. I fully believe that the Lord by Gabriel informed Daniel concerning the time. When the question was asked, "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" the answer came, "that it shall be for a time, times and a part."—(Margin.) Daniel says, "I heard, but I understood not; then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?" The answer was, "Go thy way, Daniel; for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end." We draw the conclusion, then, at once, that at the time of the end, the words would be unsealed, so that they might be understood by those who were willing to investigate the subject, to get light from the word of God, and do good to others by spreading it.

He goes on still farther, and says, "From the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand, two hundred and ninety days," (signifying years.) "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand, three hundred and five and thirty days." Glory to God, at the end of the days Daniel is to stand in his lot: and as all the saints are to get their reward together, I suppose all the the saints will be with Him who have fallen asleep. Here then is definite time, and is the subject connected with, and which marks this time, entirely forgotten? Ah! no; Christ turns the eyes of the Church to this abomination, and so important is the subject that he wishes the reader to "understand." John, the beloved disciple, while on the island of Patmos, was pointed directly to this subject. It seems that Daniel was informed that it should be 1290 days; but Christ says that "except these days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." Here then we have the declaration, that the days shall be shortened. But how much? We have to turn our attention to John again. He informs us that this abomination caused the Church "to flee into the wilderness for the space of 1260 days." Here we find then the fact that 30 years are cut off from the 1290 days; Christ's words then are fulfilled, "the days were shortened;" and those days, I believe, commenced in A. D. 519, and certain it is, that May 19th, 1780, was the time when the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and previous to this those days ended; for Christ says, "immediately after those days shall the sun be darkened." We now see plainly that all so far harmonizes. If 1779 (just previous to the darkening of the sun,) marked the ending of the 1260 days, then 75 years more lead us down to the ending of the 1335, and this will bring us to the present year 1854, for the time when Daniel was told he should "stand in his lot." Glory to God in the highest; is it to be so? Can it be that all the saints of God will shout their sufferings o'er this year? My heart responds, "Even so come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." We look at the signs of the times, and believe we cannot be mistaken. The frog-like spirits are abroad, gathering the kings of earth to battle. The "scoffer walks proudly on," after his own lusts, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" We see wickedness increasing, and the love of many waxing cold. We see children "disobedient to parents, men, "lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, high minded, despisers of those that are good, and lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." We see the "chariots with their flaming torches," speeding their way through the vales and among the hills, "like the lightnings, jostling one against the other in the broad ways," which tell us plainly that it is the "day of the Lord's preparation." We also see "the seed rotting under the clods, the vine languishing, and the beasts groaning." Well might the prophet after beholding these things cry out, "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion and sound an alarm in my holy mountain. Let all the inhabitants of the land tremble; for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand." The nations are preparing for war, waking up the mighty men, and the King of the North is about to overflow and dry up the river Euphrates, and the seventh angel will soon pour out his vial, and a voice from the throne will say, "It is done." What next meets our view? My God, who will be able to stand? "The heavens depart as a scroll, the great, the rich, the chief captains, and the mighty men, call on the rocks and mountains to hide them from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the lamb." The graves are bursting, the dead arising, the living changed and clothed with the robe of righteousness, rise to meet their coming king, with shouts of "Lo, this is our God; We have waited for him." May the Lord help us to do all we can, to speed the Midnight Cry; so that the virgins will arise, and trim their lamps, and be ready to meet the Bridegroom.—Amen.

Yours, in hope of immortality,

GEORGE L. TEEPLE.

Extracts from Letters.

Brother Benjamin Streeter, writing from Hinsdale, N. H., says:—

We have had a glorious revival of God's work in this place. Brethren J. G. Bennet, and William Southerland, came to this place in December last, and labored four or five weeks. God blessed their labors, and I trust, will give them souls for their hire. Eighteen were buried with Christ in baptism, and others felt it their duty to do the same. Praise God for what he has done, and is still doing. I feel very sensible that God is doing up His last work for this world; it looks to me as though the harvest is about ripe for the angel to thrust in his sharp sickle and reap.

Sister M. F. Burnham, writing from Round Pond, Maine, says:—

May the Lord help you by his grace to carry on the glorious enterprise of giving 'meat in due season,' is the prayer of your of unworthy sister. May the Crisis be as a beacon light to the weather-beaten mariner, while tempest tossed and driven. We shall soon enter the port of endless rest if faithful, glory to God. The land appears in view. Brother Howard has been here from Yarmouth, preaching the word, and the Lord has blessed his labors. There is great inquiry among the people, some four have been converted, and the prospect is good. Truly God is here stirring the minds of the people.

Brother William Ingham, writing from Portland Maine, says:—

I have spent the last few weeks in Rye and Portsmouth; had some interesting meetings; some wanderers returned in Rye, some waking among the brethren, and quite an interest to hear. Think there has been some prejudice done away, and some good done in the name of the holy child Jesus.

Brother Patten, of Clay, New York, says:

We often hear our brethren thank the Lord, that the sound of the midnight cry ever reached their ears, and I for one bless God, that, in his providence He ever sent brethren Hook and Ford into this place.—Cold professors were waked up, back-sliders reclaimed, sinners converted, and infidels confounded and brought back to a dependance upon the blood of Jesus for salvation, and the Word of the Lord as the sure basis and guide to the kingdom that is soon to be set up.

Thatcher W. Piper, writing from Tuftonborough, N. H., says:

O what a moment we occupy! when the Vision is again speaking, and Glory to God, it will not lie; it will come, it will not tarry. The midnight cry is sounding, and agreeably to the word of truth, the virgins are arising and trimming their lamps, and many in this region are going out to meet the Bridegroom this year.

J. D. Farnum, writing from Portland, Maine, says—

There is a universal desire among the brethren that there should be a request put in the Crisis, for Bros. E. Burnham and Berick, or J. Couch, or some other faithful Watchman that sees the sword coming, to come to Portland as soon as possible.—There is an intense interest to hear on the subject which was aroused at conference time. O there are souls famishing here for the meat due in its season—souls are inquiring the way to Zion.

NORTH HERMON, Feb. 16, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—We are having glorious times here in the name of the Lord. Many souls are giving glory to God for the compelling message. We are truly having the latter rain. The school-houses are not large enough to convene the people. Therefore we have erected a meeting-house, and it will be completed in time for a meeting next Sabbath. We claim the promise from Bro. F. H. Berick that he would come and preach for us.—Should be glad to hear his voice once more before the Lord comes if it is the will of God. We are now destitute of preachers. Brother and Sister Bragg have been laboring here for some time, but are now going to the Kennebeck with the flying message. We wish Brother Berick to inform us through the Crisis when he can come.

JOHN BRACKETT.

GRIGGSVILLE, Ill., Feb. 3d, 1854.

Dear Sir:—I have just received "The World's Crisis." I humbly hope it will continue to have its pages as well freighted with precious truths as I think this first number has been. The providences of God, at this very time, bear striking testimonials in favor of such doctrines as the paper is designed to present to the world; and I can but believe that still clearer light will be developed as we advance along towards the end, which I am inclined to believe is not far ahead, precisely how far I presume not to say. I hope "The World's Crisis" will hold itself sacred to the work to which it professes to be devoted; and that it will prudently avoid contention in matters of lesser importance.

Yours affectionately,

Z. W. HOYT.

NORTH SHERMON, Jan. 31, 1854.

Dear Brother Merriam:—I am in the field traveling at all times. There is a good work in progress in this place, a goodly number converted and reclaimed since this year commenced. Within three weeks I have traveled about one hundred miles, attended twenty-three meetings, preached nineteen times. There is some movement in every place—the Brethren in general receive the time. In Surry I attended the funeral of a child of Brother Robert and Sister Jane Carlisle, aged 16 months. By accident a coffee-pot full of hot coffee was emptied upon the child and death ended its sufferings in twenty-four hours. I delivered a discourse on the occasion from Paul, to this effect, that men should not be "ignorant concerning those that are asleep." The parents expect to see the child this year in the Kingdom.—Amen.

N. T. [illegible]

A private letter from Kossuth, dated London, Jan. 24, and addressed to a gentleman in this country, concludes by saying: "You shall soon hear of a titanic work on our part; of our heaping Ossa upon Pelion with but our nails for tools."

From Adrianople, Jan. 6, it is announced that the preparations are completed for the arrival of the Sultan, in March; 800 of his suite and 500 horses have already arrived. He will be attended by a suite of 1,000 persons.

Conferences.

There will be a Conference at North Scituate, R. I., to commence on Thursday, March 9th, and continue over the Sabbath, when Bro. J. Couch will present the evidence of the Lord's coming this year.

The Lord Willing, there will be a conference in East Haverhill, N. H., commencing Friday, Feb. 24th, and continue over the Sabbath.—Brethren Brittan and Whitney will attend.—Come brethren to the meeting, for time is short to work in.

Providence permitting, a Conference will commence at New Durham Bridge, at one o'clock, on Thursday, Feb. 23, and hold over the Sabbath. J. COUCH.

A Conference will be held in New York City, to commence Wednesday evening, Feb. 22, and continue over the Sabbath.

Also, at Newark, N. J., to commence Wednesday evening, March 1, and continue over the Sabbath. F. H. BERICK,
EDWIN BURNHAM.

A Conference will be held at Hubbardston, Mass., to commence on Friday, March 10, and continue one week. Br. Grant is expected to attend. S. G. MATHEWSON.

Brethren Mathewson and Grant will hold a Conference at Ashburnham, commencing March 2d, and to continue one week. ISAAC NEWTON.

There will be a Conference in Hermon, Me. every first Saturday and Sunday of each month. In Holden and Prospect every second Saturday and Sunday, and in Orrington the third Saturday and Sunday following.

We hope the brethren coming this way to preach the word will give timely notice in the Crisis, so that brethren and sisters can attend the different appointments. WM. CHAPIN.

Appointments.

Bro. J. Couch will preach in New Bedford, Mass., on Sunday, March 5th.

The Lord willing, I will preach at Middlebury, Ct., Sabbath, Feb. 26; Prospect, Ct., on Saturday and Sunday, March 4th and 5th, where Bro. Mix may appoint; Bethel, Con., on Sabbath, March 12. GEO. L. TEEPLE.

There will be a meeting at London Ridge, N. H., to commence Thursday, March 9th, and continue over the Sabbath. Bro. E. Burnham and F. H. Berrick will be present.
In behalf of the brethren,
R. LOCKE.

The Lord willing, I will preach at Manchester, N. H.,—Melodian Hall—Sunday, Feb. 26.
And commence a series of meetings at Goshen, N. H.,—where bro. Tandy may appoint,—Saturday evening, March 4, to continue over the Sabbath, and probably through the following week. J. WESTON.

Br. Isaac Newton will meet with the brethren in Ware, Friday evening the 24, and continue over the Sabbath.

The Lord will I will preach at Grantham, N. H., 26th, where Brother George Fowler may appoint. BENJ. P. MANNING.

BRO. W. H. EASTMAN will preach at Lake Village, Sunday, February 26, and March 12.

Providence permitting, I will preach at Westfield, Mass., Saturday evening, Feb. 25th, continuing over the Sabbath, and two or three evenings during the week. MILES GRANT.

BRO. J. CUMMINGS will hold a meeting at Sugar Hill, N. H., to commence February 24, and hold over the Sabbath. LEVI MERRY.

[illegible] to them shall be given.

[illegible] though with grief while they're trav- [illegible]

[illegible] be forgotten in heaven.

To the meek is secured an eternal reward;
They are children of heavenly birth;
Though they're poor and despised, 'tis the word of the Lord,
"The meek [illegible] the earth."

[illegible] are they who do hunger and thirst
After righteousness; walking by faith:
[illegible] the fulness of God and the spirit of Christ
Being filled, they shall triumph o'er death.

And the merciful ones who in mercy delight,
[illegible] the blessing of God shall obtain;
[illegible] follow the things that are good in His sight,
And the riches of glory they'll gain.

[illegible] the pollution of sin!
On [illegible] highest honor's bestowed;
[illegible] the earnest of heaven within,
And the promise is, ye "Shall see God."

May the spirit of peace, and of righteousness, dwell
In the midst of thy people, O Lord;
Of love and of joy which the tongue cannot tell;
Of goodness and sweetest accord.
And then, though we suffer for righteousness' sake,
We'll rejoice and be glad in the Lord.
The promise believing, the world we forsake,
In heaven is our glorious reward.

Christ is coming this year!

Jesus Christ, who now sits on the right hand of power, is coming in the clouds of heaven; when every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. He is coming in a little while, with power and great glory; with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not his Gospel. He is coming shortly, to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day. He is coming to give Paul a crown of righteousness; and not him only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. He is coming with a great sound of a trumpet, to gather his elect from the four winds. He will come as GOD; for our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. For the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee; for even them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.—Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him. At his coming, the [illegible] trump shall sound, and in a [illegible] twinkling of an eye, the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed; when both will be caught up together in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. When he comes, he will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger, and fear not me, saith the Lord of Hosts. When he comes, the Mighty One of Israel will say, Ah, I will ease me of mine adversaries, and avenge me of mine enemies.

At his coming, Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness; and the destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed. The day of the Lord of Hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up, and he shall be brought low; yea, the kings, queens, princes, presidents, [illegible] governors, officers, [illegible] of all the armies; millions of [illegible] and their lofty wives, and [illegible] daughters; millions of [illegible] together with the gluttons [illegible] of the whole creation; [illegible] of Lebanon that [illegible] lifted up, and upon all the [illegible] and upon all [illegible]

[illegible] is coming in the lighting up of the eastern horizon indicates something besides the sun, and like lightning is seen darting towards the west. Also, what meltings of hearts, what fears, what pangs and sorrow will take hold on the stoutest hearts, when the shrill sound of the trumpet first strikes their ear, and waxes louder and louder, echoing through the vault of heaven, and reverberating along the surface of the earth; their splendid mansions, and beautiful gardens, and costly furniture, all wrapt in the devouring flame, not excepting their own persons!

But language fails me, in attempting to describe the pangs and sorrow that will seize upon those that love this world, when the conviction first fastens itself upon their minds that Christ is come! Also, with what amazement will they look one upon another in that trying moment! To the paleness of faintness, will succeed the crimson of flames in their faces; and while the little children, and pious ones, of every family, are being changed and caught up, the remaining ones are wringing their hands, and reproaching one another with being the cause of their unpreparedness to meet the righteous Judge! Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate; and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it; for the stars of heaven shall not give their light; the sun shall be darkened in his going forth and the moon shall not cause her light to shine: yes, the stars, the sun, the moon, all, all will be eclipsed by the superior effulgence of their Creator, the Lord Jesus Christ, who has now come in all the glory of the Father, and the holy angels. The Lord of Hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely, as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; as I have purposed, so shall it stand.—"This is the purpose that is purposed upon the whole earth: and this is the hand that is stretched out upon all the nations. Oh yes, the thought and purpose of God will be realized: his people will be gathered into their chambers; all his enemies made to lick the dust, the earth and elements all melted, and the new earth, which is to be the future and eternal abode of God and all his people, will arise from the ashes and ruins thereof.

When he cometh, he will make the earth empty and waste, and turn it upside down, and scatter abroad the inhabitants thereof; the land shall be utterly emptied and utterly spoiled. For the Lord hath spoken this word: the haughty people of the earth do languish; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, broken the everlasting covenant; therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned. Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth: the earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly: the earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place, to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: the earth also shall disclose her blood, and no more cover her slain. Yes, the Lord has now forsaken his covert, as the lion: neglecters of God will now realize the force of those awful words, Now consider this, ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver.

When he comes, the indignation of the Lord will be upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies; he will utterly destroy them; he will deliver them to the slaughter; their slain also shall be cast out, and their stink shall come up out of their carcasses, and the mountains shall be melted with their blood; and all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll; and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree; for it is the day of the Lord's vengeance. When he comes, he says, I will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunk in my fury, and I will bring down their strength to the earth; for, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire.

When he comes to spoil their pasture, the shepherds, and principal of the flock, shall howl, and cry, and wallow themselves in the ashes: for the days of their slaughter, and of their dispersions are accomplished; and they shall fall like a pleasant vessel; for the shepherds shall have no way to flee, nor the principal of the flock to escape. Oh, what a howling there will be among unfaithful ministers when the Master comes to reckon with them! They have been looked up to, and called Doctor, Reverend, Rabbi; stuffed themselves and families upon their salaries, (here called pasture,) lived in pleasure, and been wanton, much more anxious about their honor and ease, than the souls of their flock; they have loved the praise of men more than the praise of God; cried peace, when God has not spoken peace. These are the certain ungodly men, crept in unawares, turning the grace of God into lasciviousness, and denying our Lord Jesus Christ; who have run greedily after the error of Balaam for reward; feeding themselves without fear; without fruit, [illegible] their own lusts; their mouth speaking great swelling words; having men's persons in admiration, because of [illegible]. These are the mockers, who [illegible]

He will come in a little season; and then the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond-man, and every free-man will hide themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains, and will say to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?

Behold, I come quickly. He which testifieth these things, saith, Surely I come quickly: Amen, even so, come, LORD JESUS.

Jesus our only Pattern. God in his wisdom has given us for our example, the pattern of a perfect man. Jesus was tempted in all points like as we are, and yet without sin. He kept the law perfectly. We are therefore not left in the dark, with only fallible men for our guide. But we have one after whom it is safe at all times to follow, one who can never lead us out of the way, and whose example will always conduct us in the path of holiness. Had we been left with none but man for our example, we should be, in following such a guide, in continual danger of erring. The best of men have at times gone astray; it is not therefore safe to follow any man, only as such follow Christ. In following men, we cannot be always assured that we are right, only as we see that they follow our blessed Savior. It is therefore better to look directly to Christ and be guided by him alone. We are to see how he walked, and how he lived, and then we should go and do likewise. When he was reviled, he reviled not again: and returned good for evil; he went about doing good: his days were spent in acts of love, and his nights in prayer. It was said of him, "He shall not strive nor cry, neither shall any man hear his voice in the street. A bruised reed shall he not break, and a smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory." Isa. liii. 2—12. "For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him.—He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we, like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he was brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth. He was taken from prison and from judgment: and who shall declare his generation? for he was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken. And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth. Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death: and he was numbered with the transgressors; and he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors."

Such was the character and example of our Savior. If we walk in his footsteps we shall have an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom. But if we follow not Christ we can have no part or portion there.—[Selected.

Papal War in Sardinia in 1854.

We copy from the Advent Herald the following article, indicating, in a most striking manner, the spirit of opposition to popery, or in other words, the hatred of the ten horns commencing, which will soon bring on the final struggle against the Harlot power.

We hope that our fears may not be realized, but, from the present state of affairs in Sardinia, a religious and bloody war may soon take place. It will not last long because the people and army will side with the government; yet it may be the cause of terrible events, and become a drawback for some time to the gigantic progress so visible in that single and sacred spot of Italian freedom.

The present King, Victor Emanuel, true to the constitution and faithful to the cause of future Italy, in his recent address to Parliament, stated most decidedly that he would never desert his people, and moreover, would defend to the last, from enemies within or without, the institutions of the kingdom and the popular rights of his subjects. His great design is to establish [illegible]

[illegible] seen, the high clergy began, by spreading the alarm into the camp of their fanatical and ignorant communicants, and under the pretext of the high prices of wheat and [illegible] armed in the valley of Aosta a legion of papal bloodhounds, who, while crying Hurrah for the Cross—Down with the Constitution! ransacked the houses of inoffensive citizens, carrying everywhere destruction, desolation and death. Thanks to the energy of the executive authorities, to the bravery of the Piedmontese troops, and to the good-will of the National Guard, the Irish of Italy, (thus are called the people of Aosta) although mustering 5,000, were soon routed, and more than 400 of the blessed legionaries taken prisoners.—These crusaders of the nineteenth century were well provided with small images of the Savior and medals of the Virgin Mary and many, having been examined, answered, that they had been armed and ordered to put down the freedom of the country, by the priests.

In fact, several bishops from Savoy and Piedmont have addressed to the government a threatening protest against the proposed law of civil marriage, and against the attempt to reduce the number of priests and friars: they complained most bitterly of the great indifference and almost total aversion among young men to enter at the present time on an ecclesiastical career. These mitred conspirators advise also the king not to listen to the liberal party, as it may yet bring upon him great calamities.

Pius IX., who, on his part, does not remain inactive in view of the dangers which are soon to overwhelm his Church in Sardinia, appealed to his cardinals, and represented to them the great favor already granted by him to that country in reducing the number of holy days, and that he was determined to oppose all encroachments which should be adopted in the Piedmontese Parliament against the present religious state of that kingdom. This avowal of the Pope will certainly reinforce the attempts and measures of the reactionists; it will give new life to their almost dead hopes to return to their ancient regime, and will make Sardinia the bloody Vendee of Italy. The erection there of Protestant temples, the progress of Evangelical doctrines, and the freedom of the press, are not looked upon by the fanatical clergy with an eye of tolerance and indifference. Priests will everywhere monopolise to themselves religious freedom, and deprive others of the same enjoyment wherever they have influence and power.

But the Sardinian king, in case a religious war should break out in his dominions, must act with firmness and energy—cut short the contest, and care not for the thunders of the dying papacy—supported as he will be, by public opinion and by his valiant army; he will eradicate the evil tree by the roots, and let papal newspapers cry out against the severity of the well-merited punishment afterwards.

The Pope and his priestly gang cannot bear to see a part of Italy free and independent.

To their shame, Victor Emanuel is the only king in Europe who, after having granted in revolutionary times a constitution to the people, has not violated his oath.—Let the Italian prince stand firm against the waves of papal fanaticism; Italy will reward his costancy, and all free nations will eulogize his noble conduct. Let him go forward, armed, as he is, with Truth and Justice. No mercy to the enemy.—Crusader.

A Fitness for the Kingdom. Without holiness no man can see the Lord.—Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. The road that leads to death is broad, and many walk therein; while the road to life is straight and narrow, and few find it. When one said unto our Savior "are there few that be saved?" he said unto them, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able. When once the Master, of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are; then shall ye begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets. But he shall say, I tell you, I know you not whence ye are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity."

If there is any belief that will search the heart of man, and penetrate the inmost recesses of his soul, it must be a conviction that we are soon to enter the presence of the Lord—that the Judge standeth at the door. "He that hath this hope in him," says the Apostle, "purifieth himself even as he is pure." God is too holy a being to regard sin but with displeasure; and none can hope to enter his pure presence, who are in anywise defiled with it. How important it is, then, that we who hope soon to see our Savior, should see to it, that we do not deceive ourselves. We cannot serve two masters; neither can we gain a better world, while we set our affections on the things of this. We should feel to renounce all things for Christ, who left his Father's glory, and died for us.—If there is any tie which binds us to earth, it may retain us here when our Lord shall come. We therefore need to make a free and full surrender of our all into the hands of God, who alone can sustain us, who is our Creator, Preserver, and most bountiful Benefactor. God will accept no half way devotion, no divided affections; and if we [illegible]

[illegible] of entering his everlasting kingdom. If we would be saved, we must love the Lord our God with all our heart, and soul, and mind, and strength, and our neighbor as ourself; we must walk soberly, and godly, and righteously in this present evil world; looking to Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; and trusting entirely to the righteousness of Christ, as our only hope of safety. We are to be washed in the blood of Christ, and cleansed from all sin. We are to forsake our sins by righteousness, and our iniquities by turning to the Lord. We are to cease to do evil, and learn to do well. We must be purified, and made white and tried; and we have the promise of the Lord that if we will repent, though our sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.

We should set our standard of Christian character high, and should avoid even the appearance of evil. If we are truly sanctified, we shall be found sitting at the feet of Jesus, willing that his will should be done in all things. If our righteousness does not exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, we can in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven. How important it is, then, that we should examine ourselves in the light of God's word, and see to it that we possess that holiness without which no man can see the Lord, but which will be to us a wedding garment.—[Selected.

Extracts from Letters.

Beloved Pilgrims and Strangers.—To the praise of God I am still pursuing the heavenly journey in full expectation of getting home this year,—praise Jesus' dear name forever. This truly is heart-cheering to the weary, way-worn pilgrim, who is living only for the world to come.—Truly we are exalted to heaven in point of privilege. We are living in the sunbeams of gospel light—we have past the midnight hour, and have heard the midnight cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." And we see the virgins awaking and obeying the command. And as sure as we go out to meet him, we shall not be disappointed. But if we are afraid to trust in God's word, which can never fail, we shall meet with a sad disappointment. O Lord save us from distrusting the word of God, is my prayer. I feel that we are trusting in a God that lives, and will perform all his will; and he has made known his will to them that fear him. O glory be to his blessed name! O how safe we feel when we stand on the sure word of prophecy.—The foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone. It makes us "wise as serpents and harmless as doves," and as bold as a lion, glory to God's blessed name. O, it is blessed living here in '54, when we expect our hopes will be consummated in a few weeks. O let us not draw back from the truth now; if we do, we draw back to perdition. O how important then that we understand the present truth, and live by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God, for his word is to judge us in a few days; O do we realize it as we should?

O awful thought, and is it so?
Must all mankind the harvest know?
Is every man a wheat or tare?
Me for that harvest Lord prepare.

The only way we can be prepared is by obeying the commands and examples of Christ; and in keeping them there is a great reward, and when Jesus comes a crown of life in glory. O praise the Lord I do mean to be a good child until I receive the well-done from Jesus Christ our Lord. I have cast the last lingering look after this vain world, and I have set my face as a flint Zionward. O Pilgrims, we can face the dark storms of opposition a few days more in view of reigning in glory forever with all the blood-washed company. With Caleb and Joshua we can say, in the name of the Lord we can go up and possess the goodly land filled with God's glory, where righteousness will cover the earth as the waves fill the seas! glory be to God's blessed name. O can it be that we are so soon as this year to realize our sorrows and conflicts, all in the past, and have the last tear wiped from the eye?—Yes, praise the Lord, we are coming into port this year, under full sail with our souls full of joy that is inexpressible and full of glory.

Not only so, but others are heeding the last note of warning and coming aboard. The word is truly taking effect in this place. Within a fortnight between thirty and forty have left the ranks of the enemy; eight have become dead enough to be buried with Christ in Baptism and they are truly walking in newness of life in Christ Jesus. Others are [illegible]

the Lord. How can I praise the Lord sufficiently for all he has done and is still doing. Truly it seems to be the compelling message to go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, &c. O it is blessed indeed to see those added to the Church that are to be saved this year. My prayer is that the work may still go on; I feel, for one, that I will stand ready for every good word and work. Husband wishes to say to the brethren up West that he cannot visit them as long as the Lord is at work in bringing souls to the knowledge of the truth in Maine.

L. W. Bragg.

North Hermon, Me., Jan 23, '54.

Salem, Mass., Feb. 7, 1854.

My Dear Brother Merriam:—It is with a thankful heart that I announce to you the progress of the glorious work of God in this City. Last Sunday eight were buried with Christ by Baptism—the Spirit of God sanctioned the administration of this ordinance, in a wonderful manner. It reminded me of the time when the graves will yield up the dear saints of God, who will come forth shouting and singing the triumphant song, "O grave where is thy victory," while those who wait and see the "end of the days" will join and say "O death! where is thy sting?" A few months more, and that which is written in Isaiah 25: 8, 9, will be fulfilled, "He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Can it be that this glorious truth is about to be realized by the way worn pilgrims, from Abel down to the last one that will be sealed? Yes, dear brother, a few months more, and Jesus will come and redeem his people this year. This year brings the Jubilee.

How sweetly do the tidings roll
All round from sea to sea,
From land to land—from pole to pole,
This year's the Jubilee.

I praise God that the truth is being published on fly sheets which are being scattered as on the wings of the wind. My prayer is, that it may continue to breathe the blessed, loving spirit of truth, that has thus far characterized the Crisis. May God speed on the day. Your brother in hope of immortality in 1854.

John G. Hook.

Prospect Ferry, Jan. 30, 1854.

Dear Brethren of the Crisis:—I was at the Windsor meeting, where the Heralds of the Lord gave such strong evidences of the truth that it could not be gainsaid nor confuted, except by such arguments as these,—"Mother taught me differently," or "Father did not believe so."

From W. I went to Hope, in company with Br. G. W. Brown; had a refreshing time, from the presence of the Lord; saw about twenty mourners rise for prayers.—God grant they may be saved in his kingdom.

Brn. Berrick and Ross visited Prospect about fifteen months ago. To God's praise a reformation commenced, which has not subsided yet. There are a number to be baptised now, and God gave us a fresh token of his grace, last evening in meeting, by giving two individuals strength to come forward for prayers.

We believe if the Church would live up to their profession, a number more would be sealed yet before the angels let go. Will the Brethren who are in the midst of revivals, communicate the good news concerning Israel, for the Crisis, to encourage the Editor and others interested?

Your Brother, looking for Daniel to stand in his lot in '54. William Cousens.

Magog, C. E.

Dear Brother:—I have received the package of papers—The World's Crisis. The title is very appropriate, and the contents meat in due season. We received them with grateful hearts, believing it is of the Lord. Our prayer is that he will carry this sheet to the ends of the earth, that the poor may have a chance to hear the last truth that belongs to this world, before the Lord comes.

Yours, looking for the Lord at the end of the days. Hiram Merry.

We have seen that Jesus was born in the year of Rome, the 751st, the 41st year after the death of Julius Cæsar, and the 27th year after the battle of Actium, when Augustus himself was in his 60th year—he was near 20 when his uncle Julius was slain, U. C. 710, and near 34 at the time of the battle of Actium, U. C. 724, and at the birth of Jesus in his 60th year.

Archelius, Herod Antipas, and Philip, settled in their tetrarchies by the execution of their fathers' will, and consent of Cæsar, A. D. 2. A sedition (arose among the Jews on account of Herod's burning those 40 men, in which they demand the death of the officers that burned them,) was quelled, and after the slaughter of three thousand men, peace is restored, A. D. 3—(Jos.) Joazer, the high priest, is removed by Archelius, and Eleazer, his brother, appointed in his stead, and the holy family return from Egypt about A. D. 4.—(Jos.) Tiberius returns to Rome after two years' voluntary exile, about A. D. 5.—(Hist. of World.) Eleazer removed from the high priesthood, and Jesus, the son of Sis, is appointed to succeed him about A. D. 6.—(Josephus.)

Julia, the daughter of Augustus, having been married to Tiberius, after Marcus Agrippa's death, is banished by her father to Pandataria, an island in Campania, for incontinency, and is accompanied by her mother, about A. D. 7.—(Raleigh.) Augustus regulates the year about A. D. 8.—(Hist. of the World.)

Archelius' tyranical government becomes intolerable to the Jews; and they accuse him before Augustus, who summoned him to Rome, A. D. 9—(Jos.)—He is banished to Vienna, in Dauphing, A. D, 10—(Jos.) This is the 37th year, (says Josephus,) after the Battle of Actium. During this interregnum the Jews depose Jesus, the son of Sis, and appoint Joazer high priest again, as appears by Josephus, A. D. 10.

Cyrenius is sent from Rome to seize Archelius' money and confiscate his estate to the government of Rome; which, when he had secured, he deposed Joazer again from being high priest, and put Annas in his place, who, according to Josephus, held the office 16 years. Coponius was the first governor, sent by Augustus, to govern Judea, after Archelius' banishment, U. C. 761—A. D. 11.

Marcus Ambivius is sent from Rome to govern Judea, and Coponius is removed, and returns to Rome, about A. D. 12—U. C. 762.

Jesus, with his parents, goes up to Jerusalem to attend the passover, where he questions the Doctors of the law, at the age of 12 years, A. D. 13. Salome, the sister of Herod the great, departs this life in the course of the administration of Marcus Ambivius, U. C. 763—(Jos.)

Nov. 5th, Tiberius is adopted, and made partner and colleague in the empire—Augustus swearing before the Senate that he adopted him for the Commonwealth's sake, (Hist. of World,) A. D. 14—U. C. 764.

"Tiberius," says Raleigh, "presently after his adoption, was sent into Germany, to quiet some commotions there; and Velleius Paterculus, the Historian, accompanied him as Prefect, or Colonel of Horse," A. D. 15. They bent their course toward Pannonia, and after a severe struggle, put them down, and compelled the rebels to beg for peace. But it took them near three years to subdue the Dalmations, (whose country was nearly ruined,) and the Pannonians, many of whom they took prisoners. Quintilius Varus, who had been president of Syria, killed himself, A. D. [illegible] Tiberius [illegible] after his German expedition, A. D. 17, [illegible] is removed from the government of Judea, and Annius Rufus [illegible] successor, under whose [illegible] Augustus dies at the age of 77 years, having reigned 17 years 4 months and 25 days after the birth of Jesus, and 43 years, 11 months and 17 days after the Battle of Actium; and in all, from the death of Julius, 57 years 6 months and 2 days, (Jos.,) and died August 19, (Doddridge,) A. D. 16—U. C. 768. It may be said that Tacitus, in his Annals, records an eclipse that occurred Sept. 27th, U. C. 767, which marks the death of Augustus, "when the Pannonian legions refused to submit to the authority of Tiberius."

To this it may be replied that there was a difference of opinion among Chronologers, about the 750th year of Rome; Mr Prince, in his Chronology, mentions Petavius, Cary, and Perizonius, who follow Varro's Chron., are uncertain whether Herod died U. C. 750, 751 or 752; and that four others, viz: Swan, Gallant, Helvius and Isaacson, believe that the same years, of the world, are U. C. 749, 750 and 751. One thing is certain: if Julius Cæsar was slain in U. C. 710, as all Historians agree; then Augustus' death must have occurred in U. C. 768, in order to allow the length of his reign to have been 57 years 6 mos. and 2 days, as Josephus says it was.—This difference of opinion respecting the Roman Era, and also of the Vulgar Era, is the cause of this discrepancy; and likewise of the eclipse, near the time of the Battle of Actium, and also of that which occurred near the time of the Battle of Cremona. Another view of Augustus' reign, after the birth of Christ, (which corresponds with this Chronology,) may be taken from the death of Philip, a son of Herod the great, who succeeded in his tetrarchy, at his father's death, who reigned 37 years, or to his 37th, and died in the 20th year of the reign of Tiberius,—(Josephus.)

This proves beyond all controversy, that Augustus lived 17 years after the death of Herod, and consequently more than that, after the birth of Jesus; for he must have been born several months before Herod's death. This settled, we come of course to Tiberius, who becomes sole Emperor of Rome upon the death of his father; whose whole reign, from his adoption, was 26 years 6 months and 12 days, 3 years 9 months and 14 days of which he reigned jointly with his father, and 22 years 9 mos. and 5 days he was sole monarch of the empire.—(Clem., Alex. and others.)

Annius Rufus is removed from the government of Judea, and Valerius Grattus appointed by Tiberius to succeed him, A. D. 19, who holds the government eleven years from and after the second year of the empire of Tiberius.—(Josephus.)

Ovid dies in exile, aged 49, (Prince.)	A. D., 20
Livy, the mathematician, dies third year of Tiberius,	A. D., 21
Strabo publishes his geography—(Prince.,)	A. D., 22
Strabo dies, (Prince.,)	A. D., 23
Valerius Maximus and Vellicus Paterculus, flourish,	A. D., 24

Germanicus, the nephew of Tiberius, is chosen Prince by the mutinous legions in Germany, about A. D. 25.—(Raleigh.)

Tiberius, being alarmed at the popularity of his nephew, recalls those victorious legions from Germany, and sends Germanicus to govern Syria, about A. D. 26.—(Hist. of the World.)

Valerius Grattus, the Roman Governor of Judea, removes Annius from the high priesthood, after he had held the pontificate 16 years, and appoints Ismael in his stead, A. D. 27, (Jos.)

Ismael is deposed, and Eleazer again appointed, A. D. 28, (Jos.)

Eleazer is again removed, and Simon appointed by Grattus to be high priest, A. D. 29, (Jos.)

Valerius Grattus deposes Simon, and appoints Caiaphas to that dignity; "and when Grattus had done all this," says Josephus, "he went back to Rome." A. D. 30.

Pontius Pilate made governor of Judea in the 12th year of the reign of Tiberius, (Sir W. Raleigh,) and holds that office ten years.

Drusus, the only son of Tiberius, poisoned, [illegible] (Raleigh.)

[illegible] Germanicus [illegible] by the [illegible] Sejanus, A. D. [illegible] (Hist. of the World.)

"Now, in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, Pontius Pilate being governor of Judea, and Herod (Antipas) being tetrarch of Gallilee, and his brother Philip tetrarch of Iturea, and of the region of Trachonitis, and Lysanius tetrarch of Abilene."—Luke, 3: 1—3.

"Annas and Caiaphas being high priests, the word of God came unto John, the son of Zechariah, in the wilderness." "And he came into all the country about Judea, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." This is in the spring of Tiberius' fifteenth year, and Jesus is 32 years of age, A. D. 33.

Tiberius becomes intolerable by his tyranny and oppression, A. D. 34.

Livia, the widow of his son Drusus, be ordered to be whipped and then choked, for her intrigue with Sejanus, A. D. 35.

Sejanus is condemned and publicly executed for his insolence, and 1,000 of his friends perished with him, A. D. 36.

"Then cometh Jesus from Gallilee to Jordan, unto John, to be baptized of him." A. D. 37.

But John forbade him, saying, "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?"

"And Jesus answering, said unto him, Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him."

"And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water, and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him." "And lo, a voice from heaven, saying, this is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—Matt. 2: 13—17.

Here the most Holy One is anointed, and the second period of Daniel's vision fulfilled, A. D. 37.

"The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!" "This is he of whom I said, after me cometh a man which is preferred before me; for he was before me."

"And I knew him not; but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water."

"And John bore record, saying, I saw the spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him."

"And I knew him not; but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost."

"And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God."—John, 1: 29—34. John reproves Herod for having his brother's wife.

Philip, the son of Herod the Great, dies, having reigned to his 37th year, in the 20th year of the reign of Tiberius, A. D. 38.—(Josephus.)

Jesus is tempted in the wilderness 40 days; John is cast into prison at Macherus. "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Gallilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God;" "And saying, the time is fulfilled," (the 69 weeks have run out,) and the kingdom of God is at hand: Repent ye, and believe the gospel."—Mark. 1: 14—15. "And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up; and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read. And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias; and when he had opened the book he found the place where it was written, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance unto captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. And he closed the book, and gave it again to the minister, and sat down; and the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him. And he began to say unto them, this day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."

We have come to the holy anointing of the Son of God, at the age of 37 years, and it becomes us now briefly to trace him in his messages of mercy, through the short period of [illegible] years [illegible]

He first calls Andrew, Philip and Peter to follow Him, and also Nathaniel, soon after James and John. He attends a wedding in Cana and turns water into wine, visits Capernaum, and thus attends the first passover at Jerusalem, and drives the traders out of the Temple, conference with Nicodemus, preaches in Judea; Jesus returns through Samaria into Galilee, talks with the woman of Samaria on his way, preaches in Galilee, cures a nobleman's dying son at Capernaum, preaches at Nazareth, is rejected, and settles awhile at Capernaum, casts out a devil at Capernaum, cures Peter's wife's mother, takes a circuit to the cities of Galilee, and multitudes follow him. Delivers his sermon on the mount, cleanses a leper, withdraws into the wilderness to pray, returns to Capernaum, cures a man of palsy, calls Matthew, goes up to the second passover at Jerusalem, cures a lame man at the pool of Bethesda, A. D. 39. Returns to Galilee, vindicates his disciples for plucking the ears of corn, cures a man with a withered hand on the Sabbath day, multitudes follow him to the sea of Galilee, heals all their diseases, spends a whole night on a mountain in prayer, chooses the twelve Apostles, works miracles, returns to Capernaum, cures a Centurion's servant at a distance, goes to Nain, raises a widow's son, answers the disciples of John, laments over the impenitent cities of Galilee, dines with a pharisee, justifies the woman who annointed his feet, visits all the cities round about attended by the twelve, hears that John is beheaded, answers the blasphemous Pharisees who charged his miracles on a compact with Satan, cautions them against the unpardonable sin, warns them of the danger of idle words, He upbraids the perverseness of the Pharisees in demanding a sign from heaven, delivers the parable of a relapsed demoniac, declares his resolution of persisting in his work, and his endeared affection to his obedient disciples. Delivers the parable of the sowers to the multitude by the sea-side, and explained it to his disciples, and that of the tares, and then adds that of the springing seed, the mustard seed, the leaven, the hidden treasure, and the pearl of great price. He crosses the sea of Galilee, and stills the tempest, dispossesses two demoniacs in Gadara, and crosses over to Capernaum, is entertained by Matthew, raises Jairus' daughter from the dead, heals a woman of an issue of blood, goes from Capernaum to Nazareth, and being again rejected, begins another circuit, sends out his twelve apostles to preach, atends the third passover, A. D. 40. Herod Antipas suspects him to be John the Baptist, risen from the dead, meets his disciples and retires to the desert of Bethsaida, multitudes follow him, He feeds five thousand, sends his disciples away by ship, retires to pray, the disciples are overtaken by a storm, He walks on the sea, stills the tempest, lands at Capernaum, heals all that touch him, reproves the worldly, declares himself the bread of life, urges the necessity of feeding on him, they murmur at his doctrine and leave him, the fidelity of the Apostles declared, He foretells the treachery of Judas, condemns human traditions, shows the Pharisees the necessity of inward purity, withdraws to the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, casts a demon out of the daughter of a Syrophoenician woman, returns through the midst of Decapolis to the sea of Galilee, cures a man deaf and dumb, performs many amazing miracles, feeds four thousand, goes to Dalmanutha and the coasts of Magdala. He upbraids the Pharisees again for asking a sign from heaven, and cautions his disciples against the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees. He heals a blind man at Bethsaida, and going to Cæsarea Philippi, acknowledges to his disciples that he is the Messiah, and commends Peter's confession of him under that character. He foretelleth his approaching sufferings, rebukes Peter for being offended at the mention of them, and exhorts his followers to self-denial, and a readiness for martyrdom, foretells that some of those present shall not taste of death till they see [illegible] fashion of his countenance was altered, His face did shine as the sun, and His raiment was white and shining as the light, even glistening, exceeding white as snow, so as no fuller on earth can whiten them; and behold there talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias, who appeared in glory, and spake of His decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem, and behold a bright cloud overshadowed them, and lo, a voice out of the cloud which said, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye Him. When the disciples heard it, they fell on their faces, and were sore afraid, and Jesus came and touched them, and said, arise, be not afraid; and when they had lifted up their eyes they saw no man, save Jesus only, and as they came down from the mountain Jesus charged them saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen from the dead. He afterward casts out an obstinate demon, goes through Galilee, again foretells His approaching sufferings, comes to Capernaum and provides by miracle for the payment of the tribute, recommends humility, urges forgiveness, chooses the seventy, sends them out to preach, goes to the Feast of Tabernacles, preaches in the Temple, vindicates his own conduct, asserts his divine mission, officers sent to take him, they are convicted by his preaching, spends the night in retirement, returns in the morning to the Temple, refuses to judge the adulteress, declares himself the light of the world, warns his hearers of the danger of infidelity, declares his own existence to be prior to that of Abraham, they are angry, and attempt to stone him, He escapes by miracle, the seventy return, and report their success, returns to Galilee and teaches his disciples to pray, utters the parable of the rich man, warns his followers against covetousness, hypocrisy and the fear of man, urges them to watchfulness, and expectation of his Second Coming to Judgment, goes toward Jerusalem, regardless of Herod, dines with a Pharisee, cures a man of the dropsy, foretells the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles in the parable of the Great Supper, utters the parables of the lost sheep, the piece of money, the prodigal son, the unjust steward, the rich man and Lazarus, and heals the ten lepers, recommends humility and prayer by the parables of the Pharisee and Publican, and the importunate widow. He declares himself the door of the sheepfold, and the good shepherd of the flock, and affirms his union with his Father, the Jews attempt to seize him, He retires beyond Jordan, He declares against divorces, blesses little children, shows the danger of riches, utters the parables of the good Samaritan and that of the vineyard, returns into Judea, raises Lazarus from the dead, the Jews proclaim against him, He retires to Ephraim, sets out on his last journey to Jerusalem, tells his disciples what he should suffer there, comes to Jericho, cures two blind men, and converts Zacheus, stops at Bethany, Mary anoints his feet. Rides into Jerusalem, but first weeps over that devoted city, He goes into the temple and drives out the traders, preaches and performs miracles, and retires to Bethany, returns to Jerusalem, curses the barren fig-tree, visits the temple, and reforms abuses, the Jews are exasperated against Him, He retires at night, returning in the morning, the fig-tree is found withered away, comes again into the temple, confounds the Sanhedrim, who question his authority, utters the parables of the disobedient son, the leased vineyard, and the wedding feast, and garments, confounds their attempts to ensnare Him in the question of tribute, proves the resurrection, and utters denunciations against the Pharisees. Going out of the temple, he applauds the poor widow, foretells the destruction of Jerusalem, declares what will be the signs of its approach, and makes them all together with its destruction [illegible]

[illegible] "Verily I say unto you [illegible] shall betray me [illegible] them to say, Lord [illegible] said, it is one of the twelve [illegible] give a sop [illegible] ye shall be offended [illegible] night; for it is written, I will smite the Shepherd and the sheep [illegible] be scattered abroad [illegible] am risen again, I will go before you into Galilee." [illegible] sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot [illegible] Simon." [illegible] the sop, went immediately out [illegible] night." They retire to G[illegible], and there, in an agony, he pours out his soul to God, so that "his sweat was as it were great drops of blood, falling down to the ground." [illegible] Judas delivers him up to the chief [illegible] Jews, who lead him away [illegible] then to the palace of Caiaphas [illegible] disciples forsake him [illegible] He is condemned by the [illegible] and brought before Pontius Pilate [illegible] him sent to Herod, and there [illegible] arrayed in royal robes, (in derision [illegible] contempt,) and sent back to Pilate [illegible] accused of blasphemy, and sedition [illegible] upon, buffeted, smitten, crowned with thorns, insulted and mockingly and finally nailed to the cross. He commends [illegible] his mother, and commends His [illegible] the hands of his Father and gives up the ghost. [illegible] himself.

(Concluded.)

As we have shown in a former article, that the cleansing [illegible] and sanctuary [illegible] 2300 days, we now proceed [illegible] we are fast nearing [illegible] moment.

As the vision was fully [illegible] Daniel, except the time, (Dan. [illegible]) must suppose that this (time) [illegible] subject of a subsequent [illegible] briel's [illegible] 9th chapter, we have [illegible] and Gabriel [illegible] understanding of the vision [illegible] commences [illegible] was the only part [illegible] believe that he [illegible] he declares that [illegible] up (make sure) [illegible] therefore be [illegible] do not make it [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] that we have left 1817 [illegible] which will terminate [illegible] coming [illegible]. Thus 37+1817=1854 [illegible]. Passing back from the cross, A. D. 37, [illegible] weeks or 465 days, we have for our starting point 446, B. C. Thus 37 from 483 leaves 446. And from this point (the commandment to build the streets and walls in troublous times) we have the following chronological harmony.

As one of the divisions of the 70 weeks was to seal up the prophecy, we look at the chronology of the last prophecy by Malachi, and we have B. C. 397, which, taken from 446 leaves 49 years or 7 weeks. Hence from this point, 446, we pass down to the closing up of prophecy, and we have a boundary for the 7 weeks, just 49 years. From the same point (446 B. C.) we go down 69 weeks, 483 years, and we come to the cross, A. D. 37, thence 1 week (7 years) from this and we are brought to the end of the Jewish time in A. D. 44, and then turn to the Gentiles A.D. 45. Therefore, I conclude we shall not have to wait neither for the nations to move, nor the 2300 days to end, but a little longer. "It will speak and not lie"—Glory be to God.

Dear brethren, gird on the whole armor, one more struggle, one more going out, fully, whole hearted, and the victory is yours. Fear not the tempest, His voice will calm the billows. Behold your God will come with a recompense, He will save you, if faithful.

Yours for life eternal,

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, MARCH 1, 1854.

☞ Our correspondents will greatly oblige us if they will adhere strictly to the following rules:

1. In all communications designed for publication write over the head of the article, "For the World's Crisis."

2. In all cases of personal correspondence not designed for the paper write on it the letter "Private."

3. Write at the commencement of each letter the place of the correspondent's residence, never failing to add the name of the State and county if written from the Middle, Western or Southern States.

4. Write all orders for the Crisis or for books at the bottom of the letter or communication, commencing thus, "Order for the Crisis," or, "Order for books," as the case may be.

5. Write at the close of the communication or letter the amount of money inclosed if any, together with the name of the correspondent.

6. In returning papers, the name of the person to whom it was directed should be written on the paper together with the Post Office address.

7. Let all communications be written on as fair and legible hand as may be, especially names and directions for the paper.

8. In preparing matter for the Crisis we hope our correspondents will adopt, as the most important and indispensable of all rules, the practice of commending the subject to God, praying fervently for light to be reflected on the position of the Church, and for heavenly manna to feed and nurture the little flock unto eternal life—also that sinners may be induced to flee from impending wrath, and take refuge in the ark before the deluge takes them all away. [illegible] letters and communications [illegible] carefully read over, corrected, and, if need be, re-written, punctuated and prepared for the press, as far as the writer [illegible] to do. If, however, the [illegible] understand punctuation, [illegible] as willing, and if [illegible] to serve the humblest [illegible] in bringing his or her [illegible] feelings before the public, [illegible] with high [illegible] provided only [illegible] the influence of the Spirit [illegible] often send orders [illegible] without giving their Post [illegible]. In [illegible] instances [illegible]

[illegible] Question.

The arrivals since our last issue have brought much further intelligence in relation to the belligerent powers, but we look with great interest to the next arrival, expecting affairs to take a decided turn, and give a brighter light on our position shortly. The Lord will order all things in infinite wisdom and in perfect harmony with the prophetic word: "He hath His way in the whirlwind and in the storm," and He will control all the political as well as the natural elements to the development of His glory: for "the wrath of man shall praise Him and the remainder of wrath will He restrain."

☞ Our terms are frequently inquired for—they are these: All persons desiring, in candor, to read and investigate the subject of Christ's immediate appearing, may receive it gratuitously by making application for the same. It is, however, to be presumed that those who may deem the paper worthy of their patronage, will, in the fear of God, contribute such an amount for its support as their circumstances may render it proper. Otherwise should funds fail; we shall discontinue the publication; but the paper is perfectly free in the sense that we make no charge to subscribers on our books, nor demands of any one for remuneration. We simply desire the will of the Lord to be done, and the paper to continue so long as it may subserve the cause of truth.

N. B. Some questions have been propounded by our correspondents, which should have received earlier attention, but for want of time have been neglected.—By leave of providence they will be attended to next week.

☞ We have been requested to give notice that a general Temperance Meeting will be held at Huntington Hall on Friday evening next.

For the World's Crisis.

What is Truth?—No. 1.

I feel impelled of the Lord to write some thoughts for the 'Crisis,' and I have prayed for guidance and direction.—I hope through the teachings of God's spirit to write nothing but what is in accordance with the revealed word. 'What is truth,' was asked 1800 years ago; and we who are looking for the Lord may emphatically ask the question now. I shall endeavor to show,

1st. That the present movement in the Advent Church is the cry spoken of by the Saviour, Matt. 25: 6.

After Jesus, in Matt. 24, had spoken of the signs that should precede his coming, and informed us of the servants' (ministers') messages, viz: one preaching that Christ is coming at a given point, and the other that he will delay his coming beyond that point. He said, 'then shall the kingdom of heaven (the Church on earth) be likened to ten virgins, that took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom.' The church is to move like that. Has this been fulfilled? I think it has in 1844. I have never seen, or heard of, or read of any movement in the Church like going forth to meet the bridegroom until that time.

But some will ask—Did we not go forth in 1843? No. There was nothing like that then. There was no particular point in '43, at which we confidently expected the Lord, so as to be like going forth to meet a friend, or the bridegroom. But there was in the autumn of '44, a leaving all—like going out to meet a coming friend.

But it is asked again—Was there not a tarrying time between the spring and autumn of '44? And did we not have in the autumn of '44 the cry? No. There was no real tarrying then, because we saw that if we had the right decree from which to reckon, (Ezra 7,) that went forth in the autumn, consequently our time would not expire until the autumn of '44.

But it was just as necessary, in our fulfilling the prophetic word, for us to make a mistake with regard to the cry in '44, as it was for us to write the vision in '43—'Took their lamps.' There must be a resemblance to this. What did we take? Our Bibles, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path,"—Ps. 119: 105.

"The foolish took their lamps, but took no oil with them."

Oil is necessary to make the lamp [illegible] give light, so faith in the Bible is necessary, in order to have it light up [illegible]. Without the Bible to [illegible] give no light [illegible]

Since that time we have slumbered and slept, on the definite time of the Lord's coming, if no more.

'And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps.'

If the Church ever could slumber, after 'going forth,' we did from '44 to '53. We were like the wandering Israelites—not knowing when we should enter the land.

'At midnight.' Some cannot sleep the first part of the night, others cannot sleep the latter part. If there be a time at which the whole will be asleep, it will be at midnight. So the cry found us.

'Then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out,' (Margin, going out.)

Do we not see this scripture fulfilled before our eyes? All arose at the cry now sounding. All trimmed their lamps (searched their Bibles.) And while to some the evidence looks plainer and plainer, from the Bible, that Jesus will come this year, to others—who acknowledged that there was some light at first—it looks darker and darker, the more they examine. Jesus said it would be so. 'Their lamps are going out.' Such are deficient in faith in the word of God—else it would give them light. They may be honest in their unbelief; they may be confident they shall be saved—provided they will be confident, notwithstanding their danger is pointed out. Their confidence is so strong that they are represented as arguing the case with the Lord, why they are not saved, after the door is shut. Such will no doubt settle down into darkness and carnal security—as the Jews did after they had sealed their doom—until it be too late.

O! that God would awaken some more of the sleepy ones, that they may see their danger while there is mercy.

Now from Jesus' teaching, in this parable, it is in vain for any one, who will not trim his lamp, and have it replenished with oil,—who will not awake to see the light, beaming from this precious truth,—to talk about being ready for the coming of the Lord; for the Saviour shows that none—not even the wise virgins—are ready until they are awakened by the cry, and trim their lamps, and have them burning,—until they have faith in the cry, and believe the Bible evidence, on which it is founded. And all who do not believe this evidence, are still slumbering, and—continuing thus until Jesus comes—must be lost. So Jesus teaches.

I do not take it upon me to judge any man; but when I see some acting just as Jesus said the foolish virgins would act, I cannot help thinking—'He knew what was in man."

The Nations Angry.

BY S. S. B.

Dear reader, have you not felt an intuitive conviction in your mind, that you were living in an eventful period of time? Have you not heard persons express a conviction that some event, in their opinion, was about to transpire?

By what is that deep, anxious feeling in thine and many other hearts produced? Ah, it is a link in the great chain of events, that was to develop itself in harmony with the consummating of the jots and titles as declared by the great teacher to his apostles.

A writer in the Christian Review said a few years since, "I am strongly persuaded that the present generation of men stand upon the eve of the mightiest revolution that the annals of time record. Even Mohammedans are expecting some great and to them appalling event. What will it be? The battle of Armageddon? The Millenium? The new heavens and earth? Perhaps all of these preceded by the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven. The events we expect to precede that great event may follow it. The character of the second, as was the first advent, may have been mistaken. NOTHING IN THE PROPHECIES WITHHOLDS HIS COMING THAT I HAVE SEEN."

Said a writer in the same paper more recently; "We are living in the midst of troubles. Portentous and fearful signs are abroad in the world. The wisest ask in wondering anxiety, 'What will be the end of these things?' A universal impression exists upon the minds of men, that wonderful and important events are about to transpire. We take the position that this impression is the Harbinger of a series of sublime and stirring events, the voice of one crying, 'Prepare ye the way of the Lord.'"

A correspondent of the Tribune [illegible]

[illegible] camps, no power of the second or third order being able to remain neutral. How they will divide, it is difficult to foresee precisely—but PEACE WILL BE NOWHERE."

The Hon. Rufus Choate, in a late speech in Boston, referring to the stormy aspect of the political horizon of Europe, said:

"It has seemed to me as if the prerogatives of crowns, and the rights of men, and the hoarded up resentments and revenges of a thousand years, were about to unsheath the sword for a conflict, in which blood shall flow as in the Apocalyptic vision, to the bridles of the horses, and in which a whole age of men shall pass away—in which the great bell of time shall sound out another hour—in which society itself shall be tried as by fire and steel—whether it is of nature and nature's God, or not!"

A writer in the Lowell Courier concludes an article in the following startling manner:

"Thus then does the cause stand—war a moral certainty—Russia on the one side, all the western powers of Europe, and the sympathies of the whole Christian world on the other. And God help the right."

We select the following from an article in the N. Y. Tribune of Jan. 28th.

"The Eastern sky is red with the portents of a general conflagration. Monarchs turn pale at the prospect and fidget on their tottering thrones. Nations start from their uneasy slumbers, and, grasping tightly their chains so as to stifle their clanking, ask in whispers if the clock of Destiny has struck the hour of freedom and revenge. Gaunt artisans and ragged laborers, roaming in hungry desperation, thank God that the crisis visibly approaches wherein the poor who cannot live shall at least have opportunity to die like men. * * * * * * The whispered assurances of pecuniary magnates in London and Paris to their brethren across the Atlantic that no war should grow out of the Oriental complications, or, at the worst, that such a war would not rage eastward of the Adriatic, have all proved futile and false, and at length the conviction dawns on even their apprehension that a General War is, in all human probability, inevitable. Some act of God, such as the death of Nicholas or of Louis Napoleon, might possibly avert it; but the chances are now ten to one that next June will see all Europe and half of Asia involved in one of the bloodiest conflicts since the days of Attila.

Truly the Nations are now in the precise condition that prophecy declares they will be at the sounding of the seventh Angel. See Rev. xi. 15—18.

When the Czar heard that Turkey had declared war, he fell into a passion and swore that he would wage a war of extermination against the Turks.

In a recent Paris paper a writer describes the conduct of the Emperor in the following manner—"He lives in a state of religious exultation regarding himself as the chosen instrument, under the hand of God, to drive the Moslem from Europe; and only regretting that he should have allowed so many years to pass by without fulfilling his destiny.

The populace at St. Petersburg have worked themselves up to the highest pitch of fanaticism, cheering the Emperor whenever he appears in public with the wildest enthusiasm, and denouncing as traitors all who dare to speak of peace.

Omer Pasha, after reading the declaration of war to his troops concludes in the following manner.

"The dust that you tread under foot is our ashes, the ashes of our Fathers—defend it! Soldiers! Let us altogether swear to spill our blood unto the last drop to uphold the integrity of the throne of our Emperor and beloved sovereign, the Sultan Abduhl Medzid."

Truly, Russia and Turkey are angry. Let us now see whether the Romanists are angry also. Allow me here to introduce the oath of the Papal Secret Society of the holy faith:

"I, N— N—, in the presence of Almighty God, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, of the ever immaculate Virgin Mary and of all the celestial court, etc., of you, honored father, swear that I will sooner cut off my right hand and die of hunger or under the greatest torments—and I pray the Lord God Almighty to condemn me to the endless pains of hell—than to betray or deceive one of the honored fathers and brethren of the Catholic Apostolic Society to which I subscribe at this time, or if I do not scrupulously fulfil its laws, or give assistance to my brethren in want. I swear to hold myself in defending the cause which I have embraced, never to spare a single individual belonging to the infamous combination of the Liberals, whatever may be his birth, parentage or fortune, and to have no pity for the cries of children nor of old men or women, and to shed the blood of the infamous Liberals, even to the last drop, without regard to sex, age or ranks. Finally, I swear implacable hatred to all the enemies of our holy Roman Catholic religion, one and true."

Such is the feeling of Melchisedeck of Satan, as one expresses it the

"Curs'd system, bitter root of every crime,
[illegible]
The darkest [illegible] on the face of time.
[illegible]"

[illegible] heard Gavazzi speak. In his farewell address, he uttered the following sentiment:

"In the approaching crusade we adopt the sword as an emblem of our determination to fight for God and our native land. The sword is to destroy all the enemies of civil and religious liberty in Italy."

He declared his mission to be one of annihilation to Popery for then and not till then would Italy be free, and closed by saying Luther was a reformer, I am an exterminator.

Hear Kossuth, "Royalty has lost its prestige in France, Germany, Italy, Austria and Hungary. Both parties equally recognize that the time has come when the stuggle of Principles must be decided. Absolutism or Republicanism. * * *

That is the condition of the European Continent in general. A great, terrible bloody revolution is unavoidable. That is known and felt by every one. And every sound man knows equally well that the temporary success of Louis Napoleon's usurpations made but the terrible crisis more unavoidable yet. Ye men of peace at any price, do not shut your eyes before the finger of God pointing to the mene, tekel, upharsin written with gigantic letters upon the sky of Europe—Despots never yield to JUSTICE. And mankind inspired with love of freedom will not yield to annihilation, cowardly. PEACE IS IMPOSSIBLE.

O what a day rushes on! and we fly to meet it, the lengthening rays of the sun at eventide do not proclaim with greater certainty the close of day, than the state of the Nations the certainty of the GREAT BATTLE OF THE DAY OF GOD ALMIGHTY.

Ripe is the vintage of the Earth,
Its clustering grapes are round and full,
And vengeance—vengeance bursts to birth,
Sudden and irresistible.
Messiah comes to tread again
The wine-press of the Battle plain,
The cry is up—the strife's begun—
The struggle of the mighty ones—
And Armageddon's Day comes on—
THE CARNIVAL OF SLAUGHTER'S SONS, WAR LIFTS HIS HELMET TO HIS BROW,
O GOD, PROTECT THY PEOPLE NOW.

We have received the following interesting communication from a Clergyman in Rhode Island, who, we trust, will pardon the liberty we take in publishing it.

To the Editor of the Crisis:—I have received several Nos. of the World's Crisis from your office, which I have read carefully. Some stranger friend, whom I one day met in the cars between Providence and Boston, took my name, and I suppose has left it with you, so that I now receive the Crisis each week. Whether the reading of this sheet will be of any advantage to me or not, I am disposed to treat the subject matter it contains with candor and truth. For many years before the present Advent excitement became wide spread by the publications and lectures of Bro. Miller and others, I had believed and preached the certainty of our Lord's second coming, and his glorious reign with his people on the earth. I never, however, fell in with the views of the Adventists in regard to the time of our Lord's coming. The time of that stupendous event, it has seemed to me, was, for wise reasons, concealed from the knowledge of man.

That we are living in the very crisis of the world's history, I most firmly believe. The present convulsions of the colossal empires of the earth, the war in the East, the spreading of the war-spirit in Europe, notwithstanding the peace movements, the rapid spread of knowledge, religion and the principles of freedom, even in papal and pagan nations, the dark but rapid strides of infidelity, intemperance, and of the slave power; this struggling of forces, spiritual and physical, indicate stupendous revolutions and events which may well cause the world to tremble. What the end of all this will be, God only knows. I am not certain but the last great battle is soon to be fought, and that angel voices will be heard saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the KINGDOM of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever," at the close of the present convulsed state of the nations. This event is at the door. But whether it is literal or figurative; whether the millennial reign shall be one strictly literal or spiritual, I will not discuss here.

The events of our day call loudly upon the Christian church to prayer and watchfulness, and to holiness of heart and life. They admonish the ministry to fidelity and plainness in the utterance of God's truth, and seeking to save lost sinners. And they warn the wicked "to flee from the wrath to come."

As all chronological tables are liable to inaccuracies which stretch back for centuries, I cannot, I dare not, attempt to fix the time of the prophetic periods, when they shall [illegible]

The spirit of the World's Crisis I like. It is free from censoriousness and fault-finding, and seems to seek the true way to the beautiful in the unseen and glorious Saviour. Such a spirit will commend your work to those who have no light upon time, of which number the writer of this is one. And if your publication but attracts attention to the great subject of the coming Redeemer's Kingdom, and leads to a more careful observance of the signs of the times, some good will be accomplished by it, and the cause of Truth will be advanced, whether the particular view you advocate shall prove to be the truth or not, by the stirring events of 1854.

FROM WASHINGTON. It is said that one of the chief topics of conversation in Washington is the protest of Messrs. Crampton and Sartiges, the English and French Ministers, against the fitting out of Russian privateers in American ports. The reply of Secretary Marcy has not been made public. It may be possible that he will await the action of the Senate on Gen. Cass's movement with regard to our foreign policy prior to replying to these ambassadors in detail. While upon the subject it may be as well to quote the resolutions which Gen. Cass last Saturday so strenuously urged the Senate to adopt. Here they are, as published in the New York Herald:—

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the people of this Union have ever viewed with the deepest concern the renewed intervention of Powers in the affairs of countries not embraced within their borders, particularly when such intervention had avowedly for its object the repression of generous political sentiments; and that they will never permit such an occurrence upon this continent without physical resistance to it.

Resolved, That while the United States of America are disposed to observe in a spirit of good faith, international obligations, they desire a similar observance of such obligations by all the nations of the earth, and that they can never behold with indifference the obliteration of independent States by a third power, because of the political freedom of such States.

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to cause a copy of these resolutions to be communicated to each of the diplomatic agents of foreign nations residing near this government, and also copies thereof to be transmitted to diplomatic agents in foreign countries, in order that the sentiment and purpose of this republic may be neither misconceived nor misunderstood in any quarter of the globe.

☞ Extracts from the London correspondence of the N. Y. Tribune:

LONDON, Monday, Feb. 6, 1824.

The diplomatic papers on the "Rights and Privileges of the Latin and Greek Church in Turkey"—as the parliamentary blue-books are styled—are cooked for the public in a very clean way, yet all the cunning of the ministers could not wipe out some traces of facts, which should not reach the public. For instance, Sir G. H. Seymour, the British Embassador at St. Petersburg, openly says that Prince Menchikoff's mission originated solely in the Montenegrine affair (as I always told your readers) and Col. Rose, the British Secretary of legation, confirms this view, having heard from Prince Menchikoff himself that the Russian troops were concentrated on the Turkish frontiers on account of that affair. Why, then, are the Montenegro not incorporated with the papers presented to Parliament? Because Austria's treachery and leaning towards Russia would be too manifest.

Again, we have been told that the combined fleet went to Constantinople in order to protect Turkey against Russia, but Lord Redcliffe here openly declares he sent for it because the popular excitement was so great that Reshid Pasha feared an outbreak against those who advocated the British views of accommodation according to the first Vienna note. Besides, there was a danger that the Turks might enter into dangerous alliances, as with Hungary and Poland, and in order to prevent this the fleet passed the Dardanelles. Again, the affair of the Softas is not mentioned in the papers, Lord Redcliffe's dispatch having been suppressed. Yet we have his frank avowal that the diplomatic interference of the Four Powers grievously injured the operations of the army—for instance, by preventing the following up of the victory of Oltenitza, when the victorious Turks had to recross the Danube, in order to suit the convenience of England and Austria. We have further, the instructions to the fleet, which are to prevent any attack of the Russians on the Turks, but likewise to insure the Russians that no Turkish ships shall molest the Russian shores; that is to say, that the Circassians are to be left to their fate, and that the Turks are not to be allowed to provide their allies with arms and ammunition.

Baron Brunow and Count Kisseleff have broken off diplomatic intercourse with the Cabinets of London and Paris, and Count Orloff has brought to Vienna the refusal of Nicholas to accept the note of January 13. [illegible]

The ostensible one was to offer new terms of pacification to Turkey, through Austria. These new terms are identical with the original Menchikoff claims. Of course Austria has rejected them, declaring that she cannot depart from the other Powers in respect to the settlement. The secret mission of Count Orloff is quite different: it is to sound the Courts of Vienna and Berlin as to the meaning of their present neutrality, to require from them the right of transporting Russian troops through Silesia and Hungary, on the railway and by the Danube, and to see whether there is any probability of success for a renewal of the Holy Alliance. In case the views of Prussia are not too adverse to such an alliance, the Czar in person will immediately visit his brother in-law, and his "ally and intimate friend." Count Orloff accordingly had two long interviews with the Emperor at Vienna, before he visited the Minister of Foreign Affairs, with whom in ten minutes he had settled all his business, since he was prepared for the refusal of Austria to accept the new proposals of the Czar.

TUESDAY, Feb 7, 1854.

My statements of yesterday have been fully confirmed. Lord Clarendon yesterday night most emphatically declared that he has no further hopes for negotiation, that Count Orloff's counter proposals were rejected at Vienna, but that Count Orloff still remained at Vienna, for what purpose the noble Lord could not tell. Accordingly The Times of to-day speaks of "insincere friends," and we are informed that Austria is assembling a corps of observation in Croatia This corps is evidently assembled in order to threaten Turkey or to invade Bosnia, and not in order to threaten Russia, for no human mind can imagine the possibility that Russia can penetrate into Bosnia. Evidently, there is an expectation in Vienna that Servia will soon rise against Turkey, and this movement is to be supported by Austria. In the blue books we find a passage where Prince Menchikoff declares that Russia will always be able to make a revolution in Servia.—The Russians are now forming a Greco-Christian legion in Wallachia, the command of which is entrusted to old Milosh, the dethroned Prince of Servia.

It is, therefore, clear that an invasion of Servia will soon take place. The Porte is likewise forming a Christian Legion, principally out of Russian deserters.

LATER FROM EUROPE. The steamship Europa arrived at New York on Saturday morning, with dates to the 11th inst., and the important intelligence of continued preparations for war—of the illness of the Russian Emperor—of a democratic conspiracy in Spain—of an awful shipwreck with loss of life. The price of wheat had declined four pence.—Breadstuffs were firm in the markets. The cotton trade continued good.

From England we learn that in the House of Commons, on the 10th, Lord John Russell stated in answer to Mr Roeback that the cards sent by the Chamberlain for the admission of the American Minister to the opening of Parliament by the Queen were the same as those sent to other Diplomatic representatives, and he did not think any difficulty was likely to arise out of the question as to the dress in which the American Minister was to appear on State occasions.

The Cunard Steamship Company deny that their steamers are chartered by government for the conveyance of troops to Turkey.

From Russia and Turkey we learn nothing new. Count Orloff had gone home—his mission having failed. No reply has arrived yet from the Czar to the final ultimatum of France and England. There is, however, another talk of arbitration. Ramifications of the Greek conspiracy has been discovered widely spread throughout Turkey, and suppressed.

On the Danube there had been rather a severe encounter at Giurgevo, without any result. Another attack on Kalafat was daily looked for. Omar Pacha had recovered from sickness. The army on the Danube was in good health and spirits.

The allied fleets were immediately to re-enter the Black Sea. The allied ambassadors were much dissatisfied with the fleets' return to the Bosphorus.

The Emperor of Russia was sick, and had not been seen for some days.

France and England continue their armaments on a large scale. The government of France is making extensive financial arrangements with the Bank and credit Mobillier to meet the expense of the coming war.

A Democratic conspiracy was discovered at Madrid on the 6th; fourteen persons were arrested Gen. Jose Concha is proclaimed a rebel, but has escaped into France.

Count Buol has notified the Turkish Ambassador that the concentration of troops on the frontier is intended only as a precautionary measure against aggression of Austrian territory.

This notification was accompanied by friendly expressions. The British Government has advertised for 7 or 8 coppered ships of 700 or 800 tons, to be engaged for four months certain, in the conveyance of cavalry. The port of destination is not mentioned.

Accounts from the Danube via Paris, announce positively another Turkish success between Galatz and Ibrail, and independently of the victory at Giurgevo.

General Klapka and others have embraced Islamism. Prince Stowesa has been made a Pacha.

It is said that the Cunard Company, not being able to spare any of their steamers, Government has entered into negotiations with the Peninsular Steamship Company to carry troops to the seat of war.

☞ We received a telegraphic despatch from Bro. Burnham and Berick, on Saturday last, stating that they could not hold a meeting at Loudon Ridge, as advertised last week, and requesting us to withdraw the appointment from that place.

WASHINGTON ITEMS. A despatch from Washington states that the British and French Ministers on Thursday called upon Secretary Marcy for the purpose of protesting [illegible] privateers, in [illegible] derstood that they informed the Secretary that such vessels would be treated [illegible] by their respective governments.

☞ [illegible] been sent off. [illegible]

WAR AT LAST. If indices predict conflict, then surely is Europe on the eve of a war the magnitude of which can hardly be exaggerated. A general war now in Europe will be a thing different from any yet known in the history of the world. The means of offence and defence are deadly without precedent. A musket that kills at nearly a mile distant; a Paixhan gun that deals death in the lump; a steamer that is independant of wind and tide, and, riding the Baltic or Mediterranean, Danube or Rhine, does in a week the distance that two months hardly achieved at the time of Napoleon's invasion of Egypt; a railway that can carry troops from Havre to Vienna in days instead of months as formerly; the greatest means of supplying by ingenious modes of perservation—at least for a period—the troops with good fresh food; the labor-saving machinery that can fill up by extemporization the gaps in arms and accoutrements which havoc makes; the latent feeling of Government that war may be made useful by keeping the people fighting in order to keep them in subjection, it being well known that reforms always cease during war, and progress during peace—these all are the special phenomena of the great crisis now pending.

* * * * * * It is not likely that the War now begun will be a short one. If Napoleon could never consent to it on a dishonored throne—that is to make peace when his last battle had not been a victory—how can Nicholas afford to recoil before the formidable combination which now confronts him? To seem omnipotent in the eyes of his Russians is a necessity of his position; and humiliation abroad would very possibly be fatal to his despotism at home. And besides, a War which one or two battles is to finish is seldom so long in coming to a head as this has been. The very fact that the Czar has provoked it so wantonly will render his escape from it more difficult. To be moderate and conciliatory now would imply the severest censure on all he has done or meditated for the last twelve months.

Either the war now commencing is to be one of the most eventful and memorable in History, or the age of gory conflict, of mutual human slaughter, has passed, and that of all-potent Diplomacy has replaced it. A few months must determine whether this is to be a war of politicians or a war of extermination. Present appearances do not favor the former hypothesis. [N. Y. Tribune.

Extracts from Letters.

SURRY, Feb. 20th, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—I have just closed a series of meetings in this place. The cause I think is on the rise. The children are getting ready for the kingdom, and are rejoicing in hope of the glory of God soon to be revealed.

Yours in hope, A. ROSS.

CHILI, Ill., Feb. 13, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—I thank my God that he has accomplished what I have so ardently desired, that there should be a Herald sent through the world, giving meat in due season. More than one year ago, while examining the prophetic numbers written out by Brother Chapman; my eyes were fixed on the No. 1779—which he affirmed was the last year that the Pope put the saints to death by legal power.—My first thought was the 1260 years then ended, and, in turning my attention to the 12th of Daniel, I soon discovered the wise shall understand that the 1335 years would end in '54, notwithstanding all that has been written and said against it. Praise the Lord, I have never doubted it; and now seeing the flood of evidences to accompany this truth, it makes my heart leap for joy; praise the Lord, deliverance is nigh. Even so come, Lord Jesus.

Yours, waiting for that blessed hope,
R. SCHELLHOUS.

SALEM, Mass., Feb. 20, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—I am still laboring in this place, and have been for more than five weeks. There has been an increasing interest from the commencement. Thirty happy souls have been buried with Christ by baptism, twenty of which were baptised yesterday afternoon; several others are intending to be next Sunday. The interest is so great to hear in this place, that scores stand in the aisles and entry who are unable to get seats; and hundreds are unable to find entrance at all. Many brethren and sisters of the various societies are becoming interested in the present truth.—May the spirit of God rest upon them, and lead them into all truth. Elder George Waugh, of the Wesleyan Methodist Society, has attended the meetings, and is partially convinced of the truth of Jesus' coming in 1854. Bro. Paine is with me laboring for the Lord. To God be all the Glory.

Your brother hoping for immortality in 1854. JOHN G. HOOK.

Bro. Merriam:—I received your paper, the World's Crisis, and have read it with [illegible] two thousand [illegible] delivered one hundred lectures. Those States were Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan and Indiana. I found that the coming of the Lord had spread through these western States like the morning light beating back the darkness of the past night. Your paper is read with a good degree of interest in this place since it was sent to me and my son. Our pursuit is after truth; and, as the gold diggers of California, have no respect for one place above another, but where they can find the most of the pure metal—so with us.

N. B. I wish to say to the brethren abroad, that my health this winter is poor. I am not able to preach much, nor to travel as formerly. My post office address will be at my old home, Vermont, Chautauque Co., N. Y.

JONATHAN WILSON.

Readers of the Crisis: It is with a heart full of feeling that I address a few lines to you; and I can say from my heart, I do thank God that whilst darkness covers the land, and gross darkness the people, there is a light in the Bible for them that will take heed unto the "sure word of prophecy as unto a light that shineth in a dark place." And I can say that I did thank God with all my heart, when I heard that He had moved upon some of the brethren to publish the World's Crisis; and it is my prayer to God, dear brethren, that we may all put all upon the altar of God, and put shoulder to the wheel, and help to roll on this last message, so that the poor that live in back places may have a chance to receive the truth. Thus it may prove the means of plucking some from the eternal burnings; for I do believe that in a very few more months, dear brethren, we shall be called to stand before God and give an account of our stewardship. If, then, we have not done all that we could, the blood of our fellow mortals will be found in the skirts of our garments. It is my prayer that we may have a realizing sense of the Judgment—that we may be moved to work for God, and not try to save our lives within sight of the city. We should be very glad to have some of the brethren that do not count their lives dear unto themselves, come up here and give the Church "meat in due season." PETER MITSON.

Magog, Canada East, 1854

PLAINVILLE, N. Y., Feb, 13, 1854.

Bro. Merriam;—According to promise, I again write to inform you of the good news, that souls are being converted to God in this neighborhood. About 30 in all have confessed faith in Christ, and 20 have been buried with Christ by baptism. Two of them were like Peter, begotten again to a hope of life by the resurrection, having belonged to the Methodist church a number of years; but having never seen the beauty there was in the figure until they obtained Peter's hope. More will yet go forth in that ordinance. A number of backsliders also, have been reclaimed—one of them a Protestant Methodist preacher who has received the truth, and is going into the field to warn his fellow men to prepare for the judgment. Last evening the writer went in company with him to a new place, about seven miles from here, where we had a good congregation and profound attention. An inquiring mind appeared to be there, for a number wanted to hear more on the subject, and an appointment was given out for the next Wednesday evening. Bro. Smith is holding meetings in another direction, about five miles from this place. I think there will be quite a work in that neighborhood; there are calls for Bro. S. to go into other places, but he cannot supply them at present. I feel that the work is not finished in this place yet. I was encouraged from the little note you wrote over my letter in the 3d No. of the Crisis, to hope that some of God's watchmen would have come this way to proclaim the 'Cry' to the sleeping virgins, and warn a doomed world of their speedy retribution.

I feel that the work is great—the judgment just before us—and that soon we shall have to give an account of our stewardship. I have prayed that Bro. Hook, or some other Bro., might come into this region and work in concert with Bro. Smith. I believe the main work to be done is in the highways and hedges. There is a region of country here that has not been favored with much Advent preaching. I do thank God for what he is doing, though yet desirous of seeing more accomplished.

Yours, looking for the nobleman to return, and give the saints the kingdom.

JOHN T. ONGLEY.

WEST PORT-[illegible], N. Y.,
February [illegible]

[illegible] impossible. God speed this little messenger through the land until all shall hear the glorious sound of the Midnight cry. My prayer to God is, that it may be the means of bringing many souls to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus our Lord. The contents of these little sheets are truly "meat in due season" to all who are hungering and thirsting after the truth. While perusing over these blessed little sheets, I discovered a few brief sketches of the numerous revivals now in progress in different sections of the U. States. It rejoices my heart greatly to hear that so many are turning in with the offers of salvation in these last days. It brings fresh to my remembrance the great revival witnessed in this place last July, under the labors of Brn. Hook and Ford, of Concord, N. H. There were forty-seven converted and reclaimed; and forty of them went down into the water and were buried with Christ in baptism by brother John G. Hook, and are now rejoicing in the hope of soon seeing Jesus and being made like him. Glory to God; I can say "I belong to this band, hallelujah." The Lord is coming in fifty-four—his spirit bears witness with ours that this is the truth.

Both Prophets and Apostles too,
Their writings show this doctrine true.

My faith in the speedy coming of Christ this year is unshaken. I praise God that he has still a few faithful watchmen on the walls of Zion, who are proclaiming the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. Says the Lord, (Joel 2: 1,) "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain; let all the inhabitants of the land tremble for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand." His true followers are now obeying this command. The midnight cry is sounding; we hear the proclamation, Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. The virgins are awaking and trimming their lamps, and the wise are taking oil in their vessels with their lamps, and are now going forth rejoicing in the glorious prospect of soon beholding their coming King The Lord is surely coming; I fully believe that ere A. D. '54 is rolled into the past, the parted skies will reveal the Son of man "coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory," and all the holy angels with him. We are fast approaching the closing scene of earth's drama, "when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." The last, SOLEMN, MIGHTY CRY is going, as it were, on the wings of the wind—the third and last invitation to come to the marriage supper of the Lamb is being given; God's dear children are doing up their last work for the salvation of their fellow-men; sinners are having their last call of mercy, their last warning "to flee from the wrath to come."

When the faithful followers of Christ went out in '43 and '44 expecting to meet the Lord, and he tarried to them, was the language of the faithful, after the time passed, I am sorry that I ever went out on time? No, it was this, "Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room." In searching the Word they found there was to be a tarrying time, in which they were to slumber and sleep until awakened by the glorious sound of the midnight cry. Praise God, this glorious proclamation is now going like a whirlwind through the land, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."

It is the midnight cry, 'twill bring
Our looked-for, long-expected King.

The darkness is past, the true light now shineth; God's children are near the Jordan. We find from the third place at which Elijah arrives, the chariot comes and he ascends to heaven. He had no fourth place to go to, neither shall we; but when the third invitation to come to supper is completed, the Lord comes, and they that are ready go in with Him, and the door is shut. Lord prepare us all for the coming conflict is my prayer. Oh! I can truly say, give us a full preparation and hasten the time.

O haste the bright morning, when Christ shall appear,
To hush every sigh, and to wipe every tear,
To comfort his people and set them all free;
O haste the bright morning of earth's jubilee.

Then the righteous dead shall awake, and arise from the tomb, shouting, "O grave where is thy victory?" Then we who are alive and remain unto his coming, shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and rise to meet our Saviour in the air, shouting, "O death where is thy sting?" Glory to God, His dear children are almost home.

Deliverance Will Come.

BY [illegible] CATLIN.

I saw a way-worn traveler,
In tattered garments clad,
A struggling up a mountain—
It seemed that he was sad.
His back was burdened heavy,
His strength was almost gone,
But he shouted, as he journey'd,
"Deliverance will come!"

The summer sun was beaming,
The sweat was on his brow,
His raiment was all dusty,
And his step was very slow.
Still he kept pressing forward,
For he was wending home,
And he shouted, as he journey'd,
"Deliverance will come!"

The songsters in the arbors
That grew beside the way,
Attracted his attention,
Inviting his delay.
His watchword being "Onward!"
He stopp'd his ears and ran,
Still shouting, as he journey'd,
"Deliverance will come!"

I saw him in the evening,
When the sun was bending low,
He overtopp'd the mountain,
And reached the vale below.
His elder brother met him—
His journey it was done,
And he shouted, as it ended,
"Deliverance will come!"

His eyes were dim and heavy,
His body weak and wan,
Therefore, his brother gave him
A couch to lie upon,
And closed the blinds around him,
And locked him up alone,
That nothing might disturb him
Till deliv'rance should come.

Hope made for him a pillow,
And Faith a garment rare,
To wrap him in his slumbers
Till Christ his home prepare.
But when the dawn of morning
Broke in his little room,
He rose, and cried, astonished,
"Deliverance has come!"

Then I heard the song of triumph
He sung upon that shore,
Saying, "Jesus has redeemed me
To suffer never more;"
And casting his eyes backward
On the race that he had run,
He shouted loud, in glory,
"Deliverance has come!"

Obituary.

DEATH OF ELDER C. S. TURNER.

This beloved brother died at his father's, in Randolph, Vt., at 7 o'clock on Tuesday evening, January 31st., 1854, aged 37 years. After a long and painful illness of more than two years, he sunk to rest at last without a struggle, groan, or even a gasp; quietly folding his hands upon his breast and turning his eyes calmly upward, he continued to breathe shorter till "nature stood still."

"How blest the righteous when they die,
When holy souls retire to rest!
How mildly beams the closing eye!
How gently heaves the expiring breast!

So fades a summer cloud away,
So sinks the gale when storms are o'er,
So gently shuts the eye of day,
So dies a wave along the shore.

Farewell, conflicting hopes and fears,
Where lights and shades alternate dwell!
How bright the unchanging morn appears!
Farewell, inconstant world, farewell!"

In compliance with his special request, the writer attended his funeral, and preached on the occasion. The day was intensely cold, even for Vermont, and as it was uncertain whether I could arrive in time to preach on Friday, the time for the funeral was not appointed until the morning of the day it was attended; but, such was the respect felt for him and his relatives in his native town that, notwithstanding these disadvantageous circumstances, the house of worship was crowded at 1 P. M. with sympathising friends, who listened with absorbing interest to a discourse on the hope of the Christian, founded on 1 Thes. 4: 13—18. The choir closed the devotional service at the church by very impressively singing the following lines:

"Thou art gone to the grave; but we will not deplore thee,
Though sorrows and darkness encompass the tomb;
The Saviour has passed through its portals before thee,
And the lamp of his love is thy light through the gloom

Thou art gone to the grave; we no longer behold thee,
Nor tread the rough paths of the world by thy side;
But the wide arms of mercy are spread to enfold thee,
And sinners may hope since the Saviour hath died."

My acquaintance with the subject of this notice commenced in the city of New York, in the winter of 1845, where he had preached some before my pastoral connection with the Advent churches in that city commenced. He soon after took the pastoral care of the Advent church in Newark, N. J., where he labored with zeal and fidelity. Having suffered ill health for ten years, and finding his labors too severe for him, he availed himself of the valuable assistance of Dr. L. D. Fleming, then a resident here, to advance his knowledge of medicine, to which he circumstances had previously contributed, and finally settled in Elizabethtown, in this State, as a practising physician. But after some two years, finding his health considerably improved, and feeling a burning desire to be more extensively useful, he returned to his evangelical labors, and soon after took the pastoral care of the Advent church in Buffalo, N. Y., where he labored with much satisfaction to himself and the church. [illegible] garments around thee now told;
[illegible] Zion's terrible banner;
[illegible] is rocking the world.

[illegible] ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Luke, 21: 31.

The above scripture can only have an application to that part of the Church living when those things are developed. Hence if that portion of the Church now living, are the class referred to, it is of infinite importance to secure this knowledge. Let us look at the connection to see if we can ascertain at what point of this development we are now living.

It appears from the connection that the Saviour when he delivered this discourse, was in the temple; for he looked up, and saw the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury. And then, in the 37th verse, we read: "And in the day-time he was teaching in the temple; and at night he went out, and abode in the mount that is called the mount of Olives."

Again, as some spoke of the temple the Saviour remarks: "As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which there shall not not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down."

The disciples inquire: "Master, but when shall these things be? and what sign will there be, when these things shall come to pass?"

The same disposition is manifested by the disciples as by Daniel, when he exclaims, "O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?" But to the subject. The Saviour proceeds: "Take heed that ye be not deceived; for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and the time draweth near; go ye not therefore after them."

[illegible], in his Theological Dictionary, informs us, that between the second century [illegible], twenty-four false Christs [illegible] first of any note arose in the [illegible], who succeeded in deceiving thousands of the Jews, drawing them from their allegiance to the Romans, in consequence of which no less than five hundred [illegible]. Here the prediction [illegible] its fulfilment on a [illegible].

[illegible] "But when ye shall hear [illegible] be not terrified; [illegible] come to pass: [illegible] Nation shall [illegible] kingdom against [illegible]. This was fulfilled [illegible] Roman Empire [illegible]. It may [illegible] wars and revolutions [illegible].

[illegible] "And great earthquakes shall [illegible] and pestilences [illegible] great signs [illegible] fore [illegible], the rise of nation against nation," "earthquakes," and "pestilences;" "they shall lay their hands upon you," etc. This was fulfilled in the persecutions of the primitive church. In the case of Peter and John, Acts. chap. 4; and Stephen, Acts. 8: 57—60, we have a practical illustration of this spirit.

[illegible]

Vs. 15—19. "For I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay nor resist.

And ye shall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends; and some of you shall they cause to be put to death.

And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake.

But there shall not a hair of your head perish.

In your patience possess ye your souls."

"For I will give you a mouth" etc. We have an example of this in the case of Peter, of whom it is written:

"Then Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, said unto them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Israel,

If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole;

Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole.

This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner.

Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.

Now, when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus.

And beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it."

From the 20th to the 24th verse we have a prediction in relation to the destruction of Jerusalem, and also of the WIDE SPREADING and OVERWHELMING DESOLATION of the Jewish nation.

In the 25th and sixth verses, we have the signs to which the Saviour has allusion. He says:

"And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves waring;

Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken."

In these expressions we are not informed in particular, what these signs shall be; but in the parallel texts, as written by the other evangelists, Mathew and Mark, we are informed that immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: Matt. 24: 29.

"But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light.

And the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken." Mark 13: 24, 25.

Have any of these things come to pass? And if so how many of them have been fulfilled? if some or all of them, when, and where did they come to pass? That the Sun, and Moon have been darkened, and that the stars have fallen from heaven, in the sense of this prophecy, we cannot, it seems to me, reasonably doubt. Let the following tell the story:

"Has the sun been darkened in these days, as predicted by Joel and the Saviour? It has; and that within the memory of many now living. I refer to the dark day of A. D. 1780, May 19th. That was a day of supernatural darkness. It was not an eclipse of the sun, for the moon was nearly at the full. It was not owing to a thickness in the atmosphere, for the stars were seen. The darkness began about 9 o'clock, A. M., and continued through the day, and also into, if not through the night. Such was the darkness, that work was suspended in the field and shop, beasts and fowls retired to their rest, and houses were illuminated at dinner time. Such a day of darkness has never been known, so far as I can learn from history, (and I have [illegible] most diligently,) since the [illegible] of our Saviour. There have [illegible] when, on the 19th of May, [illegible] supernaturally darkened from morning till night, and even into the night; so that although there was at the time a full moon, (the moon having fulled the 18th,) "it was so dark that a sheet of the whitest of paper was equally invisible, six or eight inches from the eye, with the blackest of velvet." The sun was darkened, and the moon did not give her light.

"In May 19th, 1780, there was a remarkable fulfilment thereof, and in reference to the facts and date, there can be no place for doubts; for, aside from historical accounts, in which there is found no discrepancy, there are thousands now living who can attest thereto. They say the darkness was supernatural from morning until night, and during most of the night; and although the moon had fulled only the night previous, the Rev. Mr Tenny, of Exeter, N. H., says, 'I could not help conceiving at the time, that if every luminous body in the universe had been shrouded in impenetrable darkness, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not have been more complete.'"

"In the month of May, 1780, there was a very terrific dark day in New England, when 'all faces seemed to gather blackness,' and the people were filled with fear. There was great distress in the village where Edward Lee lived; 'men's heart's failing them for fear that the judgment day was at hand, and the neighbors all flocked around the holy man, for his lamp was trimmed and shining brighter than ever, amidst the unnatural darkness. Happy and joyful in God, he pointed them to their only refuge from the wrath to come, and spent the gloomy hours in earnest prayer for the distressed multitude. His nephew, who was then a little child, in after life retained a lively recollection of that scene, and in his childish feelings are an interesting exhibition of the manner in which Mr Lee was regarded, for he felt not the least alarm in his presence, thinking that he was perfectly safe where his good uncle was, even if the day of judgment had come.'" (Tract No. 379 of Am. Tract Society. Life of Edward Lee, of Mass.)

"The 19th of May, 1780, was a remarkably dark day; candles were lighted in many houses; the birds were silent and disappeared; the fouls retired to rest; It was the general opinion that the day of judgment was at hand. The Legislature of Connecticut was in session, at Hartford, but being unable to transact business, adjourned. A motion of adjournment was before the Council; but when the opinion of Col. Davenport, of Stamford, was requested, he replied, 'I am against the adjournment. The day of judgment is either at hand, or it is not. If it is not, there is no cause for adjournment; if it is, I wish to be found in the line of my duty. I wish therefore that candles may be brought.'" (Pres. Dwight in Ct. Hist. Col.)

"Dark day of May 19, 1780. The sun rose clear, and shone for several hours; at length the sky became overcast with clouds, and by ten o'clock, A. M., the darkness was such as to occasion the farmers to leave their work in the fields and retire to their dwellings; fowls went to their roosts, and before noon, lights became necessary to the transaction of business within doors. The darkness continued through the day, and the night, till near morning, was as unusually dark as the day."—(Gage's Hist. of Rowley, Mass.)

"Moon darkened, 'Signs in the Moon' fulfilled. Night after the dark day of 1780."

"The darkness of the following evening was probably as gross as has ever been observed since the Almighty first gave birth to light."—(Rev. Mr Tenney, of Exeter, N. H., quoted by Mr Gage to the Historical Society.)

"The night succeeding that day, (May 19. 1780,) was of such pitchy darkness, that in some instances horses could not be compelled to leave the stable when wanted for service. About midnight the clouds were dispersed, and the Moon and stars appeared with unimpaired brilliancy."—(Portsmouth Journal, May 20, 1843. Extract from Stone's Hist. of Beverley.)

"Where shall we look for a more literal and exact fulfilment than the above extracts exhibit of those remarkable signs?"

"The third sign is the falling of the stars, which was literally fulfilled on the night of Nov. 13, 1833. I am aware that some view that phenomenon an exhibition of meteors and not of stars, and therefore no fulfilment of that sign. I ask what kind of a star piloted the wise men to the birthplace of the Saviour? Surely no planet or fixed star. How many planets could fall from heaven on this earth without producing its destruction? The distinction between meteors and stars is of modern invention, the discovery of modern astronomers. It is well known the ancients understood by the Greek word aster, (here [illegible]) the smaller lights of heaven. It is, therefore, evident that this sign must have a shower of meteors, or small stars, for its fulfilment; and that the phenomena of Nov. 1833 fully exhibit the sign, the following [illegible] mighty wind. (Rev. vi: 13). This language of the prophet has always been received as metaphorical. Yesterday it was literally fulfilled. The ancients understood by aster, in Greek, and stella, in Latin, the smaller lights of heaven. The refinement of modern astronomy has made the distinction between the stars of heaven and the meteors of heaven. Therefore the idea of the prophet, as it is expressed in the original Greek, was literally fulfilled in the phenomena of yesterday, so as no man, before yesterday, had conceived to be possible that it should be fulfilled.—The immense size and distance of the planets and fixed stars forbid the idea of their falling unto the earth. Larger bodies cannot fall in myriads unto a smaller body: but most of the planets, and all the fixed stars are many times larger than our earth. They cannot fall unto the earth; but these fell toward it."

"And how did they fall? Neither myself nor one of the family heard any report; and were I to hunt through nature for a simile, I could not find one so apt to illustrate the appearance of the heavens, as that which St. John uses in the prophecy before quoted. 'It rained fire,' says one; another, 'It was like the large flakes of falling snow, before a coming storm, or large drops of rain, before a shower.' I admit their fitness for common accuracy; but they come far short of the accuracy of the figure used by the prophet: 'The stars of heaven fell unto the earth;' they were not sheets, or flakes, or drops of fire; but they were what the world understand by 'falling stars;' and one speaking to his fellow in the midst of the scene, would say, 'See how the stars fall!' and he who heard would not pause to correct the astronomy of the speaker, any more than he would be so precise as to reply, 'the sun does not move,' to one who should tell him 'the sun is rising.' The stars fell 'even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.' Here is the exactness of the prophet. The falling stars did not come as if from several trees shaken, but from one: those which appeared in the east fell toward the east; those which appeared in the north fell toward the north; those which appeared in the west fell toward the west; and those which appeared in the South (for I went out of my residence into the Park) fell toward the south. And they fell not as the ripe fruit falls. Far from it; but they flew, they were CAST like the unripe fruit, which at first refuses to leave the branch; and when under a violent pressure it does break its hold, it flies swiftly, straight off, descending; and in the multitude falling, some cross the track of others, as they are thrown with more or less force, but each one falls on its own side of the tree.—Such was the appearance of the above phenomenon to the inmates of my house."

"This was from an eye witness who penned it the day following, and years since avers it was not overdrawn. The second is from Prof. Olmstead, of Yale College, a distinguished meterologist."

"The extent of the shower of 1833 was such as to cover no inconsiderable part of the EARTH'S SURFACE, from the middle of the Atlantic on the east, to the Pacific on the west; and from the northern coast of South America, to undefined regions among the British possessions on the north, the exhibition was visible, and everywhere presented nearly the same appearance."

"In nearly all places, the meteors began to attract notice by their unusual frequency as early as eleven o'clock, and increased in numbers and splendor until about four o'clock, from which time they gradually declined, but were visible until lost in the light of day. The meteors did not fly at random over all parts of the sky, but appeared to emanate from a point in the constellation Leo, near a star called Gamma Leonis, in the bend of the sickle."

"This is important testimony, in regard to the vast extent of the exhibition of the phenomenon, and also of the falling stars, all emanating from a single point in the heavens."

"Those who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13, 1833, probably saw the GREATEST DISPLAY of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the pages of history."

"I feel assured that this is no atmospheric or terrestrial phenomenon, but that these fiery meteors come to us from the regions of space, and reveal to us the existence of worlds of a nebulous or cometary character." X.

PLEASANT VALLEY, Feb. 6, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—I do rejoice in hope of the glory of God; for our hope is a blessed hope,—a hope of soon seeing Jesus in all his glory, and being made like him; for when he shall appear we "shall see him as he is." Oh, the thought of seeing Jesus "as he is," and being like him, makes this world with all its charms look small to me, and I can say, in the language of John, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." I long to see the day looked for by Prophets, when we shall go through with [illegible] earth, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death, reigns on every hand. "O, [illegible] praise the [illegible] the whole [illegible] to lift up our [illegible]

[illegible]

"The Secret of the Lord is with them that fear him."

When God was about to destroy Sodom, he said, shall I hide this thing from Abraham? "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret to his servants the prophets."—Amos. 3: 7.—Although Abraham dwelt in the plains of Mamre, far removed from the scenes of destruction, and God had sent his angels to warn Lot, yet Sodom could not be destroyed till Abraham had been apprised of it. When on the mount of transfiguration our blessed Lord unveiled his glory—his face shining as the sun, and his raiment white and glistening, Luke 27: 37; Matt. 17: 2, there appeared Moses and Elias.—Peter, when giving instruction relative to the everlasting kingdom of God, explains this as a representation of the majestic power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, 2 Peter 2: 16—18. Jesus, in his kingly majesty—the holy mount a portion of the territory, (Matt. 5: 5; Rev. 5: 10; Dan. 7: 13, 14, 18, 20, 27,) and two classes of his subjects represented. Moses a representative of those who died, (1 Thess. 4: 13—18; 1 Cor. 15: 52—55.) Moses, when about to be taken from Israel, informs them that he could "no more go in and out before Israel," (Deut. 31: 2,) although his natural strength was not abated: it has been the testimony of physicians and nurses that Christians before their death, like their great representative Moses, have been apprised of it by the pre-monitions of the Spirit: accidental death has not even been an exception from this, as previously written letters and papers have frequently shown. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him."

So it was with Elias, as representative of those that are alive and remain, ("We shall not all sleep,") when the Lord would take him up, by a whirlwind, sent him from Gilgal to Bethel, and the sons of the prophets at Bethel came forth and said to to Elisha, "Knowest thou the Lord will take away thy master from thy head to-day?" What was Elisha's answer? "Yea, I know it." Here the Lord saw fit to try yet farther the faith and patience of the aged prophet; he could not go up from Bethel, the Lord sent him to Jericho, there the sons of the prophets came forth and asked the same question, and received the same answer. Is it not for our instruction that Elijah knew the day he was to be taken up? Elisha KNEW IT—the sons of the prophets KNEW IT, in Bethel, and Jericho too! The "Lord will do nothing but he revealeth his secret to his servants the prophets."

Here again Elijah was tried by being sent yet further, even to Jordan. Elijah might, with seeming propriety, have said: I am an old man, and am weary with travelling, the Lord has promised to take me to-day, and he can as well take me from this place as from Jordan. I will not go to Jordan. But did he reason thus?—O! no. The Lord said go to Jordan, and that was enough for him. They journey on, and now they stand beside the stream; the sons of the prophets view afar off; but he cannot yet ascend; he must go over Jordan. He takes his mantle, smites the waters,—they part—he passes over,—yes, glory to God, on dry ground;—and now as they still go on and commune together, (2 Kings, 2: 11,) behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and they were parted asunder, and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven. O! praise the Lord, glory, glory to God, for victory over death!

Praise the Lord for the instruction thus given by our brother who has gone before us. Then, brothers and sisters, although the Lord has led us from one point of prophecy to another, and now we stand before the dark waters of Jordan, yet faith says, pass over. Yes, pass over, the similitude of death, even a voluntary death, for he that seeks to save his life shall lose it. —[Selected.

WHEN IS PRAYER A VAIN THING? 1. Those prayers are vain which are not put up in faith. A faithless prayer is a fruitless prayer.

2. The prayers which men offer, while they resolve to continue in any sin, are vain prayers.

3. Those are vain prayers, when we pray merely to obtain deliverance from an affliction not at all minding our profiting by, or the improvement of, an affliction.

4. Those prayers which we make in our own strength.

5. Those are vain prayers which we make in our own name, not in the name of Christ.

6. Angry, passionate prayers are vain prayers.—[Caryl on Job 35: 13.

HOPE, ME., Feb 8, 1854.

Dear Brethren:—I wish to say a few words through the Crisis to let you know what the Lord is doing in Hope. Our number until recently has been very small, but we have not been without prayer, and in answer to our petitions the Lord has sent us help in due time. Brethren Partridge, Ross and Brown have been laboring with us, and good has been done in the name of the Lord. Sinners have been awakened and converted, backsliders have been reclaimed, and our hope [illegible] twelve have been buried with Christ in baptism, and [illegible] great interest [illegible]

The Advent Faith.

Without faith it is impossible to please God, or to receive his truth. The doctrine of the speedy coming of our blessed Lord is of God. It is a fundamental part of the scriptures, and it cannot be received except through living FAITH in His word. It is not perceived nor retained by sight, or by the will or wisdom of man, but by implicit confidence in every word which God has spoken. Through prayerful and patient examination of the Bible, we find a reason for our faith immutable as the promise of the Father, and sure as the eternal councils of his throne.

The traditions and opinions of men are alike conflicting and unsafe, but the word of the Lord abideth forever. The Son has said, "I will come again," and "surely I come quickly," and has given us chronological periods and signs by which we may know assuredly that he is near even at the door. All these way-marks of the inspired word harmoniously close this present year, and the increasing signs in our moral, political, and natural heavens, demonstrate the hour at hand, when we shall "see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Having this confidence, we are not easily shaken in mind, nor discouraged by the SEEMING darkness or lateness of the hour. We have placed ourselves upon the word of God and we are willing to abide the issue. Though the mountains rise on either side, and the sea yawn before, and the scoffing enemy press behind, we fear not. He that is with us is mighty; Jehovah is his name, and at the appointed time he will surely deliver.

Christ the Purifier.

Some ladies in Dublin, who met together from time to time, at each others houses, to read the Scriptures, and to make them the subject of profitable conversation, when they came to the third chapter of Malachi, had some discussion over the second and third verses respecting the method of purifying the precious metals. As none of the company knew anything about the process, one undertook to inquire of a silver-smith, with whom she was acquainted, how it was effected; and particularly what was the business of the refiner himself, during the operation. Without explaining her motive, she accordingly went to her friend, and asked how the silver was cleared from any dross with which it might have been mixed. He promptly explained to her the manner of doing this. "But," said the inquirer, "do you sit, sir, at the work?" "O yes," he replied, "for I must keep my eye steadily fixed on the furnace, since, if the silver remain too long under the intense heat, it is sure to be damaged."—She at once saw the propriety and beauty of the image employed—"He shall sit as a refiner of silver;" and the moral of the illustration is equally obvious. As the lady was returning with the information to her expecting companions, the silversmith called her back, and said that he had forgotten to mention one thing of importance, which was, "that he only knew the exact instant when the purifying process was complete, by then seeing his own countenance reflected in it." Again the spirit and meaning shone forth through the beautiful veil of the letter. When God sees his own image in his people, the work of sanctification is complete. It may be added, that the metal continues in a state of agitation until all the impurities are thrown off, and then it becomes quite still, a circumstance which heightens the exquisite analogy in this case; for O how

"Sweet to lie passive in his hand
And know no will but his!"

The subject was embodied in the following stanzas:

"He that from dross would win the precious ore,
Bends o'er the crucible an earnest eye,
The subtle, searching process to explore,
Lest the one brilliant moment should pass by,
When in the molten silver's virgin mass
He meets his pictured face, as in a glass.

Thus in God's furnace are his people tried;
Thrice happy they who to the end endure!
But who the fiery ordeal may abide?
Who from the crucible come forth so pure,
That He, whose eyes of flame look through the whole,
May see his image perfect in the soul?

Not with an evanescent glimpse alone,
[illegible] the refiner's face;
[illegible] Heaven's broad signet there be shown
Immanuel's features full of truth and grace;
And [illegible] seal of love this motto be,
'Not for a moment, but—eternity!'"

HOW MUCH RELIGION, HAVE I?—Just as much as you act out in practice. Religion is not like bank stock, which can be locked up except when needed for occasional use. Yet many persons seem to consider it as something which can be [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The Seven Periods of Daniel's Vision of 2300 days: Dan. 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12th Chapters.

Continued.

In view of the sufferings of this holy Lamb of God, well might every disciple exclaim in the words of Dr. Watts:

"Infinite grief! amazing wo,
Behold my bleeding Lord;
Hell and the Jews conspire his death,
And use the Roman sword.

Oh! the sharp pangs of smarting pain,
The dear Redeemer bore;
When knotty whips and ragged thorns,
His sacred body tore."

But knotty whips and ragged thorns,
In vain do I accuse;
In vain I blame the Roman bands,
And the more spiteful Jews.

'Twere you my sins, my cruel sins,
His chief tormentors were;
Each of my crimes became a nail,
And unbelief the spear."

We have come now to the closing scene of the great expiatory sacrifice for a fallen, depraved world. On his cross I behold the broad Seal of Heaven, sparkling with the gems of glory, bright as the noon-day sun! From the cross it is transplaced, (on the removal of the victim,) to the vision of Daniel, by the potent hand of Jehovah; and there affixed as an eternal security to its decrees. He dies! and the sun, (as if in astonishment at man's depravity,) refuses every ray of his light; the heavens are draped in mournful attire, and the bellowing earth quakes forth her horrid depositions against the perpetrators of so tremendous a crime! The rocks rend to fragments, as if ashamed to witness so cruel a scene; and the graves unbar their rusty gates, and send forth their tenents, as if in amazement to ask, "Why is this?" They leave the cerements of the tomb, and march to the once "holy city," and appear to many. He rises! and breaks the bands of death, and triumphantly ascends to heaven, in the presence of many witnesses, while one of his attendants announces, "This same Jesus, who is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

Josephus says, Pilate undertook "to bring a current of water into the city;" and to pay for the work of it with the sacred money; which so exasperated the Jews that they raised a sedition, in which many of them were slain. "About this time," says Josephus, "There was one Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man, for he was a doer of wonderful works—a teacher of such men as receive the truth with pleasure." "He drew over to him both many of the Jews and Gentiles."—"He was (the) Christ." "And when Pilate, at the suggestion of the principal men among us, had condemned him to the cross, those that loved him at the first did not forsake him; for he appeared to them alive again the third day;" as "the divine prophets had foretold these, and ten thousand other wonderful things concerning him." Josephus then mentions some trouble at Rome, in the temple of Isis, and the fraud of some Jews at Rome, and then says, "But the nation of the Samaritans did not escape tumults." By the dissimulation of one man, who told the Samaritans that some of the sacred vessels were hidden in the earth, on mount Gerizzim, and multitudes of the Samaritans came together to dig and search it out. "Pilate raised a great band of horsemen and footmen, and fell upon them, and slew some and put others to flight, and took a great many alive; the principal of which, and also the most potent of those who fled away, Pilate ordered to be slain."

When this tumult was appeased, the Samaritan Senate sent an embassy to Vitellius, then President of Syria, and accused [illegible] "So [illegible] Tiberius was dead." This proves that it was but a very few days after Pilate had passed sentence on the Son of God before he was deposed from his high dignity and sent to Rome; and Tiberius himself being dead, he was compelled to wait till another Emperor was established in the government, before he could know what would finally be his fate.

May 25th, A. D. 41, Tiberius dies by poison, aged 78 years; and Caligula, his grand-nephew, succeeds; and reigns 3 years and 8 months, U. C. 791, (Jos.)

Josephus born, the first year of Caligula, (Josephus.)

Herod Agrippa begins to reign over Philip's tetrarchy, (Jos.)

Pontius Pilate banished to Vienna, where in despair he puts an end to his life, (Piaz.)

Herod and Herodius depart for Rome, to supplant Agrippa, her own brother, and being accused of a plot against the government, are ordered into perpetual banishment, and Lyons is assigned as the place of their residence.

Vitellius, the President of Syria, goes from Antioch to Jerusalem, (where he had sent Marcellus to take the place of Pilate,) and deprived Joseph Caiphas of the high priesthood, and appointed Jonathan, the son of Annas, to that dignity, (Jos.)

Thus we see that all who filled the most prominent offices at the crucifixion of Christ, were, in the short space of a very few months, either murdered or self-murderers, deposed or banished. Herod and Herodius had doubtless some time to reflect with remorse, on their horrible murder of John the Baptist, in the castle of Macherus. Pontius Pilate, having convicted, scourged, and delivered to be crucified, one whom he fully believed to be innocent, was justly entitled to the rewards of despair. Caiaphas, the high priest, after uttering so true a prophecy of Christ, as a victim for sacrifice for that nation, maliciously with others, procured his death; and when he arose they bribed the guards to say, "his disciples stole him away;"—and though they succeeded in the gratification of their malignity, it was only "that the Scriptures might be fulfilled."

The darkness over all the earth, "from the sixth to the ninth hour," was but a type of that horror of darkness which must have enveloped the minds of all his betrayers and murderers. Well might a Roman centurion (though an heathen) say in amazement, "Truly this was the Son of God!"

Jan. 24th, A. D. 44, Caligula is murdered by a band of conspirators, (Jos.)

(It must not be forgotten that March 25th is New Year's day.)

Claudius succeeds, and reigns 13 years 8 months and 20 days, (Jos.)

A solar eclipse is recorded, which occurred Aug. 1st, A. D. 45, on the birthday of the Emperor Claudius.

Herod Agrippa "kills James, the brother of John, with a sword," Acts 13: 1, (Jos.)

He appears in royal apparel, and is saluted "a God;" upon which he is smitten, and eaten with worms, and dies, after a reign of 7 years, in the 4th year of Claudius, (Jos.) A. D. 48, an eclipse occurs. Dec. 31, total, A. D. 49, (Bliss' Anal.)

Oct. 14, A. D. 53, Claudius poisoned, aged 64, and is succeeded by his wife's son, Nero, who reigns 13 years and 3 days, (Jos.) U. C. 803.

A solar eclipse is recorded, which occurred April 30th, A. D. 59; and the record attached to it is, that "this year Nero murdered his mother," (Bliss' Anal.)

Felix, governor of Judea, A. D. 61, (Jos.)

Porcius Festus appointed to succeed Felix; who is removed from office, A. D. 63, (Jos.)

Paul, the apostle, is seized at Jerusalem, A. D. 64, (Prince.)

Porcius Festus dies in office, (Jan.) A. D. 65, and Albinus succeeds him. Nero persecutes the Christians at Rome, (Prince.)

Annanias, the high priest, removed for ordering the death of James the Apostle. Paul beheaded and Peter crucified at Rome, A. D. 66, (Prince.)

Gessius Florus made governor of Judea, (Jos.) A. D. 67, who provokes the Jews to rebel.

The Jews openly revolt the 12th year of Nero, (Jos.) A. D. 70, year of Nabonassar, 817.

Oct. 22, A. D. 71, Nero kills himself. U. C. 822, year of Olympiads, 847.

Galba, Otho and Pitellius reign partly contemporaneous, but from the death of Nero, 8 months and 10 days to July 1.—When the army in Syria and the Senate proclaim Vespasian Emperor; who reigns 9 years, 11 months, 24 days, (Prince.)

Titus besieges Jerusalem, takes the City, and burns the Temple to the ground, Sept. 8, A. D. 73, the 2d year of the reign of Vespasian, (Hist. of the World.)

The above agrees with Josephus, who says, from the death of Antigonus (the last of the Asamonean high priests.)—When Herod the Great was confirmed in the kingdom of Judea, B. C. 34, to the final ruin of the City by Titus, was 107 years, B. C. 34+73=107.

Thus was this signal judgment of God fulfilled on the Jews according to the prediction of our Savior, wherein about two millions of the Jews were either slaughtered by the sword, or perished by famine, or sold for slaves, (Jos.)

Titus is adopted as partner with his father, as may be gathered from Josephus' "Jewish War," about A. D. 77.

June 24, A. D. 82, Vespasian dies, aged 70, and his eldest son, Titus, reigns alone 2 years, 2 months and 20 days, (Raleigh,) (Prince.)

Sept. 13, A. D. 84, Titus dies, aged 41, and his younger brother, Domitian, succeeds and reigns 14 years and 5 days, (History of the World.)

John the Apostle banished to the Isle of Patmos, where he writes the Revelation, A. D. 96.

Josephus furnishes his antiquities at the age of 56, the 13th year of Domitian, A. D. 97, (Jos.)

Sept. 18, A. D. 98 Domitian slain, aged 45, and is succeeded by Nerva, who reigns one year, four months and nine days, (Raleigh,) (Prince.)

Tacitus writes History, A. D. 99, (Prince,) John, the apostle, dies at Ephesus.

Jan. 27, A. D. 99, Nerva is slain, aged 66, and is succeeded by Trajan, a Spaniard, who reigns 19 years, 6 months and 15 days, (Raleigh,) (Prince.)

Ignatius thrown to lions, A. D. 102.

Aug. 10, A. D. 119, Trajan dies, aged 66, in Cilicia, and is succeeded by Adrian, who reigns 19 years and 11 months, (Hist. of World.)

July 10, A. D. 139, Adrian dies, aged 63, and is succeeded by Antoninus Pius, who reigns 22 years, 7 months and 26 days, (Prince.)

Justin Martyr becomes a Christian, A. D. 140.

March 8, A. D. 161, Antoninus dies, aged 75, and is succeeded by Marcus Aurelius, who reigns 19 years and 11 days (Prince.)

Justin Martyr is beheaded at Rome, A. D. 164.

Polycarp burnt at Smyrna, A. D. 167.

March 18, A. D. 180, Aurelius dies at Vienna, aged 59, and is succeeded by Commodus, who reigns 11 years, 9 months and 15 days, (Hist. of World.)

Jan. 2, A. D. 192, Commodus dies, aged 22, and is succeeded by Pertinax, who reigns 2 months, and 27 days, (Raleigh,) (Prince.)

March 29, A. D. 193, Pertinax slain, aged 68, and is succeeded by Julian, who reigns 2 months and 6 days, (Raleigh,) (Prince.)

June 3, Julian is slain, aged 61, and is succeeded by Severus, who reigns 17 years, 8 months and 3 days, (Prince.)

Clemens, of Alexandria, writes History, A. D. 194.

Feb. 6, A. D. 210, Severus dies, at York, aged 66, and is succeeded by Caracalla, who reigns 6 years, 2 months and 2 days, (Prince.)

April 8, A. D. 217, Caracalla is slain in Mesopotamia, aged 30, and is succeeded by Macrinus, who reigns 1 year, 1 month, and 28 days, (Prince.)

June 6, A. D. 219, Macrinus is slain, aged 54, and is succeeded by [illegible], a Syrian Priest, who reigns 3 years, [illegible] and 4 days, (Prince.)

March 10, A. D. 222, [illegible] slain, aged 19, and is succeeded by [illegible] [illegible]

March 19, A. D. [illegible] aged 28, and is succeeded by Maximinus, who reigns 3 years and 6 months, (Prince.)

Sept. [illegible] A. D. 237, Maximinus slain, and is succeeded by Maximus, who reigns 6 months, (Prince.)

Mr Bliss quotes several articles, for synchronisms, from the pen of the learned Censorinus, who wrote his de Die Natal in A. D. 238, which he says was the 1014 year from the 1st Olympiad, B. C. 776, A. D. 238 added make 1014, which agrees with this Chronology, and shows when the era begun. It likewise shows that here are no more, nor less years, than in the common reckoning. Another from the same pen, to adjust the era of Nabanassar, and says, A. D. 238, was the 986th year of that era; but as that Nabonassarian year began in June, A. D. 238, it would not end till June A. D. 239, which take from 986 gives 747, before Christ for the first of the era. This article also adjusts this chronology with the era of Nabanassar, (Bliss' Anal. Sac. Chron.)

March 17th, Maximus slain, and is succeeded by Gordian, who reigns 6 years, (Prince.) (Hist. of the World.)

March 18, A. D. 243, Gordian slain, aged 29, and is succeeded by Philip, who reigns 5 years, (Prince.)

March 18th, A. D. 249, Philip slain in battle at Verona, and is succeeded by Decius, who reigns 1 year and 3 months, (Prince.)

A. D. 249, the 1000th year of Rome, the 996th year of Nabanassar, and the 1025th year from the first year of the first Olympiad.

June, A. D. 251, Decius lost in a bog, and is succeeded by Gallus, who reigns almost two years, (Hist. of the World.)

A. D. 253, Gallus is slain in battle, and is succeeded by Amelianus, who reigns near three months, (Raleigh.) (Prince.)

He is slain in Illyrieum, by the soldiers, and is succeeded by Valerian, who reigns near 7 years, (Prince,) (Raleigh.)

A. D. 259, Valerian taken by the Persians, and slain, and is succeeded by Gallienus, who reigns 9 years, (Prince.)

March 21, A. D. 263, Gallienus slain at Milan, aged 50, and is succeeded by Claudius, 2d, who reigns 1 year 10 months and 15 days, (Prince.)

Feb. 5, A. D. 270, Claudius dies, and is succeeded by his brother Quintillus, who reigns 17 days, (Prince.)

Feb. 22, he is slain at Aquilea, and is succeeded by Aurelian, who reigns near 5 years, (Gibbon,) (Prince.)

Jan. 29, A. D. 275, Aurelian is killed near Byzantium, and there is an interregnum of near seven months, (Goldsmith.)

Sept. 25, Tacitus chosen by the Senate, reigns six months, (Raleigh.)

March, A. D. 276, Tacitus dies, and Florian reigns two months, (Raleigh.)

Florian slain, and Probus reigns 6 years and 4 months, (Prince.)

A. D. 282, Probus slain, and Curus and Sons reign over 1 year, (Prince.)

Sept. 17th, A. D. 284, Diocletian proclaimed, and the era of the martyrs begins.

Thus I have with considerable labor, endeavored from the best English historians I could obtain, to make an accurate computation of more than a thousand years; from the first year of the first Olympiad, B. C. 776, to the era of Diocletian, A. D. 284, and now bring down every given era to this. I have produced the most remarkable events that have transpired in the world within this time, and find that I have arrived at the 1035th year of Rome, the 1031st year of Nabonassar, and the 1060th year of the Olympiads; and have given the names of some of the most eminent chronologers and historians for authority, and now all the facts that exist, are presented before the world, that every one may judge whether any of the obscurity which has always attended the era of the birth of Christ has been removed.

Mr. Bliss has given a record of an eclipse that occurred U. C. [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] to them are repudiated by ninety-nine hundredths of the learned world. I do not believe there can be found one man in a thousand, in any part of the world, who believes that John was beheaded in A. D. 29, or that Christ was crucified in A. D. 31. The Passover did not occur on a Friday, in A. D. 31. Sir Isaac Newton says it occurred on Wednesday, March 28th, in A. D. 31. Mr. Prince says it was on Tuesday, March 27, in A. D. 31; and I must say the records of those eclipses carry the impression of duplicity on the face of them; there is no astronomer's name attached to them, to vouch for the authority of those records, and it would be no difficult task for a dishonest controversialist to append those records to them hundreds of years after their date.

I can quote Newton, Doddridge, Scott, Whiting, Prince, and a host of other illustrious names, who believe that John preached five years; and I can produce the names of Usher, Scaliger, Pearson, Prince, Prideaux, Doddridge, Scott, Newton, Whiting, Bacon, and others, who believe the crucifixion was as late as A. D. 33 or 34, and all this in defiance of those eclipses, with the history of the event attached to them.

An article has recently appeared in public purporting to be the death-warrant of Jesus of Nazareth, lately discovered among the ruins of some ancient city, very carefully inclosed in some indestructible casket.

The purport of it was, that Pontius Pilate, governor of Lower Gallilee; that Jesus was there brought and tried before him, and condemned; and that two or three witnesses, whose names were attached to the document, joined in the condemnation.—It must be recollected that Pontius Pilate was governor of Judea; and had no more lawful jurisdiction over any part of Lower Gallilee than our President has over Lower Canada. Mr Whiston says that Pilate once attempted to usurp it, at the time he "mingled their blood with their sacrifices," Luke 13: 1,—and that this was the cause of the enmity that existed between them, and which was settled by Pilate sending Jesus to Herod. I should not have mentioned this had it not been connected with the eclipse, as to its date. But we all know that Herod was very jealous of rivals, and Josephus thinks this was one reason that he put John the Baptist to death; and besides, "It could not be that a Prophet perish out of Jerusalem."

We all know that Jesus was tried and condemned in the city of Jerusalem; that he agonized in Gethsemane, and suffered on Calvary; and we know that Gallilee was a considerable distance from Jerusalem. That articles may have been enclosed in an alabaster vase for centuries, or any other vase to shield it from destruction; even the knowledge of all this would not deface the impression of falsehood, which was so indelibly fixed upon it. The moment my eye met it, it appeared to be a tissue of absurdity and misrepresentation.

Much has been said against the Crucifixion being at the Passover of A. D. 41. I have engaged an astronomer to go back more than 1800 years, and tell me what month, and day of the month, and week, and likewise what hour, and minute, the moon changed, after the vernal equinox in A. D. 41. He rolls back the cycles of more than eighteen centuries; surveys the devious movements of the sun and moon through the whole period of 1813 years, and faithful to his trust, gives me the following summary, which I shall give in his own words:

"Calculated for the meridian of Jerusalem."

"The sun reached the [illegible] 9 o'clock on Wednesday [illegible]

The utter overthrow of the whole system was sure, and was not far distant."

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, MARCH 8, 1854.

"Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another."—[Rom. 14: 19.

In communicating instruction on religious subjects it is eminently important that wisdom be employed, and that the instruction be conveyed in a manner to enlighten the mind, and impress the heart.

In preaching the Gospel the unity of the subject is always essential to make a permanent and favorable impression. If a Preacher should undertake to give all varieties of opinion existing in the Church, and let the hearers judge of their comparative merits, how much would the audience be edified? Suppose A should [illegible] a right to have his peculiar sentiments promulgated since he assisted in [illegible] the Preacher in charge, and B, [illegible] and quite different sentiments, should claim the same privilege, and so on through the letters of the alphabet, so that in every discourse Methodism and Congregationalism and Unitarianism and every [illegible] of isms should all have their claims set forth, and the readers left to judge which of the different views were most in harmony with the word, who does not perceive that the auditors, unless rooted and grounded in their particular faith, must, almost of necessity, be confused and perplexed with such conflicting views, and the weak prostrated?

But what is the only consistent and profitable [illegible] for a public speaker? Is it not [illegible] become established in his [illegible] by searching the oracles, and [illegible] light from God, to have his heart thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the [illegible] then having obtained the clear [illegible] and become fully persuaded in [illegible] mind, to spread before his audience [illegible] and truth that he has elicited from [illegible], and if he has himself been [illegible] all truth by the teaching of the [illegible] of God, and his own soul is glowing with the sacred flame of love and truth, his [illegible] attended with the [illegible] of the spirit, the flock will be [illegible] the heavenly manna, they will grow strong in the Lord and be nurtured unto eternal life.

Suppose in a conference meeting each individual should contend for his or her [illegible] views, and others should rebut [illegible], who would sit with delight under the droppings of such a sanctuary? or who would be profited by such [illegible]? Does any one believe the Church could be edified by such continued debates, or preserve "the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace" by perpetual collisions of sentiment? And what [illegible] the natural effect on the minds [illegible]? Would it not be a [illegible] them were right?— [illegible] confusion be the [illegible] this is a free [illegible] freedom in [illegible] all a right to [illegible] if any one advances [illegible] ought we not to [illegible]

[illegible] brethren would become disaffected [illegible] prejudiced one against another—the meek, tender, dove-like spirit of Christ would retire from the assembly, and the object for which religious worship was instituted would be entirely frustrated: and instead of edifying one another in love, they would destroy each others spiritual enjoyment and peace in believing. Now people whose hearts are not in the work, that do not understand the bearing and influence of these things, may object to hold ing meetings in such a way as to promote the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace, they may cry out bigotry, sectarianism, intolerance, &c., they may plead that this is a free country; there ought to be free discussion, &c.—yet those who are well instructed in relation to the affairs of the kingdom of heaven know full well that the charge of sectarianism and bigotry is a false accusation—they know in their own hearts that they have no disposition to repress the spirit of free inquiry, and rigid scrutiny into all matters of religious faith —nay they would endeavor to promote it with all their hearts, but they do not believe that social worship should be converted into meetings for debate, striving for the mastery, &c. We have not so learned Christ. That people should "prove all things and hold fast that which is good" [illegible]eve—that they should have unrestricted liberty of conscience both in faith and practice is what we rejoice in and contend [illegible] that the weakest child should have the privilege of uniting with such christians as shall be congenial to his ideas of truth we also contend. We believe one of the fundamental principles upon which the civil institutions of our country are based, viz.: the privilege of worshiping God agreeably to the dictates of our own consciences, is also an essential principle of the Gospel; but we do not believe that religious worship is to be turned into a babel by the introduction of all manner of theories and sentiments coming in collision one against another.

But, it may be inquired, do we expect a perfect unanimity of views? Are all minds to pass through the same mould; and is a perfect conformity on all points to be expected? By no means. What, then, is the true position to be taken?— We are to "keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace." The great point essential to mutual edification, is that divine love fill the breast, and a desire for the advancement of the cause of Christ actuate the entire man. There is very little difficulty in laboring together in harmony when men have one all-absorbing interest, that takes possession of their entire being. It matters little what that object is, provided it be paramount to every other consideration. For instance, if the anti-slavery spirit is predominant in one's heart, he can combine with men of every sect or party in politics and religion.— This all-controlling interest swallows up every other, and creates a oneness of spirit, and unanimity of feeling, and a combination of action.

It is so in affairs of religion. Let the soul [illegible] deeply imbued with the spirit of Christ [illegible] the cause of the blessed Redeemer predominate in his desires and affections over all selfish purposes, and a union is at once created with all who are alike devoted and godly. They may differ on many points, but the one great interest takes the precedence of all others, and their spirits blend as "kindred drops" are mingled into one.

Thus when a new development occurs in the divine economy, and the Lord is pleased to enlighten the Church in regard to present truth, the power of that movement extending like electric fire from heart to heart, the great, absorbing interest, the all-pervading feeling in the mass of believers is in relation to the message communicated to the Church, the specific work then being accomplished. This is very clearly illustrated in the ecclesiastical history of '43 and 4. Every other consideration became subordinate, and to combine elements that were antagonistical in their very nature, was found to be an impossibility. Hence it was deemed [illegible] for believers in the immediate [illegible] of Christ to withdraw from those [illegible] their specific work, and not [illegible] their own places of worship, [illegible] papers, that [illegible] proclamation [illegible]

thus to [illegible] to disseminate light and [illegible] the subject. It was because the emergency of the case demanded it; because a compelling power operated on their hearts to take a bold and decided position in relation to their specific work. Thus they practically fulfilled the declaration of the parable, "They took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom." A similar development is now transpiring in the movements of the Church, and in order practically to fulfil the command in the parable, "Go ye out to meet Him," we need to take a decided stand.— The moving power that actuates the Church, the propelling influence is an expectation of the immediate [illegible]—a belief in specific time, as before. Now as that is the great motive power, the mighty engine to draw the train, whatever comes in collision with that does just so much to retard our progress and paralyze the work; and there can be no more union with those who contend against present truth, than there can be combined physical power to draw a train by two locomotives, one of which moves north and the other south.— The passengers may love each other, and feel a great reluctance to being separated from each other's society; but if one party wishes to move toward the north and the other toward the south, and attach the engines accordingly, it will of necessity separate the company. And we cannot conceive how those who experienced the operation of these principles, and the nature of conflicting elements in '43 and 4, can deny their whole experience now by saying there is no necessity of a distinct organ to speak out our sentiments. It is not bigotry, nor intolerance, nor a desire to deprive men of their liberty; it is an ardent desire to bring men into the liberty of the Gospel. It is not ill-nature nor sectarian animosity. It is a development of love and good-will; it is the power of the Gospel in its vital action; it is the operation of the truth sanctifying us, and setting us apart for the specific work of diffusing light for the benefit of the Church and world around.

But, it may be asked, have not all an equal right to publish their views, whether they agree with ours or not? Yes, undoubtedly we recognize that civil right to its fullest extent. If we have the truth, they have no moral right to publish against it, but our civil and social rights and privileges are equal. The press is unshackled and free. But, it is asked again, if they have not the same right to advocate their sentiments in the columns of the Crisis, as we to advocate ours? We think not.— Suppose an abolition paper is started to promote the anti-slavery cause, have the pro-slavery party the same right to fill its columns with matter in opposition to the interests of the paper, as the anti-slavery party have to fill the columns of their own paper? No one contends for such a right. What then? They have just as good claim to the privilege of writing and publishing against the abolition of slavery in an organ of their own, as the advocates of abolition have to write and publish in favor of their principles of freedom. But the two antagonist principles cannot move in unison together. Indeed they cannot co-exist any more than fire and water, or light and darkness—the principles are in their own nature irreconcilable and antagonistic to each other and the one will necessarily destroy the other Now it is not because they are in favor of intolerance and oppression, but the reverse. It is from the very fact that they are determined to advocate the freedom of the human race. It is not because they wish to shut out truth and exclude light, but the reverse. It is because they wish the truth to go forth untrammeled, and light to shine in the community, and to reach even the darkened hut of the poor slave. People misjudge amazingly when they form such an idea of true-hearted anti-slavery men, as to suppose they wish to suppress free discussion or wrest the immunities of free citizens from their grasp, when the principles that actuate them are precisely the reverse.

"Remember Lot's Wife."

The circumstances connected with Lot and his family, are among the most interesting upon the annals of history. No person who believes the bible can read the history of that man, together with the circumstances connected with the overthrow of the cities of the plain, without being impressed with a sense of the justice of God on the one hand, and his [illegible] on the other. Not only must Lot be [illegible]

Lord, if now I have found favor in thy sight, pass not away, I pray thee, from thy servant, &c. From the connection we see the principle of hospitality fully developed. It is with reference to this very circumstance that the apostle remarks, "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."

There are but very few, if any, who would refuse to entertain an angel; but to use hospitality towards, not only brethren, but strangers, is quite another thing. Yet it is one of the commands of our Lord, and is important; for it strikes directly against selfishness in every form.

Another characteristic in the patriarch is, his great anxiety for the welfare of the righteous. "Wilt thou," says the patriarch, "Destroy the righteous with the wicked? That be far from thee to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked; and that the righteous should be as the wicked, that be far from thee.— Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" Gen. 18: 25.

But leaving this point, we pass with the angels to the cities of the plain. As they approached the city of Sodom, there was a man sitting in the gate, he arose immediately and went to meet them, and bowed himself with his face towards the ground." Here again is the principle of hospitality manifested, not in word, but in deed and in truth. The man of God exclaims:

"Behold now, my lords, turn in, I pray you, into your servants house, and tarry all night, and wash your feet, and ye shall rise up early, and go on your way. And they said, Nay; but we will abide in the street all night.

And he pressed upon them greatly; and they turned in unto him, and entered into his house; and he made them a feast, and did bake unleavened bread, and they did eat." Gen. 19: 2, 3.

The object of their mission is now made known, it is as follows:

"And the men said unto Lot, hast thou here any besides? son-in-law, and thy sons, and thy daughters, and whatsoever thou hast in the city, bring them out of this place:

For we will destroy this place, because the cry of them is waxen great before the face of the Lord; and the Lord hath sent us to destroy it." (Vs. 12, 13.)

The conditions imposed upon those to whom the message is sent is as follows:

"And Lot went out, and spake unto his sons-in-law, which married his daughters, and said, Up, get ye out of this place; for the Lord will destroy this city. But he seemed as one that mocked unto his sons-in-law.

And when the morning arose, then the angels hastened Lot, saying, Arise, take thy wife, and thy two daughters which are here; lest thou be consumed in the iniquity of the city.

And while he lingered, the men laid hold upon his hand, and upon the hand of his wife, and upon the hand of his two daughters; the Lord being merciful unto him: and they brought him forth, and set him without the city.

And it came to pass, when they had brought them forth abroad, that he said, Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed.— (Vs. 14-17.)

But here the mercy of God is put to the test; the Lord inclines to hear the prayer of his servant while he exclaims:

"Oh! not so, my lord."

Behold now, thy servant hath found grace in thy sight, and thou hast magnified thy mercy, which thou hast shewed unto me in saving my life; and I cannot escape to the mountain, lest some evil take me, and I die.

Behold now, this city is near to flee unto, and it is a little one: Oh! let me escape thither, (is it not a little one?) and my soul shall live." (Vs. 18-20)

The angel listens to his plea, and remarks:

"See, I have accepted thee concerning this thing also, that I will not overthrow this city for the which thou hast spoken.

Haste thee, escape thither; for I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither."— (Vs. 21, 22.)

We learn from the above facts, that, God not only heard the prayer of Lot, but in answer to the prayer of Abraham, He delivered Lot from the general overthrow This fact is clearly taught in the 29th verse:

"And it came to pass, when God destroyed the cities of the plain, that God remembered Abraham, and sent Lot out of the midst of the overthrow, when he overthrew the cities in which Lot dwelt."

The reason assigned by the Lord for revealing this thing to the patriarch is set forth in the 18th chapter of Gen. It reads thus: "For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord," &c. How perfectly this illustrates [illegible] the prophet [illegible] GOD WILL DO NOTHING, BUT HE REVEALETH HIS SECRET UNTO HIS SERVANTS THE PROPHETS. [illegible] That which most con- [illegible] presented in Gen. 19: [illegible] looked back from behind [illegible] and she became a pillar of salt;" and also the admonition of our Saviour— "Remember Lot's [illegible]. But we may inquire: To whom [illegible] this admonition apply? Where is it to have its fulfillment? To these inquiries we reply, it is to have its application at a point of time just before the coming of the Lord. It belongs to the generation now living.— This will appear evident if we look at the connection. In this chapter (Luke 17,) the Saviour is discoursing upon the fact of His coming, and the condition of the world at that time. The subject is introduced at the 20th verse. We read:

"And when he was demanded of the Pharisees when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation.

"Neither shall they say, Lo here; or Lo there for behold the kingdom of God is within you." (Verses 20, 21.)

The Jews as a nation were at this time in expectation of their promised Messiah, and the establishment of His kingdom.— Hence their inquiry: "When shall the kingdom of God come?" He remarks: "Behold the kingdom of God is within you." This passage is often cited to prove that the kingdom of God is set up in the believer's heart. But if it proves anything, it is more extensive in its application.— The Saviour is addressing the Pharisees, and not his disciples, and if the passage as it stands in our version is correct, it shows that the kingdom was set up in the hearts of those who were seeking his life. But this rendering evidently is not correct. In the margin of the Polyglott Bible we read instead of "in," "AMONG YOU." This idea is consistent. But in what sense could it be said, The kingdom of God is among you? Answer: Here was Christ, the king; the disciples, His subjects; His precepts, the laws; and the land on which they stood, the territory of the kingdom. These are the four essential elements of a kingdom—king, subjects, territory and government. With this view there seems to be a propriety in the language.

"And he said unto the disciples, The days will come, when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and ye shall not see it.

"And they shall say to you, See here; or, see there: go not after them, nor follow them."

"The days will come," &c. Here the Lord refers to the future, and the language evidently marks a disappointment in the history of the church. "Shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and shall not see it." "One of the days" evidently refers to His second day, or coming, in contradistinction to His first Advent. The church has always been looking to the future; but the idea of the church desiring to see, &c., refers to that point in her history, when she shall EARNESTLY desire the coming of the day of God. But it may be remarked, that this has always been the case with the people of God.— True, but the church has not always been disappointed. While the church in all ages has desired the coming of her Lord to deliver her, she has not always been going forth to meet the bridegroom. It is in the end of the world when the church is thus to go forth, and in not meeting her Lord, she is disappointed; she desires to see Him, but does not, for the bridegroom tarries. This gives an opportunity to the false teacher to say, "See here, or see there." How many calls there have been for the last few years, to draw the mind off from the subject of Christ's coming; but the people of God, like wise virgins, still cling fast to the sure word of prophecy. It is their only hope. A real child of God cannot be persuaded to relinguish his or her position. They can give up father, mother, wife, children, and friends, but not the truth. The Pharisees of the present day may say, "See here, or see there;" yet they will not go after them, nor follow them. They have faith in God. They believe in what Jesus says:

"For as the lightning, that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven, so shall also the Son of man be in his day."

No spiritual or moral coming of Christ will answer their expectations. It must be a physical, literal and personal affair to fulfill the word of God.

V. 25. "But first must he suffer many things, and be rejected of THIS generation." This verse has been literally accomplished. The generation now living have, in the strict sense of the word, rejected Jesus Christ. Not the world particularly, but the professed church have, in a [illegible] manner, trampled under foot the Son of God. But how in [illegible] They have rejected [illegible] This is their condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. Again [illegible] "I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness.

And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world.

He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." (John 13: 46-48.)

We see by the above that the rejection of Christ's words, is equivalent to rejecting Christ; this the nominal Church has done. The Saviour says: "When these things begin to come to pass, then lift up your heads for your redemption draweth nigh." But the great body of the professed Church reject this instruction of our Lord, and show an utter contempt for the words of Christ. They have according to the language of the apostle, "heaped to themselves teachers having itching ears; and they have turned their ears from the truth unto fables." In view of this very state of things the apostle remarks:

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come:

For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy,

Witout natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good,

Traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God;

Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away."

The above is a complete description of the moral condition of the Church. How true it is, that the nominal Church are "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." "The religion of the day," as one writer remarks, "is an easy-minded religion; a religion without conflict and wrestling, without self-denial and sacrifice; a religion which knows nothing of the pangs of the new birth as its commencement, and nothing of the desperate struggle with the devil, day by day, making us long for resurrection-deliverance, for the binding of the adversary, and for the Lords arrival.— It is a second rate religion—a religion in which there is no largeness, no grandeur, no potency, no noble-mindedness, no elevation, no self-devotedness, no all-constraining love. It is a hollow religion— with a fair exterior, but an aching heart— a heart unsatisfied, a soul not at rest, a conscience not at peace with God; a religion marked, it may be, by activity and excitement, but betraying all the while the consciousness of a wound hidden and unhealed within, and hence, unable to animate to lofty doings, or supply the strength needed for such doings. It is a feeble religion, lacking the bones and sinews of hardier times—very different from the indomitable, much-enduring, storm-braving religion, not merely of apostolic days, but even of the reformation. It is an uncertain religion; that is to say, it is not rooted in certainty; it is not the overflowing of a soul assured of pardon, and rejoicing in the filial relationship between itself and God. Hence, there is no liberty of service, for the question of personal acceptance is still an unsettled thing; there is a working for pardon, but not from pardon. Hence all is bondage, heaviness, irksomeness. There is a speaking for God, but it is with a faltering tongue; there is a laboring for God, but it is with fettered hands; there is a moving in the way of His commandments, but it is with a heavy drag upon our limbs. Hence the inefficient, uninfluential character of our religion. It does not tell upon others, for it has not yet fully told upon ourselves. It falls short of its mark, for the arm that drew the bow is paralyzed."

Affairs of the East, &c.

The British Banner of Feb. 8th, notices a Pamphlet, entitled, "The Present Crisis," the object of which is, to set forth the consequences of the Russo-Turkish war to England and the world. The writer ([illegible]) says that the balance of power, [illegible] distribution among a body of [illegible] states, is, at this moment, seriously shaken. He says: "All men of sense seem both to see and to fear this,— POLITICIANS AND POWERS ARE ALIKE PERPLEXED. There is great difficulty in moving backward or forward."

In connection with noticing the work above mentioned the Banner thus remarks: "Poland is at any hour ripe for rising; Hungary is ill at ease; and Kossuth is at any moment ready to resume his dictatorship. The Italian States are a volcano pent up, ready to burst forth, pouring the lava of Democratic RAGE AND HATE on the head of despotism."

Another publication, has [illegible] England, entitled, "The [illegible] Month," a notice of which we find in the Banner, with a few extracts from [illegible] which we insert here, with the [illegible] the Banner on the [illegible] them into a decent, sociable position, and military rank is, accorded to them; a captain birches your little boy, and a major prescribes your rhubarb and magnesia, and a lieutenant designs the pediments and architraves for your grand new houses;—custom house clerks, post office clerks, passport office clerks, are all in uniform. * * * There are no less than fourteen different ranks in the civil service, and each of them has a corresponding military value."

"Military [illegible]

"'All in uniform.' The sons of Mars in this most religious empire of the Czar, are everywhere apparent; war first, war midst, war last, war without end! Much of the volume is of a character to illustrate the WAR SPIRIT which meet you at every turn, CARRYING EVERYTHING BEFORE IT."

We also notice in the Banner, an address to Christians throughout Great Britain, the first two paragraphs of which we here insert.

"The present is a time of darkness and great perplexity, a period in which "wars and rumors of wars" are agitating and alarming the hearts of more than the half of mankind. Since the astounding years of the French Revolution, no events of so significant and momentous a character have occurred in the civilized world, as those that are now passing, like tempest-driven clouds, over the heads of the wondering nations. The statesman, the politician, and the merchant, are equally at a loss to comprehend the present, or to predict the future condition of the social fabric; but they are all alike convinced, and many of them have already confessed, that there are elements at work in the conflict on which we are entering, that threaten lasting injury to all that is precious in civilization, and a return to the semi-barbarism from which the leading parties in the struggle have not yet emerged.

At such a time, may it not be asked, with humility and deference, but with all earnestness, What is the duty of the Christian Church? Is it fit and becoming in her to whose care the dearest interests of mankind are entrusted, to sit still, or, what would be worse, to encourage, by word or deed, the carnage into which the short sighted nations are about to plunge? Can she perform no appropriate part in the present tremendous crisis of European affairs? If she cannot accomplish her noblest mission, by becoming the "peacemaker" among rival and ambitious politicians, is there nothing in strict keeping with her character, her pretensions, and her responsibility, that she can do, and which, unless she tacitly consents to surrender her prerogatives as the appointed conservator of the cause of God on earth she must do? Yea, verily, there are some things which the church of God may do to alleviate the disasters, and to check the fury of the coming struggle; and these one may be pardoned for conceiving to be her most appropriate and her most necessary duty at the present alarming period."

In the closing up of the address, the writer urges the Church to do all that lies in her power to help bring about a reconciliation between the contending parties; and urges the Church to pray fervently that the God of heaven would confound their murderous intentions, divert them from their purposed conflict, and turn their hearts into the ways of peace.

While reading this appeal, we were forcibly reminded of the language of Patrick Henry, which, although uttered years ago, in contending for his country's rights, yet it is very applicable here, at this point of affairs. Said Henry, "Gentlemen may cry peace, peace, but there is no peace! War has actually begun." And as the orator proceeded in his speech, describing this warlike state of feeling and its cause at that time, we think we can see a striking analogy between the past and the present. "Let it come," said Henry; and "Let it come," is the burning desire of the down-trodden lover of freedom, "Let it come," says the exiled patriot, as he dreams of 'Freedom's banner wide unfurled' proudly waving over conquered despotism.—And as our forefathers saw plainly that the only way to gain their country's freedom was by war, so it is at the present time with all classes of republicans in Europe. They earnestly de[illegible] and are waiting anxiously for the [illegible] arrive when they can boldly fight [illegible] liberties of the land they love.

BIGLOW'S MILLS, LAPORT CO. IA.,
February 14th, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—We have just returned home from Union Mills, about seven miles from this place, where we have been preaching the Word for two weeks. The first week nothing of note took place, at the same time we had evidence there would be a move if we continued the meeting longer. The second week, Monday evening, after preaching we went to the water, and I led 10 and buried them with Christ [illegible] and are now trying to get a little [illegible]. Several in [illegible] waiting for [illegible] opportunity [illegible] their Lord. The interest is still good; [illegible] have baptized in all, since the 19th of November, 80 willing souls,—quite a number of these had been infidels for several years. Our message is the Lord's coming this year, and we believe it, Glory be to God forever and ever, Amen. This message awakes the virgins everywhere. Some of our brethren have been in their tents for 10 years, but now they stand upon their feet ready to give the last note of warning to a judgment bound world. We have been waiting patiently to hear from Brn. Berick and Couch, as they gave us some encouragement that they would come this way again. If they cannot come we pray the Lord to send some efficient laborer here. Our calls are more than we can supply. The cause now demands faithful soldiers that are not afraid to die for the truth. A little longer "and the battle's fought and victory's won." All those who would have a part in this last and all-important message, let them commence now or it will be too late. "O strike, let every nerve and sinew Tell on ages—tell for God."

A word to our old brethren and sisters in the East. It is now almost three years since we left you to preach the Word in this western clime; God has been with us, and in his Providence we have heard, we believe, the last message which will gather out a people zealous of good works, "without spot or wrinkle" to meet their Lord.—Dear children, have you waked up, are you trimming your lamps? If so look not behind you, and "make no provisions for the flesh to fulfill the lust thereof;" for "the Judge standeth before the door." Have you done your duty to your children?—Have you warned your neighbors? In short are you clearing your skirts from the blood of all? Soon the Church will have finished her course and come up out of great tribulation, having washed her robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Pray for us dear children, that we may have health and strength to sound the last note of warning to a perishing world. We do not expect to see you again until our Lord comes. So then heed the cry which in mercy sounds, go out to meet your Lord. Farewell.

Yours, expecting to see our Lord this year, D. R. & M. S. MANSFIELD.

RICHMOND, Feb. 20th.

Bro. Merriam:—I praise the Lord that His spirit has not ceased to strive with men, and that the Angel is yet sealing servants in their foreheads, and what is to be done must be done quickly. But before the Lord shall come down the parted skies to take vengeance on this ungodly earth, there will be a great famine, not for bread nor water, but for hearing the word of the Lord; and they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east. They shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it. In that day shall the fair virgins and young men pant for thirst. Then they will mourn and lament because of their unbelief and sins. Then the slain of the Lord shall be from one end of the earth to the other; and every knee shall bow; but God will mock at their calamity. O what a time of trouble. But the saints of God will not be there. No, glory to God—He will take care of them, praise His blessed name. But O, what will be the sad lamentations of the wicked in that day, when the heavens shall roll together as a scroll, and the mountains shall not be found! They will cry for "the rocks and mountains to fall upon them and hide them from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." Sinner, turn to God, and live. "Seeing that ye look for such things, what manner of persons ought ye to be, in all holy conversation and godliness." Should we be proud, high-minded, unholy, lovers of our own selves more than lovers of God? No, we should love God with a perfect heart. We should be holy and meek; for "the meek shall inherit the earth," where all is immortal and beautiful. O glory to God, we are almost there. REUEL S. WEBBER.

"ESSENTIAL TRUTH." We acknowledge the receipt of a dozen copies of this excellent work, from the author, Bro. R. Porter, of Washington, D. C. We heartily recommend this work to the perusal of all who are desirous of [illegible] religious instruction.

Several persons in Philadelphia have recently renounced Romanism, and joined themselves to the Methodist Episcopal Church, under Rev. W. H. Elliott. The affair has created great excitement among the Romanists, and the converts have been subjected to violent and brutal assaults.

THE RUSSIAN FLEET.—The Russian fleet in the Black Sea is of a formidable character. It will soon (if not already) have a chance to measure itself with that of England and France combined. The following is an exact account of the Russian sea force.

Four three-deckers, (one old) 120 guns each—total guns, 480; eleven line-of-battle, 80 to [illegible] each—total guns, 902; five frigates, [illegible] guns each—total guns, 222; two frigates, 48 guns each—total guns, 96; three corvettes, 36 guns each—total guns, 103; four corvettes, 24 guns each—total guns, 96; two brigs, 22 guns each—total guns, 44; ten brigs, 18 guns each—total guns, 180; three brigs, 15 guns each—total guns, 45; five brigs, 12 guns each—total guns, 60; five brigs, 6 guns each—total guns, 30; three brigs, 12 guns each—total guns, 36; five brigs, 10 guns each—total guns, 50; one old 84 line-of-battle, one old 24 gun brig (unserviceable;) a few steamships; total guns afloat, 2,365.

"THE GRAND CRISIS IN HUMAN AFFAIRS; THE LORD SOON TO COME."

The above is the title of a new work recently issued from the press, written by F. H. Berick. It is an elaborate work of 383 pages designed to shed light on the following subjects, viz:

The economy of grace.

Signs of the times.

The four Universal Monarchies.

Rise of the ten Kingdoms.

Rise of the "little horn" and its characteristics.

Daily sacrifice in connection with the 2300 days.

The 1260, 1290 and 1335 days, and the 11th and 12th chapters of Daniel.

The Abomination of Desolation in connection with Matthew 24.

The Parable of the Ten Virgins.

The 6th Seal and holding of the "four winds" of Rev. 7th.

The Seven Trumpets.

12th and 17th chapters of Revelation.

Concluding with remarks on the impending crisis just before us.

Foreign News.

The following is the most important part of the news received by the steam propeller Andes, which arrived at Boston on Wednesday last:

Russia and Turkey.—Troops for the East.—The fact that "some of Cunard's steamships" have been "taken up" by the Government to carry troops to the seat of war, no longer admits of doubt. The agents have now themselves announced that the Cambria and the Niagara are engaged for that service, and we understand they will leave Liverpool for Malta, on Saturday next; but whether the troops which they are to convey will be embarked at this port or at Cork, is yet undecided.

PREPARATIONS FOR WAR. Government have chartered the following steamers: Golden Fleece, Jason, Cape of Good Hope, Propontis, Himalaya, Manila, Ripon, Cambria, Niagara, Victoria, Queen of the South, Hydaspes, Harbinger.

It is reported that Lord Raglan is to have the chief command, and that the Duke of Cambridge, Earl Cardigan, Generals Evans and Brotherton, are to have appointments.

The 4th, 11th, and 17th Dragoons are reported to be under orders.

Both in military and naval departments extraordinary activity prevails.

The period of 40 days allowed by the Porte for the Russian acceptance of the terms adopted by the Turkish Cabinet expired on Thursday, Feb. 8, and the Porte or its allies are fully justified in taking, without further notice, any measures they may now think necessary.

The period for the withdrawal of the Russian ships to their ports must also have already expired.

If war is inevitable it matters not whether the formal declaration of it proceeds from Russia or from the Western Powers.

It is acknowledged that a mere pacification at this moment, with a prospect that Russia would take some fresh advantage of the Ottoman empire when the other European powers are less united or otherwise engaged, is not a result the nation has any reason to desire.

If the British Government are satisfied that the Emperor Nicholas has made enormous preparations for war, apparently with the object of crossing the Danube, and attempting the conquest of Constantinople, there is evidence enough to justify this country and its allies in anticipating the worst, and in taking most energetic steps to prevent [illegible].

It is time for all parties to emerge from a state of uncertainty [illegible] hostilities in Asia [illegible] commenced with fresh violence, and the part we are prepared to act should be distinctly made known [illegible] Europe.

All the arrangements for the [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] included in the [illegible] service.

In general terms it may be considered as certain that the whole of the first division, except, perhaps, the regiment from Ireland, will have set out by the first of March, and that the latter will have embarked before the 10th.

The steamers thus far definitely engaged for this service, are the Himalaya, Ripon, Orinoco, Manila and Golden Fleece; nor is it unlikely that Government may defer taking any more until after the 17th, which is the last day for sending in tenders.

Only seven or eight sailing ships are required. The Guards embark at Portsmouth on Saturday.

The British contingent for the defence of Turkey will amount to 20,000 men, with 40 guns; 250 picked men in each battalion are to be armed with Minie rifles, and brigade commands will be conferred on young colonels. The naval preparations are carried on with the greatest vigilance.

The [illegible] Attack on Kalafat.—Letters from [illegible] state that the bad weather has alone [illegible] the Russians from attacking Kalafat. The investing army has made a movement in advance, but active operations will not begin before March, when the bridges for crossing the Danube will be ready.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan 27. Fifteen days was the period fixed by the Admirals for the Russian vessels to return to their harbor in the Black Sea.

A camp for 40,000 men is being marked out at a place on the Sea of Marmora, six miles from Constantinople.

In Asia, Gen. Guyon had resumed offensive operations against the Russians.

BUCHAREST, 1st. The Russians have 65,000 men before Kalafat.

The Emperor has given orders to every fort to drive the Turks out of Lesser Wallachia, without further loss of time.

BUCHAREST, Jan 6. Almost daily attempts have been made by the Turks to cross the Danube at Giurgevo [illegible] since the 15th ultimo, but without [illegible].

ST. PETERSBURG, 3rd. [illegible] Orloff's departure, great animation has prevailed, but matters wear a warlike and sombre aspect.

The Austrian Lloyds says that Orloff is to make every effort in his power, at St. Petersburg, to further any hope of settlement. He is urged to this by Austria.

VIENNA, Friday Night, Feb. 10. Advices from Bucharest of the 6th inst., announce that 800 Turks, with eight gun-boats and four sailing craft, crossed the Danube from Rutschuk to Giurgevo early on the morning of the 5th.—They landed near the quarantine building, and arranged themselves in line of battle. They were received by two battalions of Russians with a murderous fire, which lasted for three hours. The Russians suffered severely. The Turks finally returned to Rutschuck.

The last arrived number of the new Russian newspaper, published at Bucharest, and entitled the Wallachian Moniteur, contains a general order by Prince Gortschakoff, enacting that all the male population from 18 to 40 years of age, married or unmarried, and of whatever profession, may be required by the generals, colonels, or chefs de corps, to render compulsory service (robota) to the Russian army; that horses, oxen, and all other draft cattle, besides wagons, may in like manner be taken for the same use; and, lastly, that all the barques, boats and barges found on the Danube may be taken at any moment for the Russian service. This ordinance applies to all Wallachian subjects, and any person attempting to evade it will be brought before a court-martial.

A letter from Alexandria of the 23d January gives some details which are not devoid of interest. Everywhere in Egypt as in Turkey, the inhabitants were making voluntary gifts to the Sultan, both in money and in kind. At Alexandria, Beyrout, Cairo, and [illegible] large towns, the sums given amounted [illegible] total, the Europeans taking a large part in these acts of patriotic generosity. At Cairo, the women of the harems of the principal Mussulmen inhabitants had distinguished themselves by the importance of their gifts. Amongst other things they had given a large quantity of linen and lint, for the surgeons at the seat of war, and in many instances jewels were sold to buy medicaments. The Egyptian officers who are with the army of the Danube have written home to their families, speaking in high terms of the manner in which the Turkish government treated them.

The Russians have now 41,000 foot, 12,000 horse, 3,000 sappers and miners, and 120 guns in Little Wallachia. The reserve at Slatina, is to amount to 15,000 men. General Schilders is to have the whole and sole direction of the projected passage of the Danube, but there will be hardly any change in the supreme command of the troops.

The French Government continues its preparations for the [illegible] with great activity and perseverance. Orders have been despatched from Paris for the Brest fleet to put to sea at once, and it was understood that the Admiral in command was under orders from the Minister of Marine to proceed to Toulon, Algiers and Civita Vecchia, for the purpose of embarking the corps to Turkey. The fleet has sailed and is now on its way [illegible] Mediterranean.

Austria—Vienna, [illegible]. During one of the interviews between the emperor and the envoy extraordinary his majesty is said to have acknowledged with the warmest expressions of gratitude, his great obligations to the Emperor Nicholas; but at the same time, Count Orloff was reminded that the first duty of a sovereign was to care for the welfare of his country. It would be folly to pretend to give a connected account of what has occurred here during the last week; but it may be considered certain that all the members of the administration are averse to any close alliance with Russia. Some days since a council was held, at which the emperor presided, and it is credibly related that the ministers not only displayed the most pacific inclinations, but even urged that it would be advisable to avoid the expense inseparable from the removal and concentration of large bodies of troops. This counsel was, however, overruled, and an army of some 100,000 men is now being collected on the east and south-eastern frontier. Credible [illegible] the army in Austrian Italy [illegible] is being re-inforced.

The military authorities must naturally [illegible] what they are about, but it strikes me that either too much or too little is done. If Austria [illegible] of the revolutionary party [illegible] is no cause to fear that the tranquility of the southern [illegible] but a powerful army on the [illegible] eastern frontier of the empire [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] New York, on Sunday [illegible] advices from Europe [illegible]. From England we learn that [illegible] manufacturing towns was good. The most active efforts, military and naval, are being made to put all England in fighting order; and it is stated that in addition to the steamers already taken, it has been decided to take the remainder of the Cunard steamers as fast as they arrive, leaving the company to carry the mails in smaller steamers. Many East India sailing ships have also been taken by the Admiralty to carry stores, troops, &c.

The Baltic fleet of 36 ships, chiefly of the line and powerful steam frigates, was to assemble in the Downs on the 6th of March, where it would be joined by ten French vessels of the line, of from 80 to 100 guns each.

The whole fleet, which was to be under the command of Sir Charles Napier, was intended for operations against St. Petersburg.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says that fresh negotiations are on foot, and hopes are generally entertained that they would be successful. The new proposition said to be adopted by the four powers makes a concession to the Czar, namely—the liberty of treating, to a certain extent, alone with Turkey, the latter power to have the right of consultation with the allies. It is also proposed that the evacuation of the principalities shall take place simultaneously with that of the Black Sea, and that the fleet will re-enter the Bosphorus when the Russians cross the Pruth.

The autograph letter of the Emperor Napoleon to the Czar of Russia proposes a treaty of peace on the basis of the Vienna note, modified by Turkey, and that negotiations should take place direct between the Russian and Turkish plenipotentiaries.

The French squadron, under Admiral Bruat, was to take on board 12,000 troops, and to proceed to Toulon, to join the English squadron awaiting them there, having on [illegible] more troops, when both squadrons [illegible] sail for the Levant.

The correspondent of the London Times says that the Russians were committing dreadful excesses on the peasants of Wallachia, who had refused to submit to the burdens imposed on them. The women and children of three villages had been massacred.

The French Government had addressed a strong note to King Otho, in consequence of the discovery of the Greek conspiracy.

Advices from Asia state that Schamyl was pushing forward his armaments with great energy. Nearly all Abasia had declared for him.

Latest from Europe.

The steamship Alps, from Liverpool, Sunday morning, Feb. 19th, arrived at this port at half-past eight o'clock this morning. The following is a summary of her news:

Russia and Turkey. Wilmer & Smith's Liverpool Times says:

Letters from St. Petersburg state that the military preparations are being continued in Russia on an immense scale, and with the greatest activity.

A despatch received in Paris from Berlin, states that great exasperation was produced at the palace of St. Petersburg by the receipt of the letter of the Emperor of France.

By the last accounts from the Danube, we learn that Omar Pacha was better, and had arranged a new plan of campaign, based on that of General Schilders, which had been communicated to him by some Polish deserters.—He expected, when he should receive further reinforcements, to drive the Russians beyond the Pruth.

According to telegraphic advices received in Vienna from the Semlin, the Constantinople mail of the 4th brings nothing new. Nothing of importance had occurred at the western end of the Danubian line of operations up to the 10th inst.

A letter from Trebizond, dated Jan. 26, gives the following account of the prevention of a sixth attack on Fort St. Nicholas by the Russians, and their defeat:—On Thursday, the 19th of Jan. 3000 Russians issued from Ozurghetti, and marched on Chekvetil, (St. Nicholas). The Russians had concealed themselves from their enemies, in a jungle, a short distance from the fort, and lay there until nightfall, when they meditated storming the place. The Turkish scouts gave timely warning, and the greater part of the garrison issued forth, and fell upon the concealed Russians.

A scene of slaughter ensued, in which more than two-thirds of the Russians [illegible] the remainder withdrew in the [illegible] disorder and precipitation. The loss [illegible] side was insignificant, owing to [illegible] nature of the surprise.

According to intelligence from St. Petersburg of the 9th, the result of Count Orloff's mission was known in that capital. The result was not satisfactory.

On the 27th of January the Emperor Nicholas addressed a letter to Prince Chotutoff, the Hetman of the Don Cossacks, in which the following phrases occur:—

"In the war which has broken out in defence of the Christian faith, my brave Cossacks of the Don have given new proofs of their devotion and valor. The glorious history of their faithful service to the Throne and country is well known, and I have a firm conviction, that during the present year they will be, as they have always been, the terror of the foes of Russia and of the Holy Cross."

O [illegible] my shield,
[illegible] all around;

[illegible] pilgrim, redemption draws near;
[illegible] that precede it are past;

And [illegible] be cast.

All the bright harpers join in the song;

While ages the chorus prolong.

The sixth seal is open, the judgment draws near;
Black storm-clouds are gathering round;
The nations are shaking—its [illegible];

The wine cup in fury has gone from the Lord;
The nations must drink, fight and die,
Earth's embattled legions must fall by the sword;
The slain throughout earth then must lie.

"The Daily Sacrifice."

Dear brethren, and readers of the Crisis: The caption of this article has borne with much weight on my mind for some months past, and I feel constrained to give you [illegible] my thoughts and feelings on the [illegible] hoping it will call forth an article [illegible] some abler pen, which shall do justice to the cause of God, and edify the Church. All bible readers are aware that the true people of God have in every age had a certain sacrifice which they offered. The first sacrifice of which we have an account is that of Abel. Paul says, (Heb. 11: 4,) "By faith Abel offered unto God [illegible] excellent sacrifice than Cain, by [illegible] he obtained witness that he was [illegible]." In Gen. 8: 20, we find Noah [illegible] burnt offerings, &c. In Gen. 12: 7, 8, we learn that Abram "builded altars unto the Lord, and called upon the name of the Lord." In Gen. 35: 1—3, the Lord directs Jacob to make an altar unto the Lord. Next we come down to the days of Moses. See Ex. 27, and Numbers 28, where it becomes a law to "offer unto the Lord two lambs of the first year without spot, day by day, for a continual burnt offering," which was observed by the children of Israel, until carried into captivity by Nebuchadnezzar; and we [illegible] that after Nehemiah built again the walls of Jerusalem he established it again, according [illegible], B. C. 445. This [illegible] observed until A. D. 519, [illegible] forbidden by the man of sin. [illegible] it was observed by the children of God through the wilderness state down to [illegible] time. Now as Christ abolished all the Jewish burnt offerings and sacrifices, the question occurs, what was the daily sacrifice which was continued, not only through the apostolic age, but through the whole gospel dispensation? I conceive the true answer to this question is of great [illegible] child of God. As we believe that [illegible] judgment is just before us our [illegible] be, that we may be found doing every duty, "having on the whole armor," and "without spot or wrinkle or any such thing." In order to [illegible] a true answer to this question, we [illegible] be governed by the testimony of the [illegible] and other sacred writers. David [illegible] 50: 3—5,) "Our God shall [illegible] and shall not keep silence, a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him; He [illegible] the heavens from above, and [illegible] earth that he may judge his people. [illegible] my saints together unto me; those [illegible] made a covenant with me by [illegible] also [illegible] Paul [illegible] 12: 1,) "I beseech you therefore [illegible] of God, that [illegible] living sacrifice, [illegible] which is our [illegible] 13: 15, "By [illegible] the sacrifice of [illegible] God continually; that is, the [illegible] to his [illegible] Ye also as lively [illegible]

[illegible] important duty? If so, may God enable you, at once, to perform it.—If we that profess to be the children of God, have no daily worship, more than the ungodly around us, how are we distinguished from them? We are to be "living epistles known and read of all men." Not only our families, but our neighbors know whether we have a daily worship or not. Jesus says, (Matt. 5: 16,) "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." James 5: 16, "Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." If it be a fact that the heathen have a daily sacrifice, what must be the condemnation of an enlightened people who have a bible that teaches them of a God that created and preserves them, and of a Redeemer who has died for them that they need not perish, but believe on him and have everlasting life, and yet live from day to day and from year to year, having no form of worship to the God of heaven? Must not God look upon such a people with abhorance, will he not take vengeance on such? See 2 Thess. 1: 8, 9. O! brethren, may we that are looking for "that same Jesus" not dispense with a daily sacrifice; for if it was required of our fathers, and the Church before us, God does require it of his people now.—"Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it," and "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need" And when good old Daniel's 1335 days end and he is raised up for his lot, that we too may share in that blessed inheritance, is the prayer of your unworthy brother. Amen. JOHN GIBSON.

"Behold he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him."—Rev. 1: 7.

"God hath appointed a DAY, in which he will judge the world," and we are not left in darkness, that that day should overtake us as a thief. We have a sure word of prophecy, unto which we do well to take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place. The time of the second coming of Christ is revealed in the Scriptures, and the wise shall understand, but none of the wicked shall understand. God warned the world in the days of Noah, by one man, who, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house. He is now warning this wicked generation of the hastening judgment, by humble instruments, whom he has raised up and filled with faith and the Holy Ghost. The cry has gone forth, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!!" But as it was in the days of Noah and Lot, the wickedness of man is great, and the messengers seem unto them as those who mock.

The Lord is coming in a few months, and the destruction of this world will be sealed. The signs foretold in the Scriptures [illegible] fulfilled, and yet they perceive it not. Jerusalem was accursed because she "knew not the time of the visitation;" and the Lord now speaks, saying, "my people are destroyed for lack of knowledge, because thou hast rejected knowledge I will reject thee." The busy multitude are rushing heedless on to death. Their seers and wise men are crying "peace and safety," when sudden destruction cometh. I would say, in the language of the prophet, "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears," that I might weep day and night for this perishing world.

There is a God in the heavens, whose teachings and manifestations are not according to the creeds and forms of a degenerate church; but are life and power, and the Holy Ghost. "He hath chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise, and weak things to confound the mighty, and base things, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are, that no flesh should glory in his [illegible]." He is now bringing the world [illegible] and, our Saviour foreseeing the present unbelief, says when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith upon the [illegible] The world [illegible] it is ripe, [illegible] or the world; [illegible] they willing now to come out and [illegible] separate, and not be conformed to the world? Jesus says—"Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple."—"If any man come unto me, and hate not his father and mother, and wife and children, and brethren and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." Those words were spoken in connection with the parable of the supper, when the Lord's servants were commanded to go out quickly into the highways and hedges to compel them to come in, because none of those men who were first bidden, and began to make excuse, shall taste of his supper. Who then is on the Lord's side? Who will awake and go out to meet the Bridegrooom? It is life or death; it is faith or unbelief. The last warning is being given. O receive it! Be entreated to save your own soul! Fly to the Ark of mercy TO-DAY, before the door is forever shut.

One word to the sinner whose eye may fall upon this article. Now is the last call of mercy given. Ere another year has rolled away you will see the bending heavens give way and disclose the descending Judge—you will see the righteous dead bursting [illegible] their tombs and ascending up in the air to meet the Lord—you will hear the shrieks of those who will call for rocks and mountains to hide them from the presence of the Judge! Are you ready for that day? Depend upon it, the last cry is going forth, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." Think of these things—weigh them well, as you value your everlasting welfare; decide for God before that day overtakes you as a thief, and you take up the awful lamentation, "The harvest is past, and the summer is ended and I am not saved."—Prepare! prepare to meet your God!

RELIANCE E. WOOD.

CHESHIRE, Jan 2d, 1854.

OLDTOWN, Me., Feb. 21, 1854.

To the dear Brethren who have been, under God, the honored instruments of publishing and sending forth "The World's Crisis," to preach the time of the Lord's coming, and the preparation NOW taking place for THE BATTLE OF THE GREAT DAY OF GOD ALMIGHTY. The name is most fitly chosen, just at this time when there is such a feeling in the minds of almost the entire nation, or, more properly I might say, the nations of the earth, that some event is about to transpire.

The question in my mind with respect to the propriety of issuing such a paper, is now settled. I have no doubt that God was in the matter; it has done me so much good in what I have witnessed in every place where it has been read, that it would be wrong on my part to withold my testimony, as I spoke against the enterprise. A few instances it might be interesting to relate. A Bro. put one number into the hands of an old church-member; he read it over and over, read it to his family.—The Bro. met him a few days since, when the old man inquired, Where did you get that paper? His lips trembled as he returned thanks for it. "Oh," said he, "it preaches just as I have felt for sometime." Yesterday Bro. C. of Holden, informed me that a church-member told him he would rather have one number, than one whole years' papers of his once official organ.

Returning home from meeting a few evenings since, a stranger accosted me in the following manner: "Elder, your doctrine troubles the infidels." "Why so—were there any there to-night?" "Yes, there was one Tom Paine infidel there." When I reached my stopping-place, says he, "I am the man." He came in. That man bowed his knee that night around the family altar; tarried with us all night, conversed with us on the fulfilment of prophecy, and read, with seemingly the deepest interest, the World's Crisis, and voluntarily sent for it, that he might weekly feast on the solemn and important truths it contains. Should his eye rest on these few lines, may he remember that evening sacrifice while bowed round the family altar of Bro. E. B. of Orrington.

The paper will continue a blessing to all, and be owned and blessed of God, just as long as it is conducted with an eye single to the glory of God; and truly we may say with the Apostle, "the end of all things is at hand. Be ye therefore sober and watch unto prayer." "And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves."

Bro. [illegible], you have the prayers of [illegible] of God's humble ones, that you may [illegible] the [illegible] wisdom in conducting said paper, [illegible] [illegible] articles for its [illegible] [illegible] You would [illegible]

The World's Crisis! Truly the world is rushing fast to its crisis; a few months, perhaps weeks, yea, days, may rush the final storm. Every thing speaks it—nature, for her God hath spoken. The great earthquake Nov. 1st, 1775, preached it; the darkened sun, May 19, 1780, preached it; the falling stars Nov. 13, 1833, preached it; fearful sights and great signs in the heavens have preached it; distress of nations and perplexity is NOW preaching it in solemn, awful and thrilling tones.—Men's hearts quail with fear in anticipation of what is coming; the looks of many preach it; the heaven-daring scoffer, with the outgushing of his heart, as he ridicules the truth of God, preaches it. The sleepy watchman, as he folds his arms in ignorant security, preaches it. All things betide the rising storm of indignation. The feverish state of the oppressed nations in the old world, proclaim vengeance, sudden and irresistible.

Well might the editor, in the prospectus number of the Franklin, a large weekly Journal, issued by Littell, Son & Co. of Boston, for May, 1853, remark in the following striking and emphatic language:—

"We stand at a great starting point in the history of the world. Old things are about to pass away and we know not what shall be the new.

"The Continent of Europe startled by the warning trumpet of 1848 has cowered into silence; and while all faces gather blackness—and men's heart's fail them for fear of what is coming upon the earth—the Rulers of great nations council together how they may consolidate and extend the reign of despotism—keep down the rising tide—shut out the coming day."

I must close as my sheet is full, may The World's Crisis continue to breathe the same straight forward, kind, loving spirit which the solemnity of these closing moments of probation demands, is my desire and humble prayer.

Every meeting I attend seems more and more solemn to me. I feel truly it is the latest call of grace. Truly the harvest is ripening in a most rapid and astounding manner. I am some times astonished at the development of character. O Lord, protect me now is my prayer. Our meeting at Orrington was blessed of God; seven happy souls went down into the water and put on the Lord by baptism.—Also at Prospect God was present to own and bless—three more followed the Lord in baptism. We commenced meeting here on Saturday night. Congregations are solemn and attentive. The Lord willing, in a few days, we leave for Calais, one hundred miles farther East. O how the "Macedonian cry" sounds from every quarter, come, help us. Truly, the harvest is great and nearly ripe, and laborers are very few.

May heavens richest, sweetest blessings rest upon all the saints scattered abroad is the desire of thy Pilgrim Brother in the bonds of the Gospel of Love, peace and unity, expecting deliverance this year,

S. S. BREWER.

Extracts from Letters.

CHINA, Feb. 19, 1854.

Dear Brother Merriam:—I do thank the Lord that the midnight cry has had a powerful effect in awakening the virgins in this place while they listen to the last note of warning. It awakens a deep interest in them to know the time that they may get ready for the solemn event. Backsliders have been reclaimed, and some twenty-five or thirty sinners have given their hearts to God. It is blessed to hear them praise God for the midnight cry: they say that nothing else could have aroused them but the judgment right at hand. Well, I thank God's blessed name for what he is doing in this place. I do believe that the Lord sent Brethren Couch, Howell and Brewer here to preach the word, and I believe it will not return void, but will accomplish the thing whereto He sent it.—The Lord's name be praised for his goodness to us in old China. Our meetings are very solemn and deeply interesting.—There can be nothing more blessed than to see sinners fleeing to Christ for salvation while mercy yet lingers. I am thankful that sinners can come to Jesus and be saved. O, thank God for his goodness to the children of men.

Well, brethren, we must be very good children to be translated when he comes; we ought to be "without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing," denying ourselves of all ungodliness and worldly lusts, living soberly, righteous and godly in this present evil world, having our loins girt about with truth and our lamps burning. Dear brethren, are we bound to eat and drink, and do all that we do, to the glory of God? So says the word, and it is truth. Now I [illegible] ask my brethren and sisters [illegible] [illegible] have not habits that it would be for the glory of God to abandon. [illegible]

[illegible] way is straight. Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and the life. If any man will follow me he shall not walk in darkness, but have the light of life." I do hope, dear brethren and sisters, that we shall do his will, then we shall know of the doctrine, and shall be of the wise that shall understand how near we are to the coming of our blessed Lord. O, can it be that all whose names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life, will be delivered this year? What a glorious hope that the way-worn pilgrims will so soon come into that land of heavenly rest, where all God's saints will reign forever and ever. O, thank the Lord, we had the privilege of seeing six follow their Saviour in baptism, and ten have obeyed the command before. O, it is blessed to see what a change there has been within four months, in this place! It is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes; blessed be the Lord forever!

Yours, in the blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus. A. K. CLARK.

WESTFIELD, Feb. 28, 1854.

Dear Brethren:—The Lord is reviving his work in many places, where the midnight cry is sounding. At Laneville great conviction rested upon the people, and some resolved to start in the service of the Lord. They are very anxious to hear more. Six were baptized at Russell last Friday, in the Westfield river, and were greatly blessed. The Lord is with us of a truth. Praise the King of kings for this blessed hope.

Your brother in Christ,
MILES GRANT.

HOLYOKE, Feb. 26, 1854.

Dear Bro Merriam:—Having received one No. of the World's Crisis, I can truly say that I thank the blessed Lord for such a messenger to proclaim the coming of the Lord this year. "Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ," from whom you will soon, if faithful, receive your reward with all of the prophets and apostles, and martyrs, and saints of all ages, who together will come into Abraham's promised possession. I am looking for and confidently expecting the King in his beauty will come this year, and bestow glory, honor and immortality, upon all the patient well-doers. Oh! how blessed and heart-cheering the thought to the toil-worn pilgrim, who, for many long years has been "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." And may the Lord bless and reward both publisher and writer of this paper; and may you one and all faithfully improve your talent in writing as well as in lifting your warning voice, in proclaiming to this world the immediate coming of Jesus, and the infinite importance of a speedy preparation to meet him with joy when he comes. And may the articles of each paper, like those I have received, breathe forth the blessed, humble, meek spirit of Jesus, our soon coming Saviour; to whom be praise, glory and honor forever. Amen.

Yours in hope of speedy redemption.
MARY A. WELLMAN.

WHITEFIELD, Feb. 22, 1854.

Dear Brethren:—We are having a good time in Whitefield. Four have been baptised; some 10 or 12 come forward for prayers every night, and several have experienced religion. We are looking for the coming of the Lord this year.

S. K. PARTRIDGE.

WEST CHARLEMONT, Mass.,
February 18th, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—The "Crisis" comes to us like "good news from a far country." We feel our obligations to God, in a measure at least, for this precious boon. To the dear children scattered abroad I would say, press onward, we shall soon reach home; we have all drank, and some deeply, of the sorrows of earth, yet still cry, give us our evil things in this life and our good things in the world to come.—We press the cross to our breast, and, like Bunyan, run crying, "life, LIFE, ETERNAL LIFE." We'll soon, if faithful, bid adieu to old time, and meet the friends we have loved in Jesus, in the better land.—O haste, glad day. Come Lord Jesus.

Your sister, looking for the Bridegroom this year, VESTA N. CUDWORTH.

Inspired Expositions.

Many portions of the Old Testament Scriptures which might be otherwise obscure, [illegible] rendered clear [illegible] by the inspired comments upon them in the New. This is particularly the case with many portions of [illegible], upon which the fable of a [illegible] supposed [illegible]

The [illegible] Isa. lxv. 17, 18. 'For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former [illegible]

in that which I create; for behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy.' Peter shows us that this promise is to be fulfilled when all these things are dissolved; for he says, 2 Pet. iii. 10, 13. 'But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness. Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.'

Another passage much relied upon by those who advocate the notion of a millennium, is Isa. liv. 11, 14. 'O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted! behold I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires. And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children. In righteousness shalt thou be established; thou shalt be far from oppression; for thou shalt not fear; and from terror; for it shall not come near thee.'—But our Saviour shows that this is to be fulfilled at the resurrection of the just.—He says, John vi. 44, 45: 'No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day. It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me.'

Again we read in Psalms, viii. 3, 8.—'When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, which thou hast ordained; What is man that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet; All sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field; The fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas.' This Paul shows will be fulfilled in 'the world to come.'—Heb. ii. 5, 8. 'For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come whereof we speak. But one in a certain place testified, saying, What is man that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him? Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, He left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him.' They will therefore be put under him in the world to come, whereof Paul loved to speak.

Again we read in Isa. xxv. 6, 9. 'And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall be taken away from off all the earth; for the Lord hath spoken it. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.' This Paul shows to be at the resurrection of the dead. 1 Cor. xv. 51, 54. 'Behold, I shew you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory."

In the same manner we might go through with all the prominent passages which are quoted in support of the doctrine of the millenium. Although they are plain and positive enough, as they stand in the Old Testament, yet the inspired comments upon them in the New, remove all shadow of [illegible] from those who wrest them from their obvious meaning, by spiritual and mystical interpretation, in support of the modern, but now exploded doctrine of a temporal millenium.—[Selected.

All glory be unto my God; angels and saints praise ye him! O thou earth, yea, hills, and mountains, be glad; you shall not be [illegible] any more with the [illegible] of corruption, whereunto ye have been subject through the wickedness of mankind. Lift up your heads, and be glad, for a [illegible] shall make you clean from your corruption and vanity wherewith [illegible] many years you have been infected [illegible] the [illegible], let all the saints [illegible] for the day of the marriage with [illegible] groom (even the Lamb of God) [illegible] [illegible]

Continued.

I come now in view of the 5th, 6th and 7th Periods of the Vision; and in these I shall nearly follow brethren Couch and Berick. I have read their views, and I have seen views from the pens of others, but I must confess the latter fail to convince me, that the former are not in the main right. It is a part of history that I have not so fully investigated as many other facts, so that I shall not advance much that is original; but I [illegible] that at the time the Pope proposed and sanctioned bloodshed, of all those who rejected his communion and ritual, when he was put forward and supported by the Emperor; but especially when laws were enacted by the Senate to that effect, I must say if that was not giving them into the hands of the little horn, I cannot discover what more is necessary to place them there. And if that was not taking away the daily true worship of God and setting up the abomination that maketh desolate, I know not where to find it. I have been informed that this took place in A. D. 519, or rather that it began to take place in A. D. 519, but that the confirmatory laws of the Senate [illegible] A. D. 538 [illegible]

ing; and I cannot but think the sixth Period was fulfilled in May, 1809. When the Italian dominions of the Pope were attached to the French Empire, and though it may be said the 1335 days will run out on the 17th of May next, as here arranged, and reckoned from 1809, still I think there must be time, for many things must be done: but a "short work will the Lord God make upon the earth" now; happy indeed is it for those virgins who have been slumbering and sleeping during this seemingly tarrying time, if they have arisen and trimmed their lamps, and are waiting for the bridegroom; for the final winding up of the whole vision, I do most surely believe, will take place in the first Jewish month of A. D. 1854, when the seventh Period of the vision will be fulfilled, the sanctuary will be cleansed, and the long-waited-for time come, when Daniel will "stand in his lot," and all the saints, "at the end of the days."

Much has been said on the subject of the Saviour's age at his baptism and crucifixion, but it is sufficient to say that several of the early fathers did believe that he was about 50 years of age, when he suffered. The Jews told him sometime before his death, John 8: 57, "Thou art not yet 50 years old" [illegible] fice at the age of 30 years, by the Jewish law, is not the case. Aaron, the first high priest ever consecrated to God, was over 80 years of age at the time of his consecration, and I doubt not that each of his sons were more than half that number of years old before they were called to officiate as priests.

The Levites were sometimes required to be 30 years old before they were allowed to take the charge of the consecrated things, and perform the Temple-service; and sometimes they were no more than 25, but the number 30, in connexion with the priests, does not occur in the Bible, except what is said of the 30 pieces of silver, the price which they paid for "the blood of the Son of God." Some will object that 37 years of inactivity is too much before his baptism; but how long did the early Patriarchs live before the Patriarch-son was born? Was not Noah 500 years old at the birth of Shem? And has it not been the general course of Providence with all those who were designed to act a conspicuous part in his service to try them, that patience might have her perfect work? Witness Melchizedek, Abraham, Zecharias and Elizabeth, and almost all who have been illustrious and valiant in the cause of God [illegible] understanding to know and do his will, that at his appearing you may be ready to meet him with joy.

According to the foregoing Chronology it will be seen that the coming year will complete the six thousand years from the Creation, (viz.) 4146 before the birth of Christ, and 1854 after that event, added, make in all six thousand years, which will close our probationary state, and land us at "the Judgment seat of Christ." O, may "our loins be girded, and our lamps burning!"

In placing the captivity of Manasseh at B. C. 656, I shall doubtless receive censure from the "knowing ones," who will call it a daring assumption; I have only to say, that I always thought Manasseh must have lived longer in sin than is generally ascribed to him, (viz.) 22 years, to fill "Jerusalem with innocent blood, which the Lord would not pardon." 2d Kings, 24: 4. As he was but twelve years old, when he was put in possession of the Kingdom, and must of necessity be under a regency nearly half that time; I cannot believe that in twelve years he would have become so hardened in iniquity [illegible] as to fill Jerusalem with so much blood as could not be forgiven.

unto this day." Neh. 9: 32. "Here the Jews date their captivity and deprecate the mercy of God; and here it is evident the "Seven times," of their punishment begun of 2520 years, which will terminate at the end of 1854.

The great Jubilee, or forty-nine Jubilees, of 2450 years, has long since been dated, B. C. 606, or 7, in the fourth year of the reign of Jehoiakin. Why, I have never been able to learn, unless that was the last year of Jubilee, which the Jews as a nation, ever celebrated before their [illegible] tion to Babylon. But [illegible] about the celebration of the[illegible] there is much more evidence that the second year of Zedekiah, was the last which they ever observed, before the captivity; for Hananiah's false prophecy was uttered in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah, which Mr. [illegible] says began B. C. 597. Hananiah said, "Thus speaketh the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, saying, I have broken the yoke of the King of Babylon; within two full years will I bring again all the vessels of the Lord's house, that Nebuchadnezzar took away, from this place and carried them to Babylon. Continued.

I come now in view of the 5th, 6th and 7th Periods of the Vision; and in these I shall nearly follow brethren Couch and Berick. I have read their views, and I have seen reviews from the pens of others, but I must confess the latter fail to convince me, that the former are not in the main right. It is a part of history that I have not so fully investigated as many other facts, so that I shall not advance much that is original; but I must say, that at the time the Pope proposed and sanctioned bloodshed, of all those who rejected his communion and ritual, when he was put forward and supported by the Emperor; but especially when laws were enacted by the Senate to that effect, I must say if that was not giving them into the hands of the little horn, I cannot discover what more is necessary to place them there. And if that was not taking away the daily true worship of God and setting up the abomination that maketh desolate, I know not where to find it. I have been informed that this took place in A. D. 519, or rather that it began to take place in A. D. 519, but that the confirmatory laws of the Senate were enacted in the spring of A. D. 520; and I see not why (after all that has been written on the subject) this fifth Period was not fulfilled in A. D. 1779 or 80; and we there do certainly find one of the most prominent and striking "signs of the times," in the darkening of the sun and moon, as we have many living witnesses, even now, that can attest to the fact.

There may have been circumstances at other times which looked like the fulfilment of this part of the vision, (as there was certainly about the time of 1844,) but I doubt whether there ever was such a concurrence of circumstances, relative to the fulfilment of the whole vision, as these which are concentrating toward the end of A. D. 1854; and I wish all to remember that this reckoning is from the last command, to restore and build Jerusalem, that was ever issued, and if it were possible for this time to pass by, we should be left without a chart in the open ocean, without so much as one chronological land-mark from which to commence a new reckoning; and I cannot but think the sixth Period was fulfilled in May, 1809. When the Italian dominions of the Pope were attached to the French Empire, and though it may be said the 1335 days will run out on the 17th of May next, as here arranged, and reckoned from 1809, still I think there must be time, for many things must be done but a "short work will the Lord God make upon the earth" now; happy indeed is it for those virgins who have been slumbering and sleeping during this seemingly tarrying time, if they have arisen and trimmed their lamps, and are waiting for the bridegroom; for the final winding up of the whole vision, I do most surely believe, will take place in the first Jewish month of A. D. 1854, when the seventh Period of the vision will be fulfilled, the sanctuary will be cleansed, and the long-wished-for time come, when Daniel will "stand in his lot," and all the saints, "at the end of the days."

Much has been said on the subject of the Saviour's age at his baptism and crucifixion, but it is sufficient to say that several of the early fathers did believe that he was about 40 years of age, when he suffered. The Jews told him sometime before his death, John 8: 57, "Thou art not yet 50 years old;" and does it not seem much more likely that this should have been said to a person near 40, than to one but just turned of thirty? Mr. Ferguson thinks that Luke expressed himself in round numbers when he spoke of his being "30 years of age." That he was 32 years old when John began to preach, I fully believe; for it is evident that Luke rehearses the story from memory; for otherwise he would not put the beginning of John's baptism, the baptism of all the people, his being cast into prison, and the baptism of Christ after that event, all "in the 15th year of Tiberius."

The obvious historical sense of the three chapters of Luke is, that John began to preach in the 15th of Tiberius, and that Jesus was then not far from 30 years of age, and that after John had baptized all the people in that region, he baptized him before he was cast into prison. But I shall not dwell long on this subject, each must think for himself; but that the Jewish priests were inducted into the priestly office at the age of 30 years, by the Jewish law, is not the case. Aaron, the first high priest ever consecrated to God, was over 80 years of age at the time of his consecration, and I doubt not that each of his sons were more than half that number of years old before they were called to officiate as priests.

The Levites were sometimes required to be 30 years old before they were allowed to take the charge of the consecrated things, and perform the Temple-service; and sometimes they were no more than 25, but the number 30, in connexion with the priests, does not occur in the Bible, except what is said of the 30 pieces of silver, the price which they paid for "the blood of the Son of God." Some will object that 37 years of inactivity is too much before his baptism; but how long did the early Patriarchs live before the Patriarch-son was born? Was not Noah 500 years old at the birth of Shem? And has it not been the general course of Providence with all those who were designed to act a conspicuous part in his service to try them, that patience might have her perfect work? Witness Methusaleh, Abraham, Zecharias and Elizabeth, and almost all who have been illustrious and valiant in the cause of God here in the world.

Thus it will be seen that almost all things conspire to tell us that the "day of Judgment" is in view; and to convince the Church, the true Church, of the fact, I have adjusted the eras to each other; the earliest being that of the Olympiads, with that of Rome, and that of Nabanassar, from B. C. 776, to A. D. 234, the era of Diocletian, and presented many striking facts in connection, which before were not generally known. The world I do not expect to convince; for "as it was in the days of Noah," so it must "be in the days of the Son of man." They are under "strong delusions," and they will "believe a lie"; till a flood of fire shall swallow them up. But, O Church of the living God, sleep not on the top of a mast, while the dead sea rolls its black surge beneath you! To the haughty opposer I have nothing at present to say; but to the enlightened, humble Christian I say, weigh well these facts before you throw them aside; and the Lord give you wisdom and understanding to know and do his will, that at his appearing you may be ready to meet him with joy.

According to the foregoing Chronology it will be seen that the coming year will complete the six thousand years from the Creation, (viz.) 4146 before the birth of Christ, and 1854 after that event, added, make in all six thousand years, which will close our probationary state, and land us at "the Judgment seat of Christ." O, may "our loins be girded, and our lamps burning!"

In placing the captivity of Manasseh at B. C. 666, I shall doubtless receive censure from the "knowing ones," who will call it a daring assumption; I have only to say, that I always thought Manasseh must have lived longer in sin than is generally ascribed to him, (viz.) 22 years, to fill "Jerusalem with innocent blood, which the Lord would not pardon." 2d Kings, 24: 4. As he was but twelve years old, when he was put in possession of the Kingdom, and must of necessity be under a regency nearly half that time; I cannot believe that in twelve years he would have become so hardened in impiety and barbarism as to fill Jerusalem with so much blood as could not be forgiven.

I know that this will be called a paradox; but I find among ancient historians various opinions on the subject. Bellarmine, quoted by Raleigh, thinks he was taken in the 15th year of his reign. Kimbi says it was after 40 years of idolatry. But the great Hebrew Chroniclers hold it to have been in the 27th of his reign, and others the 22d. Now among all this diversity of opinion, all cannot be right; and though it may not have been so late as 40 years, I think any candid man who reads attentively the 21st chap. of the 2d Kings, where there is no repentance so much as mentioned, will see reason to believe that 30 years was little time enough to incur such an enormity of guilt as would not admit of remission from the hand of Jehovah, and if this is the right date of his captivity the "seven times" of Levit. 26, will also be filled up at the end of 1854. In that humble prayer recorded in Neh. 9th chap. it will be seen that the Jews deplore the great calamities that had come upon them "since the time of the Kings of Assyria unto this day." Neh. 9: 32. "Here the Jews date their captivity and deprecate the mercy of God; and here it is evident the "Seven times," of their punishment begun of 2520 years, which will terminate at the end of 1854.

The great Jubilee, or forty-nine Jubilees, of 2450 years, has long since been dated, B. C. 606, or 7, in the fourth year of the reign of Jehoiakin. Why, I have never been able to learn, unless that was the last year of Jubilee, which the Jews as a nation, ever celebrated before their final departation to Babylon. But Inspiration is silent about the celebration of their Jubilees, and there is much more evidence that the second year of Zedekiah, was the last which they ever observed, before the captivity, for Hannaniah's false prophecy was uttered in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah, which Mr Bliss says began B. C. 597. Hannaniah said, "Thus speaketh the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, saying, I have broken the yoke of the King of Babylon; within two full years will I bring again all the vessels of the Lord's house, that Nebuchadnezzar took away, from this place and carried them to Babylon," Jer. 28: 3. Here, doubtless, Hannaniah looked for the Jubilee that was coming at that time, to restore again what had been removed, and to liberate the captives; and although he was a false prophet, he doubtless knew when their Jubilees were to come; and if this Jubilee year begun in the second year of Zedekiah, it would not end till his third year; and from the third to the tenth of Zedekiah, which Mr Bliss says was a Sabbatic year, there would be just the week of years to pass between; which is additional evidence that B. C. 596 was a year of Jubilee, and if the great Jubilee is to be dated from the second year of Zedekiah, B. C. 596+1854, will fill up the number of years contained in forty-nine Jubilees, 2450 years, and bring us to the commencement of the Great Jubilee of glory; when we shall all go out free from the bondage of mortality and corruption, and enter on the purchased possession of our eternal inheritance.

I have now presented to you my views of the prophetic periods in few words, with reference to our nearness to the end of the world, together with the authorities that I rely on, for the truth of what is here expressed; and to recapitulate, I find five long periods that reach to the End. 1st, The six thousand years which begin and end it. 2d, "The seven times," or 2520 years, beginning with the captivity of Manasseh, B. C. 666. 3d, The forty-nine Jubilees, or 2450 years, beginning in the second year of Zedekiah, B. C. 596. 4th, The 2300 days of Daniel's vision, beginning with the going forth of the last commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, from Artexerxes, in his 20th year, B. C. 446; and the 5th, the 1335 days, at the end of which all the saints will have arrived home, beginning when the daily true worship of God is taken away and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, A. D. 519, all of which periods end with the world. I find the 2300 days consists of 7 periods, and very unequally divided. 1st, The seven weeks, to the end of which Nehemiah's administration extended, 49 years. 2d, The 62 weeks, which were filled up at the baptism of Christ, at the age of 37 years, 434 years, which added to 49, gives 483, or 69 weeks; and 3d, The one week, divided, in the midst of which the Seal of Heaven floated from the Cross to the Vision; and the 4th, closing at the conversion of Saul. 5th, 6th, 7th, commencing in A. D. 519, and I do most surely believe, that all will close at the end of 1854. I have adjusted the eras, and placed the numbers in such a way that any mistake may be easily detected; and all may judge if I have accomplished the design I intended; and only say that I feel a satisfaction in having been enabled to accomplish that which duty pressed me to undertake. I have followed Mr Bliss in all Bible chronology, except the administration of Samuel, to whom I assign 26 years; and have given my reason, which may be found in 1 Sam. chap. 7, respecting the offices of the high priests, and the administration of the Roman Governors of Judea, together with the Presidents of Syria, which I did to give additional light, [illegible] now judge for themselves [illegible] bring any good [illegible] specially [illegible].

THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

LOWELL, MARCH 15, 1854.

☞ A Bro. inquires respecting the drying up of the river Euphrates. I have given my views repeatedly in the Crisis on the subject; but as a further illustration, I copy an article from "The Achill Missionary Herald." Achill is a small Island lying off the western coast of Ireland. A powerful movement has been going on in Ireland for years in favor of Protestantism, and we understand the Editor of the Herald has been one of the principal movers in the reformation from Popery. He says:

We have asserted that the restoration of the Jews is to be preceded by the downfall of the Turkish empire. We ground this persuasion on Rev. xvi, 12. "And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared."—If this were an opinion only now promulgated it might be said that it did not originate in a simple interpretation of Scripture, but that it was suggested by what to ordinary political foresight seems to be almost a certainty, the Turkish Empire being now tottering to its fall. But this opinion is not one of modern date. We have now before us a commentary on the whole book of Revelation, written by James Durham, a pious minister of the Church of Scotland, TWO HUNDRED YEARS AGO.—We transcribe his interpretation of the passage to which we have alluded:—

"The object is the great river Euphrates: which is great, and because of that, it is often called in Scripture the river simply. Of this Euphrates we heard, chapter ix. It runneth through Mesopotamia, by, or through, Babylon; it divideth Solomon's kingdom from Syria, and was a great strength to Babylon, and when the Jews were carried captive, they were carried beyond the river, that is Euphrates; therefore it stands now in the way of their returning.—This here is an impediment of their entry to the Church, and of their access to help down Babylon; as once Jordan was dried to make way for them, so that impediment is to be removed, as it were by the drying of a river, out of their way.

"To take Euphrates literally here, will not suit much with the analogy used in the rest of the vials, nor with the scope here. That river standeth little in the way of the Jews conversion, and the drying of it will be little useful to the Church, it must then be figuratively understood. By waters ordinarily in Scripture are understood much people, and by Euphrates in particular, these people that dwell about it, as Isaiah viii. 7, the king of Assyria and his army are called the waters of the river, that is of Euphrates, because they dwell about it. By the same reason then, Euphrates here, must be understood the people for the time inhabiting there. And because not only in verity of the thing, the Turks now possess that part of the world, but also, ch. ix. 14, &c., of this book, these same people were such as weremarked as boundabout that river, and the loosing of them noted as if it were the overflowing of that people's dominion like a flood from these parts. So there is no people, that can be so reasonably understood here as the Turks, who were also understood there. chap. ix. 14. And this sixth vial, mentioning that river, hath a special relation to the sixth trumpet where it was mentioned before; for so the agreement betwixt the trumpets and vials requireth. Beside Euphrates was both the border of the Roman Empire and also of David's kingdom, though of and within neither, but rather an impediment to both; so it would seem that no people within the empire or Church are meant, though such enemies as border with both may be understood.

"The effect is, the waters thereof were dried up; that is, their dominion increased by their overflowing under the sixth trumpet; so now they decay and diminish and their empire is abridged by what mean the Lord knoweth—But these who seemed to be a great river that none could pass, now people may cross it, they are brought low; for if overflowing signify victory, as Isaiah viii 7, then drying up must signify diminishing as is said."

At the time that Mr Durham wrote, the Turks were the terror of Europe, and to those who formed their anticipation of the future according to political probabilities, nothing seemed more unlikely than the decay of their power. That Mr Durham fully felt this is evident from the exclamation, "By what mean the Lord knoweth." Without any bias from apparent probabilities, Mr Durham sought to ascertain what was the mind of God in this passage of His prophetic word, and, having discovered that, he announces it, believing that God would vindicate His own veracity, whatever seeming difficulties might stand in the way. The Turkish empire, as we before remarked, is now on the verge of dissolution; but we must request the reader to note how exactly the manner of its dissolution agrees with the prophecy.—The overwhelming flood has been gradually exhausted; its waters have been wasted by a gradual and almost imperceptible evaporation.

In 1699, the Turks lost by the treaty of Carlowitz, Hungary, Transylvania, save the town of Temeswar, also Azof, the [illegible], Podolia, and Dalmatia.

In 1718, by the treaty of Passarowitz, they lost Temeswar.

In 1771, they lost the Crimea.

In 1774, the independence of the Tartars of the Crimea, Bessarabia, and the Kuban was secured by the treaty of Kainardgi.

In 1784, they lost even the name of sovereignty in those provinces, by the treaty signed at Constantinople.

In 1812, by the treaty of Bucharest, Russia obtained all the fortified places on the left of the Danube, between Galatz and the Black Sea.

In 1815, Servia secured its real independence, on paying a mere nominal tribute.

In 1821, they lost Greece.

In 1829, the treaty of Adrianople secured the independence of Moldavia, Servia, and [illegible] authority [illegible]

[illegible] Algiers.

[illegible] Egypt [illegible] to Mehemet Ali [illegible]

And now in 1853, the inordinate ambition of the Emperor of Russia having seized the Danubian provinces, the Turks are involved in a wasting war which seems likely to terminate in the drying up of the remnant of their resources and the utter extinction of their empire.

Hence the state of affairs in the East reminds us that the time of the second and glorious advent of Christ is at hand, for, immediately after the drying up of the mystic Euphrates, we have the solemn warning, "Behold, I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame." Rev. xvi. 15.

The Sign of the Son of Man.

Matt. 24: 30—"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven."

I. Has the sign of the Son of Man appeared, or is it in the future? In the commencement of this chapter we learn that the "disciples came to Jesus for to show him the buildings of the temple. And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? Verily I say unto you, there shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." This prediction existed an interest in the minds of the disciples, and they embraced the first opportunity to question him in regard to its accomplishment. There are three distinct questions proposed by the disciples to the Saviour. 1st, "Tell us, when shall these things be?" Or in other words, When shall the prediction you have uttered be accomplished? 2d, What shall be the sign of thy coming?" 3d, "And of the end of the world?" Doubtless the desolation which Christ had predicted—his second coming, and the end of the world, were all connected in the minds of the disciples, and expected transpire at one and the same time. But the answer Christ gave to these questions has disconnected them. The first is expressly answered in Luke 21: 20, "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." The 2d and 3d are answered in Matt. 24 14, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Also vs. 21—26, The "great tribulation and the shortening of those days," succeeded by "false Christs, and false prophets." Also v. 29, The darkening of the sun and moon, and the falling of the stars, and the "shaking of the powers of the heavens;" (i. e. the powers that be, both civil and ecclesiastical, which is now going on. See Eph. 6: 2—Rom. 13: 1—8,—Heb. 12: 25—28.) "The sign of the Son of Man" must be in the future, as it is intimately connected with the second coming of Christ, and that event is still in the future.

II. Where is this sign to appear? "In heaven." But what is meant here by heaven? V. 31, "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Where is heaven, as brought to view in this verse? It is where the elect are. Where are the elect? The bodies of those who have died are in their graves, mingled with the dust of the earth. Christ says: "The wheat are the children of the kingdom. The field is the world. The reapers are the angels." The elect, then, are here. And of course heaven is here. And here is where the sign will "appear." And here let me remark, lest I be misunderstood, that the most common acceptation of the term heaven, is the atmosphere, or "firmament," that surrounds the earth, Gen. 1: 6—9. But this earth is, in many places designated as heaven.

III. What will constitute the sign of the Son of Man? If the Bible does not contain an answer to this question, then we must remain in ignorance of the matter until it does appear. But I think it does contain an explanation of the matter.—Isa. 8: 18, "Behold I, and the children whom the Lord hath given me, are for signs and for wonders in Israel from the Lord of hosts, which dwelleth in Mount Siam." "Behold I." Who is the speaker? Heb. 2: 13, "Behold I and the children which God hath given me." Thus Paul shows that Christ is the speaker. Luke 2: 34, "And Simeon said, Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel; and for a sign which shall be spoken against." How was Christ made "a sign and a wonder?" Matt. 12: 38—41, "Then certain of the Scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign from thee. But he answered and said unto them, An evil and an adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas."—But how could the sign, or type, of the prophet Jonas, who lived more than 800 years before, be given to that generation? Ans. By being fulfilled in the antitype.—V. 40, "For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." (See also Matt. 17: 22, 23. 20: 17—19.) John 2: 18—21, "Then answered the Jews and said unto him, What sign shewest thou unto us, seeing that thou doest these things? Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. V. 21, But he spoke of the temple of his body." The fact that Jesus was crucified, and buried, and that he rose again the third day, is abundantly proved by the Scriptures.

Now why does Christ call his burial and resurrection the sign, or type, of the prophet Jonah? He calls the antitype by the name of the type. Here, then, we have a key—let us apply it to our text, and see if it will unlock it. As Jonah's burial and resurrection were a sign or type of Christ's burial and resurrection, so Christ's burial and resurrection are a sign and sure pledge of the resurrection of his people.—And as the burial and resurrection of Christ are called "the sign of the prophet Jonah," so the resurrection of his people is called "the sign of the Son of man." And as Christ was made "a sign and a wonder" by his fulfilling the sign of the prophet Jonah, so, as his people are associated with him in the same prophecy, the conclusion is a fair one, that they will be made a sign and a wonder in the same manner. Or in other language, "Christ is the head"—"The Church the body." If the resurrection of the head was a sign and a wonder, so will the resurrection of the body be.—"Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." Rom. 8: 11. 1 Cor. 15: 12—23, His resurrection from the dead is the foundation of our hope.—1 Pet. 1: 3, 4, "Begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead."

It is also shadowed forth in the ordinance of baptism. As baptism is an emblem of Christ's burial and resurrection—and when the sinner dies to sin, he is to be buried in the likeness of Christ's burial, and raised in the likeness of Christ's resurrection, so it points forward to the consummation of our hope, when the church is to be made a sign and a wonder just as Christ her head was.

V. 31, then, is an explanation of our text. "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet; and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." It will be the "harvesting angels gathering the wheat into the barn." The angels will be seen—the sound of the trumpet heard—the saints will be seen rising from their graves—the living saints changed—and they will rise to meet the Lord in the air; "Then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn." This sign is not given to the Church to herald the coming of her Lord, for they are interested in the sign. But the wicked will see it, and they will know the day of God has come—the saints of God are taken and they are left, and then they will mourn. O what a day that will be! A day of separation—of eternal separation. The wicked may laugh and scoff at the signs that God has given to his Church to let her know that deliverance is at hand, but when this sign appears they will mourn. O may God prepare us for that glorious harvest. Amen.

Leviticus 26: 28.

"Then I will walk contrary unto you also in fury, and I, even I, will chastise you seven times, for your sins." I cannot believe that God has no other design, in the vision of the 4th of Daniel, than merely the humiliation of the King of Babylon, as it is a most striking illustration of the subversion and resitution of the kingdom of Israel, and also of the time, taking it prophetic. This long period of captivity as we understand it, is divided into two equal parts, one under the Gentiles and the other under Popery. We shall first notice the Gentiles, Luke 21: 24—"And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." This testimony proves two things: the first is, that the Gentiles have times of treading down; and the second is, that these times commenced before Popery had an existence. On this point, see Zechariah 1: 18, 19, 20, 21. In this passage there are four horns brought to view in the last verse; they are called the Gentiles. The work they do is to scatter Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem. The above shows that these Gentile powers were both scattering and treading down, before Popery was set up. But the time of their treading down is brought to view in Rev. 11: 2—"But the court which is without the temple, leave out, and measure it not, for it is given unto the Gentiles, and the holy city shall they tread under foot, forty and two months." The next verse gives the reign of Popery for 1260 days, during the sackcloth state of the church, making in all the seven times captivity. But some say that this first period belongs to Popery; if they can prove that the Gentiles means Popery, then it of course belongs there.

John is commanded in connection with the above passage, to measure the temple of God; but to leave out the court, which is without the temple. But why measure the temple? Because the treading down under the law, or temple worship, is finished: but the times of the Gentiles extended under the Gospel, even beyond the reign of Popery, as brought to view in Dan. 12: 7; in the finishing up of the times of the Gentiles, "to scatter the power of the holy people," when "all these things shall be finished." The next point is, where did this captivity commence?—I answer, it commenced with the captivity of Israel, not with Judah; for Judah remained a kingdom until the commencement of the seventy years captivity; and after that, the sceptre was to continue with Judah, until Christ came. We shall notice a few passages that speak of the captivity of Israel. I Kings, 14, 15, "For the Lord shall smite Israel as a reed is shaken in the water, and he shall root up Israel out of his good land, which he gave to their fathers, and shall scatter them beyond the river; because they have made their groves, provoking the Lord to anger."

We shall refer to another, to show the fulfilment of the above. II Kings 17: 22, 23, "For the children of Israel walked in all the sins of Jeroboam, which he did; they departed not from them until the Lord removed Israel out of his sight."—"As he had said, by all his servants the Prophets, so was Israel carried away out of their own land, to Assyria, unto this day." See Isaiah 10: 5; Ezekiel 21: 25, 26, 27. We might multiply texts on this point, but pass on to show its fulfilment. The kingdom of Israel was entirely carried away, and none left, in the 6th year of Hezekiah. See II Kings 18: 10. Hezekiah reigned 29 years; six from that would leave 23;

This brings the seven times to the first of the 2300 days, and will run parallel with them to the end. The next point is, did the commandment go forth here? In answering this question, it will be necessary to notice the claims that are made to the 7th and 20th years of Artaxerxes.—Ahasuerus, Xerxes and Artaxerxes are all the same in the original. It is a name used for those kings, such as the Ptolemies of Egypt, or the Georges of England; but what Artaxerxes does Usher say gave those two commands? We think it is the husband of Esther. But did the husband of Esther ever give a command to restore and build Jerusalem? We think not.—And here I would request the reader to lay aside all great names, and high-sounding titles, and come down to solid evidence in the matter; and not be like the pious Rollin, when a difficulty came up in chronology, he prefered in all such cases, to follow the learned Bishop Usher. We think Artaxerxes, the husband of Esther, never gave a command to "restore, and build Jerusalem." The first evidence we shall offer on this point, is from the books of Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther, the first two of which were attendants on the king; the one was his scribe, and the other his cup-bearer. It is not probable that Queen Esther (of their own nation, and through whom it is generally believed the favors shown to the Jews were granted,) should be entirely unnoticed by those men in their books; neither does she mention them in hers, or notice either of those commands. We have the same evidence on this point, in the Apocryphal writings. The next evidence is from Daniel 11: 3—"And now will I show thee the truth; behold there shall stand up yet three kings in Persia, and the fourth shall be far richer than they all, and by his strength, through his riches, he shall stir up all against the realm of Grecia." As the great burden of all these visions was time; and as the angel from the beginning, was still giving more light on this subject, there was only one point wanting to make all complete, namely: to know from what commandment the 2300 days were to be dated.—He has promised now, to show, we think, this truth. We would here ask why the angel refers Daniel to the third and fourth kings of Persia, and leaves out all the rest, until it was conquered by Alexander?—There can be but one reason, namely: to point out the two kings under whom the work was to be done. The king then reigning was Cyrus. The first after him was Cambyses, and the second Smerdis, and the third Darius, in the second year of whose reign the command went forth.—No one can dispute but that the fourth king was Xerxes, and he is the last that is noticed of the Persian Dynasty.

We remark respecting the first commandment, under Cyrus, that the Jews went forth with impurity, and the Lord blasted all their works and suffered their enemies to triumph over them. See Haggai. The next point is, the 7 weeks or 49 years, which must be for the accomplishment of this work. I have heard many statements about these 7 weeks being fulfilled in different ways, but I have never seen the proof that it was so. The last statement I have seen was that Nehemiah governed Judea 49 years. If the writer had told us where he got such information there might be some plausibility in the application; but as he gives no authority I suppose he had none. He must have considered Nehemiah quite an old man, as he was one of the captives carried out of Judea by Mebuchednezzar. See Neh. 7: 6, 7. We think that it is impossible to make any application of this 49 years except it is applied from the commencement of the work, which would give about that time. Darius reigned over thirty years and it was all finished about the 21st of Artaxerxes. The Jews said "46 years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days?" But some say that this command was not given to build the temple I think that the Sanctuary was a very important item in Daniels prayer, and it is also important in the restoring of Jerusalem. As it respects the building of "the walls and the streets in troublous times," all that can be claimed for a fulfilment of this, is the doing of the work in the 49 years given for that purpose. The next testimony on this point is from Josephus. We refer the reader to Ant. Book, 11, chap. 4, 5, 6. In these chapters the same arrangement is carried out; first, the command is given by Darius in his second year; second, by his son Xerxes, in his 7th and 20th year; and, third, the son of Xerxes, the husband of Esther, is spoken of in the 6th chapter, and not a word about such a command being given; nor is there a word about Ezra or Nehemiah. Who can suppose that Josephus would be mistaken in such a matter as this in relation to his own nation? We should suppose that every school boy in Judea would understand it. We think the point is established that Artaxerxes, the husband of Esther, never gave a command to restore and build Jerusalem; therefore the Chronology, based on this foundation, is worthless, and whoever will take the trouble to examine ancient History, on the reign of those kings, will find it confusing, and you might establish any Chronology you please. We will give one example: Usher gives Xerxes 12 years and many have followed him.—I have had a History that gave him 22 years. Josephus speaks of his 28th year. Nehemiah 5: 14, speaks of his 32d year; and this is only a sample of the Chronology of those times. But, says one, are there not different epochs established by Eclipses mentioned by Historians? I reply that such calculations are good for nothing, except the Historian would give the time in the year that such an Eclipse occurred, as there are Eclipses almost every year, and such a thing is hardly ever done in History. So far then as Chronology is concerned, it does not stand in the way of dating the going forth of the command, in the second year of Darius, and making a perfect harmony with the seven times captivity, and also with the seven weeks, or 49 years, for the accomplishment of the work.

The 2300 Days and seven times will now run parallel to the Cross, which will be 69 weeks "unto Messiah the Prince"; when God raised him up "a Prince and a Savior. It is believed by many that Christ was crucified in the 18th year of Tiberius Cæsar, A. D. 33. We will first examine the scriptures, as far as they give light, on this great event. The Saviour commenced his ministry in the 15th year of Tiberius Cæsar, when he began to be about 30 years old, which was the regular age, according to the law, to enter the Priest's office, Num. 4: 3, 23, 30. His ministry it is said lasted but 3 years, and if so the crucifixion would be in A. D. 33. But if his ministry continued seven years, the crucifixion would be in A. D. 37. We shall now offer some testimony to prove that it was in A. D. 37. Luke 23: 5th to the 12th inclusive:

"And they were the more fierce, saying, He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place.

When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the man was a Galilean.

And as soon as he knew that he belonged unto Herod's jurisdiction, he sent him to Herod, who himself also was at Jerusalem at that time.

And when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad: for he was desirous to see him of a long season, because he had heard many things of him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him.

Then he questioned with him in many words; but he answered him nothing.

And the chief priests and scribes stood and vehemently accused him.

And Herod with his men of war set him at nought, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe, and sent him again to Pilate.

And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together: for before they were at enmity between themselves."

There are three things worthy of notice in this passage. The first is, that Herod was desirous to see Jesus for a long time, hearing so much about him, and wished to see him perform a miracle. It is more than probable that this was the first time that he ever saw him. The second is, that Herod had no authority over a citizen of Judea, and it was only on account of its being said that Jesus was a Galilean that he had the privilege, with his men of war, to treat him with such contempt. From the above it seems that Herod was not often in Judea, because he had never seen Jesus, and he had no authority in Judea. But the third point worthy of notice, in this passage, is that Herod had his army in Jerusalem at the crucifixion, and he and Pilate were made friends. The next testimony is from Acts 4: 25–28:

"Who by the mouth of thy servant David hast said, Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things?

The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ.

For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together,

For to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done.

This passage proves that the rulers were gathered together at the Crucifixion, not only Pilate and Herod, but also the Gentiles. I should think that such an occurrence as this would seldom happen; and we find one, and only one, on the page of history, that fulfills all that is recorded in the above Scriptures; and I am satisfied that another cannot be found. We shall now refer to the circumstances that led to this event; they are found in Josephus, Ant. Book 18, chap. 5. Herod made an agreement with his brother Philip's wife, to take her and to put away his own wife, who was the daughter of Aretas, king of Arabia. In consequence of this, there was a declaration of war between Aretas and Herod; they both prepared their armies, and sent their generals to war, but took care they did not go themselves. The army of Aretas conquered; and the Jews thought it was a judgment on Herod for the murder of John the Baptist. After this, Herod wrote to Tiberius Cæsar, who was very angry at Aretas, and ordered Vitellius, the president of Syria, (who had the oversight of the provinces of Judea at that time,) to go with Herod and take Aretas alive, and send him to Rome, or to kill him, and send him his head. The armies advanced on their march, and when they came to Jerusalem, as Vitellius had the charge of the army, and not only so, but the oversight of all Judea, he ordered the army to march along the great plain, while he himself, with Herod the tetarch and his friends, stopped at Jerusalem, to offer sacrifices to God; (an ancient festival of the Jews, then just approaching.)—And when he had been honorably entertained by the multitude of the Jews for three days, he deprived Jonathan of the high priesthood and gave it to his brother, Theophilus. But on the fourth day, letters came to him which informed him of the death of Tiberius, and he ordered the multitude to take an oath of fidelity to Caius. He also recalled his army and sent them home to take their winter quarters; since upon the devolution of the empire upon Caius, he had not the same authority."—Let us examine this testimony with the Scriptures: The passage quoted from Luke, demands that Herod with his army should be in Jerusalem at the Crucifixion; and the passage in the Acts calls for the rulers to be gathered together against the Lord. Here we have Pontius Pilate and Herod, with the Gentiles, (that is Vitellius and his army,) and the people of Israel.—Let me here remark, that this event took place at the death of Tiberius Cæsar; and if this is not the time of the Crucifixion, then a similar event must have occurred a very short time before, and it is perfectly plain from history that no such event

The Seven Periods of Daniel's Vision of 2300 days: Dan. 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12th Chapters.

Continued.

I come now in view of the 5th, 6th and 7th Periods of the Vision; and in these I shall nearly follow brethren Couch and Berick. I have read their views, and I have seen reviews from the pens of others, but I must confess the latter fail to convince me, that the former are not in the main right. It is a part of history that I have not so fully investigated as many other facts, so that I shall not advance much that is original; but I must say, that at the time the Pope proposed and sanctioned bloodshed, of all those who rejected his communion and ritual, when he was put forward and supported by the Emperor; [illegible] ing; and I cannot but think the sixth Period was fulfilled in May, 1809. When the Italian dominions of the Pope were attached to the French Empire, and though it may be said the 1335 days will run out on the 17th of May next, as here arranged, and reckoned from 1809, still I think there must be time, for many things must be done: but a "short work will the Lord God make upon the earth" now; happy indeed is it for those virgins who have been slumbering and sleeping during this seemingly tarrying time, if they have arisen and trimmed their lamps, and are waiting for the bridegroom; for the final winding up of the whole vision, I do most surely believe, will take place in the first Jewish month of A. D. 1854, when the seventh [illegible]

[illegible] fice at the age of 30 years, by the Jewish law, is not the case. Aaron, the first high priest ever consecrated to God, was over 80 years of age at the time of his consecration, and I doubt not that each of his sons were more than half that number of years old before they were called to officiate as priests.

The Levites were sometimes required to be 30 years old before they were allowed to take the charge of the consecrated things, and perform the Temple-service; and sometimes they were no more than 25, but the number 30, in connexion with the priests, does not occur in the Bible, except what is said of the 30 pieces of silver, the price which they paid for "the blood of the Son of God." Some will object that [illegible]

[illegible] understanding to know and do his will, that at his appearing you may be ready to meet him with joy.

According to the foregoing Chronology it will be seen that the coming year will complete the six thousand years from the Creation, (viz.) 4146 before the birth of Christ, and 1854 after that event, added, make in all six thousand years, which will close our probationary state, and land us at "the Judgment seat of Christ." O, may "our loins be girded, and our lamps burning!"

In placing the captivity of Manasseh at B. C. 666, I shall doubtless receive censure from the "knowing ones," who will call it a daring assumption; I have only to say, that I always thought Manasseh [illegible]

[illegible] unto this day." Neh. 9: 32. "Here the Jews date their captivity and deprecate the mercy of God; and here it is evident the "Seven times," of their punishment begun of 2520 years, which will terminate at the end of 1854.

The great Jubilee, or forty-nine Jubilees, of 2450 years, has long since been dated, B. C. 606, or 7, in the fourth year of the reign of Jehoiakin. Why, I have never been able to learn, unless that was the last year of Jubilee, which the Jews as a nation, ever celebrated before their final departation to Babylon. But Inspiration is silent about the celebration of their Jubilees, and there is much more evidence that the second year of Zedekiah, was the last which they ever observed, before the captivity [illegible]

[illegible] rely on, for the truth of what is here expressed; and to recapitulate, I find five long periods that reach to the End. 1st, The six thousand years which begin and end it. 2d, "The seven times," or 2520 years, beginning with the captivity of Manasseh, B. C. 666. 3d, The forty-nine Jubilees, or 2450 years, beginning in the second year of Zedekiah, B. C. 596. 4th, The 2300 days of Daniel's vision, beginning with the going forth of the last commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, from Artexerxes, in his 20th year, B. C. 446; and the 5th, the 1335 days, at the end of which all the saints will have arrived home, beginning when the daily true worship of God is taken away and the abomination that maketh desolate [illegible] happened previous to this time. I have seen this testimony for some time past; but what prevented my receiving it was, that Josephus speaks of the change of the priesthood, from Jonathan to Theophilus, and as it was Caiaphas that was high-priest at the Crucifixion, this statement of Josephus would not agree with the Scriptures. In speaking of the charge that was brought against Pilate, of murdering some of the Samaritans, he says, that Vitellius was then at Jerusalem at the time of the feast, at which time he sent Pilate to Rome to answer the charge, "and before he got there Tiberius was dead." At this time, (which is evidently the same that he speaks of, in the following chapter) he says, "Vitellius deprived Caiphas of the high-priesthood and gave it to Jonathan;" but in Acts 4:6, "Just at the day of Pentecost, Annas is called the high-priest."—So that in place of its changing from Caiaphas to Jonathan, it must have changed to Annas, the father of Jonathan. So this chapter proves the same as the following, only in a different way.

Josephus places here the death of Tiberius Cæsar, and the change of the priesthood of Caiaphas, at the same time; and the Scriptures prove that Caiaphas was high-priest at the Crucifixion, and that he was out of office at the day of Pentecost. But perhaps some-will say, if Josephus is mistaken in the name of a priest, how can we believe anything else he says? I answer, that any candid person will see a difference between the movement of mighty armies and the cause of their return, and merely mistaking the name of a priest, we should suppose that the whole civilized world, as near the time as Josephus lived, would understand such an event as the former. We now come to the conclusion, that the Crucifixion was in A. D. 37; this is the end of 69 weeks, and one week remains for the confirming of the covenant. This covenant is the perfect law of love; it was introduced with the gift of the Holy Ghost, when "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus made us free from the law of sin and death."—Paul settles this question; he says that "a testament is of no force at all while the testator liveth;" and as the first covenant was dedicated with blood, so also must the second be. This last week brings us down to A. D. 44—if it commenced on the day of Pentecost, the seventy weeks end there; and if the seventy weeks end there, the other 1810 years will end at the same place—that is at the Jewish feast of Pentecost. We have now brought the seventy weeks, or 490 years, to the Pentecost of A. D. 44, take 490 from 2300 and we have 1810 left after A. D. 44, which will bring us to the Pentecost of A. D. 1854.

We have shown that the 220 years of the seven times were fulfilled "at the going forth of the commandment, to restore and build Jerusalem in the second year of Darius Hystaspes, and will run parallel with the 2300 days to the end of the world: the 490 end in A. D. 44. Popery is set up and continues 1260 years to 1779, from A. D. 519. This period wants 75 years to make up the years of the times of the Gentiles. This 75 years we get after the reign of Popery; to 1779 we add 75 years for the scattering of "the power of the holy people," when "all these things shall be finished," which brings us to A. D. 1854. Oh, may we get down into the dust at the Masters feet, and feel strong through his mighty arm.

FRANCE.

Important Declaration of the French Government.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times gives the text of a treaty of alliance, offensive and defensive, between England and France. It stipulates that Turkey shall not conclude any treaty of peace with Russia except with the consent of the two Powers; that they are not to derive any territorial advantages from the present war, and they have the liberty of sending an army of occupation to Constantinople. Of this army England is to furnish 30,000 and France 70,000 men, to be assembled there about the 1st of April. This large army will not probably remain idle at Constantinople, if war is going on at the Danube.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

A communication from Berlin, Feb. 22, says that the Czar has summoned Prince Patkiewitch to St. Petersburg, to assist him with his counsel. Another rhapsody has been published by authority, and circulated at St. Petersburg, in which the Emperor is apostrophized as the greatest man upon earth, before whom the vain Frenchmen and proud Englishmen bow. The latter are called a race of miserable pigmies, speaking big words, but white in the face with fear. All the sea and land forces of the Empire are to be called out.

The St. Petersburg military papers of Feb. 10, publish the report of General Wrangel, respecting an expedition against the Tschetchen, at the pass Chajkal. The report states that the mountaineers made a stubborn resistance, broke through the Russian line, took several prisoners, besides the Russian wagons and oxen, but were at length defeated with the loss of 300 men and 100 horses. The Russian loss was the customary "one Cossack"

The last accounts from the Black Sea, state that in consequence of orders received from St. Petersburg, the Russians had dispatched troops and amunition to Kaffa, where the authorities are occupied in placing the forts round the town in a state of defence. Theodosia, or Kaffa, is a maratime town in the Crimea, situate in a bay of the Black Sea. Its port is large and much frequented. It is situate at about 100 kilometers east of Simferopol, chief town of the Government of that country.

An order of the day has been published in St. Petersburg, commanding that 12 frigates and corvettes shall be prepared for sea at the breaking up of the ice, and appointing the officers to command them.

From the fronties of Poland we learn that the troops in the Russian fortresses in that kingdom have been marched to the seat of war, and their place supplied by Cossacks.

The combined fleets are still at Beicos, where they await an order from their Governments explanatory of the instructions forwarded to the ambassadors, who differ from the Admirals as to the purport of those instructions

Some eminent Israelites at Adrianople have raised a free corps of their brethren The Sultan has accepted the services of its members, and presented to it two banners, one of which bears three golden fishes, ond the other a silver crescent.

A private dispatch, dated Bucharest, Feb. 17, states that everything indicates the imminence of an important movement. Troops are concentrated in great numbers by the Russians at Giurgevo and Oltenitza, and by the Turks at Rustchuk and Turtukai, as if a passage of the Danube were intended or expected.

Krajova, Feb. 12.—Both Russians and Turks are receiving large reinforcements. Skirmishes are becoming frequent, the Turks harassing the blockaders at all points At Bucharest it was announced on the 8th, in the Russian paper, that the Turks were completely shut up in Kalafat.

Orsova, Feb. 12.—The garrisons of Belgrade, Uziza and Tokol have received reinforcements of Turkish infantry to the number of 6,500 men.

Bucharest, Feb. 12.—In the skirmishes on the left bank of the Danube since the 3d, the Russians had 800 killed and 1,600 wounded.

Accounts received from Wallachia show that important events are anticipated in the Danubian Provinces. Every preparation was being made for a great battle. Letters from Krajova, of the 10th inst., state that the march of Russian troops towards Kalafat was incessant. Gen. Gortschakoff had held several inspections of troops at Giurgevo and Oltenitza, where large bodies were being concentrated. Gen. Schilder had made similar preparations opposite Rustchuk, and Gen. Luders was preparing to operate on the Lower Danube. The troops which arrived in Bessarabia from Moscow had been sent forward to Kilia and Ismail.

Letters from St. Petersburg of the 10th state that a financial crisis prevails in that city. Money has become extremely scarce and most of the transactions have been adjourned. Trade is completely paralyzed. Nothing but paper is seen, and the principal houses avoid engaging in important operations. War is considered to be inevitable; it is, however, anything but popular in that capital. The best troops have been marched to the seaports, where immense quantities of munitions of war are being accumulated. If a collision takes place it will be terrible and decisive, for Russia is displaying all her resources. A forced loan is contemplated. Foreigners are quitting St. Petersburg and Moscow en masse. In this last city the war party is predominant, not among the upper classes, but among the people. The Czar is greatly esteemed by the multitude, who have been persuaded that the Anglo-French are determined to destroy the Greek religion and the maritime prosperity of the empire. Enlistments are easily effected; provisions are everywhere abundant, but arms and uniforms will soon be exhausted in the Government stores.

The London Times gives the following apparently authentic account of the loss of the Russians at the battle of Citale:

Killed—1 General, 5 Colonels, 4 Majors, 3,000 subalterns and soldiers. Missing—1 Colonel. Wounded—2 Colonels, 8 Majors, Subalterns and men severely wounded, 180 wagon loads. The lightly wounded had to go on foot to Krajova.

The Turks had 300 killed and 700 wounded. The Turkish artillery was directed with fatal precision, and one Russian regiment was nearly annihilated.

The Four Monarchies.

BY S. S. BREWER.

By Babel's streams, in lavish chains,
The Hebrew captive stood,
His heart was big with grief and pain,
And pensive was his mood,
Come, sing a song of Zion now,
And wipe the moisture from thy brow.

A holy, just, and faithful God,
Has marked th' Assyrian's pride;
In seventy years the righteous rod
In wrath shall be applied.
Thy king 'midst revelry shall fall—
God's judgment shall all hearts appal.

The time rolled on; in haughty pride
Babel's first monarch stands;
"These princely halls," he boasting cried,
"I've built by my own hands"
A voice from heaven announced his doom—
"Go forth from men with beasts to roam."

His son Belshazzar comes to reign,
And makes an impious feast,
Invites the great, of lordly men,
The banquet rich to taste.
The sacred vessels quickly bring—
Drink to his gods, and to the king!

The time is out; a phantom hand
Wrote over on the wall;
Behold the king in horror stand!—
The monarch doomed to fall.
That night was proud Belshazzar slain,
And Persia's prince began his reign.

Proud head of gold! thy sun is down,
Thy pomp and pride are o'er;
Media and Persia wear the crown
Thy monarch lately wore.
The breast and arms of silver now
Receive the crown from Babel's brow.

The brazen kingdom, next in train
Of cruelty and pride,
Maintains a short and bloody reign,
Then lays the crown aside.
Thus three great powers did pass away,
Succeeded by the iron and clay.

Next comes the iron, of cruel forms,
With strength exceeding great,
With seven heads and ten crowned horns,
One stouter than his mates
His time, times, and a half are fled,
God's judgments hang just o'er his head.

Pope, cardinal, and bishop, all—
Inquisitors, nuns, and friars,
In one dread day shall swiftly fall
Before the gathering ire.
God's magazines, with fury red,
Shall play in vengeance on thy head.

Two woes are past, the third is near,
It trembles o'er our head;
The great I Am will soon appear,
To judge the quick and dead.
Gold, silver, brass, the iron, and clay,
Like summer chaff shall pass away.

Mens' hearts, alas! begin to fail,
And mighty men to wake,
The war cry floats on every gale,
The thrones of monarchs shake—
Revenge—revenge, the oppressed cry,
Revenge—revenge—let despots die.

Deep, muttering tones of fiery wrath
Come booming from afar;
Earth's legions now are in the path
For Armageddon's war.
That day of wrath! O who shall stand?
O, place me, Lord, at thy right hand!

From the Puritan Recorder.

Letter from a Missionary.

ERZROOM, December 22, 1853.

Messrs. Editors:—The war has been the all absorbing topic of interest during the great part of the past year, especially of late. The army began to collect here in June, and continued to increase until war was declared, when the troops came in still more rapidly, till they numbered between 60,000 and 70,000, including a large number of irregular soldiers. As soon as war appeared inevitable, a large proportion of the army, then here, removed to the frontier. About 45,000 formed a camp at Kars, and 15,000 at Ardahan, a small force was sent to Bayazid, and 4,000 remained in our city. Upon war being declared, the forces stationed at Kars and Ardahan, entered the Russian territory, the former near Gumri, the latter at Akhaltskhah, or Akissar. At Gumri the Russians have a very strong fort, which at the commencement of hostilities, contained only 8,000 men. The portion of the Turkish army near that city had some skirmishes with the enemy, attended with a degree of success, but characterized by much barbarity, such as cutting off heads, kicking the bodies about the streets, &c. The irregulars plundered several villages, committing numerous atrocities, barbarously murdering women and children and taking many of the inoffensive villagers prisoners, some of whom they brought to Erzroom. The fort at Akissar contained only 2,000 or 3,000 Russians. The Turks made an attempt to take this fort, and from the reports at first received from each of the divisions of the Turkish army, it appeared they were about to sweep all before them, and, perhaps, take possession of all Georgia.

But it was soon evident that the accounts of their success had been most grossly exaggerated. After dallying for some weeks, and allowing the Russians at Gumri considerably to increase their force, the latter came out against the Turks, drove them from their territory and soon after they came to a bloody engagement. The Turks drew up their forces, in a long line, in a narrow valley, while the Russians took possession of the elevated land overlooking it and poured down their cannon balls and bullets upon them, and with their shells exploded many of their powder casks, producing such havoc among them that as a last resort, the Turks rushed upon their enemies and with their bayonets, swords, daggers, &c., effected all in their power. In this way, it is said, one old Moollah killed four Russians, but was afterwards killed himself. This massacre was continued untill evening, when the Turks becoming weary of it fled, leaving all their provisions, amunition, clothing, and 17 cannon on the field, which were of course, all seized by the Russians. There was great destruction of life on both sides. The Russians lost their General. The commander in chief of the Turks has rendered himself perfectly detestable to his soldiers, officers, and all interested in their sucess, by his indolence, indifference, and obstinacy. He took no part in the battle, and has made no efficient efforts to accomplish any thing. While his officers would plead with him to listen to advice, act, &c., he would make no answer whatever, but continue to smoke and fumble his beads.

At Akissar the case was still worse. The Turks had every advantage, having a force of 15,000, while the Russians had only 2,000 or 3,000; but on the firing of the first gun, the commander of the Turks fled, and this produced such complete confusion in the ranks, that only two or three battalions fought at all and they were terribly cut to pieces.

The commander, having witdrawn several miles from the battle ground, halted, and upon some of his fleeing soldiers coming up with him, he sternly, demanded, "Why are you here?" They replied, "What is more natural than that the members of the body should follow their head?" Upon this, he drew out his pistols and shot two of them, killing them upon the spot. This outrageous act so enraged the army, when it reached their ears, that they would have massacred their general; had it not been for the interposition of the Pasha of Erzroom, who was present, being engaged as commander of the volunteers. The Camp at Ardahan has been broken up, and all the soldiers returned to Erzroom. Although a large Turkish force remains, at Kars, no one doubts that the Russians could make their way to Erzroom without any serious resistance. These disgraceful defeats have dispirited the soldiers, though all unite in the opinion that they would have done good service, were it not for the insufficiency and cowardice of their officers.

What effect these, and the terrible disasters the Turks have experienced upon the Black Sea, of which you will have heard before this reaches you, will have upon them, who can tell? The deeply marked silence among them may betoken that they are humbled, or it may be ominous of a dreadful outbreak of fanaticism, in consequence of their having looked to infidel nations for assistance, instead of relying implicitly upon their Allah, who is punishing them for their distrust of him; or, desponding of the promised assistance from those whom they call their perfidious friends, who instead of hastening to their help, stand to see them cut to pieces by their foes, they may give vent to their wrath, which not a few are evidently nursing, as appears from the occasional threats uttered against England and France, the consequence of which might be most terrific to all in this country not of their faith. The Lord avert such a catastrophe.

The Greeks and Armenians have been in a state of great excitement and fear since the commencement of the war. On the first appearance of the troops here they buried most of their valuables, believing that they were liable at any moment to be pillaged by the Turks, while, in respect to their lives, they are evidently in constant fear. The slightest rumors fill them with consternation, their shops are closed and they flee when no man pursueth them And they have reason for the most serious apprehensions, as their imprudence is equal to their fears. They have said and done many things adapted to exasperate the Turks, who are naturally very suspicious of them, well remembering how the Armenians insulted them, when the Russians came here, in the last war, going so far as to place a dead dog before one of their Mosques, when the worshippers came out, exultingly exclaiming, "Behold your Prophet!" Among both of these classes of Christians the Turks have spies, dressed in the Greek and Armenian costumes. So infatuated are the Armenians, that upon receiving the intelligence of the dreadful disasters the Turks have met with upon the Black sea they could not refrain from making, in their church, a sacrifice as a thank offering. This greatly incensed the Mussulmans and made the Armenian Bishop much trouble. He was repeatedly called before the Pasha, and to allay the excitement he undertook to curse the sacrifice; making probably some mental reservation.

Although our city has not, as yet, been the scene of bloodshed, we have seen enough to make our hearts sicken at the horrors of war. Troops that went out gaily to the sound of music, have returned thinned in numbers, silent and dispirited. The noble horse is returned without its rider, and soldiers, wounded and mutilated are brought back on carts, of which forty arrived here last week, to eke out a miserable existence which they vainly wish had been terminated on the battle field. Surely such sights as these should lead us to pray more fervently that the reign of the prince of peace may be established.

Yours truly,
J. PEABODY.

Bro. Merriam:—I find the following in the Boston Post of last Saturday, under the head of European news. J. W.

THE END OF THE WORLD. Rev. Oulding Field is lecturing in Liverpool, and trying to prove that we are in the last stages of the world's journey; from the signs of the times, as unfolded in the events of the day.

Instead of the expected Niagara, there arrived this week one of the auxiliary propellers. The regular lines are chartered to convey the troops to the seat of war.—For once in a long series of historic blunders, the good genius of Great Britain interposes. France and England will fight side by side instead of front to front, and the boldest hearts that ever beat beneath steel cuirass will vie with the coolest and firmest heads that ever kept their firmness amid the tumult and terror of a doubtful field. We look upon the war as now declared. It is doubtful whether these troops can reach the Danube before its passage is forced. It is probable from the concentration of the Russian troops upon Kalafat, that the attack will be made there; and if the passage of the river is accomplished, the next movement will be upon the pass of the Balkan, known as the "Gate of Trojan." The allied forces may yet be in time to assist at this second line of defence, and to cover Constantinople.

The naval superiority of the allies in the Black Sea is a sufficient reason for Russia to make the attempt at Kalafat rather than at Ismail or any point near the coast.—The attack on Kalafat will be a bloody one, undoubtedly, and we have great fears that it may be successful. Seventy thousand troops, and those troops Russian, are no contemptible enemy. But as we have said the passage of the river is not a decisive step. It is of course more difficult to guard a wide extended frontier than to cross it. The attacking party has all the advantage of concentration and the choice of place. But after the Danube is passed, the range of the Balkan lies between, as the line of reserve, and that can only be passed at five or six easily defended points. Here will be the real seat of war. Russia will gain little by the mere possession of the Principalities, swampy, and thinly peopled steppes as they are, the point aimed at is the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles. The great swelling lake of Muscovite civilization is seeking an outlet. The political engineering of the rest of the world is interested in propping up this tottering down of the Turkish Empire, to keep back the devastating waters within their due bounds. While we write the Imperial artillery may be breaching the ramparts of Kalafat, and we wait with a feverish impatience for further news.—[New Bedford Mercury.

WILLIAMSTOWN, March 1st '54.

Bro Merriam:—By the stand you have taken I conclude that you belong to my Father's family, and are bound for the same home. When I see how the Lord is working, in this midnight cry; how he opens the way for it to go, and the means he makes use of, I can but exclaim, "It is the Lord." When he wishes to have his word go, man cannot hinder; but it will accomplish that which he pleases. O what a privilege, to be used by the Lord in giving this last warning, and sharing in his reproach. Everything preaches to the watching one, we are almost home. My confidence every day increases, and I feel like going steadily forward, though it be to "the borders of the Red Sea," which the arm of the Lord divided "to make a way for the ransomed of the Lord to pass." Our Father provides for us, and every day presents fresh tokens of his love. In a little while the work will be done, and faith will find its great reward.

M. H. THAYER.

For the World's Crisis.

It seems very strange that the people who are willing to be called Adventists will oppose the time of Christ's coming, even without examination of the argument!—"There is nothing in it," "there can be no confidence in the chronology of the Bible," they say. Ah! they are too much engaged in the world, they have no time to investigate. "But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, my Lord delayeth his coming," he need not oppose in word or action, but how many will not even go to hear where time is preached. Be assured if Christ ever comes, time will be preached before his coming, the midnight cry will be heard; and there will be only a few that will believe. Awake! O sleeper, behold he cometh. LUCILLA.

☞ Some idea of the state of the Russo-Greek church may be formed from the fact, that "as drunk as a Priest," is, in Russia, a popular saying to describe the most disgusting state of intoxication.

The Heavenly Footman.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

"Footman, in the heavenly race—Fellow-sinner, (saved by grace,
If thou hast indeed begun
In the heavenly way to run)—
Many a cloud will gather o'er thee,
Many a trial lies before thee,
Many a wild along the way,
Waits to tempt thy foot astray;
Many a foe will seem thy friend,
Many a fear thy steps attend;
Many a hill, whose rugged road
Will not let thee bear thy load,
Save the inseparable cross,
Thou must climb and leave thy dross.
But there waiteth, at the end,
Such a home, and such a friend,
Such a crown, and such a throne;
Such a harp of heavenly tone,
Such companions, such employ,
Such a world of hallowed joy!

And thou hast along the way,
Many a promise for thy stay;
Strength and comfort from above,
Heavenly hope, and heavenly love!
Footman, speed thy heavenward pace,
Trust in God, and win the race."

"Remember Lot's Wife."

(Concluded.)

There has not been a time since the first Advent of the Savior, when so many have professed to love God as at present; and yet vital piety is, comparatively speaking a rare thing. The great mass have departed from the simplicity of the gospel, and the love of many has waxed cold.

Verses 26, 27: "And as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark; and the flood came, and destroyed them all." Verses 28, 29: "Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded: But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all." The foregoing scriptures forever preclude the idea of the conversion of the world, before the end of time. In the first case referred to, only eight persons were saved. Noah labored for the space of one hundred and twenty years, not simply in constructing the ark, but also in warning the world. The apostle declares him to have been a preacher of righteousness. Notwithstanding the little success that he met with in convincing the antediluvians of the approaching deluge, yet being patient and faithful in the work assigned him, he secured the approbation of Jehovah; and it is written, "Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord." The Almighty favored him because of his character; "Thee have I seen righteous before me in this generation," is the confession, so to speak, of the Lord. By being a holy man he learned, not only that the flood was coming, but also the time of its occurrence. His knowledge being of a practical character, it saved him, while those who despised the knowledge of the Most High, were taken in the snare. The one knew when the flood was coming, and prepared himself for the emergency; the others not knowing, "the flood came and took them all"—all that knew not—"away."

So it was in the days of Lot, and so it will be in the day when the Son of Man shall come. In the case of Noah and Lot, the principle referred to by the wise man was completely developed. He says,—"Whoso keepeth the commandment shall feel no evil thing; and a wise man's heart discovereth both time and judgment. Because to every purpose there is time and judgment." Again: "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him." God never brings evil upon the world to any great extent, without first informing his children of His design. "Surely, the Lord God will do nothing but He revealeth His secret to His servants the prophets." In Daniel we read: "The wise shall understand." This is spoken in reference to the event and time of his second coming. And in this very connection is presented a parallel to the days of Noah and Lot. He says: "The wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." This was the case in the days of Noah and Lot; and the Saviour says: "Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed."

Verse 31—"In that day, he which shall be upon the house-top, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away: and he which is in the field, let him likewise not return back." The above is to have its fulfilment in connection with the coming of the Saviour. There is a striking analogy between the events of Noah and Lot's time, and the coming of Jesus Christ. As it was in the days that were before the flood, "even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed." The antediluvians eat and drank, married wives and were given in marriage; the inhabitants of the cities of the plain planted, builded, bought and sold, till the day that Lot went out of Sodom. "Even thus shall it be," that is, that generation of mankind living at the Second Advent of our Lord, will be equally insensate to their eternal welfare, as were the antediluvians and Sodomites; and as Lot had to leave house, property and friends, and escape to the mountain to secure salvation, "even thus shall it be" at or before the coming of the Saviour. This is pointed out by the Saviour in the parable of the ten virgins. He says: "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."—The church of God must, before the Saviour comes, occupy a position analagous to that of Noah when he entered the ark, and of Lot when he left the cities of the plain. God's people will not be engaged in speculation, and immersed in the spirit of the world when the Saviour comes.—The Lord has warned his people against it. He says: "And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." "Let him likewise not return back. Remember Lot's wife." His admonition is applicable to the people of God who are, and have been, identified in the great movement of going forth to meet the bridegroom. It was when the church was dreaming of pleasures to come, that the proclamation was heard, "Fear God and give glory to him for the hour of his judgment is come:" suddenly both wise and foolish took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom; but while he tarried, they all slumbered and slept. From this time was fulfilled the tarrying of the vision; the virgins slumbered, their lights became dim the darkness of night had enveloped them within its folds, deep sleep had now fallen upon them, and in the silence of midnight, just as they were about to enter upon the third watch, an OUTCRY is heard, "BEHOLD, THE BRIDEGROOM COMETH, GO YE OUT TO MEET HIM. Then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps."

It was needful that the Church should be warned, she was in danger—INFINITE DANGER; slumbering upon the last inch of time. It was at this point that God extended his mercy, and aroused her from her slumbers; now, or from this time and onward, the just man shall live by faith, "but if ANY man DRAW BACK, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." Draw back from what? Ans. From the position he occupies after he has been aroused from sleep. He is to live by faith—faith in the coming of the Lord; yea, faith in the time of his coming. If any man draw back! O how fearful this work of back-sliding from the faith of Christ's immediate coming! No marvel that the Saviour says, "Remember Lot's wife." The analogy between Lot's wife, and those who now turn back must be evident, it seems to me, to every mind. Lot's wife was exposed to danger, and God extended the warning to her likewise; in this case the Lord has been merciful; those persons who, like Lot's wife, have turned back, have had the warning. God has concentrated the light of six thousand years upon this generation; the last points of his economy are being developed, the jots and tittles are now receiving their accomplishment; the nations are making ready for the final conflict; everything betokens the coming storm; and if men, amid all these signs of the approaching end of all things, this "upheaving of the political elements," this concentration of heavenly light, the "consummation of all prophetic declaration," and, in a word, this complete fulfilment of the word of God, if men—"any man," no matter who he is, draw back, "my soul shall have no pleasure in him." Bear in mind, thou unstable soul, that the great separation day is just before thee. O how those words of Christ weigh upon my mind, "One shall be taken and the other left."

No matter what plea you may urge for drawing back, remember that "whosoever shall seek to save his life, shall loose it."—Let me urge upon you the necessity of a full consecration of all you have and are to God; keep before your mind the great fact of Christ's speedy coming, and if you are in the precincts of mystical Babylon the great, or in any of the smaller Babylons, tarry not in all the plain, escape to the mountain. REMEMBER LOT'S WIFE.

BEAUTIES OF ROMANISM. A correspondent of the Oberlin Evangelist, residing in Iowa, writes:—"A man died out here who was a Catholic. His wife sent a boy forty or fifty miles for a priest to pray him out of purgatory. The priest came and charged $75 for his prayer. The family is poor. The boy froze his feet and legs and is a cripple in consequence."

Foreign News.

LATER FROM EUROPE. The Asia arrived at Halifax yesterday, with three days later intelligence—dates to the 25th ult.—and accounts of important political developments.

No military or naval action has occurred since our last advices, but political events of the highest importance are becoming developed. A significant announcement appears in the Paris Moniteur saying: "If the flags of France and Austria are united in the east, France will not permit any attempt to separate them beyond the Alps." This is regarded as an encouragement for Austria to declare herself on the side of the allies, and a threat to raise Italy and Hungary if she sides with Russia. The same announcement says that France cannot suffer the integrity of the Ottoman empire to be broken by aggressive acts from Greece; and further—"France discountenances the present attempt at revolution anywhere."

Austria, though vacillating, is becoming more and more favorable to the allies. It was even said that she had announced her intention of formally joining with the allies if Russia continues her aggressive acts against Turkey.—This probably is a premature announcement, but it gave a firmness to the funds. At the same time Austria continues sending troops to the southeastern frontier, but to allay apprehension a manifesto is about to appear stating that Austria continues her efforts in favor of peace, and that the troops are merely to prevent disturbances spreading to Servia, Montenegro and Bosnia. The attitude of Prussia remains unchanged and unexplained.

It is reported that a manifesto, agreed to by France and England, having all the force of a formal declaration of war, will appear in a few days in the Moniteur; and it was rumored that England has sent a final announcement to the czar, naming a definite time within which he must evacuate the principalities.

The Greek insurrection has become formidable in Epirus. The insurgents have taken the town of Arta and besieged the Turks in the citadel. 3000 insurgents were within ten miles of Yanina, Albania. A detachment of Greek regular troops have gone over to the insurgents.

Bands of armed Albanians go from village to village arousing the people and distributing arms gratis. Inflammatory placards are being circulated. The Greek government is apathetic and powerless.

Disturbances have broken out in Asia Minor, and conflicts had occurred at Kutaiah, Angora, and Scalanovel, but are now suppressed.—Throughout Greece great excitement prevailed, and disturbances had broken out in the Ionian Islands.

England has formally notified Russia of her intention to send a fleet into the Baltic.—Admiral Sir Charles Napier, who has been appointed to the command of the fleet in the Baltic, has been ordered to fit for sea. English ships are surveying the entrance to the Baltic.

The allied fleets remain in the Bosphorus, with cruisers in the Black Sea. Five additional French ships of the line are to join them.

The reported destruction of seven Turkish ships was an exaggeration. A Russian battery of 12 guns opposite Rutschuck damaged some Turkish vessels in the river—hence the report.

Great secrecy is observed in the movements of the French expeditionary force, but it is known that two divisions leave Toulon and Algiers under Generals Viney Autemarra, De Herville Bonet, and Espinazy. Gen. Dallonville will command a brigade of cavalry, and Prince Napoleon a brigade of cavalry reserve.

Prince George of Cambridge will command the English cavalry under Lord Raglan.

The embarkation of men and horses continues from the channel ports. The temper of the British people in favor of war is excellent.

From the Danube accounts represent both parties preparing for a great battle. The Russians have failed in their attempt to turn Omar Pacha's position.

An insurrection has occurred against the Egyptian rule in the provinces laying beyond the cataracts of the Nile.

Latest accounts from Persia state that the shah has officially announced to the foreign representatives that he will remain neutral in this war.

England.—Lord Palmerston, in answer to a question, replied that Smith O'Brien, having acted as a gentleman in refusing to escape at the expense of breaking his parole, is to be placed by an act of clemency in the same situation as other persons have placed themselves in by a violation of the pledges they had given. Mr Buchanan was present at the queen's levee. The new reform bill proposes to give parliamentary representation to all towns having over 16,000 inhabitants.

France.—It is reported that Messrs Rothschild and the Bank of France will advance two hundred millions of francs in 3's. at 64 10.—Forty arrests were made in Paris, caused by an intended demonstration on the 24th, being the anniversary of the republic.

An official note of M. Drouyn De L'Huys says that the recent mission of Prince Napoleon to Belgium had no political object.

The tone of the German press is becoming more adverse to Russian views.

An alliance, offensive and defensive, between France and Switzerland, is believed to have been concluded, thus enabling France to operate on Austria or Italy.

•Food riots continue in the Roman states.

STILL LATER FROM EUROPE. By the Atlantic at New York yesterday, we have three days later news from Europe—dates to the 22d ult.—accounts of immense preparations for war—of the departure of troops for the seat of war—of the movements of the Turks—and of an important debate in the British Parliament.

The Moniteur announces that the Czar of Russia's letter from St. Petersburg, arrived in Paris on the 18th of February, and that the Emperor Nicholas does not accepr the proposal for arrangements which was presented to him. The Moniteur adds the reply leaves no chance for a pacific solution.

Troops were embarking on the day the Atlantic sailed, from Liverpool, Dublin and Southampton, and ships were fitting with great rapidity at all the ports for the Baltic fleet.

French troops were embarking from Africa for Turkey. There is nothing new from the Danube. Omar Pacha was strengthening his position at Kalafat. The Turkish reserves were advancing to Widden and Oltenitza and the camp at Shumla had been broken up. At Constantinople fortifications were being erected.—The health of the Turkish army and fleet were excellent. Six thousand men and twenty four ships left Constantinople on the 7th of February, under the escort of eleven British war steamers.

It was reported that when the French and English troops should arrive in Turkey, a measure will be proposed by the Sultan to the Divan to give the Christians and Moslems equal civic rights. The rumor is, however, doubtful.

An important debate in the British Parliament had taken place on the Turkish question, and navy supplies had been voted. The Queen has issued a proclamation forbidding the exportation of arms, ammunition, and marine engines, or parts thereof. On an explanation in Parliament being asked, the government stated that machinery will be allowed to be sent to friendly nations.

A dreadful colliery explosion had taken place at Ince Hall near Wegan, by which 100 men were killed.

The Lord Chamberlain has notified Mr Buchanan that he may henceforth appear at Court in any costume he likes.

The King of Naples was attempting to form a general Italian league.

Albania. The signs of insurrection in Albania are only the commencement of an extensive plan of operations, which only await a suitable opportunity to be carried into execution. It is clear that the support to be given by England and France to the Turkish Government is made to depend on the extension of equal civil rights to the Christian subjects of the Porte, and the Times would most deeply deplore at this moment an outbreak of the Christian races, which would be regarded as a diversion in favor of Russia, and might be fomented by Russian agents for that purpose, but it may be hoped that the presence of French and English forces in the Ottoman Territory will be received by the Christian races as the surest pressage of their emancipation.

England.—The preparations for war are still going forward on the grandest scale. The fleet for the Baltic is to consist of 30 vessels, comprising 15 ships of the line, 4 regular screw steamers, and 11 heavy frigates, with a total of 1810 guns. Among the number are five three-deckers, (two of them screw propellers) carrying from 100 to 130 guns, five ninety guns, three eighties, two seventies and four sixties. Twenty-three out of thirty vessels are also provided with auxiliary steam power. The apprehensions with regard to obtaining crews have moreover been fully cleared up. Volunteers are coming forward in all directions, and the same spirit is also observable in the army.

The Times retains the conviction that the present condition and future movements of the Christian population of Turkey are the most serious parts of the question in which we have engaged, and is satisfied that a wide spread combination is in existence for the purpose of asserting the national and spiritual rights of the various Christian races who still live under Mahometan laws.

Prayer.

On the subject of the duty and privilege of prayer, it may be remarked that it is not good to follow any regular form; but rather to follow the dictates of desires, and a sense of duty at the time. Long prayers are seldom expedient. It is mockery to use petitions in prayer without a corresponding desire of the heart. Very loud prayers, except in large congregations, are inconsistent with the knowledge and a proper sense of the omnipresence of God. Some pray as though they supposed the Lord to be a great way off: and themselves may be supposed to be a great way off from the true knowledge of God. Some pray with an excess of resignation, in which case their prayers amount to nothing more than a request that the Lord will do as he pleases; or do what is right; but such prayer is needless. It is recorded that Jesus said in one of his prayers "not as I will, but as thou wilt:" but this does not prove that Christians should never pray positively and confidently. It is better for a confiding Christian to ask for what he needs and what he desires, and believe that God will grant his requests, however inconsistent with apparent prospects. It is a pointed commandment, that when people pray, they should believe that they will receive the things asked for. The worst thing I have seen in the writings of Rowland Hill, is the ridiculing the prayer of a poor washerwoman, who had prayed "that the clouds might be removed that the sun might shine to dry her washed clothes." Now it is probable that the poor woman was so circumstanced that the sustenance of her children depended apparently upon her pay for washing, which she could not obtain until the clothes were dry and returned; and there could be no impropriety in such prayer; for the Lord, who rules all circumstances, would have pre-arranged that the peculiar circumstances should induce the woman thus to pray, just at the time that general circumstances should require the removal of the clouds.

If the friends of any person are sick or in danger, it is the privilege of that person to ask, positively and believing, for their recovery or preservation, and the prayer will certainly be answered. But let praying persons beware of asking for things for the gratification of their pride, covetousness, or other carnal propensities or desires; for the answers of such may be injurious—a curse rather than a blessing.

The following examples of prayer from the scriptures show what desires we should especialy cherish:

"Teach me thy way, O Lord, and lead me in a plain path."

"Lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness, because of mine enemies: make thy way straight before my face."

"Be pleased, O Lord, to deliver me; O Lord, make haste to help me."

"Show me thy ways, O Lord, teach me thy paths; lead me in thy truth, and teach me."

"O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me."

"Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me."

"Teach me thy way, O Lord; I will walk in thy truth: unite my heart to fear thy name."

"Show me a token for good."

"Remember me O Lord, with the favor that thou bearest unto thy people. O visit me with thy salvation, that I may see the good of thy chosen; * * that I may glory with thine inheritance."

"O that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes."

"O let me not wander from thy commandments." "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law."

"Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes, and I shall keep thy law." "make me to go in the path of thy commandments." "Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity, and quicken thou me in thy way." "Quicken thou me in thy righteousness." "Teach me good judgment and knowledge." "Quicken me after thy loving-kindness; so shall I keep the testimony of thy mouth." "Give me understanding, that I may know thy testimonies." "Look thou upon me, and be merciful unto me, as thou usest to do unto those that love thy name." "Order my steps in thy word, and let not any iniquity have dominion over me." "Make thy face to shine upon thy servant, and teach me thy statutes." "Plead my cause, and deliver me; quicken me according to thy word."

"Cause me to know the way wherein I should walk."

"Teach me to do thy will, for thou art my God. Thy Spirit is good: lead me into the land of uprightness."

"Remove far from me vanity and lies; give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me."

"Save thy people, and bless their inheritance."

Extracts from Letters.

BUCHANAN, Feb. 20th, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—Not more welcome is cool water to a thirsty soul than the Crisis was to me. It is just such a paper as I have been wishing for. I am glad you had it in your heart to send it to me. The Lord bless and preserve you till He comes to deliver His children. I believe it will be soon. My heart says, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly" I feel that I am a pilgrim and a stranger. When every earthly tie is loosed, each earthly staff is broken, the fond heart is sorely bruised by disappointment's stroke—when every flower of hope is laid upon the blighted sod—there is an ark of refuge for those who trust in God. But soon shall the pictured scenes in brighter visions rise.

"When Zion's sun shall seven-fold shine,
O'er all her mountains beauteous stand,
The messengers of peace;
Salvation by the Lord's right hand,
They shout, and never cease"

Jerusalem, my happy home, Oh! how I long to be there—to meet all the dear saints to part no more.

Your sister waiting for deliverance,

MAHITABLE C. HIGGINS.

LINCOLNVILLE, Me., Feb. 19, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—I am thankful indeed to God for the light and comfort that your paper brings to his scattered flock; it seems to carry with it a heavenly breeze from that happy land, that wafts the little bark over the rough sea of time. Hark! what do I hear?—the midnight cry! The sleeping virgins arise and trim their lamps to meet their coming King. Yes, the ship will enter the haven of rest this year; glory to God in the highest—peace on earth and good will to man. Our trials and sufferings soon will be over; we soon will meet to part no more on Canaan's happy shore. At the end of 1335 days we shall meet Daniel and John, and all the prophets and apostles, and all the martyrs, that have gone before.

Yours in the patient waiting for Christ,

JOHN F. GILKEY.

Bro. Merriam:—I have been very thankful for the privilege of receiving the Crisis, so much so that I know not how to express my gratitude. It is truly meet in due season to my poor soul. The truth which it advocates is what I fully believe, and I am glad that I ever embraced it. I was converted to the time of the Lord's coming in '44; and as I believe it was time that brought me out from the world, so I believe it will be time that will carry me to the judgment and land me in the kingdom. Glory to God. This year I am looking for him who has said unto them that look for him will he appear the second time without sin unto salvation. The Lord is still on the giving hand, and I do rejoice that this year is the jubilee. Glory to God, we are almost home; soon our trials will have an end; faith will be lost in sight and prayer be turned to praise. My soul cries out, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." Amen.

Yours, in the path of speedy redemption,

SUSAN E. TEEPLE.

NEW GLASGOW, Canada East, February 25, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—I must return my sincere thanks to you, or some other dear brother or sister, who has been so kind as to forward to me two of the World's Crisis, No. 5. They are meat in due season to the church of God. There are at present in this place a few who went forth in '43 and '44 to meet the Bridegroom; and, blessed be God, our oil still holds out,—we have had confidence that Jesus would not tarry long, and our faith has been sustained month after month by the fulfilment of Scripture. Our minds have been directed to the year 1854 by the darkening of the sun in the year 1780, for He that cannot lie said, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days (1260 days—Rev. 12: 6) shall the sun be darkened." Thus the 75 years (time of the end) cannot extend beyond May, 1855, else the Saviour would have said, before the tribulation ends the sun shall be darkened. Thus the Saviour has brought us to the blessed hope that we are close on to the end of the 1335 days, when the righteous will be clothed with immortality. Go on, brethren, sound the alarm, cry aloud and spare not. You are on the right path, it will shine brighter and brighter till the perfect day. There will be no more prolonging of the days.—God hath spoken, and it will be done. May His spirit guide you into all truth.

Yours, waiting for the redemption of Abraham's seed,

JOHN MORRISON.

MARCH 3, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I write to inform you that the good Lord is carrying on His work in this region in several places.—Souls are being converted to God, and wanderers are coming back to Father's house.

Brother John Howell is in this region laboring in the vineyard, and God is blessing his labors abundantly. I have been with him for two weeks. We held a meeting in Newburg, souls are coming to Christ in that place: also in Exeter we held a meeting a number of days, and the fruits were blessed. Quite a number have come out, and others are moved. The work is going on. We had a meeting also in Dexter Village, where the Advent doctrine never was preached before, and the word produced a solemn impression. After this we commenced a meeting in North Newport which is now in progress, and the interest is good. Also in Dixmont God is pouring out his spirit under the labors of Brother J. Morrill and others. So on the whole we can say, with all propriety, "The Midnight cry in mercy sounds."—The Lord is coming this year. Amen.

J. DAMMAN.

N. PALERMO, Feb. 18, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—My heart glows with gratitude to God for his goodness and condescension in employing us in his service, in permitting us to labor in his vineyeard. How good the will of the Lord is! How tender are all his mercies! It is even so; Jesus is coming to take His kingdom, to possess it with the saints forever, even forever and ever. The resurrection! O, the resurrection! This is the word that has been my delight, and saved me from perishing in my affliction.

The special tokens of the divine favor I enjoyed the last summer, were but a few props to a plentiful shower. Those things I so tenaciously held on to, as difficulties in the way of my exercising an understanding faith, on definite time, were dissipated like fog in the rays of a noonday's sun, while I listened to ten long sermons by the brethren at the Whitefield camp-meeting. How brilliantly the light shines "though midnight hour," when we are willing to arise and trim our lamps, by removing the impurities that have gathered aronnd it during the long, dark season of the bridegroom's tarry. How truthfully the sentiment is written by the poet, "The midnight cry in mercy sounds," notwithstanding we are often met with, "No matter when He comes, if we are only ready." Surely, such persons do not stop to consider what constitutes a readiness.

The Apostle says, "Ye brethren are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." In a literal point of view, how important it is to have light in order to walk uprightly, for the Saviour says, "He that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth." It seems evident, if we are in the path of the just, our light will increase more and more unto the perfect day." John seemed quite bold in testifying "that if we say we have fellowship with him, (Christ) and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth." Another says, "I am not in darkness, though I do not know anything about the time of the Lord's coming, and I do not believe it is for any one to know." When the Lord was about to destroy Sodom and Gomorrah, he said, "Shall I do this thing, and not let Abraham, my servant, know it?" As he did inform Abraham, I do firmly believe that he will let his loving, waiting, watching ones know the hour that he will come. For this I am watching; and also striving to be "diligent that I may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless."

Again; as the days of the Son of man are compared to the days of Noah, and as Noah had peculiar duties to do in his days, as also Lot, so will the Church of God have peculiar duties to do when she comes down into the days of the Son of man.—But if she is in darkness respecting her position, it is quite certain she will not be found having her loins girt about with truth, and her lamp burning. ☞ We are requested to insert the following verses of Coverdale's Translation of Habakuk, 2: 2, 3:

But the Lord answered me and said—Write the vision upon the tables; that whosoever cometh by, may read it,—

For the vision is yet for a time. But at last it shall come to pass, and not fail—And though he tarry, yet wait thou for him; for in very deed he will come and not be slack.

Behold, whosoever will not believe, his soul shall not prosper; but the just shall live by his faith.

The Seven Periods of Daniel's Vision of 2300 days: Dan. 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12th Chapters.

Continued.

And now, fellow-sinner, of every class, how shall I address you, in the assured view of the Day of Judgment just upon us? I once more call on you to repent; to turn to God, with your whole heart, and embrace the Savior, the only Hope of the gospel. The nations are preparing for, and gathering to the battle of the "great day of God Almighty." Soon will "the Kings of the earth, and the great men, and the Chief Captains, and the mighty men, call on the rocks and mountains to fall on them, and hide them from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb!" "For the great Day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?"

If the foregoing computations are correct, there is but a step between us, and the first resurrection: when many will come forth to everlasting life, and a wicked world be destroyed. O "what shall it profit a man if he should gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" What will your riches and treasures avail you, which "you have heaped together, for the last day, when God shall take away the soul? Who can stand before Him at that day? and "if ever the righteous scarcely are saved, where, O, where shall the ungodly, and the sinner appear?" How can you answer to the charge of extortion and oppression, or one of ten thousand of your offences, from the mouth of your Judge? How often have you oppressed the "fatherless, and the widow," the poor and the defenceless, and "because sentence against an evil work was not executed speedily, your hearts have been fully set in you to do evil!" and all this, too, against One, to whom you owe more than "ten thousand talents." Your ill gotten gain will never cancel such a debt as this. Has not the great Divine, who said to our first parents, "Ye shall not surely die," said also to you, "The vision is for many days to come; the times are far off." "Thus saith the Lord God, there shall none of my words be prolonged any more: but the word which I have spoken shall be done." But ye have said, "We will not hearken unto thee; what is the Almighty that we should serve him, and what profit shall we have, if we pray unto Him?" Hear what the Lord says: "Behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

"The Lord will be revealed from Heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that Day." "Who may abide the Day of his coming; and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap." "And I will come near you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of Hosts." "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the Kingdom of God?" "Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners shall inherit the Kingdom of God." I call on you, I beseech you, I charge you now, to "prepare to meet your God!" "Why will you die?" O turn and live, when the voice of the Archangel shall declare "the mystery of God finished," and the last trump "shall break the slumbers" of the grave. Soon will the "thrones be cast down, and the Ancient of Days sit whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool.—His throne is like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire." "A fiery stream issued, and came forth from before him; thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him; the judgment was set, and the books were opened." "Prepare," O sinner, "to meet thy God;" for I solemnly affirm to you, whether you heed it or not, "The Judge is at the door." "The Lord is at hand;" and will "reward every one according as his work shall be." This is the day of "the Lord's preparation;" the chariots of Nahum are "raging in the streets; with flaming torches they run like the lightning!" O by the agony of Christ, which he endured in "the Garden," and "on the Cross," flee to that Ark, which alone can bear you up above that deluge of fire, which in a few months will dissolve the world. Once more I say, 'Up, get thee out of this place, for the Lord will destroy this city." "If you will be wise, be wise for yourselves, but if you scorn, you alone must bear it."

And now my fellow professor of the religion of Christ, are you ready to meet your Judge? Or have you only "a name to live, while you are dead?" If so, where will you be found, when the Lord shall "search Jerusalem with candles;" and "punish those that are settled on their lees?" Have you not "lost your first love;" "cast off fear and restrained prayer before God?" The Day will soon be revealed by fire, and that fire will try every one's work," and decide, "of what sort it is." "The tares and the wheat, must grow together, till the Harvest," but at that time, there will be an awful separation and it will be final. "The sinners in Zion will tremble." "Have you not persecuted the prophets, and refused to believe their words? Have you not slandered your own mother's Son?" Have you not "condemned the just, and he did not resist you?" and ill treated him, that was more righteous than you? "Blow the trumpet in Zion; sanctify a fast; call a solemn assembly; let the Bride-groom go forth of his chamber, and the Bride out of her closet. Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep, between the porch, and the altar; and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine Heritage to reproach;" "Gird yourselves, and lament ye priests; Howl ye ministers of the altar, for the meat offering, and the drink offering is withholden from the house of your god." "For the Day, for the Day of the Lord is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty, shall it come." "O be not deceived; God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

Remember "at the time of the end shall be the Vision," and "at the time appointed the end shall be." Do not forget the fate of "the foolish Virgins," who lacked the oil of faith, which is the principal grace by which a righteous man lives; "and while they went to buy, the Bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut." Will you cry, Lord, Lord, open unto us? Will you tell him you have prophesied in his name, and walked many years in his ordinances? Alas! it will be vain for those, who have not the love of God in their hearts; for "every mouth will be stopped;" they will be shut out from the marriage, and never gain admittance. 'Ye cannot serve God and mammon' O be contented to dispense with your extravagance, and humble yourselves before God; for I testify to you now, that your costly wardrobes, your rich and elegant furniture, and all the paraphernalia of your splendor is doomed to the fire of the last day. While the Bridegroom tarries you may have an opportunity to obtain your oil; but delay not one moment; "tarry not in all the plain; escape to the mountains, lest ye be consumed." "Peace be on all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ, in sincerity."

"In robes of judgment lo! He comes,
Shakes the wide earth, and cleaves the tombs;
Before Him burns devouring fire,
The mountains melt, the seas retire." [Watts.]

Now ye humble lowly One's, ye servants of my God, I hail you, I congratulate you on the near view of the coming of your Lord, and Master; you, who are waiting, and longing to behold him; watching, praying, "and feasting on the coming of the Day of God, I rejoice with you that the day breaks; the shadows are fleeing away; and the mystery of God is being finished. Redemption is in sight; "Blessed" indeed, "are the eyes, that see the things that" we "see." Truly "Prophets and "Kings" might well desire to see them. Glory to God, that he has brought us to this place, where we are waiting for the opening "Heavens" to reveal Him! O let us trim anew our lamps, that they may burn clearer, and brighter unto "the perfect day." Let us gird ourselves, with truth, and stand waiting to depart, at a moment's warning; even at "the twinkling of an eye;" we cannot be too well prepared nor too soon. We must have "the whole armor of the gospel, and having done all, stand," ready for any encounter: we must repel the fury of our adversaries, and "cut off the progress of every invader." We must engage with all perseverance, and supplication for all saints." Soon will the monster Death be swallowed up; and millions of the redeemed will shout, "This is the Lord, we have waited for Him, we will be glad, and rejoice in his salvation." We hear the mustering of armies; we learn that the sword is unsheathed; we hear the clangor of arms, and a voice, "to arms, to arms," and of warriors, "terrible warriors, and garments rolled in blood." Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. "Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem. Say unto her that her warfare is accomplished, and her iniquity is pardoned." "Lift up thy voice, with strength, even lift it up; be not afraid; "say to the people, Behold the Lord God, will come with a strong hand; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him," to render to every man, according as his work shall be. "Thy sun shall no more go down; for the Lord will be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." Thy people shall be all righteous, they shall inherit the land forever; the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified."

All the saints who have gone before us, died in faith, not having received the promise; but the day of redemption of the purchased possession is directly before us, when each of the saints will enter on his eternal inheritance. O Friends, watch, for in one instant, "He who is our Life shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory." We have the promise, "Unto them that look for him shall he appear, the second time without sin unto salvation."—Let us have mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind; "meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another in love." Let us walk "with all lowliness of mind," imitating the example of Him "who made himself of no reputation," and so keep "the unity of the Spirit, in the bond of peace." Looking for "the grace that shall be brought unto us, at the revelation of Jesus Christ." "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." Then we which are alive, shall be caught up together with them, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Our crowns are almost ready, and they are prepared for those "who love his appearing." We look for "that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ." "Who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing, and his kingdom." O may we fight "the good fight," and be found giving meat to the household, when he comes. May our God be to us for a spirit of judgment, and for strength to them that turn the battle to the gate."—"We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed; in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality." Let us aim to come up to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; and to bring each, and all the members of the sanctified body of Christ, up to that standard. Let us keep his "Commandments without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ." Which in his times "He shall show who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords;" "Who only hath immortality dwelling in light; which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see; to whom be honour, and power everlasting. Amen.

Later from Europe.

By the arrival of the Arctic, at Halifax, yesterday, we have one week later advices from Europe—dates to the 4th inst.—accounts of the movements of the allied fleets—of the Czar's reply to the letter of Louis Napoleon—of heavy snows on the Danube—of immense preparations for a great conflict—of the breaking up of the ice in the Baltic, and of the breaking loose of the Russian fleet. But we have nothing new from the Danube or from Asia.

The Times Vienna correspondent, under date of the 2d instant, says than an Austrian Manifesto is about to announce that the Austrians will occupy Bosnia and Servia. There was a panic in consequence on the Vienna Bourse. The following is the substance of the answer sent by the Czar to the Emperor Napoleon:—

"If his Imperial Majesty extends his hand to me as I extend mine to him, I am ready to forget the mortification I have experienced, harsh though it be. Then, but then only, can I discuss the subject treated of in his letter, and may perhaps arrive at an understanding. Let the French fleet prevent the Turks from transporting reinforcements to the seat of war, and let the Turks send me a Plenipotentiary to negociate, whom I will receive as befits his character. The conditions already made known to the conference at Vienna are the sole bases on which I will consent to treat."

The movements of the Austrian troops towards the frontier continues. Austria has decided, in conjunction with the Western powers, to summon Russia to evacuate the principalities, and if necessary, to employ force to compel her to do so. The Russian fleet is preparing to leave the Baltic on the arrival of the combined fleet. The negotiations between the Russian and Sweedish Governments, has not yet terminated; and it is feared at Stockholm that Russia, in order to give more weight to its demands, will make a demonstration and send its fleets to that Capital.

The war is highly popular in Great Britain. The additional estimates for the army and navy are thought moderate. The French Emperor opened the Legislative session of 1854, on Thursday [illegible]. His speech commenced by referring to the deficient harvest. Seven million hectolitres of grain had been imported —more is on the way. Famine has been averted, but war is beginning.

Every power in Europe continues to arm;— France, England and Russia on an immense scale.

Sir Charles Napier has been appointed to command the Baltic of the allied fleet, Admiral Seymour being second in command. Over twenty ships had already assembled at Spithead.

The ice in the Baltic was breaking up, and a part of the Russian fleet has been liberated.— The Russian fleet at Cronstadt was ready to sail. A report says that the Czar has laid an embargo on British shipping in Russian ports.

On the Danube, a deep snow had prevented a movement of either army. The weather becoming milder, the Russians were making ostentatious preparations to cross the Danube.— Omar Pacha, evidently aware of their plans, was making efforts to check them. Some military men think that the Russians, notwithstanding their demonstrations, do not intend to attack Kalafat, but wish to entrap the Turks to come out. Omar has sent supplies to Varna.— The Turks no longer occupy any place but Kalafat north of the Danube.

There has been considerable fighting between small parties whenever they could come in contact, but no decisive action had occurred.

Another convoy of 16,000 troops were preparing to leave Constantinople for Batoum.

The Greek insurrection is in a fair way of being suppressed. Several British ships-of-war are ordered from Malta to Patras

The Pacha of Jania had defeated the Greek insurrectionists at Arta, but had not force enough to disperse them. The Pacha had issued a proclamation, calling on the Scutarians and the Catholic Albanians to remain faithful.

The Turkish government in concert with the British, French and Prussian governments, has addressed a remonstrance to the Greek court. The king of Greece apologized and dismissed his minister of police, but in reality powerless.

The Turks are concentrating a force in Sandjack of Elberson, under the command of the distinguished Hadin Pacha. The insurrection does not extend farther north than Albania.— Montenegro is quiet.

The statement most current in political circles is that couriers are on their way to St. Petersburg with a joint note demanding catagorical replies within one week, whether the Czar will evacuate the principalities before April 30, a refusal or no answer to be considered as a declaration of war against the allies. By the 18th or 20th of March the reply will be before Europe.

Again, though such vacillation is scarcely credible, it is said that the Czar signifies through Austria some other modification of negotiations, but he cannot suppose that it will be accepted.

Austria adheres to the allied Powers. It is officially announced by the Emperor Napoleon that she will not be called on at present to take offensive measures against Russia, but merely to keep the peace on the frontier.

SICKNESS OF THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA. By a recent arrival from Europe we were informed that the Emperor of Russia was sick, and had not been seen by the public for some time. We have heard it stated by those who claim to know something of his majesty's habits, that these reported sicknesses of the Czar were sometimes employed to cover his sudden movements from the capital incog. to some more or less remote part of his empire, to enjoy an opportunity of personal inspection of men and things, unbeknown to the parties interested.—[Boston Journal.

Extracts from Letters.

MARCH 8, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I write to inform you how the cause is prospering. The interest relative to the coming of the Lord is on the increase, meetings are powerful, God is honored. I visited the brethren in Orington last Sabbath and on Monday led into the water eleven souls. God's work goes on with power. There is an interest in almost every place.

Yours in love, J. DAMMAN.

HEBRON, N. Y., Feb. 27, 1854.

Dear Brother Merriam:—I have, through your kindness, received "The World's Crisis," and can truly say that it has been to me a welcome visitor. It is cheering to pilgrims in a strange land to know that they are almost home. This is a dark and dreary land; we have long been wandering amid its dark and stormy scenes, and we hail with delight, each token of approaching day; a day that shall terminate all our cares and sorrows; a day of eternal rest. O! happy day. Let us think less of the fleeting objects of this inconstant life, and keep our eyes fixed on our glorious rest. Soon, very soon, our deliverer will come, and if found faithful to our Master's cause, we shall enter upon "that rest which remaineth for the people of God."

Yours in hope,
WM. B. MAYNARD.

NEWFANE, Vt., March 12, 1854.

Bro. Edwin Burnham.—A question has arisen among the brethren here, whether we can know anything by faith and not have certain knowledge of it. Bro. I. A. Packard takes the affirmative. I take the position that faith is a matter of belief,— "The substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Heb. 21: 1. "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go into a place, which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out not knowing whither he went." Heb. 11: 8. "And if any man think that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know." Bro. Packard proposed to have you express your views on the subject. Please answer the above through the Crisis.

Yours, seeking after truth,
FOSTER H. WHITAKER.

MARLBORO', Feb. 20, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—I praise God that He has called me by his grace to set my affections on things above, and enabled me "to wait for his son from heaven;" that I belong to that sect that is everywhere spoken against, and that I am "counted worthy to suffer shame for His name." The midnight cry, I believe is now being sounded; and it is my prayer that the watchmen on the walls of Zion may speed the glorious message, to arouse the virgins that are yet asleep, that they may get ready to go out and meet the Bridegroom.

Watchman, speed the joyful tidings,
Gird the heavenly armor on;
Speed the tidings, Oh how cheering,
Soon the victory will be won.

Watchman, speed the joyful tidings,
Loud proclaim the midnight cry;
Rouse, O rouse the sleeping virgins,
Lo! the Bridegroom draweth nigh.

Soon "the heavens will pass away with a great noise, and the elements melt with fervent heat." Where then, poor sinner, will you find a shelter? Will you call on the rocks and mountains to fall on you, and hide you from the wrath of a slighted God? "He will laugh at your calamity, He will mock when your fear cometh." Because "you have hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord." Backslider, you who "have once tasted that the Lord was gracious," O arise! He has promised to "heal your backslidings." Virgins, wake up, for "behold the Bridegroom cometh!" Rise, trim your lamps. Soon the Master will rise up, and shut to the door, and then it will be in vain to seek for admittance.

Oh, I do long for the time to come, when I can say, "Lo! this is my God!" And that time will come this year. Praise the Lord. E. FELTON.

ORRS, Feb. 21, 1854.

Brethren and Sisters:—"Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." Soon will the King come in all his beauty, to gather his faithful children from this dark and dreary world to that land which knoweth no sorrow, and where death cannot approach. O Glory to God, there is a land where no sighs can come. "O, I long to be there," where nothing can disturb that sweet, heavenly rest! Is it so? Are our trials, and sorrows to end this year? Can it be that we shall see our blessed Savior, who suffered and died on the Cross for our sakes? O yes, Jesus is coming. I believe it. O may we all be ready to meet our coming King. Oh, sinner, as you peruse the columns of the World's Crisis, think of your condition, and turn and seek salvation before it is too late; before the door of mercy is forever closed against you. Probation will soon end; the sun of the wicked will then forever set in darkness; and the trials of the faithful be finished. "O hail happy day, blest morn of Zion's glory!" May the Lord add his blessing upon both the Editor, and all who write for the columns of the Crisis. This is the prayer of your unworthy Sister,

M. H. LOOMIS.

SHIRLEY, MS., March 3, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I have perused your paper which through the will of God has been sent to us to enlighten our understanding, and I can truly say that the gospel light it has shed upon my soul is worth more than mountains of gold, words cannot express my feelings of thankfulness. May your paper speed on its course.— May it spread its light to thousands of poor benighted souls. May the Midnight Cry echo and re-echo to the most remote parts of the earth, that the poor sinner may hear and understand if he will that he might be led to honor and glorify his maker. But time is passing swiftly, what is done must be done quickly, soon the last servant will be sealed and then where are we. We are here, he that is righteous will be righteous still and he that is filthy will be filthy still. Ought not this to stimulate us to action, to keep ourselves unspotted from the world. Much more could I say had I time. May this cause prosper.

From a well wisher,
D. S. HARRINGTON.

BRIDGEPORT, Ct., March 10, '54.

Bro. Merriam:—I am very much interested and edified by your newspaper, "The Crisis." I find that we want a number more of them; those that have had them, appear much interested in them. Many of the declarations of God's holy word are about having a speedy fulfilment. O how they crowd upon the present moment. "God is not slack concerning his promises." Angels are flying with messages of mercy, never again to be offered; they halt a moment, with trembling emotions; they watch the decision of that vacillating mind,—still glued to earth's anxieties and cares,—"so that that day will come upon them unawares." The current is moving forward; the floating mass has entered the great river; the rushing torrent bears them onward; but before they reach their intended goal, they are stricken with terror, and flee away like a rolling thing before the whirlwind."

I subscribe myself yours, hoping in the mercy of the Lord. J. C. BASSETT.

ALBANY, February 20th, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I feel thankful to God, that the lovers of the truth have got up a paper to herald the truth through the land. We believe in one true and living God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; one gospel, and present truth to the church of Christ. I am firm in the faith once delivered to the saints, and the coming of Christ this year. Glory to God, we are going home to die no more.

There we shall join the blood-washed band,
Of ev'ry age, from ev'ry land;
There praise shall ev'ry tongue employ,
With shouts of never ending joy.

Yours, in expectation of seeing the Lord this year.
H. I. HAYES.

Bro. Merriam,—I am thankful to God that he has put it into the hearts of his children, to print and send forth that flying messenger called "The World's Crisis." It carries truth to many who never have turned their ears away from the fables of these last days, to hear the living preacher. They will read, and meditate on what they read, while they will take no pains to go to meeting for fear of a reproach upon their self-conceited religious characters.—O may God enable you, and the rest of his children, to send these last notes of warning to earth's remotest bounds; that all that can be reached may be sealed before the four angels let loose the four winds.

JOHN GIBSON.

Houghtonville, Vt., Feb. 23, 1854.

BANGOR, ME., Feb. 24, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I believe with all my heart that the Lord will come this year and give immortality unto all his waiting saints. O what a thrilling thought that we shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and Job, Noah and Daniel in the kingdom of God this year! The nations are marshaling their mighty hosts for the great battle; men's hearts are beginning to fail them for fear, and "for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." I find some in this city who acknowledge that it looks as though the advent-people have the truth; and never was there such an interest to hear, in this section, since '44 as at the present time; and some are turning to God, and seeking a shelter from the coming storm.

O, dear brethren and sisters, when we see how short our time is that we have to labor, how faithful we ought to be, that we may save some, "pulling them out of the fire." I hope those dear friends who may continue to write for the columns of the "Crisis," may be guided by the spirit of the blessed Savior, and speak the truth in love, and use soft words, but hard arguments; that we may have a paper that is fit to read and give away. I love the heavenly spirit, thus far, which it seems to breathe forth, and the truth it contains, it is refreshing to the soul.

Now, dear brethren and sisters, scattered abroad, take courage and bear your trial a little longer, for "in due time we shall reap, if we faint not," and that time, we believe is the present year. Are we all ready? are our affections weaned from this world? if they are not we shall perish with it.

O, my brethren, is your treasure in heaven, "for where your treasure is, there will your hearts be also," so says one that always spoke the truth.

JOHN CLIFFORD.

CONCORD, N. H., March 6th, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—It is evident that floods of errors have been poured out in the world by the nominal churches at large, and the struggle between truth and error has been very great. Yet notwithstanding in this great struggle, the truth has not been shaken, nor has it in the least lost its brilliancy in the eyes of its admirers. But on the contrary, has, within a few years past, shone forth with ten-fold splendor;—and I sincerely believe that it will continue to shine more and more glorious till the perfect day. Though it is unpopular in the world, yet I believe it was never more precious to saints than at the present time, for it is truly meat and drink indeed. It is an indespensable treasure, because it is our only light in the path in which we are traveling—our only guide to direct our steps to the everlasting kingdom of our God. Were it possible that the truth should be shrouded with error, as some would gladly have it, what a gloomy wilderness would this world appear! But glory to God and the Lamb forever, we have nothing to fear on this ground; for God's word is truth, and not one jot or tittle will fail till all be fulfilled.

It is but a few months since I was brought to believe in this doctrine of the second coming of Christ, and I can truly say, that I would willingly part with my life before I would give it up. The Bridegroom has tarried a long time, but "yet a little while and He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." Paul says unto them that look for the Lord will he appear the second time without sin, unto salvation.—And all who are really loving our blessed Lord and his appearing, are arousing from their lethargic sleep, trimming their lamps, and making preparation to meet the coming King in his beauty this year. There are many who dream of heaven, and have fond anticipations of meeting eternal glories there, that will be sadly disappointed. But salvation is free for all that will believe the gospel of Jesus Christ. Many precious souls here have been convicted of this truth, and have acknowledged the Saviour to be their best and dearest friend. That others may see it, and be led to glorify God, is my sincere prayer.

Hoping that the choicest blessings of heaven may descend upon you, and that through your instrumentality, assisted by the God of heaven, many sinners may be saved from the terrible vortex of eternity which lies yawning before them, I will close with a hearty God-speed you onward.

THOS. N. PALMER.

WEST POLAND, Me., Feb. 20, '54.

Readers of the Crisis:—Cheer up Pilgrims, land is nearing; soon deliverance will come, the long dark night has almost passed; a few more days and trial will be ended, and the good ship will cast anchor in the haven of eternal rest. We see that the tribulation of the church has almost ended, and soon the dreadful day of vengeance will meet the sinner. O, dear reader, my heart feels for you; have you made yonr peace with God? Have you made the Judge your friend and Jesus your advocate? If not, O fly, for your life ere the four angels let go their hold on the four winds, and your doom be sealed, and that forever.

The brethren in Portland are in need of help. Will the laborers in the vineyard take notice of this?

Yours, in the faith once delivered to the saints, looking for eternal life when Jesus appears.

G. P. DISSMORE.

ATKINSON, Me., March 2d, '54

Bro. Merriam:—As we have been favored with one of your papers ("The Crisis,") by way of Bro. Lampson, I feel it my duty to send you one dollar, to aid you in your labors of love and duty to your fellow-creatures, in spreading "the midnight cry" ere it is too late. I feel to bless God that through the instrumentality of the Crisis I have been made to realize my stupidity. Yes, I was truly slumbering on the verge of time; but the perusal of its thrilling pages caused every nerve of my soul to vibrate. It seemed to awaken an undying interest in my soul for "Heaven, my home." I am thankful that some of the Advent brethren have been aroused in season to sound "the midnight cry," and to awaken the "slumbering virgins" and stupid world. May God speed it far and wide, until the whole earth shall hear its thrilling sound. Had it not been for this truly welcome instrument of "God's mercy," we might have been overtaken in the "snare" that will overtake an ungodly world.

S. C. FULTON.

Bro. Merriam:—I have just returned from a week's labor in Portland, Me.—The Lord is accomplishing a blessed work there. I baptized four on Thursday; one of them was formerly a Catholic. It made our hearts rejoice to hear her praise God for what he had done for her. Several arose for prayers each evening. The brethren and sisters are mostly awake, and I think the Lord will bring about a great revival there, if no counteracting causes prevent.

"Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another."—[Rom. 14: 19.

(Concluded.)

In a former article on this subject I endeavored to shew that, although we hold to perfect liberty of conscience and freedom of opinion, yet those who have a specific work to accomplish, have the privilege of giving tone and character to a publication which is issued as their organ; and I illustrated the subject by a reference to anti-slavery papers.

Thus in religious affairs, having an object to promote, a specific work to accomplish, we feel that it is right and proper to promote that object and accomplish that specific work by those instrumentalities which God has placed in our hands.—Among the most powerful agencies to move the mass of mind, to create an interest in any subject is that of the press; and as we read "to him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin," and we are commanded "to do good to all as we have opportunity;" it is very evident we are held responsible for all the talents and instrumentalities under our control. We are under ceaseless obligations to exert every influence, employ every talent, and wield every instrumentality in our power for the dissemination of light and truth, and a holy influence in the earth; and as the press is an engine of tremendous power committed into the hands of the Church to be wielded in the last days of Zion's warfare, our responsibility and obligations rise the higher in proportion to the efficiency of the instrumentality to be employed.

We have now arrived, according to our faith, at an interesting and important epoch in the history of the Church; indeed an epoch of overwhelming moment; the most tremendous scenes are before the world, and the most glorious prospects before the Church, that were ever impending; no less than the total, everlasting destruction of the one, and the final, complete and eternal deliverance of the other; death to the world, immortality to the saints; eternal night to the wicked and everlasting day to the righteous; and when we unite our energies and combine our influence to sound an alarm in God's holy mountain, we do not think it meet to send another proclamation with it to declare it is a false alarm—when we attempt to blow the trumpet in Zion, and give to it a certain sound, we do not desire to sound another trumpet, at the same time, with a different note, so that the people cannot understand the trumpet-note of alarm, and prepare themselves for battle.

We hold to free discussion in the fullest sense. We believe the press should be unshackled and free. While we live in a world of conflicting elements and diverse opinions, it is not the prerogative of man to veto the faith of the Church, or prescribe the form of worship, or put bands on the human intellect to check, by any controlling influence, the expression of thought, or freedom of the will, or liberty of Christian faith. No—God forbid; and we wish it distinctly understood, that we recognize the right and privilege of all to worship God agreeably to the dictates of their own consciences, with no one to molest or make them afraid.

If error be issued from the press there is, and ought to be, perfect liberty to combat it by publishing the truth. But it does not follow because all men have the privilege of publishing their own sentiments without let or hindrance, that therefore when an organ is designed to promote a specific object, those who are not interested in that object, have the same right to publish whatever they please in its columns, and thus frustrate entirely the design of the paper.

For instance, a paper is started to advocate the cause of the slave. Now it does not follow that because the press is free, and this is a land of liberty, therefore proslavery men are entitled to fill half its columns with sentiments of their own—If it were so, there could be no possibility of publishing an anti-slavery paper at all, because it would be as much a vehicle of proslavery as of anti-slavery sentiments. Suppose a paper started to advocate the cause of christianity in general, does it follow from the freedom of the American press, that the opponents of the Christian religion have a right to present arguments against the truthfulness of scripture, and thus spread a moral contagion through the community, and all this at the expense and trouble and labor of the office whence the periodical is issued? If this were so, there could be no such thing as a religious paper issued in the country. If the editors of a paper have no right to give a tone and religious character to their publication, then the principle of freedom is carried to that excess that absolutely annihilates all freedom in circulating light and truth through the medium of the press.—Just take the ground that liberty makes all things common, and there is security for no man's property or person. The excess of the principle destroys all its appropriate action. Just so in matters of religion.—Hence the Fathers of our Republic took the ground of maintaining perfect liberty of conscience, and freedom of worship, provided one class did not interfere with the rights of another; but no liberty of one man's conscience was allowed to infringe upon the religious freedom of another.

This we believe is the true position to be taken. Every one has a full and perfect right to advocate and publish his views on scriptural subjects; but we cannot perceive how, by any logical induction, it can be shown that those, who are desirous of sending out what they believe to be light and truth, for the salvation of their fellow men, are bound to publish any and every argument that may be presented against their views. While we fully recognize the equal rights of all, and acknowledge they have the same liberty to publish against what we deem truth, as we have to publish in favor of the same, and concede to them the same privilege of publishing a paper, if they chose, to be conducted agreeably to their ideas of propriety, and religious liberty, we at the same time believe God gives us the privilege, nay makes it our imperative duty to circulate what we deem truth without sending out as much error to neutralize its power. We cannot believe the Lord would have us send forth the proclamation, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and then another herald to tread upon the heels of the first, to announce the midnight cry to be premature, and the proclamation false.

Indeed we cannot see how in a religious point of view, the community can be benefited by giving them a little light to direct their feet in the way to Zion, and then a little darkness to cover it up.

Those who conduct other religious papers, have the right to manage them as they think proper, and God forbid we should make war on any periodical, or other instrumentality that may circulate a knowledge of divine things, whether they coincide precisely with our views or not. In whatever way Christ is preached, and good is done, we will say Amen. "Send by the hand of him whom thou will send" But, at the same time, we claim the privilege to give to the household what we deem "meat in due season," to nuture them unto eternal life, without at the same time feeding the flock with that which we believe will poison and debilitate the spiritual frame. To take a different course would be like starting on a railroad excursion, having one locomotive attached in front, to draw us forward, and another in the rear to draw us back. But little progress could be made in that way. To be sure, one engine which we may denominate truth, may be more powerful than the other, and move the train in some degree: but what a tremendous drawback it would be on the speed of the cars, to have one engine with steam reversed, operating powerfully all the way to stop the train.—Would it not be better for the company first to settle the question which direction they wish to move, and then attach the engine accordingly?

On the subject of the midnight cry and time of Advent, we believe the cause of Christ demands its publicationto the world, and that this is the great, ALL ABSORBING TRUTH now before the Church. We believe she has but little time toardorn herself with her jewels and white robes, in order to enter into the marriage of the Lamb when Jesus shall come: and for this reason we desire to sound an alarm in God's holy mountain, and arouse the virgins from their slumbers, and, so far as may be, startle an unbelieving world "to flee from the wrath to come." And if one half our paper were filled with matter to teach the sleeping virgins and slumbering world there was no occasion for alarm, those who love to slumber might still sleep on, and those, who love the truth, might readily devour the chaff, and refuse the wheat.

In a word we feel responsible to God for every line we publish, and if people call it oppression and bigotry, we cannot help it, but we have the blessed consciousness, that we are seeking the good of our fellow men, the upbuilding of the Church and the glory of God; our prayer is that God may be honored, His Son glorified, and souls fitted to enter into the everlasting kingdom at the glorious consumation of our hope, which we believe will be accomplished the present year.

Bro. Wendall,—I observe you commence the 2300 days of Daniel 8th at B. C. 456, and terminate them in A. D. 1854; but you will perceive at once, that it will require all those years complete in order to make 2300 years. If the decree to restore and build Jerusalem went forth in B. C. 456, the 2300 years must extend to the same point in 1855 at which the decree went forth in order to make 2300 years. Suppose for instance, we reckon from the first day of July in the year one before the birth of Christ to the first day of July in the year one after the birth of Christ, there would be six months included in each year, which of course would make one year. But if you add together one before and one after the commencement of the Christian era, it would make two years, one year too much. So if you add together 456 years before the Christian era, and 1854 years since the Christian era, it makes a mathematical error of one year or fraction of a year, unless those years before and after the Christian era are all complete. Hence many of our Advent brethren have taken the ground that the 2300 days (years) extend one year beyond the 1335 days (years), including the year of the redeemed, and the time for cleansing the sanctuary.

☞ The question has been repeatedly asked whether the day and hour of Christ's appearing may not be known from Daniel 12: 11. "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." It is plain that we cannot ascertain from this passage the day and hour of our Lord's return, unless we can ascertain the precise day and hour on which the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up. We learn from Hebrew scholars that the original term here rendered time, is not the same with that in the seventh verse. In the latter instance it signifies a year, in the former an epoch or date of an event. The idea, therefore, is not from the year in which the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, &c., but from the date or epoch when that event shall transpire, there shall be a thousand three hundred and ninety days.

☞ Bro. S. S. Brewer:—Your name was attached to the poetry in a back number, headed, 'Religion, what is it?' by mistake. The typographical error, however was discovered and corrected before the papers were all struck off.

Please insert the following in your excellent paper for the benefit of the brethren scattered abroad. Yours, looking for the ending of the 1335 days this year,

For the World's Crisis.

Bro. Merriam:—In looking over the Index to my Bible, my eye rested on the following—"Alliance with the wicked forbidden"—and the following passages noted; and I thought that those who love the truth would like to read them, so I copy them for your paper:—

PETER.

And ye shall make no league with the inhabitants of this land; ye shall throw down their altars; but ye have not obeyed my voice; why have ye done this?—Jud. 2: 2.

And Jehu, the son of Hanani, the seer, went out to meet him, and said to king Jehoshaphat, Shouldst thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord.—[Chron. 19: 2.

Now, therefore, give not your daughters unto their sons, neither take their daughters unto your sons, nor seek their peace or their wealth forever; that ye may be strong and eat the good of the land, and leave it for an inheritance to your children forever.—[Ezra 9: 12.

And Ezra the priest stood up, and said unto them, Ye have transgressed, and have taken strange wives to increase the trespass of Israel.

Now therefore make confession unto the Lord God of your fathers, and do his pleasure; and separate yourselves from the people of the land, and from the strange wives.—Ezra 10: 10, 11.

That Sanballat and Geshem sent unto me, saying, Come, let us meet together in some one of the villages in the plain of Ono. But they thought to do me mischief.

And I sent messengers unto them, saying, I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down; why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down to you?—Neh. 6: 2, 3.

But were mingled among the heathen, and learned their works.

And they served their idols; which were a snare unto them.

Yea, they sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto devils.—Ps. 106: 35, 7.

My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.—Prov. 1: 10.

Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men.

Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away.—Prov. 4: 14, 15

Go from the presence of a foolish man, when thou perceivest not in him the lips of knowledge.—Prov. 14: 7.

Withhold thy foot from being unshod, and thy throat from thirst; but thou saidst, There is no hope: no, for I have loved strangers, and after them will I go.—Jer. 2: 25.

Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul; be not cut off in her iniquity; for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance; he will render unto her a recompence.—Jer. 51: 6.

Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences con-

they read, while they will take no pains to go to meeting for fear of a reproach upon their self-conceited religious characters.—O may God enable you, and the rest of his children, to send these last notes of warning to earth's remotest bounds; that all that can be reached may be sealed before the four angels let loose the four winds. JOHN GIBSON.

Houghtonville, Vt., Feb. 23, 1854.

BANGOR, ME., Feb. 24, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I believe with all my heart that the Lord will come this year and give immortality unto all his waiting saints. O what a thrilling thought that we shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and Job, Noah and Daniel in the kingdom of God this year! The nations are marshaling their mighty hosts for the great battle; men's hearts are beginning to fail them for fear, and "for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." I find some in this city who acknowledge that it looks as though the advent people have the truth; and never was there such an interest to hear, in this section, since '44 as at the present time; and some are turning to God, and seeking a shelter from the coming storm.

O, dear brethren and sisters, when we see how short our time is that we have to labor, how faithful we ought to be, that we may save some, "pulling them out of the fire." I hope those dear friends who may continue to write for the columns of the "Crisis," may be guided by the spirit of the blessed Savior, and speak the truth in love, and use soft words, but hard arguments; that we may have a paper that is fit to read and give away. I love the heavenly spirit, thus far, which it seems to breathe forth, and the truth it contains, it is refreshing to the soul.

Now, dear brethren and sisters, scattered abroad, take courage and bear your trial a little longer, for "in due time we shall reap, if we faint not," and that time, we believe is the present year. Are we all ready? are our affections weaned from this world? if they are not we shall perish with it.

O, my brethren, is your treasure in heaven, "for where your treasure is, there will your hearts be also," so says one that always spoke the truth.

JOHN CLIFFORD.

CONCORD, N. H., March 6th, 1854.

Brother Merriam: It is evident that floods of errors have been poured out in the world by the nominal churches at large, and the struggle between truth and error has been very great. Yet notwithstanding in this great struggle, the truth has not been shaken, nor has it in the least lost its brilliancy in the eyes of its admirers. But on the contrary, has, within a few years past, shone forth with ten-fold splendor;—and I sincerely believe that it will continue to shine more and more glorious till the perfect day. Though it is unpopular in the world, yet I believe it was never more precious to saints than at the present time, for it is truly meat and drink indeed. It is an indespensable treasure, because it is our only light in the path in which we are traveling—our only guide to direct our steps to the everlasting kingdom of our God. Were it possible that the truth should be shrouded with error as some would gladly have it, what a gloomy wilderness would this world appear! But glory to God and the Lamb forever, we have nothing to fear on this ground; for God's word is truth, and not one jot or tittle will fail till all be fulfilled.

It is but a few months since I was brought to believe in this doctrine of the second coming of Christ, and I can truly say, that I would willingly part with my life before I would give it up. The Bridegroom has tarried a long time, but "yet a little while and He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." Paul says unto them that look for the Lord will he appear the second time without sin, unto salvation.—And all who are really loving our blessed Lord and his appearing, are arousing from their lethargic sleep, trimming their lamps, and making preparation to meet the coming King in his beauty this year. There are many who dream of heaven, and have fond anticipations of meeting eternal glories there, that will be sadly disappointed. But salvation is free for all that will believe the gospel of Jesus Christ. Many precious souls here have been convicted of this truth, and have acknowledged the Saviour to be their best and dearest friend. That others may see it, and be led to glorify God, is my sincere prayer.

Hoping that the choicest blessings of heaven may descend upon you, and that through your instrumentality, assisted by the God of heaven, many sinners may be saved from the horrible vortex of eternity which lies yawning before them, I will close with a hearty God speed you onward. THOS. N. PALMER.

WEST POLAND, Me., Feb. 20, '54.

Readers of the Crisis:—Cheer up Pilgrims, land is nearing; soon deliverance will come, the long dark night has almost passed; a few more days and trial will be ended, and the good ship will cast anchor in the haven of eternal rest. We see that the tribulation of the church has almost ended, and soon the dreadful day of vengeance will meet the sinner. O, dear reader, my heart feels for you; have you made yonr peace with God? Have you made the Judge your friend and Jesus your advocate? If not, O fly, for your life ere the four angels let go their hold on the four winds, and your doom be sealed, and that forever.

The brethren in Portland are in need of help. Will the laborers in the vineyard take notice of this?

Yours, in the faith once delivered to the saints, looking for eternal life when Jesus appears. G. P. DISSMORE.

ATKINSON, Me., March 2d, '54

Bro. Merriam:—As we have been favored with one of your papers ("The Crisis,") by way of Bro. Lampson, I feel it my duty to send you one dollar, to aid you in your labors of love and duty to your fellow-creatures, in spreading "the midnight cry" ere it is too late. I feel to bless God that through the instrumentality of the Crisis I have been made to realize my stupidity. Yes, I was truly slumbering on the verge of time; but the perusal of its thrilling pages caused every nerve of my soul to vibrate. It seemed to awaken an undying interest in my soul for "Heaven, my home." I am thankful that some of the Advent brethren have been aroused in season to sound "the midnight cry," and to awaken the "slumbering virgins" and stupid world. May God speed it far and wide, until the whole earth shall hear its thrilling sound. Had it not been for this truly welcome instrument of "God's mercy," we might have been overtaken in the "snare" that will overtake an ungodly world. S. C. FULTON.

Bro. Merriam:—I have just returned from a week's labor in Portland, Me.—The Lord is accomplishing a blessed work there. I baptized four on Thursday; one of them was formerly a Catholic. It made our hearts rejoice to hear her praise God for what he had done for her. Several arose for prayers each evening. The brethren and sisters are mostly awake, and I think the Lord will bring about a great revival there, if no counteracting causes prevent. J. WESTON.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, MARCH 22, 1854.

"Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another."—[Rom. 14: 19.

(Concluded.)

In a former article on this subject I endeavored to shew that, although we hold to perfect liberty of conscience and freedom of opinion, yet those who have a specific work to accomplish, have the privilege of giving tone and character to a publication which is issued as their organ; and I illustrated the subject by a reference to anti-slavery papers.

Thus in religious affairs, having an object to promote, a specific work to accomplish, we feel that it is right and proper to promote that object and accomplish that specific work by those instrumentalities which God has placed in our hands.—Among the most powerful agencies to move the mass of mind, to create an interest in any subject is that of the press; and as we read "to him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him, it is sin," and we are commanded "to do good to all as we have opportunity;" it is very evident we are held responsible for all the talents and instrumentalities under our control. We are under ceaseless obligations to exert every influence, employ every talent, and wield every instrumentality in our power for the dissemination of light and truth, and a holy influence in the earth; and as the press is an engine of tremendous power committed into the hands of the Church to be wielded in the last days of Zion's warfare, our responsibility and obligations rise the higher in proportion to the efficiency of the instrumentality to be employed.

We have now arrived, according to our faith, at an interesting and important epoch in the history of the Church; indeed an epoch of overwhelming moment; the most tremendous scenes are before the world, and the most glorious prospects before the Church, that were ever impending; no less than the total, everlasting destruction of the one, and the final, complete and eternal deliverance of the other; death to the world, immortality to the saints; eternal night to the wicked and everlasting day to the righteous; and when we unite our energies and combine our influence to sound an alarm in God's holy mountain, we do not think it meet to send another proclamation with it to declare it is a false alarm—when we attempt to blow the trumpet in Zion, and give to it a certain sound, we do not desire to sound another trumpet, at the same time, with a different note, so that the people cannot understand the trumpet-note of alarm, and prepare themselves for battle.

We hold to free discussion in the fullest sense. We believe the press should be unshackled and free. While we live in a world of conflicting elements and diverse opinions, it is not the prerogative of man to veto the faith of the Church, or prescribe the form of worship, or put bands on the human intellect to check, by any controlling influence, the expression of thought, or freedom of the will, or liberty of Christian faith. No—God forbid; and we wish it distinctly understood, that we recognize the right and privilege of all to worship God agreeably to the dictates of their own consciences, with no one to molest or make them afraid.

If error be issued from the press there is, and ought to be, perfect liberty to combat it by publishing the truth. But it does not follow because all men have the privilege of publishing their own sentiments without let or hindrance, that therefore when an organ is designed to promote a specific object, those who are not interested in that object, have the same right to publish whatever they please in its columns, and thus frustrate entirely the design of the paper.

For instance, a paper is started to advocate the cause of the slave. Now it does not follow that because the press is free, and this is a land of liberty, therefore proslavery men are entitled to fill half its columns with sentiments of their own—If it were so, there could be no possibility of publishing an anti-slavery paper at all, because it would be as much a vehicle of proslavery as of anti-slavery sentiments. Suppose a paper started to advocate the cause of christianity in general, does it follow from the freedom of the American press, that the opponents of the Christian religion have a right to present arguments against the truthfulness of scripture, and thus spread a moral contagion through the community, and all this at the expense and trouble and labor of the office whence the periodical is issued? If this were so, there could be no such thing as a religious paper issued in the country. If the editors of a paper have no right to give a tone and religious character to their publication, then the principle of freedom is carried to that excess that absolutely annihilates all freedom in circulating light and truth through the medium of the press.—Just take the ground that liberty makes all things common, and there is security for no man's property or person. The excess of the principle destroys all its appropriate action. Just so in matters of religion.—Hence the Fathers of our Republic took the ground of maintaining perfect liberty of conscience, and freedom of worship, provided one class did not interfere with the rights of another; but no liberty of one man's conscience was allowed to infringe upon the religious freedom of another.

This we believe is the true position to be taken. Every one has a full and perfect right to advocate and publish his views on scriptural subjects; but we cannot perceive how, by any logical induction, it can be shown that those, who are desirous of sending out what they believe to be light and truth, for the salvation of their fellow men, are bound to publish any and every argument that may be presented against their views. While we fully recognize the equal rights of all, and acknowledge they have the same liberty to publish against what we deem truth, as we have to publish in favor of the same, and concede to them the same privilege of publishing a paper, if they chose, to be conducted agreeably to their ideas of propriety, and religious liberty, we at the same time believe God gives us the privilege, nay makes it our imperative duty to circulate what we deem truth without sending out as much error to neutralize its power. We cannot believe the Lord would have us send forth the proclamation, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and then another herald to tread upon the heels of the first, to announce the midnight cry to be premature, and the proclamation false.

Indeed we cannot see how in a religious point of view, the community can be benefited by giving them a little light to conduct their feet in the way to Zion, and then a little darkness to cover it up.

Those who conduct other religious papers, have the right to manage them as they think proper, and God forbid we should make war on any periodical, or other instrumentality that may circulate a knowledge of divine things, whether they coincide precisely with our views or not. In whatever way Christ is preached, and good is done, we will say Amen. "Send by the hand of him whom thou wilt send" But, at the same time, we claim the privilege to give to the household what we deem "meat in due season," to nuture them unto eternal life, without at the same time feeding the flock with that which we believe will poison and debilitate the spiritual frame. To take a different course would be like starting on a railroad excursion, having one locomotive attached in front, to draw us forward, and another in the rear to draw us back. But little progress could be made in that way. To be sure, one engine which we may denominate truth, may be more powerful than the other, and move the train in some degree: but what a tremendous drawback it would be on the speed of the cars, to have one engine with steam reversed, operating powerfully all the way to stop the train.—Would it not be better for the company first to settle the question which direction they wish to move, and then attach the engine accordingly?

On the subject of the midnight cry and time of Advent, we believe the cause of Christ demands its publicationto the world, and that this is the great, ALL ABSORBING TRUTH now before the Church. We believe she has but little time toardorn herself with her jewels and white robes, in order to enter into the marriage of the Lamb when Jesus shall come: and for this reason we desire to sound an alarm in God's holy mountain, and arouse the virgins from their slumbers, and, so far as may be, startle an unbelieving world "to flee from the wrath to come." And if one half our paper were filled with matter to teach the sleeping virgins and slumbering world there was no occasion for alarm, those who love to slumber might still sleep on, and those, who love the truth, might readily devour the chaff, and refuse the wheat.

In a word we feel responsible to God for every line we publish, and if people call it oppression and bigotry, we cannot help it, but we have the blessed consciousness, that we are seeking the good of our fellow men, the upbuilding of the Church and the glory of God; our prayer is that God may be honored, His Son glorified, and souls fitted to enter into the everlasting kingdom at the glorious consumation of our hope, which we believe will be accomplished the present year.

Bro. Wendall,—I observe you commence the 2300 days of Daniel 8th at B. C. 456, and terminate them in A. D. 1854; but you will perceive at once, that it will require all those years complete in order to make 2300 years. If the decree to restore and build Jerusalem went forth in B. C. 456, the 2300 years must extend to the same point in 1855 at which the decree went forth in order to make 2300 years. Suppose for instance, we reckon from the first day of July in the year one before the birth of Christ to the first day of July in the year one after the birth of Christ, there would be six months included in each year, which of course would make one year. But if you add together one before and one after the commencement of the Christian era, it would make two years, one year too much. So if you add together 456 years before the Christian era, and 1854 years since the Christian era, it makes a mathematical error of one year or fraction of a year, unless those years before and after the Christian era are all complete. Hence many of our Advent brethren have taken the ground that the 2300 days (years) extend one year beyond the 1335 days (years), including the year of the redeemed, and the time for cleansing the sanctuary.

☞ The question has been repeatedly asked whether the day and hour of Christ's appearing may not be known from Daniel 12: 11. "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." It is plain that we cannot ascertain from this passage the day and hour of our Lord's return, unless we can ascertain the precise day and hour on which the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up. We learn from Hebrew scholars that the original term here rendered time, is not the same with that in the seventh verse. In the latter instance it signifies a year, in the former an epoch or date of an event. The idea, therefore, is not from the year in which the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, &c., but from the date or epoch when that event shall transpire, there shall be a thousand three hundred and ninety days.

☞ Bro. S. S. Brewer:—Your name was attached to the poetry in a back number, headed, 'Religion, what is it?' by mistake. The typographical error, however was discovered and corrected before the papers were all struck off.

Please insert the following in your excellent paper for the benefit of the brethren scattered abroad. Yours, looking for the ending of the 1335 days this year,

D. TAYLOR.

For the World's Crisis.

Bro. Merriam:—In looking over the Index to my Bible, my eye rested on the following—"Alliance with the wicked forbidden"—and the following passages noted; and I thought that those who love the truth would like to read them, so I copy them for your paper:— PETER.

And ye shall make no league with the inhabitants of this land; ye shall throw down their altars; but ye have not obeyed my voice; why have ye done this?—Jud. 2: 2.

And Jehu, the son of Hanani, the seer, went out to meet him, and said to king Jehoshaphat, Shouldst thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord.—[Chron. 19: 2.

Now, therefore, give not your daughters unto their sons, neither take their daughters unto your sons, nor seek their peace or their wealth forever; that ye may be strong and eat the good of the land, and leave it for an inheritance to your children forever.—[Ezra 9: 12.

And Ezra the priest stood up, and said unto them, Ye have transgressed, and have taken strange wives to increase the trespass of Israel.

Now therefore make confession unto the Lord God of your fathers, and do his pleasure; and separate yourselves from the people of the land, and from the strange wives.—Ezra 10: 10, 11.

That Sanballat and Geshem sent unto me, saying, Come, let us meet together in some one of the villages in the plain of Ono. But they thought to do me mischief.

And I sent messengers unto them, saying, I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down; why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down to you?—Neh. 6: 2, 3.

But were mingled among the heathen, and learned their works.

And they served their idols; which were a snare unto them.

Yea, they sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto devils.—Ps. 106: 35, 7.

My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.—Prov. 1: 10.

Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men.

Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away.—Prov. 4: 14, 15

Go from the presence of a foolish man, when thou perceivest not in him the lips of knowledge.—Prov. 14: 7.

Withhold thy foot from being unshod, and thy throat from thirst; but thou saidst, There is no hope: no, for I have loved strangers, and after them will I go.—Jer. 2: 25.

Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul; be not cut off in her iniquity; for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance; he will render unto her a recompence.—Jer. 51: 6.

Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them.

For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly;—and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple.—Rom. 16: 17, 18.

Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?

And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?—2 Cor, 6: 13, 14.

And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.—Eph. 5: 11.

That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world.—Phil. 2: 15.

Now we command you brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which ye received of us.—2 Thes 3: 6.

Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. 2 Pet. 3: 17.

And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.—Rev. 18: 4.

Facts connected with the reign of Justin.

"The following year, (519) Justin being consul with Eutharic, the son-in-law of Theodoric, king of Italy, all the orthodox bishops, who had been banished by Anastasius, were by the emperor's orders, restored to their sees, and several synods assembled, in which the DOCTRINE of the CHURCH WAS ESTABLISHED, and that of Eutyches condemned."—[Universal History, chapter 32, page 523.

"A. D., 519.—Justin restored all the orthodox bishops to their sees, and discouraged all sorts of heresies; and assembled several synods, wherein Eutychianism was particularly condemned."—[Ibid, p. 1076.

"Then Justin (in 519) by edicts and punishments, restrained the heretics and restored the Catholic bishops."—[Petavius, p. 266

"Now as Justin was AFFLICTING and TORMENTING the heretics, and especially the Arians, whose churches he joined to the Catholics."—[Ibid, p. 267.

"For Justin himself protected them (the Catholics) in the most signal manner, DURING HIS WHOLE REIGN, and suppressed without pity the Eutychians, Arians, and other heretics.—[Aquetil, p. 268

"In the year 519, Severus, Bishop of Antioch, a noted heretic, was banished from his church, and his tongue also—if we may determine by Evagrius' account of the matter—was cut out by the command of Justin, lest he should any longer be in a condition to continue his anathemas against the counsel of Chalcedon."—[History of the World, by Chevreau, vol 3, book 4, p. 152.

"The legates of Pope Hormisdas obtained at Constantinople, the condemnation of all Nestorians, Manicheans and Eutychians."—[Universal His., vol. 25, p. 77.

Allemans.

THE ALLEMANS, after A. D., 519, a DISTINCT nation, tributary first to the Goths, second to the Franks, but governed by their own laws until their defeat in A. D., 554.

"Now says the historian, if we may give credit to Afinnus Quadratus * * * * 'these Allemans are a strange and mixed people, which their name sufficiently testifies. Theodorich, king of the Goths, having now made himself master of Italy, had subdued them, and made them tributaries. As soon as he was dead, the war broke out between Justinian and the Goths; they' (the Goths) 'were forced to quit the nation of the Allemans,' and in A. D., 536, they 'were brought under dominion of Theodobald, son of Theodobert, king of the Franks. They began now, especially the wiser sort, to be civilized, and in their civil government, conformed themselves much to that of the Franks.'"

THE ALLEMANS invade Italy, A. D., 554.

"Theoderbold being of a mean spirit, and nothing fit for matters of war, was unwilling to involve himself in difficulties and dangers. But Leutherius and Batilinus, two brothers, for all that, contracted an alliance with them, being Allemans by nation, but of vast authority and power amongst the Franks, whom indeed they governed, being first brought in by the late king, Theoderbert. Having got an army of seventy thousand men together, they made themselves sure of the victory, concluding that Narses would not once dare to look them in the face, and that they should speedily become masters of both Italy and Sicily."—[Howell's History of the World.

Toleration under Theodosius.

"Theodosius was too good a politician to adopt a persecuting system. The temples, it is true, were shut up, sacrifices prohibited, and idols destroyed; but still the ancient opinions were entertained and tolerated; no universal conformity was requisite, and the civil and military honors of the empire were bestowed without distinction, on Christians and on Pagans. The utmost freedom was allowed in speech and in writing on the subject of religion, as is evident from the works of Zozimus, and Eunapius and others of the Platonic school, who attacked Christianity with the utmost virulence."—[Tytler's Hist., vol. 2, p. 10.

THE EASTERN QUARREL.—The advices brought by the Arabia, from Europe, a more detailed summary of which will be found in our columns to-day, present some striking features which are worthy of comment. The quasi war which has for several weeks existed between Russia and the Western Powers is likely to terminate very shortly in actual hostilities, it being stated, although not authentically, that a courier is on his way to St. Petersburg with a summons to the Czar to evacuate the principalties before the 30th of April. A refusal or a neglect to reply, it is further reported, is to be considered as a declaration of war. There can be no doubt as to the character of the reply. The Czar, who has haughtily spurned the temperate overtures of the Western Powers, is not likely to yield at this late day to a menacing demand. It is probable that the antagonistic powers are at this present moment in a state of avowed warfare, and we may, ere the lapse of manw weeks, look for stirring news from the Baltic and from the East Judging from the preparations making, the first actual collision may take place in the former sea.

The position of Austria and Prussia in the pending quarrel is by no means certainly determined. The statements are positive, it is true, that the former nation has sided with the Western Powers, but this we deem far from certain. The ties which connect her with Russia are too strong to be hastily ruptured for an alliance with powers towards whom she has no sympathy, and the government and institutions of one of which are antagonistic to her own despotic internal administration. She has little to gain by an alliance with the Western powers except a pledge of non-interference with revolutionary elements in her disaffected dependencies, while by siding with Russia she not only will obtain, prospectively, a share of dismembered Turkey, but will secure the firm friendship and assistance of the Czar in future struggles with her Hungarian and Italian subjects. For these and other reasons which we cannot give in this hasty summary, we distrust the reports of the sympathy alledged to exist between Austria and the Western Powers. She may endeavor for a while to maintain a neutral position, but she must ultimately be drawn into the struggle.

There is much which is contradictory in the movements of the Austrian government. She is undoubtedly concentrating large bodies of troops on her South-eastern frontiers, but for what ulterior purpose remains to be seen. We have a report that an imperial manifesto is about to appear, in which the Emperor of Austria will announce that he will not permit insurrectionary movements near his frontiers, and therefore his troops will enter Bosnia and Servia, and almost in the same breath we are told that the government has decided, in conjunction with the Western powers, to summon Russia to evacuate the principalities. While taking possession of two of the dependencies of Turkey, Austria is reported to be on the point of calling upon Russia to surrender those upon which she has seized! A policy so manifestly inconsistent would lead to the conclusion that the Austrian government is double-dealing. One thing is certain, if Austrian troops occupy Servia without the consent of the Porte, and without consulting the Western powers, it will be as much an act of hostility against Turkey as was committed by the Russians when they crossed the Pruth. We shall watch with much interest the course of the German powers, for upon the position which they assume will depend the character of the approaching struggle, and in some degree the claims which it will have upon the sympathies of the American people.

It would appear by the latest advices from India, that the Czar has actually been intriguing with the old enemy of the British in that quarter, Dost Mohammed, and his intrigues have been attended with some degree of success. Although an alliance between the Russians and the tribes in Affghanistan may assume a menacing appearance, yet there are physical obstacles which interpose an almost insurmountable barrier against an invasion of British India by Russian troops. Dost Mohammed would undoubtedly give the British much trouble, but would hardly create a very embarrasing diversion in favor of Russia, especially if Persia maintains her neutrality.—[Boston Journal.

CONSTANTINOPLE, FEB. 13. There is one new feature in the Turkish military proceedings, which fills us with hope.—Two French officers and one Englishman on the Danube have been appointed to positive military commands; also an Englishman in Asia. Their names are—M. Mercier, French captain of dragoons, who is appointed colonel, with the title of bey; Viscount Duppy, chasseurs d'Afrique, who is appointed lieutenant-colonel (these two officers are ordered to Kalatat); Mr. O'Reilly (an Englishman), who is to command two squadrons of lancers; and General Guyon, in Asia, appointed at the head of the engineering staff. This is the point of the wedge introduced, the grand difficulty in a fair way of solution. All the military disasters now, and in the late wars may clearly be traced to incapable native officers, and hitherto there has been an insurmountable objection to giving commands of any kind to Christians. They have been accepted as advisers only, in which capacity they had no power, and were treated with little respect or attention.

The embarkation of troops from Great Britain proceeds steadily; the Baltic fleet is being fitted up and equipped with all possible celerity; and Admiral Corry's squadron, from the Tagus, has arrived at Spithead. The naval force there now consists of sixteen sail of the line; but these, it is said, are not half the number intended to form the fleet for operations in the North Sea, and by the middle of the next week there would be at Spithead upwards of fifty sail. These if joined by the new French-fleet of thirty-nine sail, will make a floating armament such as the world never before beheld.

Bro. Whitaker:—In answer to you, I reply—faith in itself is a true and certain principle—but the application of the principle is not always so certain when committed to our erring judgment. God is true and what he says will come to pass; and therefore, when we believe anything that he declares, it is with us as sure as if we absolutely knew it, but when we depend on human testimony to settle a point, however strong the testimony may be, it cannot be reckoned equivalent to knowledge. We may know surely by faith that the coming of Christ is near even at the door, but in relation to this being the year, I think the testimony somewhat different, and yet I think it is so strong, that we ought to believe he will come. EDWIN BURNHAM.

We cut the following from the Boston Times.

The wind-storm of Saturday did much damage in Albany, Troy, Utica, and elsewhere in the Western part of New York. The most disastrous results occurred at Albany, where from fifty to a hundred buildings were unroofed or otherwise damaged The roofs were rolled up and blown away like paper, and even brick walls were in many instances thrown down.

In New York, the wind, which had been fresh all Friday night, began about sunrise on Saturday to blow steadily and strongly from the West. Of course the prominent feature there was dust. The air was filled all day with immense clouds, of a density which often prevented one from seeing across the sidewalk.

In Albany the gale continued to increase in intensity as the day advanced, and at 10 o'clock resembled a hurricane unparalleled in the history of the city Bricks from chimney tops were thrown about like snow flakes, and scuttles, borne by the blast, were sailing through the air like paper.

Between 10 and 11 o'clock the gale commenced its worst havoc, and has caused an immense destruction of property

The roof of the large store house and elevator, occupied by Fish & Co, and Smith, Patten & Co, on the North side of the Pier Cut, was torn from its fastenings and carried into the river.

South of State st. bridge the roofs of the stores occupied by Grant & Sayles and S Hales & Co., were swept away, part into the river and the remnant on the dock

Between 11 and 12 o'clock, the roofs of the five buildings belonging to the Stanton estate, and occupied by different tenants, were swept away like chaff before the wind.

The effects of the gale in Troy were also very disastrous Buildings were unroofed and blown down, piles of lumber scattered, boards, signs, chimneys and scuttles, slating and timbers flying about like feathers.

Among the buildings unroofed in Troy and vicinity were—The Eighth Ward school house, the new Presbyterian Church on Washington street; Willard's Elevator; Harrington and Warren's wool depot; Warren's, Hart and Leslie's store; seminary, Second street, half of Dr. Halley's church; Johnson, Cox & Co's foundry; portion of Mansion House; Tallmadge & Wood's wholesale boot and shoe store, Horace Herrington's store; Cohoe's Hotel, and windows demolished; Ort's new paper mill was nearly prostrated. Several buildings belonging to the iron companies blown down. Wooden buildings all over the city more or less damaged.

A man named James Hughes was killed by bricks falling upon him. Two other men were struck, but escaped with their lives by taking refuge under an omnibus.

The Eastern Question.

The beating of big drums about English honor, the show of great moral indignation at Russian perfidy, the vision of England's floating batteries defiling along the walls of Sevastopol and Cronstadt, the tumult of arms and the ostentatious embarkation of troops, all these dramatic incidents quite bewilder the public understanding, and raise a mist before its eyes, which allowed it to see nothing save its own delusions. Can there exist a greater delusion then believing this Ministry, after the revelations made by the blue books, to have been all at once transformed not only into a warlike Ministry, but into a Ministry that could undertake any war against Russia except a simulated one, or one carried on in the very interest of the enemy against whom it is ostensibly directed? Let us look at the circumstances under which the war-like preparations are made.

No formal declaration of war is made against Russia. The very object of the war the Ministry is not able to avow Troops are embarked without the place of their destination being distinctly described. The estimates asked for are too small for a great war and too great for a small one. The coalition, who have grown notorious for ingenuity displayed in hatching pretexts for not keeping their most solemn promises and reasons for delaying the most urgent reforms, all at once feel themselves bound by overscrupulous adherence to pledges rashly given to complicate this momentous crisis, by surprising the country with a new reform bill, deemed inopportune by the most ardent reformers, imposed by no pressure from without, and received on all sides with the utmost indifference and suspicion. What then can be their plan but to divert public attention from their external policy by geting up a subject of overwhelming domestic interest.

Transparent efforts are now made to misguide the public as to the situation of England in respect to foreign States. No binding treaty has yet been concluded with France, but a substitute has been provided by "notes exchanged." Now, such notes were exchanged in 1839, with the cabinet of Louis Philippe, by virtue of which the allied fleets were to enter the Dardanelles, and to arrest the intervention of Russia in the affairs of the East, either singly or collectively with other powers, and we all know what came out of the notes exchanged then—a Holy Alliance against France and the treaty of the Dardanelles. The sincerity and the earnestness of the Anglo French alliance may be inferred from a Parliamentary incident in yesterday's sitting of the Commons. Bonaparte, as you have seen in the Moniteur, threatens the Greek insurrectionists, and has sent a similar remonstrance to the Government of King Otho. Sir T. Walsh having interrogated the Ministry on this point, Lord John Russell declared that "he was aware of no understanding between the French and English Governments in the matter alluded to, and had not been able to see the Ministers of Foreign Affairs on the subject. His impression was, however, that no such remonstrance had been sent by the Government of France, and certainly not with the consent of, or in concert with, the Government of this country."

If the British Government intend a real war with Russia, why do they anxiously eschew the international forms of declaring war? If they intend a real alliance with France, why do they studiously shun the legalized forms of international alliance. As to the German powers, Sir James Graham declares that they have entered an alliance with England, and Lord John Russell on the same evening contradicts him, stating that the relations with those powers are in fact the same as at the begining of the Eastern complication. According to the very statement of the ministers, they are just now about coming to terms with Turkey and proposing a treaty with her They are embarking troops, with a view to occupying Constantinople, without having beforehand concluded a treaty with Turkey We are, then, not to be surprised at learning from a Constantinople letter that a secret agent of the Porte has been sent from Vienna to St. Petersburg to propose to the Czar a private settlement. "It would be rational," says the correspondent, "that the Turks, after discovering "the treachery and folly of their pretended "friends, should seek to avenge themselves by "contracting an alliance with a wise enemy. "The terms of settlement, the former are endeavoring to settle on Turkey, are ten times "more ruinous than the Menchikoff claims."

The prospect of what the embarked troops are intended to do, at least in the opinion of the English Ministry, may be justly inferred from what the united squadrons have done and are doing at the present moment Twenty days after having entered the Black Sea they return to the Bosphorus. A few days previous, we are informed, "the Ministers of the Porte, out of deference for the remonstrances of the British Embassador, had to put in prison the editor of the Greek journal, The Telegraph of the Bosphorus, for having said in his paper that both the English and French fleets would shortly return from the Euxine to the Bosphorus. The editor of the Journal of Constantinople was authorized to declare that both fleets were to continue their stay in the Euxine." In order to show his deference for the intimation received from the British and French Admirals, the Russian Admiral on the 19th ult, sent out two steamers to bombard the Turks at Shefketil; and Russian steamers cruise in sight of Trebizond, while no vessels belonging to the United squadron are in the Black Sea, except an English and a French steamer, off Sevastopol; Sinope, then, and the bombardment of Shefketil by Russian steamers, are the only feats the united squadrons have to boast of. The quarrel between the Embassadors and the Admirals, all relations between whom have come to a dead stand, Lord Stratford de Redcliffe refusing to receive Admiral Dundas, and Baraguay d'Hilliers excluding from a state ball the French Admiral and his officers,—this quarrel is of minor importance, as the diplomatic triflers being compromised by the publication of their dispatches at London and Paris, may strive to rescue, at any risk of ships and crews, their lost reputation.

But the serious side of the question is, that the public instructions given to the Embassadors were countermanded by a set of secret instructions forwarded to the Admirals, and that the latter are really incapable of executing instructions which are self-contradictory—and how could they be otherwise, no declaration of war having preceded them? On the one hand they are ordered to attack Russian ships in order to enforce their withdrawal from the Euxine to Sevastopol, and on the other, not to swerve from the more 'defensive.' Lastly, if a serious war be intended, how could the British Embassador at Constantinople have regarded it as an important triumph to have got the leader of the war party in the Turkish ministry.—Mehemid Ali Pasha—turned out of his office as War Minister, having him replaced by the peace-mongering Riza Pasha, while he entrusted Mehemet Pasha, a creature of Reshid Pasha, with the office of Grand Admiral?

Now look at another most important point. The embarkation of the British and French troops is only proceeded with after the news of a Greek insurrection having broken out in Albania, and being spread over Thessaly and Macedonia, has reached London and Paris. This insurrection was from the first anxiously waited for on the part of the English Cabinet, as is proved by the dispatches of Russell, Clarendon and Lord Stratford de Redcliffe. It gives them the best occasion to interfere between the Sultan and his own Christian subjects on the plea of interfering between the Russians and the Turks. From the moment that the Latins interfere with the Greeks (I use this word here only in the religious sense), you may be sure of a concert becoming established between 11,000,000 inhabitants of European Turkey and the Czar, who will then really appear as their religious protector. There exists no polemical schism between the Musulmans and their Greek subjects, but the religious animosity against the Latins may be said to form the only common bond between the different races inhabiting Turkey and professing the Greek creed.

Any interference, then, on the part of the Western Powers, between the Sultan and his Greek subjects, must favor the plans of the Czar. A similar result will be brought about should Austria, as she did in 1791, undertake to occupy Servia on the pretext of thwarting the treasonable designs of the Russian party in that Principality. Let me add that it is rumored at London that the insurged Epirates were supported and joined by Greeks from the Ionian Islands, who had not been checked by the English authorities, and that the news of the Greek insurrection was announced by The Times, the coalition organ, in Saturday's number, as a most opportune event.

I, for my part, have no doubt at all that treachery lurks behind the clamorous war preparations of the coalition. Bonaparte is of course in good earnest in embarking in the war. He has no alternative left but revolution at home or war abroad. He cannot any longer continue, as he does, to couple the cruel despotism of Napoleon I with the corrupt peace policy of Louis Philippe. He must stop sending new batches of prisoners to Cayenne if he dare not simultaneously send French armies beyond the frontiers. But the conflict between the avowed intentions of Bonaparte and the secret plans of the coalition can only contribute to further embroil matters. What I conclude from all this is, not that there will be no war, but, on the contrary, that it will assume such terrible and revolutionary dimensions as are not even suspected by the little men of the coalition.—Their very perfidy is the means of transforming a local conflict into an European conflagration.

Even if the British Ministry were as sincere as they are false, their intervention could not but accelerate the downfall of the Ottoman Empire. They cannot interfere without demanding pledges for the Christian subjects of the Porte, and these pledges they cannot wrest from it without dooming it to ruin. Even the Constantinople correspondent I quoted before, and who is an avowed Turkophile, cannot but own that "the proposal of the Western Powers to put all the subjects of the Porte on a perfect footing of civil and religious equality, will lead at once to anarchy, intestine warfare, and a final and speedy overthrow of the empire."—[Corres. of N. The Redeemed.

I saw a bright, a holy throng,
A countless multitude;
Of every kindred, people, tongue,—
They were the pure and good.

Before the eternal throne they stood,
In presence of the Lamb;
They'd washed their robes in Jesus' blood,
And triumphed through his name.

"Salvation to our God," they cried,
"Which sitteth on the throne;"
"Salvation to the Lamb" that died;
Redemption's work is done.

Their tribulation now is past;
The Church's sufferings o'er;
Her triumph shall forever last;
Her glory evermore.

"Our Father, let thy kingdom come;"
O haste the glorious day;
Gather thy waiting people home,
And wipe all tears away.

NOTICE. While so many are doubting the truthfulness of our position, I could wish that all could examine the historical evidence for themselves. Bower's History of the Popes shows plainly that the saints were given into the hands of the little horn in 519, and that the 1260 ended in 1779, and the 1260, in 1809.

Those who are able, will never regret purchasing Bower's History. There are only 11 more sets that can be had at any price, as the edition is out, and another edition will not be published at present.

Any one by sending $5 to the office of the "Crisis," can have a set (3 volumes,) sent to them by Express. This is $2 less than they have been retailed for by the publishers.

I hope that those who can, will avail themselves of this opportunity, that they may act understandingly on the subject. The Lord is at hand. P.

Business Items.

Bro. S. B. Marshall, of Mich., is informed that the charts to which he alluded can be had at this office, price $3. Several different lines of prophecy are taken up and followed through to the end

If Brother W. G. Ray will give us his address we will fill his order. Be particular and give the State

If Bro. Geo. E. Hooper will give us his address, town and State, we will fill his order for books.

One Brother has ordered an additional quantity of papers to make the number 15, but forgot to give either his name or address, of course his order cannot be attended to

Will E. Manelly inform us if the Crisis has been sent to him at any other address than Unionville, Ct., and if so, to what place?

We have continual calls for back numbers of the Crisis and doubtless some brethren are disappointed in not receiving them. But we cannot furnish back numbers from the commencement. Such as we have we send when ordered.

The edition (3,000) of "The Grand Crisis in Human Affairs," is nearly exhausted, and as we intend to issue another edition soon, those who have sold out the work for us would oblige if they will forward the amount soon as convenient, that we may have the means of defraying the expense of the next issue in cash payment.—[ED.

The Bibles, for which Bro. Emmerson enquired are not kept at this office.

The Lithographic Charts and Pilgrim's Songster, published by Eld J. Cummings, can be had of him at Concord, N. H., or by applying to J. French, of Lowell.

The Lithographic Charts can be sent by mail for 10 cents, prepaid, anywhere within 300 miles. Price of the Charts, $3,00. "Bible vs. Tradition," can also be obtained of Bro. French.

Bower's History of the Popes, price $5, and the Syriac Testament, price $2, are also for sale at this office.

P. O. Address.—S. B. Munn, Bridgewater, Vermont.

Special Notice.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige and save us immense labor and perplexity if they will strictly adhere to the following rules:

1. Over all communications designed to be published write, For the World's Crisis.

2. Over all communications not designed for the public write, Private.

3. At the head of all letters write the date, never failing to give the STATE, and also County, if written from the Middle, Western or Southern States.

4. Write all orders for the paper or for books on a page by itself, beginning thus, Order for the Crisis, or, Order for books, as the case may be.

5. At the close of each letter containing money write the amount, and to whom it is to be credited.

6. Be careful to write names and P. O. addresses in a legible hand.

7. In returning papers write on the paper the name and P. O. address of the person to whom it had been sent.

8. In preparing matter for the Crisis we hope our correspondents will adopt, as the most important and indispensible of all rules, the practice of commending the subject to God, praying fervently for light to be reflected on the position of the Church, and for heavenly manna to feed and nurture the little flock unto eternal life—also, that sinners may be induced to flee from impending wrath, and take refuge in the ark before the deluge takes them all away.

9. Let the letters and communications be carefully read over, corrected, and, if need be, re-written, punctuated and prepared for the press, so far as the writer has ability so to do. If, however, the writer does not understand punctuation, &c., the Editor is just as willing, and if possible more so, to serve the humblest member of the flock in bringing his or her sentiments and feelings before the public, as those who have been favored with higher educational advantages, provided only they write under the influence of the Spirit of God.

In sending out eight thousand papers, it would not be strange if some mistakes should be attributable to us, others, it may be, to the Post Offices, and others still to the neglect of subscribers to give their proper Post Office address. We hope in such cases brethren will exercise a little patience, and write us, if necessary, so that we may rectify all mistakes which it will ever afford us pleasure to do.

All letters of business in relation to the World's Crisis, or to books sold at the office of the Crisis, or letters containing payment for "the grand crisis in human affairs" and "the Advent Hymn-book," must in future be directed to Jonas Merriam, Editor of the World's Crisis.

Bro. Merriam:—By request I forward you the following lines: H. Paine.

We are passing away, but we are homeward bound,
We shall meet where the holy ones dwell,
Where the sweet gliding waters of life are found,
And the heart never sighs farewell.
Here bitter drops flow in our sweetest cup,
And thorns are in all our flowers;
There we'll drink from the fount where angels [sup,
And roam 'mid the thornless bowers.

We've tempests to brave, and rough surges to breast,
We have sorrowing, and sadness, and gloom,
But lightly they sit as a gossamer vest,
For we're going were joys ever bloom.
Oft the unbidden tear forth in bitterness steals,
And the form goes low bending with pain,
And the spirit is pressed with the woes that it feels—
But O! why should we ever complain?

We have trials too, but we'll leave them all,
At the gate of our Eden home;
Why speak of the thorn, or the pain, or the gall,
When the glory so soon is to come?
We shall meet our King on his bridal morn,
Who a costly ransom hath given,
To waft us away from the fires that burn,
To the glory-clad mountains of heaven.

Then, brother, cheer up, and gather thy wings,
For thy long sought blissful home;
For hearken! the Trump's glad echo rings,
And the angels are bidding thee come.
We are passing away, but we are homeward bound,
We shall meet where the holy ones dwell,
Where the sweet gliding waters of life are found,
And none ever murmur farewell.

Southbridge, March 3, 1854.

Time of the Advent.

I have frequently heard it remarked that such a harmony as Bro. Miller presented in his calculations, both for the comencement, and termination of the prophetic periods, never could be presented again; but, thank God, the darkness is past, and the glorious light of divine truth is now shining. We have now a harmony, both in the commencement and termination of those prophetic periods, which not only surpasses that of Bro. Miller, but that amounts to almost a positive certainty.—Bro. Miller erred, as all can see, in giving to the 1260 and 1290 days two different starting points; whereas the Angel gives one event to mark the beginning of both. (Dan. 12: 11.) "And from the time the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the month, and a half, added." (Barker Bible.) To my mind the evidence is conclusive that the event named by the Angel marks the starting point of the 1260—1290 and 1335 days, (years.)

We will now show the harmony in their commencement and termination.

"After the death of Anastasius, the diadem had been placed on the head of a feeble old man, but the powers of government were assumed by the nephew of Justin, viz. (Justinian) who already meditated the exterpation of heresy, and the conquest of Italy and Africa. A rigorous law was published at Constantinople to reduce the Arians, by the dread of punishment, within the pale of the Church."—And in a letter addressed to Justin, by Theodoric, we have this sharp reproof, "That to pretend to a dominion, over the conscience, is to usurp the prerogative of God; that by the nature of things, the power of the sovereign is confined to external government; and that they have no right of punishment, but over those who disturb the public peace; of which they are the guardians; that the most dangerous heresy is that of a sovereign, who seperates from himself a part of his subjects, because they believe not according to his belief." (Gibbon Vol. 4.) Justin, while under the influence of Catholicism, together with the pope himself, did, as Theodoric says, usurp the prerogatives of God.—The watchword of Justin and the pope was, "give the heretics no quarter."—They proscribed them, in matters of faith. Hence we believe this is the period, (A. D. 519) when the "daily, was taken away and the abomination that maketh desolate set up." Much more might be said in defence of this position, but we pass to notice the termination of these periods; and first, we understand the time of the 1290 days (years) is the duration of papal dominion from the time it was conferred, A. D. 519. The time of 1260 days, (years,) is the duration of the tribulation of the church in the wilderness, the prophesying of the two witnesses.

I. So passing down the stream of time from A. D. 519, 1260 years, we are brought to 1779, and find that the tribulation ended there, I think, from the following facts: 1st, Jesus said Matt. 24: 29, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days, the sun shall be darkened." Now history shows that the sun was darkened on the 19th of May, 1780, and also that the tribulation ended, just prior to that date. Here then we have the darkening of the sun as a sign of the near approach of the Son of man; and it demonstrates the fact that the 1260 days, (years), had ended.

2d, The witnesses were to prophesy 1260 days (years) clothed in sackcloth, and when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascended out of the abyss, shall make war against them, and overcome them, and kill them, Rev. ii, 3, 7. That France was the beast, and fulfilled this prophesy, her history of 1793, is clearly demonstrated, and the fact is here announced, that this "beast" was not to ascend till after the 1260 days (years) had expired; and hence we believe that they did expire, prior to this event.

II. From A. D. 519, we pass on 1290 days, and we are brought to the year 1809, for the terminus of papal dominion. "Intent upon providing for every branch of his family, the grand duchy of Tuscany was revived by Napoleon, in 1809, and conferred on his sister Eliza, princess of Lucca and Piombino. The grand duchy of Berg vacated by the removal of his brother-in-law, Joachim Murat to the throne of Napoleon, was given to Louis his nephew, son of the king of Holland, and on the 17th of May, the popes temporalities were declared to be incorporated with the French dominions and the title of king of Rome, appropriated to the imperial prince, heir of the French empire. The situation of the papal territories, between the kingdoms of Italy and Naples, was such, as in hostile hands might be made use of, to intercept the communication between the two, and therefore the pope who appeared friendly to England, was likely to be despoiled of his dominions, but to receive a revenue of two millions of francs.—On the 20th of March 1811, Napoleon was gratified with the birth of a son, who, according to the arrangements already spoken of was immediately dignified with the title of King of Rome." Tytlers Hist. Page 361.

"The last act of violence at length arrived; on the 17th of May 1809, a decree was issued from the French camp, at Schoenbrunn, which delared that the states of the pope are united to the French empire. The city of Rome, so interesting from its reccollections, and the first seat of christianity, is declared an imperial, and free city, and that these changes should take effect on the 1st of June following.—On the 10th of June, these decrees were announced, by the discharge of artillery from the castle of St. Angelo, and the hoisting of the tri-colored flag on its walls, instead of the venerable pontifical standard. "It is consummated!" exclaimed cardinal Pacca, and the Pope at the same instant; and immediately having obtained a copy of the decree, which the dethroned pontiff read with calmness, he authorized the publication of the bull of excommunication against Napoleon, and all concerned in spoliation, for which in anticipation of such an event, he had been some time before prepared by the secret council of the vatican. Early on the following morning, this bull was affixed to all the usual places, particularly the churches of St. Peter, Santa Maria, Maggione, St. Johns, with such secrecy as to be without the knowledge or suspicion of the police. It was torn down as soon as it was discovered, and taken to Gen. Meollis, who forthwith forwarded it to the Emperor at his camp at Vienna.

"Accidental circumstances, however, precipitated matters more quickly than Napoleon intended, and gave him possession of the person of the Pope within a few days after the publication of the bull of excommunication. Measures of the last severity had been taken in vain; the palace of the Quirinal was surrounded with soldiers, a battery of forty pieces of cannon was established directly opposite its gates; but still the spirit of the illustrious captives was unsubdued, and no indications of a disposition to recall the fulminating decree had appeared. Moillis deemed the state of matters so alarming in the beginning of July, that he entered into communications with Murat at Naples; and their united opinion was, that it was indispensable to get immediate possession of the pope's person, and remove him into France. In pursuance of this determination, which, though not expressly known to, or authorized by the Emperor, was doubtless in conformity with his prior instructions and known to be agreeable to his wishes.—Moillis sent for Gen. Radet on the 4th of July, and communicated to him his design of carrying off the pope, and trusting the execution of the delicate task to him.—Radet, albeit, horror-struck with the task thus imposed on him, knew his duty too well to hesitate in obeying his instructions; a strong battalion of troops arrived on the following day from Naples, and the military dispositions were quickly completed. At ten at night on the 5th, the Quirinal was surrounded by three regiments; thirty men escaladed the walls of the garden in profound silence, and took post under the windows of the palace; fifty more succeeded in effecting an entrance by the window of an uninhabited room, and having dispersed some groups of domestics, who, on the first alarm, hastily assembled together, the gates were thrown open and Radet entered at the head of the troops who were ordered to arrest the Pope and Cardinal Pacca, and conduct them immediately out of Rome.

"The Pope and cardinal were arrested, and "at the first post-house he wished to give some charity to a poor person, but upon inquiry of Cardinal Pacca he found that between them they had only a papetto or ten pence. He showed it smilingly to Radet, saying, Behold, General, all we possess of our principality." Here we perceive that according to the Popes own confession on the 6th of July, 1809, a ten pence was all he possessed of all his dominion. The gift of the dragon is now reversed, and that kingdom that had stood the shocks of 1290 years now lies prostrate. The king whose predecessors had ruled in such splendor and power on the ancient throne of the Cæsars, now a feeble captive, on his way to imprisonment and exile in a foreign land. The crowns of the three kingdoms which the Popes of Rome had worn with so much pride and arrogance, now lies in the dust. For 1290 years the Popes had wielded the sceptre of power, but now this sceptre falls from his hand; neither the legitimacy of the title, nor the sanction of 1290 years, can protect him, or save his kingdom from ruin,—and why? Because the 1290 years for the existence of his kingdom are expired. To be sure the Pope now reigns in Rome, but not by virtue of the gift of the dragon; but by the authority of two Protestants, one Greek, and one or two Catholic Sovereigns of Europe. But that we may prove the entire extirpation, or extinction of the government, established by Justinian, we will give another extract of history. "The situation of the city of Rome was unquestionably improved by its transferrence from the drowsy sway of the Church, to the energetic administration of Napoleon. Shortly after the annexation of the Roman states to the French emperor, it was declared the second city in the empire. To a deputation from Rome, shortly after its corporation with the French Empire, Napoleon replied,—"My mind is full of the recollections of your ancestors." The first time that I passed the Alps, I desired to remain some time with you. The French Emperors, my predecessors, had detached you from the territory of the Empire; but the good of my people no longer permits such a partition, France and Italy must be governed by the same system. You have need of a powerful hand to direct you. I shall have a singular pleasure in being your benefactor. Your bishop is the spiritual head of the Church, as I am its Emperor; "I render unto God the things which are God's, and to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's." The official exposition of the state of the Empire at the close of this year, portrayed in vivid colors, the advantages which would arise from the government of all Italy, under one system, and proclaimed the fixed determination of the Emperor, never to infringe upon the spiritual authority, nor ever to permit again the temporal sovereignty of the Church."—[Allison iii, 283, 284, 285.

"But Napoleon went straight forward to his mark. He caused Ancona and Urbins to be occupied; and after the rejection of his ultimatum, wherein, among other things, he claimed the right of nominating a third of the cardinals, he marched his troops upon Rome. The cardinals who were not obsequious to him were dismissed; the Pope's Secretary twice. But when all this failed to have any effect on Pius VII., even his person was not spared. He too was carried away from his palace and capital. A Senatus consultum was then passed, declaring the incorporation of the ecclesiastical states with the French Empire. The temporal sovereignty was declared incompatible with the exercise of spiritual privileges; the Pope was for the future formally to pledge himself to the four principles of the Gallican church; he was to draw his income from real estates, almost as a fundatory of the empire; the state would take upon itself all the expense of the College of Cardinals. And this was not all that was exacted of him. He was hurried to Fontainebleau with an impatient haste that aggravated his bodily infirmities; there he was beset with fresh importunities, and the most urgent demands that he should fully restore the church. At last, so far was he wrought on, that he gave way on the remaining, the decisive points. He consented to reside in France, and acquiesced in the most essential provisions of the "Senatus consultum," before mentioned.

"The autocrat of the revolution had now actually achieved what no Catholic sovereign before him had ever ventured to contemplate seriously. "The Pope agreed to become subject to the French Empire."—[Rank's History of the Popes, page 318.

The Restoration.

"The Empire of which the Pope was now to constitute the hierarchial centre, was still involved in dubious warfare with invincible foes. In the solitude of his imprisonment, the Pope received no accurate intelligence of the mighty vicissitudes of the strife. At the very moment when, after such lengthened resistance, he at last gave way, Napoleon had already broken down in his last grand enterprise against Russia; and his power had been shaken to its base by all the inevitable consequences of that mischance. Already Europe caught up the almost abandoned hope of liberating herself. 'When the Pope, to whom, on his submission, a few cardinals were allowed access, was informed of the state of things, he too felt his confidence revive; he felt every step of the allied powers to be an act of liberation for himself.

"When Prussia rose in prompt obedience to the King's call, Pius VII. gathered courage to revoke the concordat extorted from him; when the congress of Prague had assembled, he ventured to look beyond the boundaries of the Empire that held him captive, and to remind the Emperor of Austria of his right. After the battle of Leipsic his confidence had risen so much that he rejected the offer made him of restoring part of his dominions; and when the allies had crossed the Rhine, he would enter no farther into negotiations till he had been fully reinstated. Events followed each other with the utmost rapidity;—when the allies took Paris, the Pope was already arrived at the confines of the ecclesiastical states; and on the 24th of May 1814, he entered Rome again. A new age was begun for the world, and a new era for the Roman see. 'It was the victory of the four great allied powers, three of which were anti-Catholic; over that one, which thought to make its own capital, the centre of catholicism, that set the Pope free, and embled him to return to Rome. It was to the three anti-Catholic monarchs alone, who were then assembled in London, that the Pope's wish to recover the entire states of the church was first submitted. How often in former days had the resources of these states been strained to effect the destruction of Protestantism, whether in England or in Germany, and to propagate the Roman Catholic doctrine in Russia, or in Scandinavia; and now it was to the interferance of the rulers of these anti-Catholic countries that the Pope was to owe his restoration to his dominions. In the allocution in which Pius VII communicated to the cardinals the happy result of his negotiations, he expressly extolled the services of the sovereigns 'not belonging to the Roman church; the Emperor of Russia, who had taken his rights into consideration, with extraordinary attention; as also the King of Sweden, and the Prince regent of England, as well as the King of Prussia, who had declared in his favor, throughout the whole course of the negotiations." Differences of creeds were for the moment forgotten; political considerations alone were regarded.—[Rank's Hist. of the Popes, p. 319.

In relation to the 2300 days, (years) I will simply say that God has set his seal upon that period, in the fulfillment of the 70 weeks; the sentiment of Gabriel (Dan. 9) when fully expressed, appears to be, "Understand the matter and consider the vision; and, to enable thee to do this, know thou that 70 weeks are determined, upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, or, are cut off for thy people and thy holy city, to finish the transgression," &c., and to make sure the vision and prophecy as a thing unalterably fixed and sealed; which shall thus be made unto those who succeed thee, when these weeks are fulfilled. In the manner and from the date that the 70 weeks are fulfilled, let their faith be established that the 2300 days are sure; and "know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem," &c., the 2300 days shall begin.

There are four orders which were given at different times, through the space of 92 years, from the Persian court, in favor of the Jewish place and people; the three first more especially concern the building of the temple, as we see by reading Ezra. 1: 1—4, 6: 6—12, 7: 12—27. The fourth is found to be the only one which accords with the terms of prophecy. The fourth was given "to restore and to build Jerusalem," Nehemiah 2: 1—6.

It is not only obvious that this commission best corresponds with the terms of the prophecy, viz, "to restore and to build Jerusalem," but, from Neh. 1: 2 and 4 it is equally obvious that unto the time of this commission, Jerusalem had lain a heap of ruins; and that by Nehemiah the streets and walls were built "in troublous times." The date for this decree, as given by Usher, is B. C. 446. Four hundred and forty-six years of this prophecy expired, then, at the advent of our Saviour, according to the vulgar era, If to these years we add 1854 we obtain 2300.

Sinner, the great day of God is at hand; prepare to meet it in peace. World-loving and pleasure-seeking church member, your external garb of religion will not hide your sins in that burning day; the omniscent eye of Jehovah will search out the most secret and hidden recesses of your impure heart. O, put away your sins now, that you may stand justified when the Son of Man shall appear. And ye meek and holy followers of the Lamb, who cry and sigh on account of the abominations that are committed in the land, and who are looking for the coming of the Lord, keep your garments pure. Seeing ye look for such things be holy in all manner of conversation and godliness. Let no man take your crown. It will soon be given to all who endure to the end. Amen.

For the World's Crisis.

Sound an Alarm in my Holy Mountain.

Joel 2: 1.

Would to God I could tear away the false hopes on which, without doubt, hundreds of the Advent brethren are resting! Alas, what a strange infatuation has seized upon our minds! What dreadful folly to suppose, or for a moment to admit, that we can attain to translation—be "caught up to meet the Lord in the air," except we constantly "walk with God"—live every moment "by faith on the Son of God," and know in ourselves, hour by hour, that our ways please him. Some of us are dealing in jewelry, and such like useless and hurtful trash; many, very many dress their persons—not indeed like "pilgrims and strangers"—but much like the mass of fashionable worldlings around them.—But where are those who are striving with all their hearts, to get ready, and to keep ready, for the coming of the great day of God?

Say, my brethren, why will you live carelessly on, when you know that a part of the virgins will be found destitute of oil, without an abiding consciousness that you possess it? How true the words of the Savior, "while the Bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept." Awake my drowsy brethren! How can you sleep thus on the verge of the Judgment? What good will your empty speculations about truth (i. e., a portion of truth but unaccompanied by the Spirit) do you when Jesus comes? Ah, your accumulated knowledge—the assent of the understanding only—knowledge which has not led you carefully to "purify yourselves even as he is pure;" yes, the very truth itself, will fearfully aggravate your condemnation. Surely it is a wonder that those who "look for such things," should be thus indifferent, selfish and worldly! Look at the Church in by-gone days,—witness it in the days of the Apostles. What self-denial—what love to God, and each other—what intense burning desire to do good to all around characterized it. In contrast to this, consider the lukewarm state which the Church called the "Bride the Lamb's wife" is in at the present time! And is she fit to be translated to meet her living Lord—the "crucified Lamb"—the "king of kings" while thus "down by the cold streams of Babylon?" Never, never! Many of my brethren in the "blessed hope" will never, I fear, see the Lord in peace in the way they are now living! Beloved brethren, if you will in the face of all, still sleep on till Jesus comes, and finds you without oil, you will then have it to reflect upon, that you might have known what your dreadful state would be, but wilfully shut your eyes to such an unwelcome truth.—I feel to cry out in the language of Moses, "Oh that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end."

O the delusive chimera, which permits us to believe, or live on as though we believed that we, who should be the most devoted Christians that have ever lived, in accordance to the vast amount of light which we have enjoyed, can be saved without equal, if not greater faith than that of sanctified ones who have lived before us! Where is the passage of the Word of God upon which a reasonble hope may be founded, that you or I shall be admitted into the Kingdom, without we are found wholly consecrated, and sanctified to God? Such a passage cannot be found. Satan flatters us that we shall some how or other get into the Kingdom, without this character! But, Oh, the dreadful result of believing this snare of the enemy!! Let us not, my brethren, dream of being translated to meet the Lord, at any cheaper rate, than was the Prophet, who was our predecessor, and pattern. But where is the faith of Elijah? Ah, where?

I beseech you, my brethren, awake to righteousness and sin not! Abandon all hope of reaching the Kingdom, while destitute of that holiness without which no man shall see the Lord. It was prepared only for "him that overcometh." Its heirs are only those who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality. Oh the unutterable anguish that awaits you, if when it is too late, you find that your eternal all—your hopes of everlasting life, were built upon a sandy foundation!

Bear with me, my brethren, I feel compelled to give utterance to the conviction of my own mind, which is that your faith is in many instances but the assent of the understanding only—mere speculative, and not saving faith. It is my decided conviction that numbers who profess the faith of soon seeing Jesus, are resting their hopes for eternity on theoretical faith merely!—that they are without appropriating faith—that they do not exercise humble, implicit, childlike confidence in God, as their Father—Christ, as their own loving Savior; hence, are but "aliens" and not "sons."

Attend to the deep heart work. It is that, which will render you prepared to meet the Lord, or you will speedily witness the greatest of all events, and go to the Judgment unprepared! Oh how many seem to take it for granted, (practically, though probably they will by no means admit it,) that all is right between themselves and God, because forsooth they believe in the speedy coming of the Lord! How will they abide the day of his coming? What confusion and horror will seize them when their slighted, angry Judge, arrayed in terrific splendor, with a countenance like lightning, upbraids them for having misimproved the immense amount of light and knowledge, which he had bestowed upon them—an amount distinguishing them far above any other race of Christians, that ever lived!! It is high time to awake out of sleep," "lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping." H. P. Sikes.

Wolcott, Vt., March 10th, 1854.

The insignificance of the Pope.

We have not seen the matter adverted to, but there is nothing which has more deeply impressed us with the waning influence of Popery, than the utter INSIGNIFICANCE of the Pope in connection with the great struggle which seems now about to commence in Europe. The time was when in all the conflicts which were anticipated, he was the first of all to be consulted, and when his word was all-powerful in determining the course of action: when princes sought his favor, and emperors bowed before him humbly acknowledging his supremacy. History records scenes in which kings have exhibited the most abject and degrading submission to his authority, not daring to take one step in opposition to his expressed wishes.

What is the case now? Europe appears about to be convulsed with war. Almost every power, even to that of the weakest state, is the subject of speculation as to its course in the coming strife; but we do not even hear the question proposed as to what may be the thoughts of the Pope. He is left out of view ENTIRELY, and his intentions are no more seriously called in question than those of the Emperor of Hayti.

To our minds this appears a most significant fact. It shows in an unquestionable form that the POWER OF THE PAPACY HAS PASSED AWAY. THE POPE IS NOW OF NO MORE ACCOUNT AMONG THE SOVEREIGNS OF EUROPE, and what he may THINK OR DESIRE has really NO MORE INFLUENCE, than when he stood as a footman on the back of a carriage on his way out of Rome, during the late revolution. It may be said that these remarks will apply only to the temporal power of the Pope, but his spiritual supremacy and influence have been in a great measure dependent upon the temporal. And when he who once claimed to be the arbiter in all disputes between princes, and kings, and who often exercised his authority in the most haughty and domineering manner, becomes SO INSIGNIFICANT THAT NO ONE DOES HIM REVERENCE; when the whole map of a European war is laid out without consulting the Pope, or thinking of his wishes, it is A SURE SIGN THAT THE DAY OF HIS POWER HAS PASSED.—N. What ought Protestants to do at this Crisis.

But the question remains, What ought British Protestants to do at this crisis?—That it is a crisis is manifest. Rome does not even seek to deceive us. She tells us more plainly than words could tell us, by deeds which sound through all Europe, that torture and the stake await every man who is not base enough to abjure his faith whenever she shall have grasped the power she is now moving earth and hell to attain.—One warning more, plain and loud, has been given to a slumbering people; and on the way on which we shall improve it will probably depend the issue of the conflict to us. It summons us to stand and combine for our liberties. The ground is fast sinking beneath us. In a little, defence will be impossible.

Let us look along the Papal front, and see how ominously the battle threatens us, and how it comes nearer us every hour. Popery is again the ruler of the great despotisms on the Continent. Though weak in moral power, Rome is strong in political and military force. The great armed masses of France, and Austria, and Naples, and Spain, are at her service. And though we believe these powers would not engage in a crusade on purely religious grounds, they have, unhappily, a political interest in the subjugation of Britain. The Pope would invade us because we are a Protestant nation. The English pervert, Father Ignatius has just accomplished a tour among the leading sovereigns, with considerable success, as he tells us in the Tablet, in order to enlist them in a crusade for the conversion of England.—This conversion is to be brought about "chiefly," though not exclusively, "by prayer." Indeed, if this fanatic had not the sword mainly in his eye, it is strange that he should go to emperors and such people. A bitter, fierce, and exasperated spirit is springing up against our country abroad. The most terrible threats have been publicly pointed against us; they have been so simultaneously in different quarters of Europe, and without disavowal. The utter extirpation of our faith and race and name, and the trampling out of the ashes of the Reformation, have been declared to be necessary before the world can have peace. In concert with these terrible mutterings from the suppressed volcano of sacerdotal wrath, there have been attacks on our rights, as Britons, and our faith as Protestants, by almost all the governments of the Continent. In Spain, they deny burial to our dead. In Austria, they expel our missionaries. In the Papal States they rob us of our Bibles.—And now in Tuscany they have cast into prison a British lady for no offence but giving a copy of God's Word to a peasant. And what is to hinder these men, abandoned of God, and left to the guidance of the Pope and their own blind and raging passions, taking the last step of crossing the Channel, and by one summary blow wiping from the face of the earth a country which so deeply pains and torments them? We no more doubt that they will do so than we doubt our own existence, provided God do not divide their counsels, and find work for them somewhere else.

And how are matters at home. There are whole counties in Ireland ready to rise to a man, in the event of a foreign army appearing on our coast, and to begin the pious work of spoiling the goods and murdering the persons of Protestant heretics. There are Popish mobs in all our great cities ready to spread conflict and assassination all over the country. While threatened in front by a Papal army, we are endangered in the rear by such overwhelming masses of infidelity and Atheism as Glasgow, and Manchester, and Liverpool, and London present. These are good enough for the work of Popery, and she will marshall them under her banner, and lead them to the assault.—We have thousands of nominal Protestants among us ready to bow the knee to any God which may be set up.—What would the handful of true men be in the midst of such overwhelming odds? And then we have amongst us a "Prince of the Holy Roman empire!" What is he doing? He is forming a nation under the rule of the Vatican in the heart of the British nation. He is constructing an imperium in imperio. Our legislators are simple enough to believe that the laws made in St. Stephen's govern the empire. In this they are mistaken. By a considerable portion of the empire these laws are held as having no validity whatever; as being "not laws, but lies." That portion of the empire is under canon law, and Dr. Wiseman is rendering canon law applicable to the circumstances of British Papists by the decrees of synods held in this country. By this device he completely evades the statute which still declares it illegal to bring bulls from Rome, by getting his decrees framed in this country, and countersigned by the Pope. Thus while we sleep, the Pope's empire in Britain is growing. There are now two kings and two codes in the country.

But last and worse than all, the Government have it in contemplation to attach a Popish priest to every jail in the country, and a Popish chaplain to every regiment in which there are Romanists. We have been fighting to get rid of Maynooth; but here is Maynooth about to be extended over all Scotland and England. We shall have a body of priests of six hundred and upwards salaried by the State, an inevitable precursor, as it will prove, to the endowment of the Romish priesthood throughout the empire. Humanly speaking, this measure will seal the fate of our country. That part of the plan which relates to the army is especially formidable. Recruits are drawn mainly from Ireland; the number of Popish chaplains will of course be large in proportion. We thus behold no inconsiderable portion of the British army in course of being officered in the Pope's behalf. Not only are untold sums being paid to Popish chaplains—men trained in the Ultramontonism of Maynooth—in all parts of the world, but the British army is slowly passing over to a foreign power.—What reliance could be placed on these soldiers in the event of a foreign invasion? There is not one of them that would not obey the priest in preference to their officer; for the Romish doctors have laid it down, that in such conflicts of authority it is the voice of the Church that is to be obeyed; and so the invading host, instead of encountering a wall of bayonets, would find hands stretched out in welcome.

Countrymen and fellow Christians, you are standing on the brink of a precipice. Abroad, a powerful conspiracy is forming against you. At home, the Government is unlocking the passes of your country to the enemy. They are planting salaried priests by the hundred in positions where they will be able, when the conflict comes, to wield the military force of the empire against its Protestantism. We have been gold—sold [illegible] who will have no pity upon the tender babe or the man of gray hairs, who will drag our wives and daughters into the confessional, and ourselves to prison or to the stake. Let us rouse ourselves now. The hours of our liberty are running fast out. Why wait till our arms are bound? Let us now concert measures of defence, while yet we can speak and act as freemen. From this hour let us proclaim a truce to all differences, conflicts, and projects of mere party, let us, henceforth, and till the great battle be over, know but one great all-absorbing cause, and let our united rallying cry be, "Save our country!" Let us unite in a sacred bond, or oath, binding ourselves to God and to one another, and never rest, never to lay down our arms, till we have carried the two following objects:—

1. That not a penny of the nation's money shall be given to a priest of the Church of Rome, or to any purpose connected with that Church. We should be provoked to act towards the members of that Church as she acts to us. We shall still pay homage to the great principle of toleration; but we have gone far beyond the line of tolerating; we have endowed. We must compel our Government to retrace its steps. We must have no Popish colleges endowed out of the nation's funds; no Popish chaplains in the army; no Popish chaplains in the prisons or poor-houses; no lands, emoluments, and titles to Popish priests in the colonies; not a Popish priest anywhere in the whole empire drawing a revenue from a Protestant country. We must insist on the return of our Government within the strict line of toleration. The demand is a just and righteous one, and, if made firmly by a united people, it will be impossible to resist it. Let us swear that we will never rest till we have obtained that demand.

But, second, we must demand of Rome, and all Papal Governments, the liberty she demands of us. To this the Church of Rome cannot in reason object. We are glad to find that a Conference of leading Protestants in Germany, France, Switzerland and England, just held in Hamburg, has taken up this position. This Conference sent a deputation to the German Kirchentag, with a letter of instructions, bearing the signature of the Earl of Shaftesbury, and powerfully supported by Dr. Merle D'Aubigne, containing this famous declaration:—"We think that the time is come when Rome should not be allowed to prevent others from obtaining that liberty which Rome claims for herself." Why should not a general union be formed amongst the Protestants of America, Britain and Germany, for the attainment of this object? We shall not use force, but we shall say to foreign governments, We can enter into no treaty, no alliance with you; we can give you no help in war, we cannot trade with you, we must withdraw our ambassadors and consuls from you, and place you beyond the pale of our friendship and recognition, provided you refuse to our subjects in your country the same rights and privileges which you demand for your subjects in ours. Such a demand firmly made by the combined Protestants of America, of Britain, and Germany, could not be refused; or, if refused, what harm would it do to us? With the hourly expanding area of civilization and freedom around us—with Australia, and China and America, all open or opening to us, surely we can spare so insignificant a portion of the globe as Papal Europe has now become. Let us then shake hands with America on the one side, and Germany on the other, that we will give and receive toleration from Rome.

A great crisis like this cannot be got over by half measures. We call on all Protestants to combine, under a sacred pledge, never to rest till they have carried these two points. Let no man hold himself discharged in this war. The feeblest can lift up his voice and swell the general cry; he can help to diffuse light, and to diffuse light is to foil those who march under the banner of darkness. We summon all, then, to the conflict. Whether we look to the past or the future, whether we look around us on the world, or upwards to that God whose name Rome has blasphemed, and whose saints she has slain, we find powerful inducements to urge us on. Behind us are the martyrs, and before us are our children for whose liberties we fight. Around us are the nations whom this terrible power has enslaved, who supplicate us by their groans to help them to break their chains. Come, then, planting our foot upon the eternal justice of our cause, and looking upwards to that Almighty One who has sworn to destroy Rome, let us join battle with this foe. We stand in the world's Thermopylæ, and with Luther at Worms we may say, "We cannot do otherwise; so help us God."—[Provincial Wesleyan, N. S.

"Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up."—Joel 3: 9.

The preparation is made upon a scale of magnitude beyond a precedent—

The mighty men are waked up.

The following is from the St. John's Courier of March 4th.

It is taken from the Liverpool Journal. It truly exhibits a spirit of national Braggadocia, rarely met with, if worthy insert it in the Crisis. S. S. Brewer.

Preparations for War. The majesty of England walks abroad, self relying, confident, but prudent. Great Britain courts no danger, but shuns no danger when it comes. Partial to peace, she fears not war; and there is a noble value in the vast preparations now being made for encountering the foe. The mind grows large in contemplation of the calm and dignified manifestation of the might of a great and a free people, and every one feels proud that he is a part and parcel of a community which, without ambition, bids defiance to all the world, and which sends its armies and navies to protect the weak against the strong, although the weak have the smallest possible claim to their support. True, she sees beyond the ignorant present, and sees her interest in obstructing the unprincipled progress of despotism, availing herself of an obtruded contest to aid the spread of civilization where hitherto it had encountered a formidable obstruction—for we must not retire from Turkey without having provided effective security for the Christian.

The latent power of England was never so suddenly manifested as on this occasion. As if by a stroke of the wand of a political harlequin, her navies crowd the ocean, and before her numerous ships and steamers all other navies fade into comparative insignificance. To provoke the British navy is to invite destruction anywhere, everywhere, and, as we can produce a steamer of 100 guns every month, have produced seven in the last seven months, we are in a condition to defy and advise all Europe.—We desire peace, not battles; but if battle be inevitable, the folly of entering into it will appertain to the enemy.

"The sounds of hammers closing rivets up," are now heard in every arsenal in the kingdom, in every military store from Woolwich to Spike Island. Instead of "armourers accomplishing the knights," tailors are busy making uniforms, shipwrights are ceaselessly getting vessels ready, and engineers are constantly preparing "dread instruments" which "Jove's thunder counterfeit;" and one spirit now runs like electricity excited through all the people. Man is, indeed, a fighting animal, that is his proper definition. Six months since, 'peace was the dear delight' of every man in England, but we may now reasonaby doubt if even Mr Cobden himself has not grown pugnacious—for every body talks of war, and grows impatient for the fight. Ireland rejoices that the militia are to be called out; volunteers hasten to be enrolled, and the fishermen around the coast crowd upon the officers appointed to enrol marine guards. Twenty two regiments, now in Ireland, are ordered for embarkation, and they will depart amidst the cheers of the people.

In England all is bustle. The Morning Herald yesterday—a good authority on naval matters—says:

Not a minute is lost in any of the military departments in evoking the resources of the country, and we are glad to perceive that the government appears to be fully alive to the necessity of making such a demonstration as shall leave no chance for disaster or defeat. The eyes of the whole world are turned upon the gigantic scale of our armaments and the alacrity with which each department springs to the demand for the munitions of war.

At the Horse Guards and at the Admirality, at the Ordnance Office and Somerset house, the work of preparation is incessant; early and late the officials are to be found at their posts and everybody seems to be working "double tides."

The fleet is being equipped with the greatest possible haste, and we trust very soon to see the in the Downs or Yarmouth Roads such a specimen of the gigantic strength of England that will delight our countrymen, astonish our foreign friends, and make the enemies of the peace of the world tremble.

The Admiralty are in daily communication with Earl of Dundonald—the hero of a hundred fights, and who was never beaten, and it is said that Sir Charles Napier will command the Baltic fleet, and, if so, we shall hear a good account of the Russian ports on that sea.

Letter from a Missionary. We are permitted to print the following extract of a letter from one of our Missionaries near Constantinople, to one of his brothers in New York:—

Marsovan, January 20, 1854.

My Dear Brother:—You will doubtless think much of us at this time when so much is heard of "wars and rumors of wars." We have not been without solicitude for ourselves, nor are we still.—We are among "the Turks," and in a country not the best governed. This war with Russia has occasioned, of course, [illegible] ness in the provinces away from the capital. Even about here and Trebizond, some disturbances have taken place, such as robbery and house breaking, and it is not as safe as usual to be on the road.—Still, we Missionaries have been, on the whole, very quiet and safe. None of us at Marsovan or Trebizond have suffered.

We have been hoping for peace, but within the last week or two, all hope of peace has fled; and in the language of Mr Benjamin, in a note received yesterday, "There is now much reason to feel that we have yet seen but the beginning of a great war." A large fleet of Turkish, English, French, and Egyptian war vessels are in the Black Sea in pursuit of the Russians. When all this will end, no man can tell. We are probably on the eve of great changes in the political and the moral world. We have fears and hopes, the latter, however, generally prevail.

It seems plain that the Turkish Government is nearly at an end; but so long as she affords protection to Protestant Christianity, such protection as we look for in vain in Russia, or most of the other countries of Europe, it seems desirable that she should be upheld a little longer. Especially is it desirable, that this country should not fall into the hands of Russia.

P. O. Powers.

Civil war in Palestine. We refer our readers to the following letter which we copy from the New York Observer as regarding a description of things in Syria and Palestine.

Jaffa, Jan 21, 1854.

The war in which Turkey is involved with Russia, has left Syria and Palestine, by the withdrawal of nearly all the government troops, without any protection.—Advantage has been taken of this state of things by two of the discontented families or tribes of Arabs in Palestine, to revive an ancient feud, a question of supremacy, and to plunge the interior of that beautiful and ill fated country into the horrors of civil war. The Sheikh or Chief of one of these tribes residing in the village of Sanour, called in the aid of the roving Bedawins on the other side of Jordan, and these bloodthirsty pirates of the desert and mountain have been roving from village to village laying waste the country and destroying the property and lives of the inhabitants. The Chief of the other family residing in a village near Nablous, and his people having their houses at Erobeh, now sent for and obtained the aid of other tribes of Arabs from over the Jordan, and these having come into conflict with those first sent for, as well as with the people of Palestine, the consequences have been most disastrous. In a recent excursion into the ancient Samaria, we passed villages that had been plundered, and others that have been deserted by the inhabitants taking refuge in stronger towns. The region about Nablous, the Shechem of old, where Jacob's well is, was at the last account overrun with the conflicting tribes, communication with Jerusalem was cut off, everybody on the road was robbed, generally stripped of everything. In some of the villages as many as thirty or forty, and in one it is said that a hundred persons were butchered by these Bedawins.

The small pox is raging with great violence at Jerusalem. A gentleman just from the Holy City, informs me that more than a thousand adults, and nearly as many children have been carried off by it. The report strikes me as extravagant, but there is great alarm prevailing on the subject here.

There is no telling what may be the end of this state of things, but the prospect at the present moment is most discouraging.

Interesting Ppragraph. Discovery of the Palace of Shushan.—The commissioners engaged under the mediation of England and Russia in marking the boundary line between Persia and Turkey, have recently come upon the remains of the ancient palace of Shushan, mentioned in the books of Esther and Daniel, together with the tomb of Daniel the prophet. The locality answers to the received tradition of its position; and the internal evidence proving its correspondence with the description of the palace recorded in sacred history, amounts almost to demonstration. The reader can turn to Esther, chapter 1, where he will read of a "pavement of red and blue, and white, and black marble," in that palace. That pavement still exists, and corresponds to the description given in the sacred history. And in the marble columns the dilapidated ruins, the sculpture, and the remaining marks of greatness and glory that are scattered around, the commissioners read the exact truth of the record made by the sacred penman.—Not far from the palace stands a tomb; on it is sculptured the figure of a man bound hand and foot with a huge lion in the act of springing upon him to devour him. No history could speak more graphically the history of Daniel in the lions' den. Other interesting discoveries may be expected. The Persian arrowheads are found upon the palace and the tomb. Glass bottles [illegible] elegant as those placed upon the toilet tables of the ladies of our day, have been discovered, with other indications of art and refinement which bear out the statements of the Bible. Thus twenty-five hundred years after the historians of Esther and Daniel make their records, their histories are verified.

A Winter of Disasters. War on the Danube—cholera in England—conflagration at home—wrecks on the sea—have given to the present winter a pre-eminence among disastrous seasons. We cannot remember a period so crowded with catastrophe as the last two months. A brutal power has brought the horrors of a hopeless war upon an inoffensive nation—a war from which every principle of chivalry and every sentiment of magnanimity are excluded. In one hour, a fleet was destroyed, five thousand men were murdered, and a town was annihilated; and Europe, like a coward, stood by and saw it done—saw the Tom Hyer of Russia going to crush the feeble little boy of Constantinople—and did not hold the monster back. Cholera has admonished England, and starvation France.—Fire, which is generally no respecter of houses, has, this season chosen our best things for swift consumption—our greatest business establishment, the largest ship that ever lay at our docks, the finest hall in the country, the newest, and therefore the most magnificent of our hotel.

On the ocean, the disasters have not only been numerous, but of a singularly terrible character. Ships crowded with men, women and children, have gone down with their living freight.

Excellency of the Bible. A nation must be truly blest if it were governed by no other laws than those of this blessed book. It is so complete a system that nothing can be added to it or taken from it. It contains every thing needful to be known or done. It is the first book, the best book, and the oldest book in all the world; it contains the choicest matter, gives the best instruction, and affords the greatest pleasure and satisfaction that ever was revealed. It contains the best of laws, and profoundest mysteries that ever were penned. It brings the best of tidings, and affords the best of comforts to the inquiring and disconsolate. It exhibits life and immortality from everlasting, and shows the way to glory. It is a brief recital of all that is past, and a certain prediction of all that is to come; it settles all matters in debate; resolves all doubts, and eases the mind and conscience of all their struggles. It reveals the only living and true God, and shews the way to him, and sets aside all other gods, and describes the vanity of them, and all that put their trust in them.

In short, it is a book of laws, to show right and wrong; a book of wisdom, that condemns all folly, and makes the foolish wise; a book of truth, that detects all lies, and confutes all errors; a book of life, that shows the way from everlasting death. It is the most compendious book in the whole world, the most authentic and entertaining history that ever was published.—It contains the most ancient antiquities, strange events, wonderful occurrences, heroic deeds, and unparrelleled wars.—It corrects the vain philosopher, and confutes the wisest astronomer. It exposes the subtle sophist, and makes diviners mad. It is a complete code of laws, a perfect system of divinity, an unequaled narrative, a book of lives, a book of travels, and a book of voyages. It is the best covenant that ever was agreed on, the best deed that was ever sealed, the best evidence that ever was produced, the best will that ever was made, and the best testament that ever was sealed. To understand it, is to be wise indeed; to be ignorant of it is to be destitute of wisdom. It is the king's best copy, the magistrate's best rule, the housewife's best guide, the servant's best directory, and the young man's best companion.

Sweden. Sweden appears to be actively preparing to maintain her independence and neutrality in the coming crisis between the principal European powers.—The Government, on the 15th ult., demanded an extra grant for military preparations, which, together with appropriations already voted, and others about to be acted upon in the Diet, will amount to ten millions banco, ($4,000,000.) The sum is nearly equal to four-fifths of the ordinary budget voted in money by the Swedish Diet, and is evidence of the activity and resolution of the Government. It is estimated that one hundred thousand Swedes and Norwegians can be got into the field in six weeks. The dock-yards are spoken of also as scenes of busy preparation.—Early in the spring, it is said, six of the ten line-of-battle-ships, as many frigates and corvettes, and a large number of gun boats and brigs will be ready for sea. In the island of Gottland, the most important spot in the Baltic to belligerents, there are ten thousand men under arms, and two additional [illegible] same place.

The Temple and City.

The literal Temple and city of the Jews, were the ancient place of worship for the Jews. But they became corrupt and vain in their immagination and their foolish hearts were darkened by a rejection of the truth, viz.: the proclamation of the first advent of Christ. The coming of Christ was prophesied of by the Prophets before and looked for by the Jews as the one that was to redeem Israel; but when "He came to his own his own received him not; but as many as received him, to them gave he power (right or privilege) to become the sons of God, even to them that believed on his name." But through the vanity and corruption of their hearts, they intended to make him king, and as he came in such a low and humble manner, there were only a few of the illiterate that would receive him as the true Messiah.—In the Acts of the the Apostles, Chap. 13; 40, 41, we read, "Beware, therefore, lest that come upon you which is spoken of in the Prophets; behold ye despisers and wonder and perish for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you." Furthermore Christ in closing up his mission on the earth as a Prophet wept over the Jews as you will find in Mathew, 23: 37, 38, Luke, 13: 34, 35, Luke 19; 42, 36, Luke 21: 20, 24. From this time the Jews were broken off from the good Olive tree because of unbelief, dispersed into every nation under heaven, to be trodden down (or ruled over) by the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. Therefore we perceive that Christ has no definite location on the earth that is called holy, since Jerusalem was rendered unholy by transgression. But the holy city which Christ brings to view, alludes to the Church as will be found in the 5th chap. of Mat., 14 v., "Ye (the church) are the light of the world, a city that is set on an hill cannot be hid." Also in Rev. 11: 2, "and the holy city, (Church,) shall they tread under foot forty and two months." Also in Mathew 24: 15, "When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (Church) whoso readeth let him understand." Mark 13: 14 says, "standing where it ought not," (meaning in the church.) Again, 2d Thess. 2: 4, "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple (or Church) of God, shewing himself that he is God." To show that the body or temple, means the Church, I will refer to 1 Cor. 3 : 17. "Know ye not that ye (the Church) are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you. If any man defile (or destroy) the temple of God, him shall God destroy, for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye (the Church) are."

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, MARCH 29, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—I should like to see your views on the tenth of Rev. in the Crisis. A.

I had intended to take up this Chapter in connection with the "tarrying of the Vision," but pressing engagements prevented, I will now endeavor to give my views on this interesting passage.

V. 1. "And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud: and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the sun and his feet as pillars of fire." The mighty Angel seen in vision represents a new and powerful development in the history of the Church. It is the breaking forth of light—the diffusion of present or dispensational truth—a proclamation or some message going forth in power and demonstration of the spirit, such as the world had never witnessed before. The Angel was mighty, possessed of gigantic strength, which like Samson overturning the pillars of the heathen edifice, overturns the pillars of human tradition, demolishes the structures erected by man and shakes every thing in his course.—The doctrines and commandments of men being swept away like a fog that obscures the beams of day, the Sun breaks in upon the Church, truth is elicited from the oracles, and the glory of Gospel light shines with such clearness and brilliancy that the Angel's face is described as shining as it were the SUN. The bursting forth of this splendor—the sudden blaze of divine light from the Bible, and the radiant charms reflected from the saints is aptly represented by the Sun, in this instance lamps, or more properly, the ten virgins by beaus of the ten virgins in an illuminated procession. Thus as the Sun disperses the shades of night, and lights up the whole heavens as with a blaze of glory in the natural world, so would this Angel dispel the darkness that covers the earth, and the gross darkness which covers the people in relation to the prophecies, and spread over the moral heavens a blaze of Gospel day.

We know of no occurrence in the history of the Church that will correspond to this representation prior to the proclamation of the Redeemer's coming in 1843.—Some have thought that in the reformation from Popery under Luther and others was the fulfilment of this prophecy. They have believed that as there was at that time an expectation of the coming of Christ in many minds, and the Angel declared that "time should be no longer," or as some have translated it, "the time shall not be yet," therefore the Angel corrects the erroneous views of the Church and declares the time for that event is not yet come.

But what is represented by an Angel? We generally understand by an Angel some instrumentality to accomplish a specific work; and the character of that instrumentality is known by the nature of the work accomplished. For instance, where the Saracen wars are symbolized by the action of locusts (ch. 9) it is said "they had a king over them which is the Angel of the bottomless pit," and when the four Angels bound in the great river Euphrates are represented as being loosed and prepared "for to slay the third part of men," we cannot doubt those angels are the powers which control the elements of war, viz.: the governments. But when an Angel is seen flying "in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach, saying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to Him; for the hour of His judgment is come," it is evident that a class of religious teachers, i. e. Preachers of the Gospel are symbolized. So likewise where communications are written to the Angels of the seven Churches, it is understood that an Angel represents a minister of one of those Churches. If then the rainbow Angel symbolizes a class of Preachers who deliver a certain message to the Church, we find that message is according to the view referred to that "the time shall not be yet." But in the days of Luther the message was not that "the time shall not be yet," but the reverse, viz.: that the judgment was approaching.

"And a rainbow was upon his head." The most beautiful object in nature is admitted to be the rainbow. By this lovely arch of heaven is very strikingly symbolized the transendent glories of that message of the Redeemer's coming and kingdom which so entranced the saints in 1843. As "heaven's resplendent bow" is the most pleasing, grand and lovely object in the natural world, so the doctrine promulgated by this Angel transcends all other doctrines in beauty, riches and glory; there was an enchantment in the thought—there was a glory in the contemplation—there was an unspeakable blessedness in the expectation of the saints triumph and the Redeemer's coming in His glory, that far transcends all other doctrines of the word. It is the consummation of the believers hope, the perfection of the saints bliss, the full fruition of all the blessings anticipated by the children of God.

There is also another application which may be made of this symbol. It is this: When the Lord made a covenant with Noah, that the waters of the flood should no more deluge the earth, He made the bow a memento of the covenant—an everlasting remembrancer of the divine promise; so when the doctrine of the saints inheritance began to be preached, men were reminded of the blessed promise to Abraham "that his seed should inherit the earth," that "the kingdom and the dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, should be given to the people of the saints of the most High." The old promise had been buried beneath the rubbish of tradition, and the location of the saint's rest was so far lost sight of as almost to be forgotten by the professed Church of Christ. But when the deed of Abraham's land was searched out in the archives of heaven, its bounds and monuments discovered, it was indeed like a rainbow of promise. It was enchantingly beautiful, it was transcendently lovely. Tongue can never utter the enrapturing emotions of those who clearly discerned the teachings of the word on this subject.

"Clothed with a cloud." The cloud in which he was enveloped was perhaps like the cloud which received Jesus out of their sight. It was a manifestation of glory in relation to the divine economy—an out- is a term repeatedly used in scripture in connection with some special development or manifestation to the Church, such as the transfiguration on the mount (Matt. 17: 5) the ascension of Christ, (Acts 1: 9) the second coming of Christ in His glory, (Matt. 26: 64) the resurrection of the saints, (1 Thess. 4: 17), the visible glory that appeared to the Israelites, (1 Cor. 10: 1). In all these places the same Greek word is used, and although there is nothing in the word itself to express a manifestation of glory, yet as it is so frequently used in connection with some glorious development in the economy of grace, and in so many instances is necessarily a cloud of glory, it may fairly be inferred that it is so in this case. A new development of light and truth is to be made to the Church, a manifestation of divine favour such as the Church had never realized. And to make it more evident that it is an outburst of light and manifestation of grace, it is said "his face was, as it were, the SUN, and his feet as pillars of fire."

In reference to this vision of the Angel, Barnes, in a most interesting manner, remarks, "The attention is now arrested by a new vision—as if some new dispensation or economy was about to occur in the world." What language could more strikingly and emphatically depict the Advent movement, than this comment of Barnes? Again, "In this symbol, then," says the same distinguished author, "we have the following things: An angel—as the messenger of God, indicating that some new communication was to be brought to mankind, or that there would be some interposition in human affairs which might be well represented by the coming of an angel; the fact that he was 'mighty'—indicating that the work to be done required power beyond human strength; the fact that he came in a cloud—on an embassage so grand and magnificent as to make this symbol of majesty proper; the fact that he was encircled by a rainbow—that the visitation was to be one of peace to mankind; and the fact that his coming was like the sun—or would diffuse light and peace."

Cheering Thoughts on the Second Advent.

FROM DR. LEIGHTON'S COMMENTARY.

1 Peter 1: 7—"Might be found unto praise and glory, at the appearance of Jesus Christ."

This is the end that is intended, and shall be certainly obtained, by all these hot trials. Faith shall come through them all, and shall be "found unto praise," &c. An unskillful beholder may think it strange to see gold thrown into the fire, and left there for a time, but he that puts it there, would be loth to lose it; his purpose is to make a costly piece of work of it.

"At the appearance of Jesus Christ."—This denotes the time when this shall come to pass; for Christ is faithful and true; he hath promised to come again, and "to judge the world in righteousness," and "he will come, and will not tarry." It is called, "the revelation;" all other things will be revealed in that day—the most hidden things, good and evil, shall be unveiled; but it is eminently the day of HIS REVELATION: it shall be by his light, by "the brightness of his coming," that all other things shall be revealed, but he himself shall be the worthiest sight of all. All eyes shall behold him. He shall then gloriously appear before all men and angels, and shall by all be acknowledged to be the Son of God, and Judge of the world; some shall with joy, know him, and acknowledge him to be so, others to their horror and amazement. How beautiful shall he be to those who love him, when he as the glorious head shall appear with his whole body mystical with him. Then, the glory and praise which all the saints shall be honored with, shall recompense fully all the scorns and ignominies, and distresses they have met with here, and they shall shine the brighter for them. O! if we consider oftener that solemn day, how light should we set by the opinions of men, and all outward hardships that can befall us. How easily should we digest dispraise and dishonor here, and pass through all cheerfully, provided we may be then found in him, and so far partake of praise and glory and honor in that day of his appearing.

[Again, in his comment on 1 Peter 4: 13, he says:]

Now that he is hidden, little of his glory is seen. It was hidden when he was on earth, and now it is hidden in heaven where he is. And as for his body here, his church, it has no pompous dress, nor outward splendors, and the particular parts of it, the saints, are poor, despised creatures, the very refuse of men in outward respects and common esteem. So he himself is not seen, and his followers, the more they are seen and looked on by the world's eye, the more meanness appears. But there is a day wherein he will appear, AND IT IS AT despised saints, and admired in them that believe (2 Thess. 1: 10); how much more in the matchless brightness of his own glorious person. In the meantime, he is hidden, and they are hidden with him, "for our life is hidden with Christ in God." He shall shine forth in his glory. Terrible shall it be to them that formerly despised him and his saints, but to them it shall be the gladdest day that ever arose upon them—a day that shall never set or be benighted, the day they so much longed and looked for, the full accomplishment of all their hopes and desires. OH HOW DARK ALL OUR DAYS WITHOUT THE HOPE OF THIS DAY!

It is a sweet and joyful thing to be a sharer with Christ in any thing. All enjoyments wherein he is not, are bitter to a soul that loves him, and all sufferings with him are sweet. The worst things of Christ are more truly delightful than the best things of the world; his afflictions are sweeter than their pleasures, his reproach more glorious than their honors, and more rich than their treasures. And shall I shrink and creep back from what he calls me to suffer for his sake? Yea, even all my other troubles and sufferings, I will desire to have stamped thus, with this conformity to the sufferings of Christ, in the humble, obedient, cheerful endurance of them, and the giving up my will to my Father's.

The following of Christ makes my way pleasant. His faithful followers refuse no march after him, be it through deserts, and mountains, and storms, and hazards, that will affright self-pleasing, easy spirits.—Hearts kindled and actuated with the spirit of Christ, will follow him, "wheresoever he goeth."

The Immediate coming of Christ.

For the first time I write to the Brethren scattered abroad, who are not only expecting the Lord soon, but whose faith takes hold on the evidence given, that this year is the time for the great Jubilee, when the one hundred and forty-four thousand shall be redeemed from the earth, and will be able to sing a song that none can learn, on account of their not only being redeemed from earth, but saved from all human organizations, and the mark of the Beast. The last few months my attention has been more deeply called to the subject of Christ's immediate coming, and to the word of God, do I appeal for the evidence to sustain that position. If we are mistaken with regard to the last message being the midnight cry, we have other testimony in relation to the command given to the servants in the parable of the supper, in Luke 14th and 17th. After the excuses made by those that had been bidden, the Lord foreseeing that time was short, and his house could not be filled, unless the servants hasted in their work, said, go out quickly, that my house may be filled. Now, to me, this part of the parable is being fulfilled since the last six months, and more especially since the Crisis has been flying as on the wings of the wind. All praise, thanksgiving and Glory be ascribed to God and the Lamb, for the glorious effect that the Crisis has had already on some in this town, as well as many in other parts, who were about to believe a lie that they might be damned amidst all the blaze of God's truth. I hope we shall be consistent in our faith and found amongst the wise, that we may understand, not only a part of God's truth, but all truth that has a bearing on this generation. As I find many who are saying the Lord cannot come as early as May or June next, on account of the work to be accomplished before his coming, I would most solemnly and affectionately admonish all such to examine the 7th chapter of Revelation from the 1st to the 4th verses, and compare the contents with the general opinion of Adventists, which is, that when the four allied powers cease to keep the peace of Europe, the last servant of God will have been sealed. Now let us for a moment look at what has already taken place, and what must assuredly follow in a few days more. Russia has already broken that covenant, or alliance, of 1815. England, Austria and Prusia, together with France, are making the greatest preparations for war, that ever was known since the alliance formed by them. Now when all those allied powers have set the battle in array, and have driven the lesser powers to join in the conflict; I would ask any candid person whether the four angels have not ceased to keep the nations of Europe from war; if so, as certain as those four allied powers are the agents in John's vision; so certain the last servant will have been sealed. O, how solemn the thought, and how momentous the event just before us! Who does realize it as he ought? God grant that all who are in any way looking for the return of the Son of God to sit upon his Father David's Throne, may wake up to see how very near we are to the Judgment.

My dear Brethren and Sisters, ye are the light of the world and the salt of the earth, says our Lord. Now if we save no one, nor light up the pathway of the traveler it is either because there is no light in us, or because our lamps have gone out. O solemn thought, shall we be at last without oil? Or shall we at last be weighed in the balances and found wanting, while God is giving us light on his word. While I see evidences multiplying daily in favor of the Lord's coming in a few weeks from this, it calls loudly on me to try my ways and prove myself by the standard of truth. I know that the consequences of confessing truth to the world has been one of the greatest hindrances that we meet, because we have to act in accordance with our profession. Let us act with the same faith that Abraham had when offering up his son, by which his faith was proved and he accepted of God. Shall we ever be ashamed of those truths pertaining to the time of our Lord's setting up his everlasting kingdom and the gathering of his people to dwell therein forever?

God grant that we may seek to be among the wise for such have the promise of knowing both, Time and Judgment.

One looking for redemption through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

DAVID BROWN.

Richmond, Me., March 20, 1854.

DEAR BROTHER: I want to present to you and your numerous readers an argument concerning the sanctuary, Dan. 8.—Brethren, errors have crept into the precious church of God on this subject. It has already formed the basis of an unhappy division. Saturday-keepers I love, but they say that the sanctuary of the eighth chapter of Daniel is in the heaven of heavens, and began to be cleansed A. D. 1844, and has since been justified and vindicated. Now there is one ground of belief among advent believers generally, that the sanctuary is the earth, and its cleansing the renovation.

I will now state my argument. Four things are called, in Scripture, the SANCTUARY.

1st. The temple of Jerusalem. Dan 9: 17, "Cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate, for the Lord's sake." Says the Psalmist:—It was too painful for me until I went into the sanctuary of God; then understood I their end. Psalms, 73: 16, 17, 74: 7, and 63: 2, "For there was a tabernacle made; the first wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shewbread, which is called the sanctuary."

2d. The third heavens, and holy place. "But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands, that is to say, 'not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves; but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us,'"—Heb. 9: 11, 12. "But the Lord made the heavens. Honor and majesty are before him; strength and beauty are in his sanctuary,"—Ps. 96: 6. "For he looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth,"—102: 19.

3d Palestine, or Canaan. Psalms 78, 54, "And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to the mountain which his right hand had purchased. He cast out the heathen," &c. Exodus 15: 17, "Thou shalt bring them in and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in, in the sanctuary O Lord, which thine hands have established."

4th The earth;—the terraqueous globe. He built his sanctuary like high palaces, like the earth which he hath established forever. Our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary, Isa. 63: 18, and 60: 13, "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir-tree, the pine-tree, and the box together to beautify the place of my sanctuary, and I will make the place of my feet glorious."

"How long the vision, the daily, the transgression to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?"—Dan. 8: 13.

The earth is here referred to, because two powers have trodden under foot the earth from the height of the Medo-Persian government till the present time: Paganism and Popery have done it. This is a settled fact by the voice of all history.—One thing is certain, (whatever may be said of the sanctuary in other places) that the sanctuary connected with Medo-Persia—the Ram, the Grecian Goat, and the little horn, (which waxed exceeding great) was to be trodden under foot unto 2300 days or years. Let the attentive student of the prophecy keep this in memory.—"Then shall the sactuary be cleansed," says God, which establishes the fact that it was polluted and trodden under foot. From B. C. 446 to A. D. 519, the Medes, Persians, and Grecians, together with Rome in its Imperial form, have trampled upon the hosts of God and the earth, including Canaan and other portions of the terraqueous globe; and from 519, when Papal Rome gained the ascendency, to the present time, the sanctuary has been, and will continue to be, trampled under foot, until this power is "broken without hand."—What is the sanctuary to be cleansed?—It cannot be the temple, because, says Daniel, "the people [army] of the prince, [Titus] shall destroy the city, [Jerusalem] and the sanctuary, [temple] and the end thereof shall be with a flood [war]. This city and temple was destroyed A. D. 70, according to prediction. It cannot be cleansed because it is burned up. A Mahometan mosque stands on its present site. The city Jerusalem will be "trodden down of the Gentiles, till the time of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled," Luke 21: 24. Nor can it be the second view, for heaven itself, the holy of holies, was never trodden under foot. But this is true of the sanctuary which stands connected with the golden measure of 2300 years. Glory to God, we shall soon have a cleansed and beautiful earth. "Then I heard one saint, says Daniel, speaking, and another saint, answering; How long shall be the vision concerning the two abominations which shall terrible afflict God's people [host] and trample upon the earth corrupting it?" Now what is the answer to this inquiry? "And he said unto me, unto two thousand days." Dan 8: 14. Now these abominations were never in heaven, never could defile the holy place. No.—Never corrupt the sacred holiness of that blissful abode. Glory to our God. The heaven of heavens never was corrupted, never needed cleansing. Hear it, O, ye people! Hence it never will be cleansed, heaven does nothing superfluous, heaven and the holy place was always uninterrupted felicity. "But the earth is defiled under the inhabitants, because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.—Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate."—Isa. 24: 4—6. 'The earth mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth away.' But the earth shall be renovated. Glory and praise to God.—Seeing the things predicted of the sanctuary cannot be affirmed of the holy of holies, the conclusion must be, that the earth including Palestine, is the sanctuary to be cleansed.

☞ We hope no one will fail to read the poetry on our last page.

Later from Europe.

By the Pacific at New York, from Liverpool, we have four days later intelligence from Europe—dates to the 8th inst.—advices of the reported fall of Kalafat—of a misunderstanding between England and Spain—and of the views entertained by the Austrian government on the Turkish question. But the general position of affairs remains unchanged, though it was rumored that a messenger had arrived in London bringing the announcement that the Russians had carried Kalafat and massacred all within its walls. The story is not generally believed, though the preceding intelligence had announced that the Russians had opened their first approaches. The story has however thrown the public into the most intense excitement.

The Austrian Government has published an official document expressing its views on the differences between Russia and Turkey. It regrets that the propositions sent by the Western powers were of such a nature as to leave hardly a hope for a favorable reply, but admits that their demands were just and in accordance with the interests of Europe. Austria is prepared to meet any dangers which may accrue from a great war in an adjoining country, and from subversive tendencies which may manifest themselves on the frontier of the Empire during the continuance of the war.

The Prussian Government rejects the suggestion of Russia to forbid the entrance of the fleets of the Western Powers into Prussian ports.

Persia remains neutral, but is fortifying her Turkish frontier. The Affghans are attacking the Kingdom of Candabar. Persia has offered her mediation.

The Khan of Khiva had taken refuge in Boxhara, and summoned the neighboring nations to take part in the struggle against Russia.

The Chronicle's Vienna correspondent telegraphs that new proposals had been received from Nicholas. Russia offers to evacuate the principalities the moment her draft of the preliminaries of peace is signed, the terms of which, however, are not more favorablee than the last overtures, which the Conference rejected.

A British courier, bearing a summons for the evacuation of the principalities, is already on his way to St. Petersburg.

It was reported that the Prussian Minister, Manteufell, had offered his resignation.

The news consists mostly of the text of the Czar's manifesto; of the Czar's reply to Napoleon, and of Mons. Drohuyn de L'Huys' new circular to French agents; all interesting.

No battle had occurred on the Danube, except two columns of Russians had attacked each other in the dark in mistake for Turks, and killed some hundreds before the mistake was discovered. However, continual small skirmishes were going on between the Turks and Russians.

From Asia we have nothing of importance, neither have we anything of interest from the fleets. The Greek insurrection had been almost checked and was no longer formidable.—

The U. S. Minister had presented his credentials to the Sultan, and made an address assuring him of the sympathy of the people of the United States.

The British Chancellor of the Exchequer proposes to double the Income tax, and the French Finance Minister to borrow 250,000,000 francs to meet the expenses of the war.

The war preparations are continuing to be made in England. The first division of the fleet for the Baltic was to sail in a day or two.

The French Government advertises for one hundred ships to embark troops and stores at Marseilles for the East. The Earl of Londonderry was dead. More difficulties have arisen at Preston with the operatives.

There are vague rumors of a misunderstanding between England and Spain, and of the probable recall of M. Isterciez.

France and England are said to have decided to prevent any movement in Italy.

☞ We cut the following items from a London paper, the Evening Mail:

"The following is our Paris correspondent's letter, dated yesterday, 6 p. m.:—

The great topic of interest to-day is the letter addressed by the Emperor Nicholas (which I forward) to the Emperor of the French in reply to the latter. It is considered on all sides a tissue of the most barefaced misrepresentations—of statements which have been repeatedly refuted. The part which appears to have most excited resentment here is the allusion to 1812. True, it is said, the French army was destroyed during that terrible campaign; but it was destroyed, not by Russian valour in the field, but by the fire of Moscow and the rigour of the elements; and the fact of the Russians having been beaten whenever they encountered the French is shown by the latter having penetrated to the heart of their empire."

"The answer to this audacious defiance will be borne to him by the armies and fleets of England and France; and as the Emperor Nicholas presumes to invoke the God of Battles, Europe will appeal to the God of Justice—to Him who defends the weak against the powerful, who chastises iniquity, and who causes those who appeal to the sword, in support of crime, to perish by the sword."

"It has been announced from Moscow, that the reserves of the grenadier corps are prepared to march, but no one has any idea whether they will be sent to the west or to the south. The General Intendantur in Poland has received instructions to equip the recruits with all speed, in order that they may be ready to march without delay."

"The cavalry belonging to the military colonies in the south are already in movement. From the fact that the inhabitants of a town called Caschir presented the troops marching through with a large crucifix, it is to be supposed that people have been taught to believe that the present war is neither more nor less than a regular crusade against the infidel. The Grand-Duchess Alexandra (the wife of the Grand-Duke Constantine) has just been confined, and in commemoration of the memorable year 1854 the infant has been baptized Wiera, which signifies faith."

"The Kalisch correspondent of the Lloyd wrote on the 25th of February that, in consequence of the levy of conscripts, the War Department will be able to send a great part of the second army corps from Poland to the seat of war. In Poland alone 40,000 recruits will be raised, and immediately be drilled by the 5th battalion of the several regiments. The 6th battalions, which are a kind of militia, will be sent to the Danube. It is calculated that the conscription in the western provinces will give 300,000 recruits, but this appears to be a gross and intentional exaggeration. The destination of the Grenadier corps is not yet positively known. The Siberian and Orenburg contingents are to be sent to the seat of war in Asia."

The Irish and the Eastern War--Startling Reports.

Sundry exciting rumors are current in regard to movements of the Irish in the United States, with reference to the war just begun between England and Russia. It is reported that a very extensive organization is in progress here among the Irish, —that companies have been formed, and that military exercises are constantly practised, with the intention to stir up and aid a rebellion in Canada, whenever the condition of affairs in the East shall seem most propitious for such a movement.—We have received detailed information of the extent of the organization, the numbers concerned, and even the names of the active agents in the arrangement; but under present circumstances we refrain from making it public. It is said that a similar scheme is on foot in Ireland, and that a very large number of men have been enlisted for the project.

We publish elsewhere an Address of John Mitchell to the Irish upon the subject, the tone and spirit of which give confirmation to the reports in question. Mr Mitchel rehearses, with his usual eloquence and ability, the wrongs which Ireland has suffered from the British Government, and reminds his countrymen that England's difficulty has always been regarded and waited for as Ireland's opportunity. He tel's them that the success of England in the present war will tend to rivet still more firmly the chains upon Ireland, and that every Irishman who enlists in the British army, takes sides with the foes of his country, and aids in her enslavement.—The Address is written with vigor, and is evidently designed to make an impression on the mass of the Irish people, and to influence their practical action in the present crisis.

The existence of such a sentiment as this, in so large a portion of our population as the Irish have come to form, is a matter of transcendant importance. It will inevitably make itself felt on the relations of the two countries. When Kossuth landed in England, and began to rehearse the sad story of his country's downfall, the Irish heart was ready to respond promptly and heartily to his appeal for help. His praise of British law, though just, from the point of view which he occupied, turned the whole tide of Irish feeling, and did more than anything else to prepare for him a hostile reception from the Irish here. The same thing will be apparent whenever the opportunity shall occur. And a meeting in the Park to-morrow of sympathy with Russia, would have a fourfold larger Irish attendance than one in support of England, in the present war.

Such a movement as the one referred to, may become formidable to England in the progress of the war she has just commenced. The English people do not properly appreciate the magnitude of the struggle on which they have entered. The dispatch of troops for the seat of war,—their parade through the streets of London, and the military display which attends their embarkation—heralded by manifestoes, Parliamentary debates, the fulmination of the press of the theatrical adieus of Royalty, constitute an exciting novelty over which the British populace naturally enough grow enthusiastic. England feels her strength, and is ready just now to defy the world in arms. But a year or two of war will cool this fervor. The gazettes of battles fought, the list of deaths, the dispatch of new troops, the levying of fresh taxes, the interruption of trade and of industry, the numberless and the nameless evils which a protracted war must always inflict on such a nation as England, will work a change in the sentiment of the public, which, at the best, is always fickle and unreliable. If at the well-chosen moment of England's greatest depression, the Irish in America should stir up slumbering rebellion in Canada, and the Irish in Ireland should awaken a revolution at home, Great Britain might find herself engaged in a very different contest from that in which she supposes she has engaged. There is a Nemesis for nations as for individuals; and England may ere long be called to a severe account for the centuries of agony she has inflicted on the heart of Ireland. —[N. Y. Times.

☞ We are requested to state what month of our year corresponds to the seventh month Jewish time.

The Jews commenced their ecclesiastical year at the month Nisan which began, according to Rabbinical reckoning, with the next moon (when it was visible in the land of Palestine) after the vernal equinox; so that the month corresponded usually with the last part of our March and the first part of our April. The Caraite Jews, however, who were more strict in their adhesion to Bible rules, began their first month with the first new moon after the barley harvest, which was usually in April. The seventh month would commence with the seventh new moon after the vernal equinox, according to the Rabbis; or the seventh new moon after the barley harvest, according to the Caraites. The first new moon after the vernal equinox this year will be on the 28th of March; but the Caraite reckoning would probably commence from the new moon of April 27th, allowing one, or at most two days, for the space of time after the actual change before it would become visible at Jerusalem. The Rabbinical reckoning has been generally followed, but the Caraite reckoning seems more consistent with Scripture.

☞ We quote from the religious and secular papers of the day to show the spirit of excitement and evil forebodings, or "fearful looking after those things that are coming on the earth," which Jesus said would take place prior to his second coming. The world is moved—the war spirit is pervading the earth. We deprecate the principle and spirit of war, but that the church may understand the signs of the times in which we live, it becomes our duty, faithfully to record the movements of the nations, and the feeling that pervades community at large.

RICHMOND, March 10, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I thank the Lord that He is still calling on poor sinners to seek a refuge from the awful storm which is about to burst upon this wicked and thoughtless generation. Little do they realize how fast they are approximating the day of judgment, when if found without a hope in Christ, they will have to call for "the rocks and mountains to hide them from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." The time of trouble which is spoken of in Dan. 12:1, is about to take place. It is a national trouble that we may expect; for he says there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation. And now we see the nations are becoming angry—they are proclaiming, "prepare war, wake up the mighty men," and the mighty men are waking up—they are beating their ploughshares into swords, and their pruning hooks into spears. The weak say they are strong. What is the cause of all this? I believe it is the band of the Almighty God, that is moving them to do the last work of shedding blood, and soon every man's hand will be against his brother, and they will slay each other until the slain of the Lord will lay "from one end of the earth, even unto the other end of the earth;" and there will not be any left to lament for them, nor bury them. I praise God that He has faithful watchmen who see these things, and are not afraid to proclaim them to the world; and while they are preaching the truth, there ara some that are embracing it, and going out to meet the Bridegroom. I heard the time explained last spring, and it looked very conclusive. I commenced studying the Bible and history, to see if these things were so; and I could not see any thing against the argument, but was not willing to embrace it, because unwilling to give up the pleasures of this world. While I was attending the Conference held here by Bros. Burnham and Berick, I saw the dangerous position I was in without a hope in Christ, and the week after the meeting I was led to cry to God for mercy, for which I praise his blessed name. He heard my cries, and I trust forgave my sins, and gave me the blessed hope of going into the Kingdom this year, if I am faithful. My faith grows stronger daily. O I bless the good Lord for the vast amount of evidence that he has given us in these last days. Truly the vision is made plain, and those that will read can understand.—The Lord is still at work in Richmond.—About ten have embraced the truth, and there are others that seem to be desirous to hear on the subject. I hope the Lord will send some one here to labor with us that will present the whole truth.

Yours, expecting to see the Lord this year.
GORHAM UMBERHIND.

SALEM, March 9th, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—The Lord is doing a good work in Salem; they are coming in now from the highways and hedges, so that our Father's table will soon be furnished with guests. My heart is made glad when I think how near that glorious day is, when all the children will meet around the table of our Lord. O, Bro. can it be that this year, our dear Redeemer will come, and take us home if we are faithful? Yes, I believe He will come in fifty four. O, what a change will be in that day—these worn out bodies quickened and made like unto our Saviours',—this dark unfriendly world exchanged for that beautiful abode of peace and love! Well may we count all things here as dross, if we may but win Christ. I read the notice of brother C. B. Turner's death in the Crisis. Three years ago this month, my beloved son visited New York in company with him, now they are both sleeping in Jesus. We trust the glorious day will soon dawn, when they "shall come again from the land of the enemy." Come, Lord Jesus, come and end our sorrows, gather us to praise thee evermore where death can never enter to mar our joys. If faithful to our Master, we shall soon see Him in His beauty. Then will our days of mourning be ended. Praise the Lord for the glorious hope which sustains us in our pilgrimage.

Soon will our loved ones come again,
The graves cannot their forms contain,
When Christ their life appears.
The angels now their vigils keep,
While they in Jesus sweetly sleep,
Till the trump of God they hear;
Then quick as thought they wake to life,
Rise far above the world of strife,
To meet their conquering King;
And as they upward take their flight,
Clothed in immortal, spotless white,
With shouts of joy they sing.
Sing, Worthy is the Lamb once slain
Who died that we might live again,
And spoiled death of his sting;
Through thee we triumph o'er the grave,
Death now is vanquished; we are saved,
Worthy art thou, our King.
Their hallelujahs loud they raise,
The angels join their songs of praise,
And wonder and adore.
They cast their crowns at Jesus's feet,
They strike their golden harps so sweet,
They live to die no more.
Come, Jesus, come; I long to see
The form, which bore the scourge for me,
That I might share thy love.
Lord, I will trust thy mighty power,
To save me in that trying hour,
And bare me safe above.

Yours, in hope of soon seeing Jesus,
A. B. DRAPER.

Light Wanted.

I write to request light to be given on Ez. 39. It has of late become quite a stumbling block in the way of some, and they are promising themselves at least seven years more of probation Some say it is perfectly clear to their minds, that it was fulfilled at the destruction of Jerusalem; because the prophet says, they shall be seven months burning the implements of war, and Josephus states that for seven months the Jews harrassed the Romans by burning their weapons. Now as this is the only point where there is the least approach to an analogy, and every other conflicts, I cannot endorse it. In Ezekiel's battle, Gog and Magog are destroyed by an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire and brimstone, from the Lord. The Roman army was not destroyed. Here the people of Israel are delivered, not so with the Jews. After the fall of Gog and Magog, he is given to the ravenous birds, of every sort, and to the beasts of the field, to be devoured. See verse 4. "Speak unto every feathered fowl, and to every beast of the field, Assemble yourselves and come: gather yourselves on every side to my sacrifice that I do sacrifice for you, even a great sacrifice upon the mountains of Israel;" saith the Lord. If it be the weapons of this army, that it is said they shall be seven years burning, how then can it apply to the Roman army? Again, we find the Revelator speaking of the same sacrifice, in connection I believe, with the same battle; and he teaches that Christ is to be personally engaged with his army in the conflict. That army which follows HIM upon white horses, cannot, it seems to me, be the angels, for they were clothed in fine linen, white and clean; and John tells us that the Bride was thus arrayed. "For the fine linen is the righteousness of saints." In Rev. 2: 26, 27, we read that to him that overcometh, power shall be given over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers, even as Christ had received of his Father. We find the Father promising the Son, (Ps. 2: 9,) to give this power to him, and in Rev. 17. 18, we find the time when this power is put in requisition; and says the Psalmist, "Let the saints be joyful in glory—let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two edged sword in their hand to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people; to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron. To execute upon them the judgment written: this honor have all his SAINTS." Ps. 149: 5—9. And to this agree the words of Paul when reproving his Corinthian brethren for going to law with one another before the unjust. "Know ye not," says he, "that the saints shall judge the world?—And if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?" Are we not then clearly taught that the saints are to be associated with Christ in the execution of judgment—and to have dominion over the heathen in the morning, as the Psalmist testifies? Then they must be first resurrected.

Again, another point it seems to me, affords a clue to the time when this work discribed by the prophet and revelator transpired. Says John, "On his head were many crowns," (can this be true prior to the subjection of the kingdoms of this world to his sway?) "and he was clothed in a vesture dipped in blood—and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God." By turning to Isa. 63 I find the prophet inquiring "who is he that cometh with dyed garments from Bozrah?" Also, the question, "Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the winefat." He answers, "I have trodden the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of God." He further replies, "and of the people there was none with me; for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury, and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment. For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed has come." "I will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunk in my fury, and I will bring down their strength to the ground."—Thus we ascertain that the time when Christ treads the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God, is when the year of his redeemed has come. Will any be afterward redeemed? The revelator tells us something more about this wine-press, and it is when the harvest of the earth is ripe The reaping angel thrusts in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the wine of the earth, and cast it into the great wine-press of the wrath of God. And the wine-press was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine-press, even unto the horses bridles, by the space of 1,600 furlongs. Who trod the wine-press? The "King of kings, and Lord of Lords."—Now cannot you give us something on this subject soon? How do you reconcile the statements of the revelator, and Isaiah, when the one says "the armies which were in heaven followed him," &c, the other—"Of the people there was none with me, I have trodden the wine-press alone?"

Yours in hope,
M. D. WELLCOME.

WEST POLAND, Feb. 28, 1854.

This subject will receive attention, probably in our next.

"Watch Therefore."

O thou, the everlasting God,
Look down from thy exalted throne,
On one who pleads the precious blood
Of Jesus, thy beloved Son;
O clothe me with thy spotless dress,
The beauteous robe of righteousness.

Long, long ere this, I hoped to join
The great innumerable throng,
In praising, with a harp divine,
The Father and eternal Son;
But while thy chariot wheels delayed,
My light, alas, had almost fled

But now—O blessed be thy name—
A star—the day star—mildly beams,
Thy sorrowing ones forget their shame,
Nor longer weep by Babel's streams;
"Lift up your heads" the pilgrims hear,
For, lo, the promised land is near.

"Now, shall the just live by his faith,"
Faith in the light the prophets saw;
Still may I tread this shining path,
Nor backward to perdition draw;
O, may I walk with jealous care,
And watch, with never ceasing prayer.

O Jesus, if I'm led by thee,
I pray for all of every clime
Who love thee in sincerity—
That they may now discern this time—
Show them by "word of prophecy"
This is the year of Jubilee

JOHN LYLE.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 15, 1854.

The Marriage of the Lamb.

A theatre capacious,
Twelve thousand furlongs square,
Stands on its twelve foundations
Of precious jewels rare;
Its colors bright and sparkling,
Of variegated hue,
Pour forth a flood of splendor
To the astonished view.

Twelve gates of pearls unbroken,
Its spacious sides adorn,
Twelve shining angels waiting,
All beauteous as the morn;
The ceiling is of jasper,
The floor of purest gold;
O be prepared to view it,
Its glories can't be told.

The music is most charming,
The song forever new,
The guests have long been learning
To sound the notes most true;
The whole will be directed
By nature's great I Am:
It is a sacred banquet,
The marriage of the Lamb.

They need no light of candles,
Nor yet the silver moon,
The sun will be confounded
When at the brightest noon;
The glory of the bridegroom
Shall far outvie his rays,
Throughout the spacious building,
In one unclouded blaze.

No indolent spectators
Within the walls appear;
For those who gain admittance,
Will all be actors here;
The happy guests united,
Will form the glorious bride;
No length of time divides them,
And pleasures ne'er subside.

H. M. BEAN.

Obituary.

Our little affectionate boy, Charles Walter, aged three years and ten months, fell asleep in death's cold arms February 25th, of a malignant type of the scarlet fever. His sickness was short (three days) yet very distressing, but he died without a gasp or struggle, for which we felt very thankful to our kind heavenly Father. This hour was indeed a trying one. Parents that have passed through the scene know to their heart's sorrow how trying and disheartning to sever such strong and tender ties.—Death is cruel—it is an enemy indeed. It has broken our family circle by robbing us of one that was dear to all. Yes, the ties severed, and the breach made by its relentless hand, time can never repair. It will take a voice that will call forth the dead to repair the loss. We miss him at every turn. His little bed and chair are vacant His voice so cheering we listen, but in vain to hear. His quick little step which so often arrested our attention, is only heard in our immagination, to our sorrow. His toys and various articles of amusement, not only tell us of his loss, but their very stillness seems to mourn with us. He often spoke of the happy time he should have playing with the little lambs in the kingdom. Bro. Bragg first made the impression on his mind. Although some time had elapsed, yet he always retained it, and frequently told his simple story to the neighbors as well as at home Well, it is a world of changes, nothing certain in this state. It would have been gratifying if our little family could have remained unbroken until the Lord comes. But our heavenly Parent saw it would be best otherwise, hence we would try to submit, knowing God is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind Brother Boutell was providentially with us to attend the funeral, and administer words of comfort to our afflicted hearts. He chose his text from that sympathizing prophet Jeremiah, (31: 14, 15,) gave us an outline of the plan of redemption; making the resurrection all important, showing, on that event hangs the future life of the saint. And soon the life-giving voice will be heard, and little Walter will come forth It was cheering, and does assuage our grief, to know that soon the dead will live.

W. PRATT

Died in North Hermon, beloved sister Marjary Pelom, aged 28 years and eleven months.—She has left a beloved companion and other relatives to mourn her loss. But I do thank the Lord they do not mourn as those who have no hope. She has been a believer for about four years in the speedy coming of the Lord, and for over a year she has believed beyond a doubt that the Lord would come this year, and give her, with all the saints, a home where the inhabitants will never say, "I am sick." She had a lingering consumption, and was confined to her bed about three months. Her sufferings being great, the physician was called and inquiry made how long she could live; and the answer was, "you may live about twenty-four hours." She smiled and praised the Lord that she was so near through her sufferings. She was an example to all both in health and sickness, and would praise the Lord even while laboring under physical suffering She was truly possessed of an excellent spirit, worthy of imitation by all. O, may the afflicted companion enjoy the same consoling spirit while in this hour of deep affliction, and be enabled to rejoice in view of a land where death and the tomb will no more seperate companions and children There we shall live to die no more O praise the Lord that we are so soon to realize our hope consummated; even in 1854 we shall see our loved ones again to part no more. O then dry up your tears of sorrow and look up, for the hour of our redemption is very near

According to her request the mourners were comforted by a discourse delivered by S. Bragg from 1st Thess 4. 14. The season was solemn, yet we were consoled by the prospect of seeing her again this year. Praise the Lord

L. W. BRAGG.

Business Items.

We have continual calls for back numbers of the Crisis and doubtless some brethren are disappointed in not receiving them. But we cannot furnish back numbers from the commencement. Such as we have we send when ordered.

The edition (3,000) of "The Grand Crisis in Human Affairs," is nearly exhausted; and as we intend to issue another edition soon, those who have sold out the work for us would oblige if they will forward the amount soon as convenient, that we may have the means of defraying the expense of the next issue in cash payment.—[ED.

The Lithographic Charts and Pilgrim's Songster, published by Eld J. Cummings, can be had of him at Concord, N. H., or by applying to J. French, of Lowell.

The Lithographic Charts can be sent by mail for 10 cents, prepaid, anywhere within 300 miles. Price of the Charts, $3,00. "Bible vs. Tradition," can also be obtained of Bro. French.

Bower's History of the Popes, price $5, and the Syriac Testament, price $2, are also for sale at this office.

Bro. S. H. Partridge,—We regret that your notice was overlooked

Bro. M. E. Cornell, of Mich. We are out of back numbers. The work entitled "the Grand Crisis in human affairs," will give you light on the subject.

Will Sister Hayes, who writes from Albany, N. Y., give us the names of those who want the Crisis, together with the Post office address of each in a more intelligible manner, so as to avoid confusion. Be careful to give the initials of each name.

Will Bro. I. Adrian favor Bro. A. M. Billings, with his P. O. address.

Bro. H. Beach will be under the necessity of informing us of his place of residence, Town and State, before we can send him the papers. His orders for the N. Y. brother, has been attended to.

In regard to the receipts of letters in the Crisis we would state, that we have such a multitude every week that it would occupy too much space to acknowledge the whole, and we therefore mention those only which are of special importance in regard to business, &c.

The book by J. Cummings explaining the Lithographic Chart may be had by applying to J. French, Lowell, Mass., or to J. Cummings, Concord, N. H.

Special Notice.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige and save us immense labor and perplexity if they will strictly adhere to the following rules:

1. Over all communications designed to be published write, For the World's Crisis.
2. Over all communications not designed for the public write, Private.
3. At the head of all letters write the date, never failing to give the STATE, and also County, if written from the Middle, Western or Southern States.
4. Write all orders for the paper or for books on a page by itself, beginning thus, Order for the Crisis, or, Order for books, as the case may be.
5. At the close of each letter containing money write the amount, and to whom it is to be credited.
6. Be careful to write names and P. O. addresses in a legible hand.

In sending out eight thousand papers, it would not be strange if some mistakes should be attributable to us, others, it may be, to the Post Offices, and others still to the neglect of subscribers to give their proper Post Office address. We hope in such cases brethren will exercise a little patience, and write us, if necessary, so that we may rectify all mistakes which it will ever afford us pleasure to do. tf

All letters of business in relation to the World's Crisis, or to books sold at the office of the Crisis, or letters containing payment for "the grand crisis in human affairs" and "the Advent Hymn-book," must in future be directed to Jonas Merriam, Editor of the World's Crisis.

Agency.

Daughter of Zion.

Daughter of Zion, rejoice, for the morning
All brilliant in glory is 'rising for thee!
Mark, how the day-star in splendor is dawning,
And Angel's will soon chant the sweet jubilee.
Lone captive daughter, soon, soon will be ended
Thy tears, and thy mourning, in exile so drear;
Thy foes have been bitter, and painful thy bondage,
BUT JESUS IS COMING TO SAVE THEE THIS YEAR.

Daughter of Zion, awake, from thy slumbers;
The shadows of darkness are fleeing away;
Thy harp, long accustom'd to sorrowful numbers,
Will soon ring in glory a jubilee lay.
Come from the wilderness, lone captive daughter,
The arm of thy Savior is strong, do not fear;
Then lean thou in confidence on thy beloved,
THE BRIDEGROOM IS COMING TO CLAIM THEE THIS YEAR.

Daughter of Zion, prepare for the wedding;
Put on the white robe, and the beautiful ring
The table is furnish'd, the guests are all bidden
The "Harvest feast shouting" will shortly begin.
Yes, lone captive daughter, soon from the Maste
Far sweeter than music 'twill fall on the ear
Thy warfare is ended, redemption is finish'd,
MY JEWELS SHALL ALL SHINE IN GLORY THI YEAR.

Daughter of Zion, like a rock in the ocean,
Long have the elements battled with thee,
Firm thou art standing, unmoved by commotion
Exposed to the billows of life's rolling sea;
And like a rose, in the waste, arid desert
Unfolding its leaves to the beautiful sun,
In lovely humility, thou has been gracing,
AND SWEETLY PERFUMING THY POOR EXIL HOME.

Daughter of Zion, thy lone bark is nearing
The shore, where thy conflicts will all hav an end;
Far o'er the dark waters sweet music is stealing
And soon in thine own Eden home thou wil land;
'Though 'round thy frail bark, the white foam i dashing,
And sea-monsters horrid are prowling around
Thy Father is ruling the wave and the tempes
AND SAFE THROUGH THE DANGERS HE'L PILOT THEE HOME.

Daughter of Zion, hush all thy complaining,
Bare thy bosom to sorrow, thy brow to th storm;
Firm to thy purpose, be strong in sustaining
The cause of thy Master, 'till victory's won;
Stronger than death is the love that sustair thee,
Quenchless it burns on the altar of prayer;
Pluming thy wings for the kingdom of Glory.
FAITH, STRONG IN THE PROMISE, EXPECTS I THIS YEAR.

VESTA N. CUDWORTH.

Charlemont, Mass., March 19, 1854.

The Wise shall Understand.

Why penetrate into the arcana of God—speak of secrets which have never bee divulged? say some; while others affirm that it is the height of presumption for u to profess to know any thing about unfulfilled prophecy, but we must wait for its accomplishment to understand its import.—Indeed! Can such individuals have any faith in regard to one point in the future Is there any substance to the things hoped for, any evidence for the things not seen How should we know that everlasting salvation would prove a full fruition of blessedness; for certainly everything relating to our future condition must be numbered with unfulfilled prophecy. Pursue the course marked out for us by our opponents, and what would be the result if followed?—Where the stability of our faith? What sure foundation for our hopes? Truths which now influence us, would most as surely lose much of their potency. But, bless the Lord, we are not left to the wild vagaries of conceited imagination: the Bible is replete with instruction, whereunif we take heed, we shall not err. "Search the Scriptures," was the divine injunction of Him who spake as never man spake. Says the apostle Peter, "We have a sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts."

As it regards a foreknowledge of any event, we are governed solely by the sure word of prophecy. "A wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment; because to every purpose there is time and judgment." And has not God directed us when we see certain things come to pass, to KNOW that he is near, EVEN AT THE DOOR? Has he not given, for our profit, the character of the last days and commanded us to WATCH, for behold he cometh? to notice the signs of the time, and when we see them fulfilling, to lift up our heads, and rejoice that our redemption draweth nigh? He has also given a revelation of prophetic times and periods, extending from given points to the Judgment, and for what purpose, if not for our instruction? He has delineated the character of the several kingdoms which should exist, and bear rule in the earth, planting here and there, along the stream of time, beacon lights, bright shining and conspicuous, to direct our course and inspire us with hope, and by its exact and impressive fulfilment, to stamp the Bible as the word of God, on which we may rest and feel secure. Has our Saviour given us a connected chain of events, (as in the 24th and 25th chapters of Mathew) reaching to his second coming, and admonishing us to WATCH—yea, even to know assuredly when He is near, EVEN AT THE DOOR, as when the branch putteth forth LEAVES, we know that summer is nigh? And why all this? Is there no meaning in all these things? Was there not a purpose? Certainly there was, and we are resolved to act in accordance thereto, that, when the Master comes, He may find us giving meat in due season.

Is the Scripture what it purpots to be—A REVELATION FROM GOD?—"and ALL SCRIPTURE is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God MAY BE PERFECT, thoroughly furnished unto all good works"—and yet clothed with ambiguity, such impenetrable mysticism, as to forbid our approach? We discard such sentiments.—The Bible was designed for the benefit of mankind—given as the only guide for our faith and practice.

God has spoken by his servants the prophets. Not only has he left on record the great outlines of this world's history, and given infallible signs, which there can be no mistaking, which are to indicate the near approach of EARTH'S EXILED ONE; but he has revealed even the time, and, at the time appointed, the end—"The prophets have enquired, and searched dilligently," says the apostle Peter, "searching what, or WHAT MANNER of time (whether literal or symbolical time) the spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST, (the seventy weeks) and THE GLORY WHICH SHOULD FOLLOW; unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but UNTO US they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, which things the angels desired look into;" (and where, we would inquire, did the angels ever desire to look into the time, but in the eight and twelfth chapters of Daniel, the only instance found in the Bible?) "wherefore," continues the apostle, "gird up the loins of your mind; be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you AT THE REVELATION OF JESUS CHRIST."

The midnight cry was to be given. "Behold he cometh;" was to be heard through earth's vast domain, and yet thick darkness to brood over the subject—nothing to admonish until the trumpet's blast should startle us.

Again: were the antediluvians warned of impending danger? They were, and faithfully too. Did they heed the solemn admonition which Noah proclaimed? No, they undoubtedly esteemed him as either deluded or insane; and while he was building a house for the preservation of himself and family, no doubt an uncommon share of obloquy and rebuke was meted out to him; but he persevered. He had faith in God. Did he give a false alarm? The exact fulfilment of that prediction will satisfy every mind. "And as it was in the days of Noah, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." God has invariably warned his people before his threatened judgments have been executed; and think you the last—the most solemn, awful, and momentous—will be consummated, and not timely warning given?—Certainly not. Reasoning from analogy, we should say no; and from his Holy Word, the sure word of prophecy, we should emphatically answer, No. Lot is not fogotten. We have read of the cities of the plain, and of their destruction; of other great calamities which were predicted, and which came to pass. Yet how unbelieving! Did those to whom the warnings were addressed, heed the admonition? They heeded not. The storm came, but, ah! they had rejected the message of God and perished. Repentance, then!—no, it was irrevocably too late. Their doom could not be averted. It was, as it will be when Jesus comes. The door will be shut.

If not adorned with the robe of Christ's righteousness, indignation, which shall devour the adversaries of God, must be your bitter portion. Reader, from the past gather wisdom; and, ere the last ray of hope is withdrawn, PREPARE TO MEET THY GOD.

We shall find that events predicted, have uniformily, thus far, been literally fulfilled. Time has, in most instances, been designated, and at the appointed hour, the judgments came—the catastrophe was realized, God in a very period of the world, has had a message adapted to the time.—It is in perfect unison with his character and dealings with the children of men.—As time has advanced—light has increased, truths have been more fully developed; says the wise man, "The path of the just is as a shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." It is evident from the 12th chapter of Daniel, and many other places we might cite, that certain truths which intimately concern those who live in the time of the end, were not necessary to incite others, who lived in other ages. The children of God have in times past been looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing in anxious suspense, but the time was sealed. The ungodly have had no assurance that judgment would not be speedily executed. But now, the words are no longer closed up, the time of the end has come, and living as we do in this eventful period, as described in the last six verses of the 11th chapter of Daniel, called the time of the end, unusual duties are now required—"to cry aloud and spare not," "to stand upon our watch tower," "to watch unto prayer," "to pray without ceasing," "to be purified, made white and tried."

Standing as we do on the the very verge of probationary time, what an increase of faith, zeal and devotion to our God is loudly called for. For all the mind there was in Christ, to have our loins girded about with truth, our lamps trimmed and burning, WATCHING, WAITING for the COMING ONE. "The wise shall understand," says the glorious personage that appeared to Daniel, "but the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand."

The Advent Angel has been speeding on his journey. The coming glories of the King of kings has been heralded far and near. Has already encompassed the earth. THIS GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM has been heard in every clime; then shall the end come. The cry has been borne on every breeze. "THE HOUR OF HIS JUDGMENT IS COME. Fear God and give glory to him." And with all the Israel of God, let our voices chime in unbroken melody, "Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus."—[Selected.

From the Religious Intelligencer.

"when I am weak then am I strong."

This paradoxical and apparently self-contradictory sentence can be found in the twelfth chapter of Paul's second letter to the Church at Corinth. It of course cannot mean that when Paul was weak in one sense, he was strong in the same sense, but when in one respect he felt weak, in another he was strong. By reading the preceding portion of the chapter, the two senses which are before the mind of Paul will appear plain. He had been praying God to remove an affliction by which he was greatly buffeted, and which he called, "a thorn in the flesh." He prayed earnestly for its removal, but though his prayer was not answered in the manner he looked for, yet it was more than answered; it was said to him, "my grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness." God through Christ manifested himself to his praying child, as sustaining such a relation to him that his favors should always be greatest, when the child most needs his fathers help; and that he can never be so needy but that the father's favors will tower quite above all his necessities. Indeed the father through the elder brother has undertaken to do good to the praying Paul; that good, that favor, that grace is always sufficient for him; if it does not remove the thorn when he prays, it adds to his blessings so much that with the thorn he is by far happier than he would be without the thorn, without the superadded blessing. The more thorns he has, and the more he prays to have them removed, the happier he grows though not one is removed—even happier than he would be if all the thorns were removed without the revelation of new favors to his buffeted soul. Paul found out by his prayer that he had such a friend in Christ that when he was most needy Christ could make fuller revelations of his friendship than he conld at other times. In the weakness of Paul the strength of Christ would tower up above all afflictions. The friendship of Christ was not like that of men, good in a fair day when he needed no help: but failing either through false promises or want of power in time of need.

If you commit your ship to the care of an ignorant pilot you may get along well enough in fair weather: but when you need help he is only a hindrance to you; and, so too, the well-skilled pilot has not power to quell the storm, to bid the sea be still, or the sun to bring the day Paul found a different pilot from either of these had undertaken for him; he perfectly understands his business, and besides he has power to command the winds and the waves. In a clear calm day he seemed no more than a common pilot, the ship gets along well enough and so it would under any other pilot perhaps one might think. But when the heavens gather blackness, and the winds lash the waves into anger, and the thunder rends both heaven and earth and there is no power in the ship; the masts give away like the tender grass, and the waves begin to devour the ship and all the crew, so that they have not any strength or hope remaining, the pilot who seemed a common friend speaks with the voice of God; the thunders in his presence are tame; the winds become gentle zephyrs, and the waves, obedient to his will, bear in perfect security the ship to the desired haven. In the fair day his strength did not manifest itself.

But in the weakness of the crew and ship, is afforded the opportunity for his strength to be displayed. It could be made complete—perfect in its operation. My strength, said the blessed Jesus to the tempest- tossed Paul, is made perfect in weakness. "I take pleasure," cried the grateful Paul when he found out by his trial the worth of his precious friend to whom he had committed all his interests, "I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake, for when I am weak then am I strong" by the overwhelming displays of the strength of him I serve.

Christian friends, has Christ in your experience become such a precious friend in time of need that from a rich consciousness of his being in you the hope of glory, you can say, "when I am weak then am I strong."

Impenitent friend, is it not worth while to have one as a friend who will help when you need help. D. M. G.

☞ The tone of the Americrn press is becoming somewhat warlike in respect to the affair of the Black Warrior, as will be seen by the following remarks from the Washington Union of Saturday last:

The "Arctic," which departs from New York to-day for Liverpool, will convey a special messenger from this government with instructions to our minister at Madrid to demand, in emphatic terms, immediate and ample reparation from Spain for the outrage committed by the authorities at Cuba in the instance of the "Black Warrior." We shall impatiently await, in common with every American citizen, the answer which will be given by the Spanish ministry to this demand. If it be favorable and prompt, and if Spain shall consent, within a reasonable time, to our opening diplomatic relations with the captain-general of Cuba, for the adjustment of any questions which may hereafter arise in our intercourse with that island, then there will be no disposition on the part of the U. S. to disturb the peace which exists between the two nations. But if any hesitation is manifested by the cabinet of Madrid to disavow the outrageous procedure against our flag and the property of our citizens, and if the contingences be not removed by which similar occurrences may be occasioned, we shall advocate the employing of all the power which the government can command in support of our rights and interests in Cuba. The world would consider us weak as we would in reality be mean, if we were to suffer even the first power of the earth to offer us insult—added to injury—as repeatedly as they have been perpetrated upon us by Spain for the last five years. The time has arrived when forbearance to even an imbecile nation—whose obstinacy or ignorance has brought it to the verge of ruin—ceased to be a virtue. We must not only receive redress for the past, but we must have abundant security for the future. Its relations with us will have to be bettered, or they will have to be discontinued

In the case of the Black Warrior, England is, to a certain degree, responsible for the wrongs committed by Spain. The authorized speech of Lord Clarendon, to which we have adverted, was at the bottom of the temerity of the Spanish authorities. It instigated the deed precisely as the Indians were instigated, under British dictation, to the ruthless butchery of our citizens on our frontiers in the war of 1812.

We tell Queen Victoria's government frankly that, as Cuba is the key to the gulf, through which a large proportion of our commerce passes, we cannot consent to its exercising the slightest control over that island. The idea of her having any other interest in the matter, than that of throwing obstacles in the way of our prosperity, is too absurd to be entertained for a moment. She may envy our growth, but she shall not close our doors. She permitted Austria, contrary to the stipulations of the treaty of Vienna, to which she was a party, to obliterate the free city of Cracow, because, as was alleged by that empire, it was a dangerous neighbor. She now encourages Spain to consummate acts of bad neighborhood which are little better than positive piracy, and enlists Louis Napoleon to co operate with her in supporting the offender. This is the downright, old-fashioned British policy.—The Intelligencer, of course, will sustain it with as much zeal as it usually sustains all that redounds to the honor of monarchies and to the detriment of true American interests. Fortunately, that journal enjoys the unenviable reputation of being the foreign organ, and can do as little harm to our country as it did good to its enemies in the last war in which it was involved.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SHIRLEY, Me., March 3, '54.

Brother Merriam:—Words cannot express my gratitude to you for the World's Crisis. I can truly say it has been a messenger of light and peace to my soul. A new spring of joy and hope seems to burst upon the vision of my mind while I trace its soul-cheering columns. Never, no never did so clear a light shine upon my pathway from the holy word as at the present time. I feel to rejoice that our Deliverer is so near. The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few; let us pray earnestly that the Lord will send forth more laborers into His harvest. What a solemn time is just before us. The separation of friends here on earth is soon to take place, and Oh! what a lamentable cry there will be in that day. "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul not saved." This will be the language of the poor sinner when it will be too late. O, why will not the backslider return—why will not the sinner come while the angel of God is sealing his servants in their foreheads?—May God speed the message of his speedy coming, even unto the ends of the earth. May the Crisis fly as on the wings of the wind, that the most remote nations may hear and believe the contents of the second message of John the Revelator.

Yours, expecting redemption this year,
J. FAIRBROTHER.

NEW-MARKET, March 15, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—The good cause is prospering well here. There are some warm-hearted friends in this region, and the truth is gaining ground. The light is shining—the gospel of the kingdom sheds its benign influence in sublime grandeur. All through this section God is reviving his work, and many are inquiring what shall I do to be saved?

Yours, in hope of the kingdom,
MOSES D. RICHARDSON.

FAIRHAVEN, CONN., Feb. 20, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I have received each No. of the World's Crisis, and I must say it brings good tidings of great joy. It meets my approbation fully. I have been blessed while reading its rich laden columns. It is just the paper needed at this time; a paper that is not after dollars and cents; nor the praise of men, but that which serves the interests of the Church of God, and of our dying fellow men. I am satisfied that the God of Israel is in this message of time; and all that a backslidden Church can do or say to stop the great wheel, will only serve to roll it on. I pity those who raise their puny arm against so glorious a cause as that of the present message. I dare not wait to see these things begin to be accomplished unprepared; for when the four angels loose the four winds there will be no more mercy for sinners; no more hope than there was for the antediluvians after it began to rain. Wo to the man who is crying peace in these last moments of time. It should be the cry of each true Adventist—"Behold! the Bridegroom cometh."

Yours, waiting for the Lord,
P. E. CLARK.

SUGAR HILL, March 19, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—Truly these are solemn and momentous days in which we are living. They are the days of the Son of man, in which all our fellow men will decide for truth or against it—that truth which will seal them for the kingdom of God if received, and if rejected "as a snare shall it come upon all them that dwell upon the face of the whole earth." In a few days from this the world's history will be told, her die will be cast, her doom will be forever fixed, and every man's case will be decided. "He that is filthy, will be filthy still; and he that is holy will be holy still." Awful day of separation mourning and lamentation! We are certainly drawing near such a day as this, and daily I exclaim my cup is a cup of mixture while I see friends and children and acqaintances that I love must soon be destroyed unless they speedily repent.—My heart is sad while I look upon this gloomy picture. I turn mine eyes to God and ask for strength equal to my day, that I may be enabled to say, "not my will but thine be done." Truly these are trying and dangerous times in which we live; but thank God we can look through the gloom, and behold a land, a brighter land than this, and exclaim, "there's my home." Yes, oh yes, "an earth more bright and glorious is promised in his word," and by faith we grasp the prize; and while we mourn over the sad state of our dying fellow-men around us we can "rejoice in hope of the glory of God." Oh yes, that kingdom that prophets, apostles, martyrs and all the dear saints of God have in all ages looked for, we look for and expect it this year. Yes, blessed be the name of the Lord, that City our forefathers looked for, we expect to see this year. Oh how blessed the thought—redemption so soon—to see the City, the new Jerusalem, and walk the streets of gold, and have a right to the tree of life, and drink from the river of life, "the streams whereof make glad the City of our God," and range the beautiful fields of the paradise of God, to hunger and thirst no more forever, tears all wiped away by our Father's own soft hand, where "pains and groans and griefs and fears, and death itself shall die." "Oh my heart says, praise the Lord" for the bright prospect of such a home as this—my treasure and my heart are there, and with the beloved John on the Isle of Patmos, I can say, "AMEN, even so come, Lord Jesus."

"The midnight cry in mercy sounds,"—the last note of warning that will ever be heard is now being sounded through the length and breadth of the land; the virgins are arising and trimming their lamps. O I do praise God that my ears have been saluted with its salubrious sound. Bro. Cummings has been here to give us the time of night. He gave the trumpet a certain sound, that the people might prepare for the coming storm, and seek a shelter under the pavilion of the Almighty when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth. His language was, "The morning cometh, and also the night." I think he cleared his skirts from the blood of all that heard him. O that we might all heed mercy's last call, and go out to meet our Lord. I am resolved to go, cost what it may; it is a case of life and death. 'Tis surely death to sleep; all must be on the altar, houses, lands, husbands, wives, children, honor, fame, and all we have must go, self and all. We must make the sacrifice or we shall not be ready to hail our coming King. Yes, we must give up our good name, and be willing to be called fools for Christ's sake; and this, by the help of God, I have been willing to do.

"Foes may hate and friends disown me;
Show thy face and all is bright."

God's truth is destined to triumph, and his despised people will triumph with it,

"I'll suffer now; I'll triumph then;
I'll die for Jesus here;—In that bright world
i'll live again,
A conqueror's crown to wear.

My heart is cheered weekly by perusing the Crisis. I hope both readers and writers of the paper may be filled with the spirit of God, and not shun to declare his whole counsel, whether men will hear or forbear. I believe this last message is the sealing Angel, that will seal the servants of God in their foreheads; and if so, how important it is we should heed it, and obey it, and go out to meet Him. This is the last duty God will ever call us to do. My whole being cries out, I will obey. Dear Brethren, of like precious faith, I rejoice to think I shall meet you on Canaan's happy shore this year. Blessed Saviour, come and take thy mourning people home.

From your sister in Christ,
ABIGAIL MUSSEY.

CHARLEMONT, MASS.

The little flock in Charlemont, have in the past been comforted by the labors of some of the Watchmen, and our hearts cheered by the word; these hills have echoed the song of the pilgrim, and a tribute from grateful hearts ascended to heaven for the fulfilment of the promise, "The poor have the gospel preached unto them." But recently we have been deprived, in a measure, of the means of grace. Lonely and sad, a few still meet on the Sabbath for prayer; we look back to the refreshings we have enjoyed, the memory of the past is painfully pleasant, and I trust profitable to us.

O how the heart clings in grateful remembrance to those who have taught us to walk in life's narrow way, and look beyond this perishing world for bliss—that have patiently instructed us in the blessed scriptures, and marked out the dangers of the voyage upon the sea of life.

And when the poor heart is bleeding, and all the waves seem to go over us, some cheering promise, like a beauteous star, flashes through the darkness, and we call to remembrance the hand that pointed it out to us; and when laying aside every weight, and the easily besetting sin, the example of those that have labored with us and not fainted, though leaving home, and ease, and friends, constrains us to suffer on a little longer: aud the parting hour with all the parental advice, reproofs and blessings, steal over us like a sweet dream of the past. Scenes, often connected with the parting from the faithful servants of God, impress it strongly upon the memory, and render it doubly dear—the last prayer, the low voice trembling with emotion for the lost and loved, may still breathe over us its healing balm, and every treasured word instruct, though far away may be those that uttered them.

When I consider the many destitute places that with us are deprived of the regular preaching of the word, I can but acknowledge the mercy of God in providing for his famishing flock this precious boon, (the Crisis.) It gives instruction to many which might for the lack of it, be led away by the fables of the last days.—To God be all the praise.

But the joyful hour is near, thank God, when home, sweet home will be realized by every weary pilgrim, when the painful responsibilities of the Editor will close, the arduous duties of the Watchman will cease, and all the flock from the least to the greatest, will find one fold, and one Shepherd. We are almost there, hope plumes anew her wings for the kingdom, the King in his beauty awaits for the bride. O Brother, Sister, get ready, put on the spotless robe, for Jesus comes this year to receive for us a kingdom, there loved ones all safe at home will forever dwell, and the parting hour will never, never come. Then farewell ease; we will think no more of stopping to gather the fading flowers of earth. "The redemption of the soul is precious and it ceaseth forever." We will not heed the storm or the danger, but try to pick up a few of the perishing ones that are floating on the dangerous billows, and win laurels that never fade in the kingdom of God.

And when once we have stepped on board Elijah's fiery car, we'll drop our armour, and shout victory over the world, the flesh, and the devil. Then will commence the song that mortals cannot sing, "the song of Moses and the Lamb."—Poor sinner, where will you hide in that day? The last star that guides your frail bark will soon set in a dark wintry night, and no hope with its rainbow of promise will beam on your sight; the dark waves of death, even the second death, will forever hide from your view all the loved scenes of earth, and in the anguish of your soul you will exclaim, hope, adieu.—For a moment the open door trembles on its hinges, the fatal bow is bent, there is but one remedy, the blood of Christ. O haste to the fountain.

HASSKENY, January 26, '54.

Messrs. Editors:—At these times, while the political horizon is so excited, while the whole of the Old World seems blazed all in one flame, and all the Governments of Europe are looking alarmingly, and with intense interest, towards the East, it seems to me that a few words from this quarter may not be uninteresting or unacceptible to the Christian community of the New World.

We feel that while the world is so stirred up and moving, we also must stir up ourselves into action.

PROPHETIC PERIODS---1260, 1290, 1335 Years of Daniel and John.

The daily sacrifice taken away, and the Abomination of Desolation set up, or the Saints given unto the hand of the Little Horn. .... 519.

1260 years of tribulation.—Rev. 11: 2, 3, and 12: 6, 14, and 13: 5. The sun darkened May 19, 1780, to show its termination. — 1779.

1290 years, or time times and the dividing of time—or time times and a part, in which the TIMES and LAWS are in the hands of the Little Horn. — 1809. Napoleon takes away the civil power of the Little Horn.

Fall of the Stars 1833.

1335 years, reaching from the setting up of the Abomination of Desolation, or the time when the Saints' times and laws were given into the hand of the Little Horn, to the end, when Daniel with all the Saints will stand in their lot.............................. 1854.

☞ THE END. ☜

☞ The above Diagram is designed to illustrate the measurement of time from the rise of the little horn, with eyes and a mouth (the civil power of the Greek Empire, or Eastern Rome incorporated with the Ecclesiastical Power of the Papacy.—Dan. 7:8) until the coming of Christ at the resurrection of the saints.

The 1290 years, or time, times and the dividing of time, (Dan. 7: 25) measure the period during which the saints, times and laws were to be given into his hand—The period of the saint's tribulation, we understand, were shortened to 1260 years, (Rev. 12: 6, 14—11: 2 and 13: 5); but times and laws were to remain in his hand during 1290 years, extending 30 years beyond the 1260. "But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and destroy unto the end." 45 years from the close of the 1290 make 1335 years, when Daniel will stand in his lot, which must be at the resurrection of the saints.

Christ, speaking of this desolating power—the papacy—says, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened,"—which marks a point previous to which the saints were taken out of the hands of the little horn power. Thus we perceive that 1260 years of the 1335 ended prior to the 19th of May, 1780, when the sun was darkened. Add 75 years to 1260 and you have 1335 years, which must end before May 19th, 1855, according to the evidence from the darkening of the sun. But we have abundant historical evidence that the papal power, i. e. the abomination that maketh desolate, was set up in 519, hence the 1335 days (years) end in 1854, which brings the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the saints the present year.

SAMUEL PAGE.

Extract from the "Grand Crisis in human affairs; the Lord soon to come," by F. H. Berick:

Exposition of Daniel, Chap. XII.

v. 1. "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great Prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book."

At the closing point of "the time of the end," when the king of the north shall have come to his end having none to help him, "shall MICHAEL STAND UP." The meaning of the term Michael, as we are informed by Hebraists, is, "who is like God?" This title is evidently applied to that adorable personage, who is elsewhere called Emanuel, or "God with us." We so understand it for the following reasons: 1. In Jude ix, Michael is called the Archangel; and as the term Archangel signifies a ruler of Angels, we understand it to be the Messiah. 2. In 1 Thess. iv: 16, we read "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first."

The phrase, en keleusmati, rendered "with a shout," implies the issue of a command, as by a commanding officer of land or naval forces. The word rendered 'trump' sometimes means a signal blast, or trumpet-call. The sense of the passage therefore, I apprehend to be this, the Lord Jesus Christ shall descend from heaven with the the word of command, issued in the voice of the Lord of Angels, and with the trumpet-tones of Divine authority; and this fiat of omnipotence shall awaken the dead, or as Jesus said, (John v: 25,) "the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." This passage in Thessalonians is synchronous and parallel with Daniel xii: 1, in which the great Prince, that standeth for the people of God, is represented as taking to himself His sovereign authority, and resurrecting the dead. We therefore conclude that Michael, and the Lord Jesus Christ, are one and the same. 3. We are told Michael is "the great Prince which standeth for the children of thy people," that is Daniel's people. In Is. ix: 6, 7, we read "For unto us a child is born: unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, THE PRINCE OF PEACE. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

In Ezek. xxxvii: 25; "And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt, and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever, and my servant David shall be their Prince forever."

In Dan. viii: 25: "And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by peace shall destroy many, he shall also stand up against the Prince of Princes; but he shall be broken without hand."

In Dan. ix: 25: "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and three score and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times."

In Acts v: 30, 31. "The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree: Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins."

From all these testimonies I conclude, that the great Prince here alluded to, is no other than the Son of God, who is the rightful heir to the throne of David.

"And there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation," etc. If a man were told that, at a given period, there was a time of trouble, such as never was since the institution of a bank, he would readily understand it was connected with the currency, implying a pressure on the money market; thus, to my apprehension, is the time of trouble connected with the nations or governments.—If it were not so, why is the term nations used? It is not said, such as never was from the beginning of the creation, or the beginning of the world, but since there was a nation, or, in other words, since the organization of a national government. It alludes therefore, I apprehend, to those national turmoils, and upheavings of the political elements, that will overturn and demolish all the kingdoms of the world, so that subsequently to those commotions the mountains, (or governments,) as represented under the seventh vial, will not be found; for anarchy and confusion will fill the earth. According to Heb. xii: 26—28, the kingdoms of this world will be shaken down and removed, to make room for that 'kingdom which cannot be moved," but will stand forever.

"And at that time thy people shall be delivered." The term here used is, in the Greek Septuagint, the same as used in the Greek Testament, rendered "saved."

"Every one that shall be found written in the book." The subjects of this salvation are enrolled among "the Church of the first born which are written in heaven"

"And it shall come to pass, that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem," (Is. iv: 3).

"And mine hand shall be upon the prophets that see vanity, and that divine lies; they shall not be in the assembly of my people, neither shall they be written in the writing of the house of Israel, neither shall they enter into the land of Israel, and ye shall know that I am the Lord God," (Ezek. xiii: 9).

"And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into a lake of fire," (Rev. xx: 15).

"And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book," (Rev. xxii: 19).

"The book of life" is often referred to in scripture, as containing the names of those who are destined to eternal life, and entitled to citizenship in the New Jerusalem; and ultimately all who are not found written in the book of life will be destroyed by the fires of the last day; or as the scripture says, "shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." It is evident therefore that the expression here used by Daniel denotes the heirs of salvation, who shall experience final deliverance when the Redeemer shall come to Zion, or when Michael shall stand up for the salvation of His people.

v. 2. "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth, shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

This verse teaches unequivocally the resurrection of the dead at the standing up of Michael. As the passage now stands, there is a difficulty in harmonizing it either with the idea of one general resurrection of both righteous and wicked, or with the idea of two distinct resurrections to transpire at different periods. Some learned men have given a different sense by exchanging the terms "some" "and some," for these and those, thus; "And many of them that sleep in the dust shall awake; these" (that do awake) "are destined to everlasting life, and those" (who do not awake) "to shame and everlasting contempt." This rendering presents the subject in a clear light.

v. 3. "And they that be wise, shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever."

This I understand to be parallel with Matt. xiii: 43; "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." This expression is used by our Saviour in speaking of "the end of the world." It is also parallel with Mal. iii: 16, 17.

"Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened, and heard it; and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."

The saints immortalized will constitute the jewelry of heaven, to shine with unfading lustre in the kingdom of God.

v. 4. "But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased."

To present a clear idea of what is shadowed forth under the emblem of sealing the book, I quote the following passage:

"And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith I cannot, for it is sealed. And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned. Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men: Therefore behold, I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid, (Is. xxix: 11–14).

The idea conveyed in these verses, is that those who are alienated from God by wicked works and unbelieving hearts, are debarred from those divine communications of light, which would enable them to perceive clearly His mind and will. Thus in the verse under consideration, the words were to be shut up by rolling up the parchment on which they were written, and further secured from the ken of mortals by sealing the book. During this sealing time the witnesses prophesied in sackcloth, and the visions of Daniel were, as it were, concealed from the eye of man by the hand of God. It is clearly revealed in this verse, that it was the purpose of infinite wisdom to cover up, from the view of His people, some of the most startling and tremendous truths ever recorded on the pages of prophetic history. It seems like the voices of the seven thunders, which the Revelator was directed to seal up, and write them not.

The question is often asked, How is it that those, who profess to have light on the visions of Daniel, should be so much wiser than Newton, and Scott, and Clark, and a host of learned commentators and students of prophecy? To this we may reply, that it is not for any wisdom in us more than any living, but simply because it was the will of God, that the subject should be concealed from the most scrutinizing eye, in times past; so that neither intellectual acumen, nor profound erudition, nor extent of research could compass it till "the time of the end;" and if the seal is now broken, "it it not by might, or by power, but by my spirit saith the Lord." It is not by inherent wisdom of man, but by that which cometh from above, the holy annointing from the spirit of God, that develops light, and elicits truth from the oracles. Says Jesus: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight," (Matt. 11: 25, 26).

The Septuagint rendering of this verse is as follows: "And thou, Daniel, close the words, and seal the book to the time of the end; until many are taught, and knowledge is increased." The idea is clearly presented in this verse, that the sealing of the vision was not to be continued to the end of the numbers, but to "the time of the end." We have seen that after the power that takes away the daily, and establishes the abomination that maketh desolate, commences its career of persecution, the saints will "fall to try them, to purge, and to make them white, even to the time of the end." We have then two points in relation to the time of the end; one of which is, that it will be subsequent to that fearful scene of havoc under the Papal power; and the other, that it will be after the long night of darkness in respect to the visions of Daniel, which bring to view the coming of Christ, the end of the world, and the resurrection of the dead.—It will be an age when the great mass of the Church will not be bound under the iron chains of ecclesiastical despotism, or left in the dark in relation to the economy of grace. In other words, it will be an era of liberty and light. The modifications of civil government for the benefit of society, and the advance of mankind in literary, scientific and artistic knowledge, stand connected with this subject only in so far as they are subservient to the purposes of grace, and the diffusion of evangelical light and truth in the earth. Nahum's chariots running like the lightnings, may be requisite "in the day of His preparation;" and the same impetuosity may be introduced into every department of business and enterprise, in order that "the everlasting Gospel" may be preached to all nations, as it were, by a flying angel. The cars with their electric velocity, vessels that can breast the storms and buffet the billows of the ocean by steam power, may be essential to convey the tidings to earth's remotest bounds. They transport ths heralds of salvation, and the missionaries of the cross, and waft the oracles, together with religious works, in volumes, pamphlets, tracts, periodicals, etc., to every clime on the surface of the globe.—All these wonderful improvements and innovations in the business world may be necessary as a sort of staging for the erection of the spiritual temple. These things absorb the attention, and fill the eye of the world; but they are merely temporary structures to be removed when the top stone of the beautiful temple shall be reared with shoutings, "grace, grace unto it." They are contingencies only, and scarcely glanced at in the prophetic delineations.—But as that God who controls the elements, and directs the sun in its course, caused the sea "to go back by a strong east wind," for the deliverance of His people, and the sun and moon "to stand still," that they might conquer their enemies, and possess the literal Canaan; thus making all nature subservient to the salvation of His people; so now the world is in commotion, and the intellect of man is on the stretch after mechanical invention, and artistic improvement, that may afford every possible facility for the dissemination of light and truth in the earth. Passing therefore these outward appliances, or facilities for the diffusion of knowledge, we come more particularly to consider the light and knowledge, referred to in the prophecy, as being developed in "the time of the end." Let us look a moment at the general diffusion of knowledge on religious subjects.

1. The distribution of Bibles, as it were, broad cast over the earth, is sufficient in and of itself to constitute a new era in the history of the world. At the time the English commenced operations by their "Naval and Military Bible Society," the object of which was to supply the naval and military forces of Great Britain with Bibles, it is supposed there were not more than five or six millions of Bibles in the world. Since that, (in 1840) the "British and Foreign Bible Society" was instituted, with the design of furnishing Bibles for "the whole world." Says Goodrich, "This astonishing institution has reprinted the Holy Scriptures in forty four languages: in five languages it has printed translations of the Scriptures; in seventy-two languages and dialects, in which they never had previously been printed, and in thirty two new translations commenced or completed, making a total of one hundred and fifty three different languages and dialects." [Good. Church His. p. 440.] Bible Societies have also been organized in France, Swizerland, Prussia, Netherlands, Sweden, Denmark, Russia, etc., in Europe; also Madras and Calcutta, in Asia. The "American Bible Society" was formed in 1816, and they have since published and circulated an immense number of Bibles, not only in English, but also in the French, German, Spanish, Irish and Welsh languages. By the agency of Bible associations alone, it is said, more than forty millions of copies of the sacred volume have been distributed in the earth. In addition to all these combined efforts, individual enterprise has not been wanting to help supply the world with the lively oracles. In the dark ages of English history, we are informed, it cost the labors of a life, among ordinary laborers, to purchase a single copy of the Holy Scriptures. Now the sum of twenty five cents, less than the wages of half a day, will furnish a supply of the Old and New Testament, and the sum of seven cents will purchase a copy of the New Testament, and even if destitute of pecuniary means, families may receive the Scriptures by gratuitous distribution.

Thus has this mighty instrumentality been put in operation in the providence of God, to scatter the seed far and wide, if possible, over the entire field of the world. There has scarcely been found in the history of man, any benevolent enterprise that would bear a comparison with the wonderful and glorious achievements of different Bible Associations, nearly all of which has been accomplished within the bounds of the present generation.

2. In the year 1799, a plan was projected for the dissemination of religious instruction, by means of tracts. To avoid all sectarian or denominational prejudices, they adopted on the formation of the "Religious Tract Society" of London, as a fundamental principle, the resolution that their publications should contain nothing but "pure truth." "This flowing from the sacred fountain of the New Testament should run from beginning to end; uncontaminated with error; undisturbed with human systems, clear as crystal, like the waters of life."

"The American Tract Society," was formed at Boston in 1814, and another in New York, 1825. Branches and auxiliaries have multiplied to more than four thousand five hundred.

Through the instrumentality of tract associations, religious tracts and volumes have been published in about seventy different languages, and circulated to the amount of more than two hundred millions of copies, not only among all classes of society in England and the United States, but also in China, the Burman Empire, Siam, Malacca, Hindostan, Armenia, Georgia, and various stations on the Continent of Europe, in South America, in the West Indies, and the Islands of the Indian and Pacific oceans. Ths important instrumentality has been mostly wielded during the present generation, and in the "time of the end."

3. Another branch of christian enterprise is found in the system of colportage, recently adopted, and extensively carried out in Europe and America. Under the operation of this system, men of professed piety make it their constant business to visit the more destitute portions of society, going from house to house, distributing religious publications, engaging in religious conversation, holding prayer meetings, etc Much has been accomplished in this way, in enlightening the community, and reclaiming men from Romanism, infidelity and superstition, and particularly in France numerous revivals of religion have been the result. All this at the "time of the end."

4. One of the most remarkable events, that distinguish the present from all other ages of the world, is the multiplication of Sabbath Schools. But little interest was excited in the public mind prior to the present generation, in relation to the religious education of children and youth. In past ages it was principally accomplished by individual effort, but in our day, the energies of the evangelical world are put in requisition to devise and carry into operation a system of religious training, that the rising generation may be early instructed in heavenly and divine things. To this end associations are formed on an extensive scale, and by a sort of national combination, the efforts of the community are directed in this channel. An immense number of volumes have been written for the benefit of children and youth. Sunday Schools are every where organized. Libraries are extensively circulated, and often gratuitously; papers and various periodicals, adapted to youthful minds are scattered throughout community, and every exertion is put forth in England and America to instruct the rising generation in the knowledge of Bible truth. We are aware that some may object to the means used in the present age for the dissemination of light on spiritual subjects, but we simply allude to those wonderful events, as characterizing the present day as an era of light, when knowledge is increased, and in whatever way Christ is preached, we would in imitation of the Apostle, rejoice, yea and we will rejoice. But to the subject. By the returns of Sunday Schools, as given at Exeter Hall, in London, 1833, it appears, there were at that time, one million, one hundred and fifty eight thousand three hundred and fifty four scholars in the Sunday Schools of Great Britain and Ireland.—[Good. Church His. p. 439.] The "Sunday School Union," was formed in England in 1803 The American "Sunday School Union," was formed at Philadelphia in 1824. Sunday Schools have been established in Canada, New Brunswick, the West Indies, France, Demark, etc. Nearly all this instrumentality has been put in operation at "the time of the end."

5. The issue of periodicals and papers for the purposes of religious instruction is an affair of the present age exclusively.—The "Boston Recorder," with a single exception, is the first religious newspaper ever published in the world, now there are numerous publications issued in the form of Weekly Journals and Monthly Periodicals, as the organs of different branches of the Christian Church. There are some two thousand eight hundred newspapers printed in the United States, of which two hundred are of a religious character, and over one hundred devoted to moral subjects. One of these religious publications, the "American Messenger," has attained to the extraordinary circulation of more than two hundred thousand copies. What means this universal diffusion of spiritual light? Why is the press teeming with volumes, pamphlets, tracts and periodicals, till it groans beneath the ponderous burden? And why should "power presses," and steam engines be employed to accelerate the work, till with inconceivable rapidity, some ten or twenty thousand impressions are made in a single hour? Why has God given to the motions of the press an almost electric velocity, except that the world stands waiting for the last rays of Gospel day, that they may catch some of its life-giving beams, ere the shades of an eternal night close in around them? It seems as if the divine hand would give to the instrumentalities of His providence an impetus so sudden, rapid and powerful, that light might be communicated to the world, I had almost said, "as the lightning shineth from the east even unto the west." "The flying Angel" is abroad; his swift messages of love go on the wings of every wind. Newspapers and tracts are scattered like the hail. In the early part of Franklin's life, there were but two presses in America, now there are about sixteen hundred. One can but feel amazed and overwhelmed at the grandeur of the spectacle. How stupendous the operations of Providence! How wonderful the innovations and improvements of the age! As in the natural world the telegraphic wires convey tidings with the speed of heaven's lightnings, so in the spiritual world, messages go forth with celerity unparalleled in the history of the world. The mechanical genius of man, and the business energies of the world, are developed, and put in requisition to furnish an apparatus for the rapid and universal diffusion of light in the earth.

6. The present is eminently an era of missionary enterprise. The great mass of the Church have slumbered over the command of the great Head, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." But in our day the spirit of missions has been abroad throughout christendom. Societies for the promotion of this object have been organized, and some entire heathen communities converted to Christianity. This development in the spiritual world is entirely not modern, but principally of recent origin. The American board of Commissioners for foreign missions was organized in 1810, the "American Baptist Board" was formed in 1814, and in the present age many other associations have been organized for the purpose of concentrating the energies of the Christian world for the dissemination of Gospel light; and an effort has been made which far surpasses all the efforts of the Church antecedently to the present century. The standard of the cross has been erected in the benighted lands of the heathen. The war has been carried into the enemies' camp: and doubtless many men of God, whose hearts were fired with a holy fervor, and a true missionary zeal, have gone forth to preach the glad tidings of salvation to a perishing world. Missionary stations have been planted in China, Burmah, Siam, Australasia, Hindostan, Ceylon, Armenia, Syria, etc., in Asia; in Constantinople, Malta, etc., in Europe; in South Africa, Egypt, Abysinnia, etc., in Africa; among the Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, etc., in America; in the Islands of the Pacific Ocean, and in general among all the nations of the earth. All these movements have been brought about in the operations of providence, and the dispensations of divine mercy, that the world might receive a warning prior to the end. Thus we perceive, God can raise up instruments to fulfil His will, and accomplish every iota of His word, so that one of the last acts in the movements of the Church has been performed before our eyes; for says Jesus, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness to all nations, and then shall the end come." Some believers in the immediate coming of Christ may object to this application of the passage, thinking it refers exclusive to the Advent message; but we are inclined to the opinion, that although the message of the flying angel having the everlasting gospel to preach, (Rev. xiv: 6,) has specific reference to the proclamation of the Redeemer's coming, yet the passage alluded to in Matt. xxiv: 14, is correctly applied as above.

7. Theological institutions are of recent origin, but they have in the current century multiplied till we have in our land thirty-seven of those seats of theological learning. Brethren may object to this method of disciplining young men for the ministry; but we speak simply of the fact, that in the providence of God such instrumentalities are in operation at the present time; that young men of intelligent minds, and professed piety, are flocking in great numbers to those [illegible] institutions, with their copious Libraries, and erudite Professors, and various facilities for the acquisition of biblical and classical literature. This at least is one of the [illegible] that characterize the present century, and distinguish the era in which we live from all other ages of the world.

Such are some of the leading agencies for the dissemination of gospel light. I need not refer to the operations of the "Seaman's Friend Society" for the benefit of hitherto neglected mariners, organized in 1812, the "American Education Society," for the assistance of indigent young men who are preparing for the ministry, formed in 1815, the "American Temperance Society," formed in 1826, although "the first considerable movement on this subject was in 1811," [Religious Encyclopedia,] the "American Anti-slavery Society," formed in 1833, the "Society for promoting permanent and universal Peace," formed in London 1816, the "American Peace Society," formed in 1828, etc. In fact the very names of the different benevolent institutions, that have sprung up in our day, would almost fill a volume. It is an era of progress and diffusion, of missionary zeal, and benevolent enterprise, in every department of morals and religion. And as if God would not leave a dark spot in all creation, the very tombs of the ancient dead begin to shine with unearthly light, and the monuments of departed ages have come up to add their testimony to the truth, and tell the story of Egyptian and Assyrian kings. Thank the Lord for the bright, glorious, concentrated light that comes streaming from every quarter of the universe, blazing on our position as on a focal point, and giving us light on every department of biblical truth. The Egyptian hieroglyphics could never be deciphered in modern times, until our day. The Sinaitic inscriptions, and the arrow-headed figures of Assyrian writing were all equally blind and unintelligible till of late the Providence of God, in a most remarkable manner, has elicited light, and directed to an understanding of these hitherto unfathomable mysteries. Thus do those imperishable monument, attest the veracity of the sacred historian.

Much light has been thrown upon the sacred record by the travels and observations of learned men, who have traversed the regions of sacred story, observed the manners and customs of oriental nations, the geographical position of cities, rivers and mountains, the natural history of the animal and vegetable tribes, etc. They have gone with mathematical instruments in their hands—they have measured heights and distances of mountains, rivers, seas, etc., and returned with their journals, maps, engravings and measurements, and poured out those treasures of knowledge through the medium of the press in rich profusion. Among the discoveries of the age, the tower of Babel, or temple of the God of Babylon has been found and scrutinized, the halls of the royal palace of Nineveh, have been thrown open, the Assyrian throne exhumed and the tomb of those ancient kings opened to the light of day. The palace of Shushan also, with its floor of variegated marble, has been found as described in Esther 1: 6, and last, though not least in interest and importance, the sepulchre of the prophet Daniel has been discovered presenting on its front the image of a lion; as if God would point the finger of His Providence to the very spot where Daniel was favored with Divine communication, and then to the repository of the dead where he is resting according to command "until the end be;" his flesh resting in hope of a glorious resurrection "at the end of the days."

We can hardly glance at the varied and constantly increasing instrumentalities now in operation for the spread of light and truth in the earth, but must leave the subject with the passing remark, that whoever is unable to discern the signs of the times in this respect, whoever fails to perceive the present to be an age of development and progress, sufficiently so to fulfil the prediction, "knowledge shall be increased," he is like that class alluded to by our Savior, who having eyes see not, and having ears they hear not. It is as if a man should stand out in the full blaze of a meridian sun without distinguishing the beams of day from the shades of night, or as if the voice of seven thunders had broke upon his ear unperceived. "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief, ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day." Blessed are your eyes for they see, and your ears for they hear."—"Therefore let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober, putting on the breast-plate of love, and for an helmet, the hope of salvation."

The warlike preparations continue in serious earnest. Sir C. Napier has been feted in London, and the great Baltic fleet is nearly ready, a portion having sailed.—There are strong suspicions that the Emperor of Russia will not respect the neutrality of Sweden, and that it is possible he may attempt coercion by a sudden naval attack, if he can get his Baltic fleet out of the ice before the arrival of the British.

Notwithstanding the formal statements respecting the entire concurrence of Prussia and Austria with the French and English governments, there is yet great distrust in many quarters with respect to the good faith and real intentions of the two German powers. The answer of the Czar to the French Emperor, and a further manifesto to his people, which was characterized by odious falsehood, and profanity amounting to blasphemy, have been followed by a diplomatic circular from the French minister of foreign affairs, addressed to the diplomatic agents of that government.—All the responsibility of the war is shown to rest on the Czar, and his pretenses to be the champion of Christianity against the infidel, are very clearly exposed. In conclusion, the circular has the following observations on the Czar's Christianity:

"Our age of troubles has, at least, been spared some of the ills which formerly vexed the world. I refer to religious wars. The appeal of the Emperor Nicholas to the Russian nation sounds like an echo of those former unhappy times: it is pretended to oppose the Cross to the Crescent and from fanaticism is demanded that support which can not be asked from reason.

"France and England have not to defend themselves from the imputation which is addressed to them; they do not sustain Islamism against Greek orthodoxy: they are about to protect the Ottoman territory against the covetousness of Russia: they will do this with the conviction that the presence of their armies in Turkey will destroy the prejudices, already weakened, which still separate the various classes of the subjects of the Sublime Porte, and which would never arise again, unless the appeal from St. Petersburgh provoking the enmity of race and a revolutionary explosion, should paralyze the generous intentions of the Sultan Abdul Medjid. For our parts, sir, we sincerely believe that in lending onr support to Turkey, we are more useful to the Christian faith than the government which makes it the instrument of its temporal ambition. In reproaching others, Russia forgets too much, that in her own empire she is far from exercising toward those sects which do not profess the dominant religion, a tolerance like that for which the Sublime Porte may take credit; and that with less apparent zeal for the Greek religion beyond her frontiers, and more charity for her Catholics at home, she would better obey the law of Christ, which she invokes with so much eclat."

It is believed that express treaty stipulations in favor of the Christian populations, are being negotiated, as between the two powers and the Sultan, and that legal and fiscal obstacles to the full development and progress of the non-Mussulman races will be removed when the Russians shall have been repelled and curbed.

The World's Crisis.

Christian Conversation.

TEXT, PSALMS 12: 34.

"The Lord shall cut off all flattering lips, and the tongue that speaketh proud (margin, great) things; who have said, with our tongue will we prevail; our lips are our own; who is Lord over us?"

Man is a subject, i. e., one reigned over by another; and in no relation can he be placed legitimately, in which he can for a moment extricate himself from his subjective condition. Although for a time he may usurp the authority of a higher power, and that power God, by which he will reduce to the most abject slavery his fellow, yet the principle remains as true as ever, that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, * * * that they should seek the Lord, * * * for in him we live, and move, and have our being;" on which he has based the right to command all men everywhere to repent, and by which he justifies that right by bringing all men to an appointed day for judgment, (Acts 17: 26—31,) in which day we shall experience the truthfulness of Christ's saying, "That every idle (Greek, Argon, unprofitable, useless) word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned," [Matt. 12: 36, 37.—Hence the right assumed in our text, and expressed in verse 4,—"With our tongue will we prevail; our lips are our own; who is lord over us?"—is indeed but an assumption,—exhibits the cause of "the godly man" ceasing,—the failure of the faithful from among the children of men, in consequence of their speaking vanity, every one with his neighbor, with flattering lips and with a double heart,—discovering their pride,—for which the Lord shall cut them off. This certainly justifies the prayer of the Royal Psalmist—"Help (margin, save) Lord,"—and demonstrates that man is the subject of a moral government, the author of which is God, who will have the church especially recognize that the "wholesome tongue (margin the healing of the tongue) is a tree of life, but perversness therein is a breach in the spirit," [Prov. 15: 4. "He that keepeth his mouth, keepeth his life; but he that openeth wide his lips, shall have destruction," [Prov. 13: 3,] and that "whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue, keepeth his soul from troubles," [Prov. 21: 23. Therefore, my dear brethren, the subject to which your attention is here invited, is one of the first importance. Your character depends upon the words of your lips, and if you offend not in word, you are, according to James 4: 2, perfect, and can bridle the whole body. The sin then, forbidden in the text I have selected above, is that of speaking evil, which by divine assistance I will endeavor to develop.

Speaking evil is positively forbidden in Titus 3: 2, and James 4: 11. In both these scriptures the word evil is a nown, and according to Webster's Dictionary it means "Any violation of the plain principles of justice and rectitude;" therefore "any violation of the plain principles of justice and rectitude" in speaking, is evil. Hence, as a principle of justice and rectitude by which to decide what is evil or not evil speaking, see Matt. 7: 12.—Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." The reason why we should observe this is embraced in the word "therefore," and exhibited in the verses 7 to 11, which read, "and you will perceive that if your heavenly Father—much more—gives good things to them that ask him, you should do to others as you would that they should do to you," as is indeed still clearer presented by reading verses 1 to 7, which requires a clearing of our own sight before we attempt to perform any surgical operation upon the eyes of another. A man would be as likely to destroy the sight as extract a mote, if he attempted to do so, while his own eye had in it a beam. Hence we should be very careful in all things whatsoever we would that men should do to us, to do even so to them; and if we were to observe this in speaking, and may I not say in writing also, we would be very careful of the reputation of others—indeed as much so as we would have others be of ours. Our tongues, instead of being used to speak evil, would be used for higher, holier and nobler purposes. Said Mr Wesley, while living, "Evil speaking is neither more nor less than speaking evil of any absent person," illustrations of which may be gathered in abundance. I hear my neighbor swear—I tell it to a third person—I am guilty of the crime for, continues Mr Wesley, "relating something evil which was really said or done by one that is not present when it is related. Should any one object to this definition of evil speaking, we invite them to an investigation of the terms used to designate this sin in the Bible.—What is back-biting but relating something said or done by another to a third person? You know of a man who has said something of another. You tell that such a one has committed the sin, doing it very kindly and carefully with expressions of good will, hoping it is not so bad, constitutes it whispering; for whispering, you are aware, is a very soft manner of expressing our ideas. It will not be difficult, probably, for any one to discover that the vice so clearly forbidden in the Bible, is very extensively practiced. One exception only, exists to this rule, namely: You are acquainted with the design which a man has against the property, reputation or life of his neighbor. Circumstances may be such that no means can be used to prevent it but by making it known. Justice, then, demands that you should tell the person of it, but no one else. Should you leave him and tell his next neighbor of it, who has no connexion with the affair, and of course has no interest involved, you have committed the sin, and must repent. "Strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." There are a variety of forms in which this sin is committed. Do you see an individual engaged in a suppressed laugh? Do you understand its meaning? He wishes you to ask him what he is laughing at. Look out. You do so. Well, he says, I don't know as I had better tell, and at the same time means to do it. You say why, is it wrong? No, I don't know as it is, is the reply, and the viper creeps from his hole. Another perhaps has a more pious way of sinning. He perhaps has given you an early morning call. He stopped to hear you pray—perhaps attempted the work himself—and after prayers he remains awhile. He looks down very sad; says but very little, if anything; works with his fingers, whittles a stick. You are obliged to notice him.—Brother, is anything the matter—are you in a trial? No, I had some news last night that makes me feel bad. Why what was it, say you, does it interest me? Well, says he, I have been thinking what I better do. You will not tell any one that I said anything, will you? O no, indeed. The die is cast—now look out for a detailed account of the crimes of others. Again, another comes in, sits awhile, asks you if you have heard about Brother A., B., C. No, why? Why I thought everybody knew about him.—Well I am sorry I spoke; perhaps I ought not to, but then you will tell no one, you are my confident—But hold, my Brother, go no farther; confess your fault and cease to stir up strife. Do you not know that he has a confidant, and his confidant has another, and so on; and by this means the fault of one of your brethren is related to a whole community.

The above are only a few specimens of the development of a vice so very prevalent in society, that for one to attack it, each is ready to impeach the character of his confidant for having told the preacher who exposed it; because he stopped somewhere in the place where the guilty one was known. Then he very likely shuns the preacher—stays at home when he preaches, because he dislikes to hear his character depicted before so large a congregation, and would like to have him tell him his faults in private. It is the wounded bird that flutters and falls. It may be that some one says—He told something about me once, and I think I have a right to tell what he has done. Hold Brother. "Say not thou, I will recompense evil; but wait on the Lord, and he shall save thee" [Prov. 20: 22. "Say not, I will do so to him as he hath done to me; I will render to the man according to his work," [Prov. 24: 29. See Matt. 5: 38, 39. O, my brethren, let us take heed, and "let us fear lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest any of you should seem to come short of it," [Heb. 4: 1. It is true that we have the cry at midnight—but to derive any benefit from a belief of it we must practice it. We must live in accordance with out faith.

Secondly. Notice some of the consequences, of the vice we are considering.—James 4: 11, 12, teaches us that "he that speaketh evil of his brother and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law: but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. There is one lawgiver, who is able to save and destroy; who art thou that judgest another?" It was an avowed and very general maxim among the Jewish Rabbins, "that no one could speak evil of his brother without denying God, and becoming an atheist They considered detraction the sin of the devil originally from the expression of Gen. 3: 5, insinuating that through envy God forbid him to eat. The law condemns all evil speaking; hence if we violate the law, we in effect judge it—assume to ourselves the judgment seat; question the justness of its commands; deem them unworthy of our attention; institute in our minds a law more agreeable to our course of action, and go on foaming out our own shame—demonstrating to all that our religion is vain, (James 1: 26) and come to judgment with a deceived heart; at which time God will destroy all such. See Ps. 50, 20–23; 101: 5, and our text, Ps. 12: 3, 4. See Ps. 64. Dear brethren and sisters, accept this exhortation from one who expects to meet his God this year, 1854. Do we believe this?—Do our works show it? Are we ready? It will be a final test of character, when before the judgment we stand. You believed in my coming in 1854, did you?—Why then has thou slandered thine own mother's son? Such then will be speechless. Ah, yes, whether it was a slander uttered by your lips, or written with your pen. Why did you so? Was it pride? Perhaps you assumed a position. How could you change? How mortifying, how humbling!—I will not yield. Was it envy? It may be you could not consent to have another preferred before you, or rise superior to you in the affections and sympathies of your friends. You visited them; you talked, you corresponded with them. All to no purpose; they would esteem worth in others as well as in you; and at the same time they perhaps loved you none the less, until you slandered. What made you do it? Had you faults that you feared might be discovered, if another became the confidant of your friends? And did you backbite in order to keep them covered? It might have been done to disguise hatred. Be the cause what it may, it is no palliation of the crime. God commanded you to speak not evil of your brethren. "Speak evil of no man." O, when will those who love God, or profess to, desist from such things as will destroy them? God will have a pure people—a people whose lips shall speak forth his praise. We are to meet the judgment, and our characters are to be decided by the gospel as written anciently, and not as modern editions teach.

Thirdly. By the above, we perceive the propriety of David's prayer recorded in verse 1, of Ps. 12. Said David, "Help Lord, (margin, Save Lord;) for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men." Why so? because they speak vanity—verse 2, speaketh proud things, verse 3. Declare their right so to do, because of their assumption—"Our lips are our own, who is Lord over us." Hence, "with our tongue will we prevail," verse 4. Prevail over whom? The poor—the needy—who because of their oppression, sighs, all of which is caused by an unrighteous use of the tongue, exhibiting a "double heart."—A heart of deceit which gives origin to one class of thoughts—of sentiments in the presence of others, in order to secrete others which have their constant abiding place in the heart, until such times as it can make them known to those whose sinister motive, and unworthy duplicity or double dealing, more fully ensures success. How much of this do we see at this time of treachery and deceit. May God have mercy, and save the church, by very speedily hiding it in his "pavilion from the strife of tongues," Ps. 31: 20, by which those who love him, and sacrifice all for his glory, may forever be preserved "from the scourge of the tongue," Job. 5: 21.

Finally—We present a rule which if observed, will remove every occasion for the commission of this crime. See James 1: 19–26, and chap. 4. Ps. 34: 13., 39: 1., 1 Pet. 3: 10. In all of which we are required to restrain ourselves, and on every occasion when we speak, bridle our tongues. A horse needs no bridle when standing in the stall; but it is convenient to have one when we wish to use him for a journey.—Our tongues when used, need a bridle also, and the Apostle presents the fact that so certain as it has no bridle on, so certain will it prove unruly, setting on fire the whole course of nature, and it is set on fire of hell. Therefore, how important is the gospel bridle.

Again, see Matt. 5: 21—26, especially verses 23—25. Are you at the altar with your gift? Do you remember your brother hath ought against you? And have you offered your gift before the altar from which you have come rejoicing? Remember you are deceived—that rejoicing is far—very far from the rejoicing of hope in God. Such rejoicing in your case cannot exist, until you have left your gift at the altar—gone away, in order first "to be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." Any other course, will be attended with dangerous results. In conclusion, notice Matt. chap. 18. Read it all, and having learned as in verse 14, that "even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish"—examine verses 15—20 faithfully, and discover how to save them. Then observe verses 21, 22, in which Peter asked, "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him, till seven times?" Said Jesus, "until seventy times seven" or as oft as he repents—Luke 17: 1–4, which principles in 23—35 of Matt. 18, are illustrated, enforced, and in verse 35 applied as follows:—"so likewise shall my heavenly Father do also to you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses." May we all obtain grace to keep the faith, and this year, 1854, receive the reward of well doing, is the prayer of your brother in the faith of God.

JOHN HOWELL.

South Orrington, Me., March 24, 1854.

Three Days Later from Europe.

By the Africa, at New York, from Liverpool, 29th ult., we have three days later intelligence from Europe. The salient points in our new budget are these—that the British fleet has sailed for the Baltic; that the report of the capture of Kalafat by the Russians, was wholly untrue; that Prussia insists upon remaining neutral in the impending war, while Austria expresses a willingness to take sides with England and France; and that the principles of maritime neutrality by which the allied powers intend to be governed, have been announced by Lord Clarendon, so far as relates to Russian produce. He has declared that free snips will not make free goods.

The statement that Kalafat was captured by the Russians was an atrocious falsehood, and totally unfounded. No fighting worthy of notice has taken place either on the Danube or in Asia.

The first division, consisting of fourteen British ships under the command of Admiral Sir Charles Napier, was to sail from Portsmouth on the 11th for the Baltic. It is said that 3000 British troops will go to the Baltic for land service.

The London Daily News says (without date) that the Czar had sent another proposal to Vienna, which the representatives of the four powers found unadmissible and rejected.

Prussia and Austria have not signed this ultimatum, their policy being still defined to be neutrality for the present and mediation for the future.

The allied fleets were at Beicos bay; the bulk of the Russian fleet at Sebastopol. Both fleets had cruisers in the Black Sea. The Russian Baltic fleet is making its way through the ice to the sea.

The Gr ek insurrection had subsided. The first division of the troops for the East was to leave Toulon on the 20th.

Some excitement was caused in commercial circles by Lord Clarendon's announcement to Riga merchants that all Russian produce, no matter to whom belonging, and even in neutral vessels, shall be considered a lawful prize in the event of war.

Latest despatches from Paris fully confirm the news respecting the attitude assumed by Prussia and Austria on the Eastern question. Austria expressed her perfect willingness to join the Western Powers, but Prussia positively refused, on the ground that as Prussia was not a maritime power she had therefore comparatively little interest in the matter.

Count Buol's despatch, however, leaves the position of Austria in doubt.

Reports from Vienna on the 8th, state that the Russians were withdrawing from Kalafat, and that the Archduke Albert was to be Commander-in-Chief of the Austrians on the south-eastern frontier.

The queen issued a proclamation on the 9th, against British subjects engaging in foreign service, or fitting out vessels for warlike purposes without special license.

A despatch to the Morning Chronicle, of the 10th, from Athens, states the Greek insurrection to be extending in Thessaly; Gen. Kanyos had joined the insurgents. City of Arta was taken by assault. The Turks were beaten in several encounters.

Lord John Russell was quite ill and unable to attend to his duties.

The French Senate unanimously voted a loan of 250,000,000 francs. Twelve steamers were being fitted out at Toulon to convey French troops to the East.

Gen. José De La Concha has arrived at Bordeaux. The remainder of the Saragossa insurgents have found their way into France, and thus the last attempt at revolution in Spain has completely fallen to the ground. A great many arrests are known to have taken place in Spain, though few are made public.

Still Later From Europe.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP CANADA.

EASTERN AFFAIRS.

The Czar's reply to the last peremptory intimation of Great Britain and France was due March 15th. No reply, however, had been returned. Nevertheless there were numerous reports current of concessions on the part of Russia. These produced no effect on the stock market, and were regarded as intended solely to create conflicting discussions, and to retard any complete combination of the European powers. As regards hostilities, affairs remain nearly as they were. On the Danube no movements of importance had occurred.

From Asia nothing is received.

Public expectation looks now to the Baltic for the next move.

Kalafat continues to be strengthened.

Unimportant skirmishes continue along the banks of the Danube.

From Hermanstadt are accounts of a Russian expedition to the right bank of the Danube, to engage a Turkish battery by land, while a flotilla, with supplies, should pass up the river.—The movement was successful, the flotilla having passed. The Russians then withdrew. A similar event occurred on the part of the Turks, 2000 Turks having crossed near Silistria, made a dash at a Russian battery, and retired with little loss.

The Russians seem to have suspended their intention to attack Kalafat, and menaced the Turks at Galak and Braila. Omar Pasha continues to threaten them at various points, thus keeping them on the alert. Part of the Russian force has withdrawn from before Kalefat, and moved towards Orsina.

The order of the day issued by Gortschakoff March 1st, announces that in three weeks, Prince Paskiewitch of the Russian army, would inspect the troops on the Danube.

The Greek insurrection has not quite subsided, but is not formidable. The villages on the Greek frontier have joined the insurgents, but the cities are quiet. The insurrection manifests itself in South Albania.

The garrison of the citidel of Orta had chased the insurgents across the Greek frontier, where they themselves were repulsed by Grecian troops.

Egyptian troops had been sent to occupy Candia.

Servia was quiet; the reported disturbances there were not correct.

The allied fleets were still at Beycos Bay, March 6th.

The Russian fleet remained at Sebastopol, Feb 22d.

It is reported that the first operations of the Anglo-French army will be to attack Crimea.—Troops will land at Bala Aklava to attack Sebastopol by land, while the allied fleets attack it by sea.

The Russians are fortifying the cities of Wallachia and Moldavia, especially Jokschani on the Schuyl.

A thousand workmen were strengthening the fortifications at Sebastopol; also fortifying Odessa and the entran e to the Dneiper; also Cronstadt, Wilborg and Sweaborg, in the Baltic.

The Baltic is still closed by ice.

The French fleet being occupied in conveying troops to the East, will presently send only the "Austerlitz," line of battle ship, to the Baltic, but soon Admiral Deschesne's squadron will join Sir Charles Napier's.

Admiral Cary, in the Neptune line of battle ship, had sailed to join Sir Charles Napier's fleet, and other ships were being despatched as ready.

Twenty-seven sailing ships and six steamers are embarking men and horses at Woolwich.

GREAT BRITAIN.---LATEST.

The Czars reply could not arrive from St. Petersburg till the 26th or 28th inst.

In Parliament Mr Gilson moved an address praying that in the event of a war, Her Majesty would give directions to her cruisers to abstain from interfering with neutral vessels not containing contraband munitions of war. He also suggested the policy of entering into a similar treaty with the United States and other countries. Left sitting.

The Morning Chronicle's Paris Correspondent states that at a Council of Ministers, despatches from the French envoy in London were read, in which that functionary states that the English Cabinet is not disposed to look upon the propositions made by Prussia for the resumption of negotiations between the Western powers for Russia as serious, or likely to lead to a pacific solution; therefore he thinks that there is no occasion for the two Cabinets to occupy themselves with the propositions.

The English Goverment declares that the only thing to be done at present, is to hasten the embarkation of the troops for Constantinople, and the despatch of a third squadron to the Baltic. The opinion of the English Cabinet was fully approved of by France.

FRANCE.—The loan is taken with readiness, not only in Paris but in the Provinces. Much of it had been taken in small sums.

Prince Hohenzollern had presented an autograph letter from the King of Prussia to Napoleon. The letter was not published, but it is reported that it defended Prussian neutrality, and suggested a new mediation by Prussia.—Napoleon's reply was, "Prince, I am happy to see you as a friend, but as regards your mission, it is altogether too late." It was supposed that Gen. Gesbens mission to London would similarly fail.

Gen Caurobert left Paris on the 13th for the East, accompanied by Gen Bosquet.

An extraordinary plan has been mooted, which is to buy up and suppress all private journals except the Moniteur and Journal de L'Empire, and to establish one government paper, to be published at the chief city of each department. The plan was actually discussed by the Ministers, but it is postponed indefinitely.

No business was transacted at the Bourse on Friday—3's 66,20, 4 1-2's 92,50. It is said the subscription to the war loan already amounts to three hundred and ten million francs.

BERLIN.—The Grand Duke Constantine inspected the fleet at Helsingford on Friday. The Emperor was expected in a fortnight.

The gulfs of Bothena and Finland are still covered with ice.

The Swedish papers report that thirty thousand Russians are employed in cutting a channel from Cronstadt to Sweborg.

VIENNA.—The Gazette des Pates of 15th, says that the treaty between the Western Powers and the Porte, is concluded on the terms already known, and that the treaty itself had reached Vienna, and has been forwarded to the other powers.

The Chamber of Peers had voted an address to the Crown.

RUSSIA.—St. Petersburg, March 17th—Exchange 3s 7d 5-8.

The merchants here now feel certain of war.

On the 5th, martial law was proclaimed at St. Petersburgh and throughout Russia and Poland.

St. Petersburgh was placed under the command of the Czar's eldest son. The regime is now the same as in Tauris, Cromea, and Bessarabia.

Warsaw papers state by authority that Russia has not claimed co-operation with the German powers, but merely strict neutrality—which neutrality they say has been firmly promised.

The exportation of grain from the Danubian principalities is forbidden after the 19th inst.

ITALY.—The Sultan is reported to have sent a friendly autograph letter to the people, which was well received.

Food riots had occurred at Fabrifant, but were suppressed by the military authorities.

DENMARK.—An address has been voted by the House of the Danish Parliament, demanding the dismissal of the Olstead Ministry.—Besides arming Copenhagen, Crowberg &c., Denmark is fitting out a fleet of 300 guns.

SWEDEN.—Sweeden is actively arming; has ordered the fitting up of seven line of battle ships. Two camps to be formed; one at Carlskroon; another near Stockholm. The garrison of the Island of Gottsland is increased to 16,000 men.

MISCELLANEOUS.—Affairs in Burmah continue unsatisfactory to the British.

From China we have little new or definite. Shanghai was expected soon to fall into the hands of the Insurgents, whilst Pekin was reported to be closely invested.

ARRIVAL OF STEAMER FRANKLIN.

Her dates are to March 15, four days later.

It is rumored at Paris that the Czar had given orders for his army to pass the Danube forthwith.

The first division of the British fleet under Sir Charles Napier sailed on Saturday. Its destination is said to be Wingoe Sound. It will not at present enter Russian waters.

Prussia has sent a confidential mission to the Emperor Napoleon.

A terrible earthquake occurred at Calabria, by which ten thousand persons were killed.

From the Boston Traveller.

Letter from Turkey.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 2, 1853.

Editors of the Traveller :—The insurrection I alluded to in my last, as having broken out in the district of Arta, has become a very serious matter. The whole Greek Kingdom is shaken by it, and it seems likely to be the cause of an entire revolution of the Greek government. Arta, you know, belongs to Turkey, and the rising up is of the Greeks in the province against the Turks. Russia is, no doubt, at the bottom of it, and probably her money has been freely put in requisition.—The whole of independent Greece sympathises with the movement, and they are going forth by thousands to the field.—Officers of the army, and Ministers of State, students of the University, artisans, peasants, are moved as by one spirit to fight against the Turk. They all seem to think that now the dream of the restoration of the Byzantine empire to the Greeks is to be realized. King Otho knows not what to do. In the theatre at which the foreign ministers were present, he was, by acclamation, called "Otho, King of Byzantine." The English and French Ambassadors immediately left the house.—The Turkish Minister is said to have asked for his passports.

It is true, Otho resists the clamorous demands of his people to be led on to war, as far as he is able, but what can he do? Some of his first generals, it is said, have gone into his presence, and tearing off their epaulettes, have cast them down at his feet, saying, "If you will not sanction war with Turkey, we will resign."

This is giving another complication to the already sufficiently snarled Eastern question. Turkey is now sending troops towards the Grecian frontier. England and France, must, of course, also come down upon Greece; but there may be no practicable way of keeping the Greeks quiet, except by entirely extinguishing their empire. This "The Powers" are, of course, able to do, but will they do it? They certainly are not likely to consent that Greece shall be given back to Turkey. Will England annex it to the Ionian Islands? But it is useless to begin such speculations, for where will they end? There is now every appearance of a wide spread and terrific European struggle; and, I would also add, "long continued," were it not that the present implements of warfare are so very murderous. When the smoke of the great battle all clears away, who can tell where the boundaries of kingdoms will be, or what new adjustments will be considered necessary, in order to maintain "the great European principle,"—balance of power! It is comforting, however, to reflect that God rules among the nations, by his special and never-sleeping providence; and that all the nations of the earth, with all their wealth and glory, are as a mere "drop in the bucket," and as the "dust of the balance." 'His counsel shall stand, and He will do all his pleasure."

THE GREEK INSURRECTION.

Messrs. Editors :—I have dates from Greece to the 22d ultimo. The rebel army had at that period reached the number of 10,000 armed men. The enthusiasm throughout all Greece was intense. Men of all ages and all stations, teachers, lawyers, physicians, students, as well as laborers, in spite of all precautionary measures of the governments of free Greece and the Ionian islands, had hastened to the field of battle. A large number, particularly of the islanders, have been kept back only from want of means to reach the scene of action. My papers from Athens are of course full of the subject. I cull from their contents the two following proclamations, the one issued by the inhabitants of Radovitzi, the other from the camp of the rebel army. The latter is a spirited appeal to the Greeks, to the other civilized nations, and lastly to the Mahomedan subjects of the Porte in Europe.

We have already heard what others had to say concerning the Greek revolution; let us now hear what they have to say for themselves.

PROCLAMATION.

The undersigned, inhabitants of Radovitzi of Arta, being unable to bear any longer the oppression and extortion, as well as personal violence perpetrated on our own bodies and upon those of our families by the fierce and incorrigible Osmanlis, our conquerors, undertake once more the struggle of 1821, swearing by the name of the Highest and of our holy country, that we shall never lay down our arms until we have regained our independence.

To this effort, we doubt not, that we shall have, not only the sympathies of all our fellow countrymen, the free Greeks, and those Christian brethren who are still sighing under the heavy yoke of Osman, but their co-operation also in the prosecution of a common cause; for we fight "for Faith and for Country," and for the acquisition of our inalienable rights.

Our struggle is a holy and just one, and no one when he considers the height of oppression to which we have been subjected, and the rights of nations, will ever utter a word against us or in favor of our enemy, and of the crescent which shines on our temples. Hasten then, brethren, to the common struggle, shake off the hated yoke of tyranny, and proclaim with us, in the presence of God and all the world, that we fight for our country, and that God is the defender of Christians!

The Christian's Hope.

How cheering is the Christian's hope
While toiling here below!
It buoys us up while passing through
This wilderness of woe.

It points us to a land of rest,
Where saints with Christ will reign,
Where we shall meet the loved of earth,
And never part again.

A land where sin can never come,
Temptations ne'er annoy;
Where happiness will ever dwell,
And that without allow.

O how unlike the present world,
Will be the one to come!
Here, pain and sorrow, care and fear,
Attend where'er we roam.

In that bright world no tears will flow,
Death ne'er can enter there—
For all who gain that heavenly land
Will be as angels are.

Fly, lingering moments, fly, O fly!
Dear Saviour, quickly come!
We long to see thee as thou art,
And reach that blissful Home.

"Let it Come."

While perusing the columns of the Crisis, No. 8, the extracts from the British Banner struck me forcibly, and also some comments on the same. Said Patrick Henry, "Gentlemen may cry peace, peace, but there is no peace." No, surely there is no peace at the present time, "for when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them and they shall not escape."

The sound of peace will soon be heard no more until the child who was born heir to David's Throne shall reign, for his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor and Prince of peace. Said Jesus when He went away, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you," and again we hear him saying, "Peace be unto you," and says the Apostle, "Peace be multiplied unto you." But saith God, "There is no peace to the wicked." The nations are angry, and soon peace will be taken from the earth. The righteous will all be gathered safely home where 'all is peace;' but alas for this doomed world when the peace makers have all taken their flight! O woful day! Says the Psalmist, "gather not my soul with the wicked, nor my life with bloody men;" this is my prayer. But the world is utterly blinded, they know not the thoughts of the Lord, nor understand his counsel, but in their restlessness of feeling they say, "Let it come." Let freedom be bought at the price of blood, and its "Banner wave o'er conquered Despotism." Aye, and there is another class that say, "Let it come,"—it is even the lovers of peace, those whose hearts recoil at the thought of fury and strife, who have ever sought to hide themselves from such scenes of confusion; yet with hearts beating in unison with heaven's plan, they can but cry, "let it come!" But they are seeking a hiding place, "a refuge from the storm;" yes, they have secured "a strong Tower" into which they will run and be safe; and soon the voice will be heard saying, "Come my people enter into thy chambers, shut thy doors about thee, hide thyself for a little moment until the indignation be overpast." We know what must come ere we are permitted to behold the earth again blooming in beauty, filled with the glory of God. "The battle of that great day of God Almighty," when the slain of the Lord shall be from one end of the earth to the other, and all the fowls be filled with their flesh, must come ere the Prince of peace can reign, and our hearts are longing for that day, therefore we say, "Let it come."

But O we would that some more might flee, ere the storm burst upon their defenseless heads, and find refuge where alone it can be obtained. O that some would yet be admonished before it is forever too late. Mercy will soon be gone forever, but "they that scorn alone must bear it." "The scorner will soon be consumed out of the earth," "but the righteous will be had in everlasting remembrance." O what a day! what responsibilities are resting upon those who are "put in trust with the gospel," and upon whom rests the all important work of warning a guilty world of impending wo. May God help us to be found faithful to our trust in the great day.

For the World's Crisis.

The Watchmen.

I saw a bright band on the watch-towers of Zion,
The sheen of their armour gleamed brightly around,
Their brows bore the impress of Judah's brave Lion,
And hope's dazzling helmet their stately heads crown'd;
With Eagle-eyes piercing the shades of the twilight,
Intensely they watch'd through the long, dreary night,
When a shout, that made earth to its centre reverberate,
Broke forth from those watchmen, THE SWORD IS IN SIGHT.

Then the feet of those watchmen were seen on the mountains,
Those beautiful feet bringing tidings of peace,
Deliverance to captives who long had been sighing,
And cheering the poor with the hope of release;
Their ranks were unbroken, they moved on in union,
The blast of their trumpets a certain sound gave,
The wise understood it, the joyful sound knowing,
Prepar'd to go forward, and fight with the brave.

Then from their deep slumbers awoke all the virgins,
A little flock truly, but fair as the sun,
And each in their hands carried lamps brightly burning,
All ready were waiting the Bridegroom's return;
So the watchmen led onward this lone little army,
And turned not aside for the heat or the cold,
They boldly faced dangers, their insults bore meekly,
And Satan's fierce darts quench'd with faith's trusty shield.

But another dark band appear'd pressing behind them,
They too led the van, with them thousands rush'd on,
They war'd with the truth and the faithful in Zion,
And by them the lame and the weak were cast down;
I saw 'twas a wild crew of reckless deserters,
Their heavenly birthright had barter'd for sin,
And cast away vilely the shield of the mighty,
Were once the fine gold, but had now become dim.

Then I wept, for I well knew they all had been faithful,
That thousand through them had been bless'd with the word,
Though they now grieve the righteons had once made them cheerful
By preaching the truth in the fear of the Lord;
But now when the poor scatter'd flock is surrounded
With mockers, and scoffers, and perils, and lies,
They're seeking earth's honors, the blessed cause wounding,
And peace like a dove from their own bosom flies.

But my vision extended even down to the judgment,
And there I beheld them all strip'd of disguise,
And the faithful had crowns like the stars on the ocean,
And brought their sheaves with them a glorious prize,
But ah, there was howling from unfaithful watchmen,
And lost ones reproaching them, deep was their shame,
'Till at last in the lake, with the beast and false prophet,
They ceased to exist in the last quenchless flame.

VESTA N. CUDWORTH.

West Charlemont, Mass.

On Time.

Dan. 12 : 11—"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days," (years); verse 12, "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and thirty-five days," which is an addition of forty-five to the former number, twelve hundred and ninety. Hence both numbers begin at the same time.

Verse 13,—"But go thou thy way till the end be; for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot (resurrection) at the end of the (1335) days.

Mat. 24 : 15,—"When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the Prophet, stand in the holy place." Daniel speaks of only one. How long is that? 1290.

Verse 22,—"For the elect's sake those (1290) days shall be shortened." How much? Turn to Rev. 11 : 3, and 12 : 6, where John gives the number 1260. How much are the 1290 shortened? Just 30 years. How long is the tribulation?—1260.

Verse 29,—"Immediately after the tribulation of those (1260) days shall the sun be darkened," &c., which took place May 19, 1780. Where did the tribulation end? Immediately before the darkening of the sun; consequently in 1779. Now if 1260 end in 1779, where did they begin? Subtract 1260 from 1779, and you get 519, where they commence. Where do the 1335 commence? At the same place.—Where do they end? Add 519 to 1335, and it makes 1854, when Daniel will be raised, with all the saints. Children can understand this argument. WM. L. CAMP.

For the World's Crisis.

It seems there was a paschal full moon on a Friday, in A. D. 37, according to Ferguson, true era. We will say Christ died at the beginning of the 70th week; 7 years then, added to 37, make 44; 446 added to 44, make 490; A. D. 44, then, the 490 ended. 1810, the excess of 2300 over 490, will end the vision. Now let us see how many years will be left of 1854, after deducting 44.

1854

If, then, the week of confirmation was after the crucifixion, we shall, according to the above reckoning, witness the Advent in 1854, and as early in the year as the death of Christ extended into the 70th week. We may conclude that it extended into that week 6 months or so, for it was to be after three score and two weeks that Messiah should be cut off. It seems impossible, therefore, that he should be cut off at the very beginning of the 70th week. Again, the term, "midst of the week," implies a few months at least, within the 70th. Considering the present evidence respecting the events to begin and end the 1290 years, together with the foregoing arguments, we have the most astounding evidence that the Advent will be witnessed this year. Amen.

But suppose Prindle's paschal full moon on a Friday, was A. D. 37, vulgar era—Then Christ's age at his death must have been 41, to which if we add 446, we have 487 to his death, from the going forth of the commandment to build Jerusalem.—(See Neh. 2.) Now as it takes only three years more to make out the 490, Christ must have been crucified in the middle of the week. We are then to add 3 years to A. D. 41, true era, and we have A. D. 44 for the 490 to end. This will bring the same result as the other—1854—for the vision to end, with the exception that we can locate the death of Christ in the midst of the week, in the fullest sense of the term. Hence, whether Prindle's computation has respect to the vulgar or true era, we have the means to terminate the 2300 in 1854. We have evidence that Christ was crucified in the middle of the week, or at its commencement, just as the circumstances render the one or the other position the most advisable. For it can be sustained by at least nearly as good argument that a whole week, with the exception of a few months, was taken up in confirming the covenant, as that a part of said week was occupied with Christ's ministry.

Yours, hoping unto the end.

H. BARRINGER.

MILLBRIDGE, Me., March, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—There are a few in this place, who believe in the speedy coming of our Lord and Master. Though our numbers are small, yet the Lord is not slack concerning his promise to meet with, and bless us. Blessed be his name, if faithful, I believe we shall soon get home. A few short months or perhaps weeks, the angel will stand upon the sea and upon the earth and sware that time shall be no longer. Solemn thought! What manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation. Are we ready? Are we all ready? O, reader, if you are not, be wise, take heed to the sure word of prophecy—escape for thy life—look not behind thee—stay not in all the plain, lest thou be consumed, for the Lord will surely come and not tarry.

Will Bro. S. S. Brewer come this way, when he returns from the east. Our prayer is, Lord direct some one of thy servants this way. Bro. Reed visited this place some five or six weeks since, for which we feel thankful. We wish to hear more on time. I think there might be much good done, if we could have the present truth. My prayer is, Lord send by whom thou wilt.

Yours, believing in the coming of the Lord this year.

Bigelow's Mills, Indiana,
March 15th, 1854.

Brother Merriam,—We are still in the field trying to wake up the sleepy virgins, that they may trim their lamps, and be ready to see their Lord in peace and be made like him. O what an important time we are living in, the Church now listening to her last call, and that call is to the marriage of the Lamb; many have desired to see one of the days of the Son of man, but died without the sight. O how thankful we ought to be to God for the privilege we enjoy of listening to the Midnight Cry, which "in mercy sounds." Since we last wrote you, thirty-nine have been baptized, making in all who have been planted together in the likeness of their Lord's death within four weeks, eighty-nine. The interest is still good; others are waiting an opportunity to obey their Lord. Bro. Yates Higgins has embraced the faith of the Lord's coming this year, and is now ready to give the cry. Praise God forever, for what he has done and is still doing.

Obituary.

Died, in Essex, Mass, March 6th, Elizabeth Burnham, wife of Eustis Burnham, aged 28 years and 10 months. Her disease was consumption. Sister Burnham embraced Christianity when fourteen years old, and connected herself with the Sea street church, Boston; afterward she became associated with the Orthodox church at Wrentham. For the past eight years, her interest has been with those looking for Christ's immediate return, in the faith and hope of which she died. Her sufferings were great and protracted, but Christian patience characterized her endurance of them. A short time before she died, she had her friends gathered around her dying couch, and in a clear and dispassionate manner gave to them her parting counsel. She repeated to her husband the words:

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are;
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

A husband, one child, a mother, two brothers, two sisters, and many friends, mourn her departure. Her funeral was attended at the Century chapel, Essex, by a large number of friends. On the 27th of last January, brother and sister Burnham buried their babe, which they had named Lizzy Eustis, aged three months. Brother Eustis has been sorely afflicted, but he realizes the presence and comfort of the God of Israel, and the hope of the gospel is the solace of his heart.—[Advent Herald. L. OSLER.

Died, in Brookfield, Vt., March 29th, of consumption, at his father's residence, Solon, son of Clark and —— Simons, aged 33 years.

The subject of this notice professed faith in Christ in 1843, but, like too many others, did not always walk as he received Christ. But for a few months during his declining health, and particularly in a protracted meeting held near his father's a few weeks previous to his decease, he became much awakened in his mind, and expressed much earnestness and fervency in prayer. He believed in the soon coming of the Saviour; and after a short illness, in which he manifested much patience and great calmness and peace of soul, he peacefully fell asleep in Jesus in the full hope of a blissful immortality at the resurrection of the just. A discourse was delivered at the funeral to a large and attentive audience, by the writer, from 1 Thess. 4: 13, 14. JEHIEL CLAFLIN.

Conferences.

Eld S. G. Matthewson, will hold a conference, the Lord willing, at Providence, R. I., to commence Thursday, April 13th, and continue over the Sabbath. C. O. TOWNE.

Business Items.

Will Bro. M. Wheeler tell us where to direct the paper be ordered.

Bro. E. Whitney's order, we are sorry to say, was somehow delayed until too late to attend to it.

Bro Clifford the paper covered books are all sold, do you want some of the other kind?

Bro. S. H. your letters have been received all right.

Bro. R Shelhouse, we think your letters hav not been received.

Our edition of Hymn Books are all sold. It is uncertain whether there will be another edition published or not, but most probably there will be. Those who have ordered books will be under the necessity of waiting a while. In case there should be no more published the money we have already received for books will be refunded or disposed of as those who sent it may direct.

We have continual calls for back numbers of the Crisis and doubtless some brethren are disappointed in not receiving them. But we cannot furnish back numbers from the commencement. Such as we have we send when ordered.

The edition (3,000) of "The Grand Crisis in Human Affairs," is nearly exhausted; and as we intend to issue another edition soon, those who have sold out the work for us would oblige if they will forward the amount soon as convenient, that we may have the means of defraying the expense of the next issue in cash payment.—[ED.

The Lithographic Charts and Pilgrim's Songster, published by Eld. J. Cummings, can be had of him at Concord, N. H., or by applying to J. French, of Lowell.

The Lithographic Charts can be sent by mail for 10 cents, prepaid, anywhere within 300 miles. Price of the Charts, $3,00. "Bible vs. Tradition," can also be obtained of Bro. French.

The book by J. Cummings explaining the Lithographic Chart may be had by applying to J. French, Lowell, Mass., or to J. Cummings, Concord, N. H.

Special Notice.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige and save us immense labor and perplexity if they will strictly adhere to the following rules:

1. Over all communications designed to be published write, For the World's Crisis.
2. Over all communications not designed for the public write, Private.
3. At the head of all letters write the date, never failing to give the STATE, and also County, if written from the Middle, Western or Southern States.
4. Write all orders for the paper or for books on a page by itself, beginning thus, Order for the Crisis, or, Order for books, as the case may be.
5. At the close of each letter containing money write the amount, and to whom it is to be credited.
6. Be careful to write names and P. O. addresses in a legible hand.
7. In returning papers write on the paper the name and P. O. address of the person to whom it had been sent.
8. In preparing matter for the Crisis we hope our correspondents will adopt, as the most important and indispensible of all rules, the practice of commending the subject to God, praying fervently for light to be reflected on the position of the Church, and for heavenly manna to feed and nurture the little flock unto eternal life—also that sinners may be induced to flee from impending wrath, and take refuge in the ark before the deluge takes them all away.
9. Let the letters and communications be carefully read over, corrected, and, if need be re-written, punctuated and prepared for the press, so far as the writer has ability so to do. If, however, the writer does not understand punctuation, &c., the Editor is just as willing, and if possible more so, to serve the humblest member of the flock in bringing his or her sentiments and feelings before the public, as those who have been favored with higher educational advantages, provided only they write under the influence of the Spirit of God.

In sending out eight thousand papers, it would not be strange if some mistakes should be attributable to us, others, it may be, to the Post Offices, and others still to the neglect of subscribers to give their proper Post Office address. We hope in such cases brethren will exercise a little patience, and write us, if necessary, so that we may rectify all mistakes which it will ever afford us pleasure to do. tf

All letters of business in relation to the World's Crisis, or to books sold at the office of the Crisis, or letters containing payment for "the grand crisis in human affairs" and "the Advent Hymn-book," must in future be directed to Jonas Merriam, Editor of the World's Crisis.

The Bible.

BY MRS. M. L. DURAND.

The Bible! O what is it?
A volume all divine!
Indicted by the spirit,
Inspired in every line.
The Prophets wrote and spoke it,
Commissioned from above—
O may we heed its warnings,
And all its precepts love.

It tells us of a Saviour,
Who suffered for mankind,
Who bore our guilt on Calvary,
That we might pardon find.
It tells us of the glory,
By Him to be revealed!
If loving his appearing,
For crowns we shall be sealed.

It tells of tribulation—
The time is drawing near,
The sea and waves are roaring,
Men's hearts fail them for fear,
The everlasting Gospel
Is flying through the land,
And bolder grow the scoffers:
The Saviour is at hand.

It tells of restitution,
When man's last foe subdued
Shall cease his desolations
And earth shall be renewed.
The saints shall take the kingdom,
King Jesus then will reign,
Faith lost in full fruition
Be our eternal gain.

The only earthly treasure,
Save friends so dear to me,
I'd take into the kingdom,
Would this dear Bible be.
For 'tis my chart and compass
And garnishes my home—
Taught me the blest petition,
"Even so, Lord Jesus, come."

When I on couch of illness
Passed many a sleepless night,
Some well-remembered promise
Oft filled me with delight,
Oft cheered my chastened spirit,
And bade me upward look,
And thank the gracious Author,
Who gave to me His Book.

Meriden, Ct., Feb., 1854.

The Beatitude of the pure in heart.

"Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."—[Matthew 5: 8.

This is nearly the last of those beautiful benedictions pronounced by our Lord on special character, in the fifth chapter of St. Matthew. "Blessed are the poor in spirit,"—that is, the meek, the humble, the lowly, in their own sight. We had next the blessing on them who mourned for sin, or suffered for Christ's sake. We heard next, a blessing on those who hunger and thirst after that of which they have the conscious want—a righteousness by which they can be justified, and rendered fit for heaven. We have read the blessing on the merciful, a grace that follows righteousness: and now, in the eighth verse, we read, "Blessed are the pure in heart."

Not "Blessed are the rich in circumstance;" nor "the prosperous in life," but "the pure in heart." Jesus looks within, and from what he finds there, decides whether there shall be a blessing or a curse; and wherever he sees purity of heart, there comes from his lips the benediction, never without its effect, "Blessed are these; for they shall see God." We have seen all along that happiness is not created by circumstance, but is generated by character. The benediction is not upon outward circumstance, but upon inward character; and wherever the holy character is, there the benediction rests; wherever the character is not, let the man who is destitute of it be clothed in purple and fine linen every day, he has no lot or share in the benedictions of Christ.

The heathen were satisfied with external character. To be right in the sight of men was all they wished; to be correct in the outer conduct was the very flower and perfection of heathen morality. The Pharisees, indeed almost the whole nation of the Jews, were more anxious about the outside of the platter being clean than the inside. All excellence was conformity to the letter of the Law: it mattered not that the spirit of it was violated ten times a day. It is of these that Christ speaks when he says, "Except your righteousness exceed," not only in degree, but in kind, "that of the scribes and Pharisees;"—that is, righteousness of the letter; rigid, mechanical righteousness, instead of righteousness from the heart,—"ye cannot see the kingdom of heaven." And thus, speaking to the heathen, who regarded mere outer morality, and to the scribes and Pharisees, who only looked at the letter of the Law, Jesus sends his lightning glance into the depths of the human heart, and declares that there alone is that purity of character which secures a benediction from heaven, in the absence of which, all exterior grandeur, however beautiful, is only like the whited sepulchre, all-beautiful without, but inside full of corruption and dead men's bones.

Let us try to ascertain what this purity is which is here so extolled. It was in Adam by nature: it is in us by grace. It was created in Adam: it is inspired in us. He received it when he was made: we receive it through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. In us it is as seed cast into the soil of the prepared heart, which germinates, and buds, and unfolds itself in all those things that are pure, and just, and honest, and lovely, and of good report. It is in us a light that shineth more and more within the lantern, till it burst through its limits, and reach the splendour of the perfect day. It is a living principle, ever powerful, ever resisted, yet never beaten, growing daily in aspirations and likeness, until it is made perfect by seeing Christ as he is, when we shall be like him, because we shall see him as he is.

This purity of heart is constantly enjoined in Scripture. "Be ye holy."—"Chosen in Christ, that ye should be holy." "Christ gave himself for us, that he might purify us;" literally, "that he might make us pure in heart." Thus, the objection made to Christianity, that our being saved by something done for us, must necessarily lead to our doing nothing ourselves, is wholly removed by the mere perusal of the benedictions in this chapter, which show that while we are justified by a righteousness without, we are, if so justified, ever inspired and characterized by meekness, purity, and hungering after righteousness within.

This purity which is in the heart of the believer is true beauty: it is lasting ornament. It adds new grandeur to the prince, and royal beauty to the humblest peasant, till Solomon, in all his glory, is not to be compared with the meanest follower of the Lamb, who has purity of heart, and the promise of seeing God.

Such purity of heart is regarded in Scripture constantly as a qualification for heaven. It is said, "Nothing that defileth shall enter there." The inheritance is "incorruptible, undefiled;" therefore, incorruptible and undefiled characters shall remain possessors of it. Holiness is the delight of the heirs of heaven, the air of heaven, the sunshine of its courts, the inspiration of every heart that beats and bounds amid the choirs of the blessed.

The Author of this purity of heart is the Holy Spirit of God. Christ's work is with out us: the Spirit's work is within us.—As soon as we are justified by a righteousness that Christ is, we instantly come under a process of sanctification, which the Holy Spirit gives.

The seat of this purity is the heart. A pure heart seems to be in our moral economy what a healthy heart is in our physical economy. Let the heart be physically diseased, and the whole system is deranged. Let the heart be morally tainted, and the whole conduct will be tortuous, having lost its true polarity, its right momentum, and perfect balance. The seat of this purity is the heart; and as sure as it is in the heart, it will be in the life. As sure as the heart sends forth with gigantic force the blood that it receives through all the arteries of the human body, and effloresces in health on the countenance, and shows itself in vigour in the limbs, and cannot but be seen, felt, and known; so purity in the heart will send out its purifying tide into all the ducts and arteries of our moral economy, till men take notice of us, and see that we are the subjects of a power that is from above, and will give glory to our Father in heaven. Expediency, self-interest, and the praise of men, may help a person to restrain a great many of his bad propensities; but he will restrain them under such influences exactly as a man keeps in his breath under water, doing what is most unnatural, unpleasant, and what can only last while the necessity requires it. But when a man's character is moulded by an influence ab intra, by a power whose seat is the heart, and whose field is the whole moral character, it is persistent and full of proportion; wherever he is seen, and under whatever circumstances, he is the same. A true Christian is like an anagram; whichever way you read him—up, down, right, left—you can always read one thing, the name of his Blessed Master. See him at whatever angle, detect him in any circumstances, a Christian who has his heart right, will have his conduct holy. Wherever the inner man is right, there will be seen great simplicity of character. Wherever you see the face elongated in order to seem serious, and hear in the voice a sort of whine, you must judge, if you venture to judge at all, unfavorably. True Christian character is simple, unaffected, sincere. A true Christian does not feel that there is any virtue in a sad countenance, and he does not believe there is any sin in a bright and merry one. He feels that it is at least as Christian to be joyful as to be sad; and certainly that it is not Christian to seem, or try to be, what he is not. He acts no part. He seems just what he is.

This purity of heart, thus inspired, will show itself always, as I have already stated, in the outer life. It will make good actions that were done under other influences to be nobler, purer, and grander; so that what the natural man is it will inspire and make more beautiful; and it will add to the natural man that which he has not, new and nobler graces that blossom only upon the Tree of life, and grow and ripen in the air, and amid the sunshine of the Paradise of God. Purity within, there will be exemplariness without. The man is Christian in his heart; and, therefore, he cannot help appearing Christian in his life. His Christianity is not a coat put on, but an influence streaming from within.—Herein is the difference between the hypocrite, or the worldly man, and the true Christian. The hypocrite puts on, as the word literally means, a mask; and in that mask the old man looks new. The true Christian puts on no mask, but just lives exactly as a new and divine instinct prompts him, and he lives truly, and justly, and purely before God and before man. The Christian abstains not only from dishonesty, but from covetousness; not only from impure acts, but from impure thoughts; not only from murder, but from letting the sun go down upon his wrath, or being angry with his brother without a cause.

This purity of heart will show itself in seeking to be governed by a sense of God's presence, of duty and obligation to him, and by nothing else. The care of such a one will be, How do I look in God's sight? and he will not trouble himself about how he looks in man's sight; because he is always sure that if he be right in his heart in the sight of God, his conduct never can go very far wrong. The man who has no purity of heart, and yet desires the credit of having it, has a great deal of trouble, and, after all, very little success. He has to adjust his robes, to tune his words, to arrange the very features of his face: he is constantly tortured by adapting himself to circumstances; fearing he may fail there, and be detected here, and thankful if he succeed at all. But the man who has his heart right, does not trouble himself about all this: he just speaks out what is natural: he lives and does what is perfectly unaffected; and all these things, liable, it may be, to momentary misconstruction by men, are yet sure to turn out, in the long run, pure and beautiful and right; because they are done from an inspiration in itself pure. He is pure in heart, and therefore his conduct will be pure in the sight of men.

This purity of heart—and I give this as a criterion by which we may test our own state—will ever be ready to disclose itself to God in prayer. The man who is not really in earnest to have a clean heart, will never go into God's presence, when there is no ear but God's to hear, and say, "Search me, O God, and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." He who is not bent on the attainment of this grace, will never venture to pray in private, "Create in me a clean heart, O God;" that is, "Make me pure in heart, that thy blessing may be on me, and that the sight of thee may be my reward." He does not want to see God.—Such a one will never say, "Thou desirest truth in the inward parts; cleanse thou me from secret faults." He who can earnestly and truly, from the very depth of his soul, so pray, when no ear hears but God's, has what he prays for: for the desire in prayer—earnest and real—of purity of heart, is already the possession, in fact, of purity of heart.

Such a one will not regard, in the language of the Psalmist, iniquity in his heart—"If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me;"—that is, he will not cherish in his heart a thought that ought not to be there. A lodger that belongs not to the sanctuary of God will intrude inadvertently into the purest heart; but the heart, like the sleepless Levite, the instant it detects this stranger, will expel him; whereas an impure heart, on receiving into it an impure imagination, will entertain it as a friend, give it hospitality and welcome, and find delight and enjoyment in turning it round and round, and meditating upon it. The pure heart will shrink from a sinful thought, just as the sensitive nerve will shrink from the prick of a pin. They cannot always avoid it, but they will not cherish it. The pure in heart will not regard—that is, cherish or keep—iniquity in their heart. It will never make provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof.

There is no heart so pure, that sinful thoughts will not rise in it. Nay, it is just on the purest heart that the devil will make the strongest assault. When you have walked in a garden, have you never noticed that it is always the choicest and most fragrant fruit that is first insect-stung?—The wasp will only touch the ripest and most beautiful fruit. It is always the purest heart that will be the victim of the first assault of sin, Satan, and the world. But because that heart is assailed by sin, or because it is even touched by it, or because, in an inadvertent moment, a sinful thought finds a lodgment in it, you do not therefore evince that you are not a child of God. The evidence of your sonship lies in the resistance of the evil that is alien, and in your thrusting out the impure thought that, if cherished, would ultimately attain domination, and carry soul, body, and spirit with it. Such are some of the effects of this purity of heart, and such are some of the best criteria of its possession.

Such a one has happiness, because he has one of the evidences of being amongst the people of God. "God is good to Israel, to such as are of a clean heart." I know no greater evidence that you belong to God, than that you hate what he hates, love what he loves, and that your heart gives hospitality to all that is pure, and rejects, the instant it detects it, the presence and the pollution of all that is impure.

The pure in heart are happy, because to them all things are pure. Not sin is pure, but all things that in themselves are innocent are to the pure in heart perfectly pure. Their estate and the loss of it, their prosperity and their adversity, their illness and their health, all that comes in Providence, comes to them from God, is received by them as such, and is enjoyed by them,—if prosperity, thankfully, and if adversity, endured by them patiently,—for Christ's sake.

Such a one's heart is the temple of God. It has a consecration no episcopal hands can bestow, a sanction no human authority can communicate. It is made pure, not ceremonially, not ecclesiastically, not Levitically, but morally and spiritually—that is, really by God himself, and in such God dwells.

But the benediction is not only for the present; it is specially in the future. The present benediction is the earnest and foretaste of the full harvest of benediction that is to come. Such, it is said, "shall see God." "Faith," we are told, "is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Wherever, therefore, there is faith—and it is faith that purifieth the heart; for faith "worketh by love," and, adds the Apostle, it "purifieth the heart"—there is the evidence of what the world does not see; for God no man hath seen, nor can see: and they shall therefore see God. They shall see him first in this life, and they shall see him perfectly and fully in the life to come. They shall see God in life's trials. Truly it is consolation to see God in the hurricane that sweeps away all the property our industry has amassed! What consolation is it to see God in that sickness that befalls us, in that sorrow that breaks the heart, in the trial, all of whose waves and billows pass over us! Is it no consolation to see that all these are from our Father, are chastisement, not judgment—not penal, but paternal, and are working for good to the subject of them? "Though no tribulation for the present seemeth joyous, but rather grievous, yet it worketh out the peaceable fruits of righteousness to them that are exercised thereby." In other words, the pure in heart shall see that affliction comes not from the ground, but is the distribution of his Father who is in heaven.

The pure in heart shall see God also in life's prosperity. It is often more difficult to see God in prosperity than in adversity. It is a strange fact, and it indicates a disordered state on our part, that when God smites, we see and recognise his hand; but when God blesses, we are prone to see and recognise only our own fortunate exertions. But the pure in heart see God in their trials, and are patient, while they pray to him; they see God in the sunshine of their prosperity, thank him, and give him all the praise and glory.

The pure in heart also see God in all his providential dealings. Whatever happens to a nation, a dynasty, a capital, they see God in it. In other words, they have got out of the region of chance, where all is chaos, because all is accident; and they have got into the region of order, where God is working out his grand designs by means and mechanism often inexplicable to us, but ever successful, because wielded by Him.

The pure in heart will also see God in all creation. When we go forth to the country, and look upon its varied magnificence and beauty, it is surely a delightful reflection that a Christian's heart will not be a stranger to, "My Father made them all." The tendency of the scientific man is to investigate nature, and stop after he has found her laws. The tendency of the natural man, who is not a scientific man, is to look at nature, and merely admire, and be charmed and delighted. But the Christian who is pure in heart, who has the film taken from his eyes, and the distorting passion from his heart, will, in the least and the loftiest thing, in the hyssop that groweth out of the wall, and in the oak that is centuries old, in the bee upon its wing, and in the leviathan that sports in the deep, in all things exquisitely minute, in all things magnificently great, in all heights and depths, in flower, fruit, field star, sun, and moon—trace the workmanship, and see the footprints of his Father, and give him the praise as the Creator and Governor of all.

The pure in heart will also see God specially and primarily in the sacred page. When he opens his Bible, the natural man reads Paul's writing; the Christian sees through the veil, and reads God's mind.—When the natural man opens the Bible, he sees eloquence, poetry, history; but the Christian penetrates all these, the mere wrappage, the outer and beautiful shell, and sees and hears God, and standing in the Rock, he beholds all His glory sweep past him—"The Lord God, merciful and gracious, long suffering, abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin."

The pure in heart will also see God in ordinances. At a communion table the pure in heart will not see the bread turned into the flesh, or the wine into the blood of the Son of man, but they will behold in these symbols the pledges, seals and credentials that Christ was, and the prophecies, or rather, the prophets, that Christ will come again, for He who was slain for us, and by whose blood we are forgiven, will come to us in glory, and in great majesty, and on his throne we shall be seated, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

Thus, wherever there is purity of heart, the believer will see God in this life.—Congeniality of character is requisite to enable one to appreciate character. The benevolent man alone can comprehend true benevolence. The patriot alone can appreciate true patriotism. The pure alone can have that delicate instinct which enables them to see purity. In other words, it requires not merely intellectual height, eminence and power, but still more, purity of heart to enable one to see a pure and holy God.

But above all, the pure in heart shall see God in glory. "Now," says the Apostle, "we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face." All that we can see of God now is mixed with imperfections, clouds, and shadows. When astronomers look at the sun through a telescope, they are obliged to look through smoked glass, because the intense splendor of the meridian sun would destroy the eye that gazed upon it. At present we cannot see God as he is; we must look through a glass darkly; that is, through the sacred page, ordinances, promises, doctrines, all the means and media that he has appointed. But a day comes when the glass will be broken, and the smoke shall be removed, and we shall see God no longer through the darkened or shaded glass, but face to face. Then our purity of heart will be so perfect, that we shall be able to gaze upon the noonday splendor of that unsetting Sun, and to continue to gaze on Him with perfect joy, peace, and repose.

This sight will be perfectly satisfying. There is no satisfaction, everybody knows, to be gathered upon earth. After we have got the righteousness we hunger for, we hunger still. After we have drunk of the living water, we thirst yet more. There is no one attainment upon earth so complete, that it will fill the almost infinite capacity of man's soul. It is the proof of man's Fall that he gropes for satisfaction upon earth; it is the proof of man's grandeur that he can never find it. Nothing earthly can fill the vast vapacities of that great soul which is in the very poorest, lowliest, and humblest of mankind.—The Psalmist makes the distinction very beautifully, "Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth I desire beside thee." Earth is the place of desire; heaven is the place of having, or perfect possession. The Psalmist says prophetically, as if he had caught in all their fulness the rays of the future glory "I shall be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness." What a blessed thought is that, that those yearnings after perfection that every Christian is conscious of, those desires and longings after a beauty, a glory, and a repose that grow upon no earthly tree, and are thrown out by no earthly fountain, shall all be satisfied, and fully met, where there is no more want, and therefore no more prayer, but full having, and therefore everlasting praise.

When we shall see God as he is, it will be a joyful sight. "We shall enter into joy." "Thou shalt make me glad with the light of thy countenance." "In thy presence is fulness of joy." "Then were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord." And if it be true of us, "Whom having not seen, we love; in whom, though now we see him not, yet believing we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory;"—if the ebb tide of our joy be so rich, what shall the rising tide be? If the earnest be so delightful, what shall the full harvest be? Blessed, indeed, are the pure in heart by what, and from what, they are able to see now; but blessed especially are the pure in heart, because they shall see God in all his glory, and in the light of God, all things, the mere surface of which we see now, the very essence and hidden excellence and latent beauty of which we shall see then as clearly as we are now seen.

Let us pray, therefore, that our hearts may be made clean within us, that God would give us a pure heart, that we may drink from this fountain of true felicity; that seeing God upon earth through a glass darkly, we may see him in heaven, where we shall see him as he is, the glory and perfection of all.—[Benedictions: or, The Blessed Life, by John Cumming.

God is in the Work.

The God of glory that appeared unto our father Abraham, is all around the proclamation of this cry. The bitterest opposers are held in death-like stillness while it is being proclaimed. The vicious become thoughtful, and the self-seeking, independant inquirers after truth, embrace and confess it. And while the servant feels the responsibility of bearing this last message of salvation to his fellow-man, he can calmly recline his head upon the pillow of truth, and with uplifted eyes to God in full assurance of His approbation, exclaim, the cause is thine; seeing that the most feeble effort is attended with most signal success. We are almost home!—And oh, how sweet to the toil-worn pilgrim is the thought, "almost home."—Glory to God it is so. The last hill is being climbed,—the last struggle is being made,—the last sands of time are fast falling,—the nations are gathering, and deliverance is coming. When we confess that the "tribulation" is in the past, we also must confess that the darkening of the sun, 1780, was in fulfilment of the prediction of the Savior. And as the tribulation was to be 1260 years long, and that was to measure the desolating abomination instead of 1290, we should confess (to be consistent) that 75 years from that must (not may) bring the resurrection. But do they (1335) not go beyond the resurrection? If so, we, living Christians, have got to wait and come to the 1335 days, (years) be the time more or less, after the resurrection, in order to get the promised blessing. But does not Daniel say the resurrection of both good and bad? Professor Bush renders Dan. 12: 2, thus—"Many of the sleepers in the dust of the earth shall awake, they, the awakened, to everlasting life, and they, the unawakened, to shame and everlasting contempt."—This harmonizes with other portions of Scripture, and also with itself. "Many of them" cannot mean all, therefore it is the righteous only. And "blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 days, for thou shalt rest and stand up for thy lot at the end of the days." I have never known such an interest felt in hearing on this subject since '44, and never have I known such salutary results. To God be all the glory.

"But I should think you ought to have learned wisdom" by the disastrous consequences of preaching definite time in '44. Yes, brother, I have. Well, why venture again on definite time? Because I believe it is of God. But you believed that was of God. Yes, and I still believe it.—But you know that it made many infidels. Yes I know that it made infidels manifest. But it broke the church into factions. No, it sifted the chaff from the wheat. Well, it was a source of unnecessary trial.—Rather say necessary trial; for, says the Apostle, the trial of your faith is more precious than gold. But why so confident? Because Paul tells me not to cast away my confidence. Now you see, Brethren, that we have not gone out by haste or flight. The Lord has been a Father to us according to his promise. The Advent doctrine has been of heaven or of men. If of men, let us be consistent and abandon it. If of heaven, let us come up like men and live it out, and see the end of it. We now have commenced the reckoning of the prophetic periods from the last point from which we can commence them. If they are ever understood, they must be understood in harmony with this reckoning.—We are coming up to the last end of "Millerism"—its features are marked in the prophecy of God, the tarrying time is past, the "cry" is going, the virgins are arousing, the nations are gathering, the bridegroom is coming, and we are going HOME. Even so come Lord Jesus.

Yours in confidence,
H. PRATT.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Cheshire, March 2, 1854.

Dear Brother Merriam,—The Lord has in mercy visited this place. Last week Bro. Pratt and Hemenway came here and gave six lectures on the "coming crisis," which produced a most solemn effect.—There are several inquiring, "what shall I do to be saved?" I do thank God that I have seen the truth, and have been made to believe it. Yes! I do believe that this year the hope of the Christian will be consummated. This year we shall see all of our dear friends who have long been slumbering in the dust of the earth. This is the hope that rejoices my heart when sorrows press heavily on the soul. Yes! glory to God—the saints will soon shout their sufferings o'er. We shall soon clap our joyful hands in the blessed new earth, that God has prepared for his people.—The political world verifies this doctrine. A great conflagration is about to burst upon a doomed world. Soon all nations will be engaged in the great battle of Armageddon—and then the last servant of God will have been sealed. If this should meet the eye of any who are not prepared, I would say to them turn e'er the door of mercy is forever closed. Oh! sinner, beware how you trample on the Savior's truths. I say beware! for soon the trump of God will sound, and then if you are not prepared, it will be said to you, "depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." Then sinner let me entreat of you to turn in with the overtures of mercy before it is too late; for the Lord will surely come, and will not tarry. We expect to see the Heavens roll together as a scroll and to reveal the coming Savior this present year. May we all through the rich mercy of God endure to the end, and when the parting Heavens reveal the Savior, we may hail him with joy and not with grief. Yours expecting deliverance in 1854,

J. S. WOOD.

SOUTH WINDSOR, March 3d, '54.

Dear Brethren and Sisters scattered abroad. Through the goodness of God, I am still pursuing the Christian journey. I still love the way that leads to eternal life; and by God's grace assisting me, I mean to pursue it, until I hear it said, "well done good and faithful servant," and enter into the joys of that kingdom which will never end. Glory be to God. O how heart-cheering to think that when we once get home, we can enjoy the pleasures of that home forever. O how soon the scene is to change. Here we meet with those we love (and there is a oneness in Christ's Church, a strong attachment to those that are traveling in the same narrow path) but we are soon obliged to part, although sorrow may fill our hearts. But thanks be to God, there is no sorrow in the land to which we journey, and we are almost there. This year I expect faith will be swallowed up in sight. This is the year of jubilee. O how rejoiced I feel that we are so near the port of eternal glory.

Three weeks ago, Brother G. W. Brown, held a meeting in the Partridge neighborhood in Whitefield; it was a refreshing time, for the church and sinners were aroused to their situation, and several went forward for prayers. Brother Nason and Perkins were present. Brother Nason has labored in the place since, until to-day, he has left for China. Quite a number have obtained the blessed hope, and are looking for redemption this year. Eight have been baptized; and it is truly cheering to see what faith they have in the word of the Lord, and with what decision, energy and firmness they are determined to pursue the narrow path, until they receive a crown of life, which they with me expect this year.

Yours, looking for Christ to come at the end of the days.

Exposition of Daniel, chap. XII.

(Concluded.)

vs. 5, 6. "Then I Daniel looked, and behold there stood other two, the one on this side of the bank of the river, and the other on that side of the bank of the river. And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?"

We have in these verses a striking exhibition of that deep interest which the heavenly hosts feel in relation to those things that pertain to the salvation of men; and particularly to understand the "times and seasons." After the Angel, clothed in linen, had instructed Daniel respecting the great political events that were to transpire in the history of the world; and led him through to the bursting glories of everlasting day, and the glorification of the Church in the kingdom of God, he directs him to "shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end." Instantly and spontaneously the question breaks from the lips of a listening Angel "HOW LONG to the end of these wonders?" There are three different words used in Greek which are translated "end," telos, signifying an end, or completion, sunteleia, a consummation, being generally used in connection with aionos, signifying the consummation of the age, or, as it is rendered in our version, the end of the world, and peras, signifying a limit, margin, or frontier. This is the word used in Matthew xii: 42, and translated "uttermost parts," that is, the borders of the earth. The word used in the Septuagint version, which is here rendered "end," is peras, and may, therefore, not mean a full and perfect end, as is expressed by telos or sunteleia, but a border or margin; in other words, the closing scenes of the wonders. Daniel had been instructed to seal the book until "the time of the end," that is, through the persecutions under the little horn, which were to cease at "the time of the end."—During that long period of tribulation to the Church, the witnesses, according to Revelation, were to "prophesy in sackcloth;" or, according to Daniel, the vision was to be sealed; and the Angel, in his eagerness to grasp the subject, inquired earnestly, How long shall the vision be sealed? or, How long to the closing scenes of those events? which closing scenes were to commence with "the time of the end," and terminate in the glories of the kingdom. But why inquire the length of of that period? Because at the end of it the light was to break, the vision to be unsealed, the truth developed, and the wise to understand. Now if that were the idea in the mind of the Angel, the answer would correspond to the sense of the question.

v. 7. "And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth forever, that it shall be for a time, times, and a half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished."

It is evident, the Angel of the waters did not measure the time to the end of the world, because his measuring rod of "time, times and an half," (or part, margin) does not reach beyond the "time, times and dividing of time," (Chap. vii: 25,) during which the saints were to be in the hands of the little horn: and as, under that oppressive government, they were to fall "to try them, and to purge and to make them white, even to the time of the end," the declaration of the Angel, in reply to the question on time, covers the period of persecution, and reaches to "the time of the end." The Septuaging version reads thus:

"And I heard the man clothed in linen, who was over the water of the river, and he lifted up his right hand and his left hand to heaven, and swore by him that lives forever, that it should be for a time of times and half a time; when the dispersion is ended, they SHALL KNOW all these things." [Brenton's Translation.]

If this be the correct rendering of the passage, the sense is perfectly plain, and the reply of the Angel teaches that for a period which he terms "time, times and a half," (or part,) the saints would be dispersed, or, according to John, driven into the wilderness; but at the terminus of that tribulation, light would be evolved from the Oracles, truth developed, the fulfilment of prophecy recognized, and these great events noted in the scripture of truth, in connection with their chronological data, understood by the people of God.

v. 8. "And I heard, but I understood not: then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?"

1335 years, reaching from the setting up of the Abomination of Desolation, or the time when the Saints' times and laws were given into the hand of the Little Horn, to the end, when Daniel with all the Saints will stand in their lot . . . . 1854.

☞ THE END. ☜

☞ The above Diagram is designed to illustrate the measurement of time from the rise of the little horn, with eyes and a mouth (the civil power of the Greek Empire, or Eastern Rome incorporated with the Ecclesiastical Power of the Papacy.—Dan 7: 8) until the coming of Christ at the resurrection of the saints.

The 1290 years, or time, times and the dividing of time, (Dan 7: 25) measure the period during which the saints, times and laws were to be given into his hand—The period of the saint's tribulation, we understand, were shortened to 1260 years. (Rev. 12: 6, 14—11: 2 and 13: 5); but times and laws were to remain in his hand during 1290 years, extending 30 years beyond the 1260. "But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and destroy unto the end." 45 years from the close of the 1290 make 1335 years, when Daniel will stand in his lot, which must be at the resurrection of the saints.

Christ, speaking of this desolating power—the papacy—says, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened,"—which marks a point previous to which the saints were taken out of the hands of the little horn power. Thus we perceive that 1260 years of the 1335 ended prior to the 19th of May, 1780, when the sun was darkened. Add 75 years to 1260 and you have 1335 years, which must end before May 19th, 1855, according to the evidence from the darkening of the sun. But we have abundant historical evidence that the papal power, i. e. the abomination that maketh desolate, was set up in 519, hence the 1335 days (years) end in 1854, which brings the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the saints the present year.

SAMUEL PAGE.

"And I heard." What did Daniel hear? The declaration of the Angel "it shall be for a time, times and an half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished."

"But I understood not." What did Daniel not understand? The period of time during which the people of God were to be dispersed. The Angel had declared it should be "for a time, times, and an half," or part; [Margin.] but he had given him no commencing terminus of the days. Had he known the duration of the period denoted by the phrase, "time, times, and an half," or part, he could not have understood the point at which it commenced, consequently could not have ascertained the point where it would end.—Hence we may infer that the burden of Daniel's inquiry was in relation to definite time. Peter, in allusion to this subject, says:

"Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: Searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into. Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ," (1 Pet. i: 10–13).

From this quotation, it appears that the prophets not only searched to know the time of the sufferings of Christ, but also of the glory that should follow. The expression of the 13th verse, "hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ," makes the coming of Christ identical with the development of His glory.

v. 9. "And he said, Go thy way, Daniel: for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end."

"The words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end." See exposition of v. 4.

v. 10. "Many shall be purified and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand."

"Many shall be purified." "Many must be tested." (Sept.) or "chosen out," (Sept. Marg). Paul, in speaking of Christ, says: "Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." (Tit. ii: 14.)—Again, in 1 Pet. i: 22, "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth, etc.;" and in 1 John. iii. 2, 3, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

The term "chosen," which occurs in the margin of the Septuagint, is a word of frequent occurrence in Scripture, and is generally applied to the people of God; for instance, in Ps. cvi: 23, Moses is called the "chosen of God." Says the Savior, (Matt. xx: 16) "many be called, but few chosen;" "for the elects' sake, whom He hath chosen, (Mark xiii: 20). Says Peter, "ye are a chosen generation," (1 Pet. ii: 9). In Rev. xvii: 14, we read, "They that are with Him are called, and chosen, and faithful." The same idea is expressed in Ps. iv: 3; "But know that the Lord hath set apart him that is godly for himself: the Lord will hear when I call unto him." This is the only class whom the Lord chooses. He will hear them when they cry, but the prayer of the wicked is an abomination.

"And made white." This is evidently a figure borrowed from the occupation of a fuller, whose business it is to bleach or whiten cloth, and to remove all stains. This is probably the idea of the prophet Isaiah in the first chapter of his Prophecy and the eighteenth verse: "Come, now, let us reason together, saith the Lord, though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

Says the Revelator, in reference to the redeemed: "And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes; and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb," (Rev. vii: 13, 14). The [illegible] ed from all moral pollution, and stand justified in the sight of the Lamb.

"And tried." Having been "chosen," [Sept.,] and made white, they are now prepared for the trial. In the Septuagint, the first part of this verse reads thus:—"Many must be tested, and thoroughly whitened, and tried with fire, and sanctified." Trials are necessary to salvation, and especially is the trial of our faith more precious than gold; as the Apostle says: "Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season (if need be) ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations. That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ," (1 Pet. i: 5).

This time of trial referred to by Daniel evidently comes at "the time of the end;" and it appears that the Apostle alludes to the same thing when he says: "But the end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer," (1 Pet. iv: 7).

"Beloved, think it not strange, concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you. On their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified. But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a busy-body in other men's matters. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf. For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? Wherefore, let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator," (1 Pet. iv. 12-19).

Again we read: "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him," (James i: 12).

The truth of God has, in every age been rejected by the mass, and whoever has departed from evil has made himself a prey The Apostle declared that all who will "live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." Not so with a popular religion, the votaries of which "feast themselves without fear," having a nominal, but not a practical faith, seeking the applause of the world rather than that honor that cometh from God only. Says the London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy; The religion of the day is an easy minded religion; a religion without conflict and wrestling, without self-denial and sacrifice; a religion which knows nothing of the pangs of a new birth as its commencement, and nothing of the desperate struggle with the devil, day by day, making us long for resurrection—deliverance, for the binding of the adversary, and for the Lord's arrival. It is a second rate religion—a religion in which there is no largeness, no grandeur, no potency, no noble-mindedness, no elevation, no self-devotedness, no all-constraining love. It is a hollow religion—with a fair exterior, but an aching heart—a heart unsatisfied, a soul not at rest, a conscience not at peace with God; a religion marked, it may be, by activity and excitement, but betraying all the while the consciousness of a wound hidden and unhealed within, and hence, unable to animate to lofty doings, or supply the strength needed for such doings. It is a feeble religion, lacking the sinews and bones of hardier times—very different from the indomitable, much enduring, storm-braving religion, not merely of apostolic days, but even of the reformation. It is an uncertain religion; that is to say, it is not rooted in certainty; it is not the outflowing of a soul assured of pardon, and rejoicing in the filial relationship between itself and God. Hence, there is no liberty of service, for the question of personal acceptance is still an unsettled thing; there is a working for pardon, but not from pardon. Hence all is bondage, heaviness, irksomeness. There is a speaking for God, but it is with a faltering tongue; there is a laboring for God, but it is with fettered hands; there is a moving in the way of His commands, but it is with a heavy drag upon our limbs. Hence the inefficient, uninfluential character of our religion. It does not tell on others, for it has not yet fully told upon ourselves. It falls short of its mark, for the arm that drew the bow is paralyzed." [Advent Tracts, pp. 172, 173.]

"But the wicked shall do wickedly," the Apostle says, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." The Savior says, "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. The great in-crease of light and knowledge has increased the capacity of men to do evil.—"Righteousness does not sit on the throne of the nations, nor does holiness beautify the homes of the children of men. The heart still remains 'deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked.' Oppression, cruelty, selfishness, lust, sedition, strife, hatred and murder are uneradicated, unsubdued, unmitigated. Man has found no cure for these maladies." This is truly just such a state of things as we are to expect at "the time of the end;" for, as it was in the days of Noah and of Lot, so shall it be at the coming of the Son of Man The wheat and tares will grow together until the harvest. There has been a retrograde movement from the beginning: throughout the entire age, men have gone from good to bad, and from bad to worse, till the generation now on the stage have plunged into the depths of depravity beyond all former generations, and are rapidly filling up the cup of their iniquity, and drawing down upon their heads those last vials which fill up the wrath of God.

"And none of the wicked shall understand." The Savior, speaking of the antediluvians, says, "They knew not until the flood came, and took them all away." The same principle is illustrated in the history of the cities of the plain: "They did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they builded, and were unconscious of their approaching doom until Lot went out of Sodom; and on the same day it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all." The same thing is exhibited in the case of that "wicked and adulterous generation" of the Jews, that were on the earth at the first Advent of Christ; and it was in consideration of their wickedness in rejecting the light of the Gospel, and the offers of salvation, that the Son of God exclaimed, (Luke xix: 41–44,) Saying, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the day shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee: and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another: because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation."

"But the wise shall understand." This does no refer to such as are wise in their own craftiness, or such as "handle the word of God deceitfully;" nor does it refer to earthly wisdom, or profound erudition in science and literature, when the heart is not sanctified to God. It is written, "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. Where is the wise? were is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? (1 Cor. i: 19, 20).

"For the Jews require a sign and the Greeks seek after wisdom, but we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God. Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men.—For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called, but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty, and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things, which are not, to bring to nought things that are; that no flesh should glory in his presence," (1 Cor. i. 22—29).

We have a practical developement of this principle of the Divine economy in the selection which Jesus made of His disciples. In fact, it may be traced through the whole history of the Church. The entire body of believers have been characterized (with few exceptions,) as belonging to the lower order of society. To this the Apostle refers, (James ii: 5): "Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he has promised to them that love him?"

Says Paul, "the scriptures are able to make us wise unto salvation." Says David, (Ps. iii: 10,) "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and a good understanding have all they that do his commandments." In Deut. iv: 56, we read, "Behold, I have taught you statutes, and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it. Keep, therefore and do them, for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people."

Who cannot perceive from these quotations, that that which the Lord terms wisdom is obedience to His commandments; and that those who do His will are by Him regarded as wise? It is in reference to this class that the Angel said, "The wise shall understand."

Says David, "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and [illegible] them his covenant," (Ps. xxiv: 14).

Says Solomon, "Whoso keepeth the commandment shall feel no evil thing, and a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment. Because to every purpose there is time and judgment," (Eccl. viii: 5).

This accords with Amos, when he says, (Chap iii: 7,) "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but He revealeth His secret unto His servants the prophets." The Lord will not bring upon the world any great catastrophe without first giving premonitions to His Church. For example; The Lord not only revealed the event, but also the time when the flood should come. In Gen. vi: 3, we read, "and the Lord said, My spirit shal not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh, yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years" There can be but one of two ideas expressed in this verse. 1. It must refer to the average age of man subsequently to the deluge; or, 2. To the period allotted to the generation then living, before they would be destroyed by the flood.

In relation to the former, if we turn to the chronology given in the 11th of Genesis, we are at once convinced that this cannot be the idea intended, since the average age of man after the flood was much more than one hundred and twenty years. Noah lived after the flood, 350 years. The entire life of Shem was 600 years. That of Arphaxad was 438 years. That of Salah 433 years. That of Eber 464 years. That of Peleg. 239 years. That of Reu, 239 years. That of Serug, 230 years. That of Nahor, 148 years. That of Serah, 205 years. That of Abraham, 175 years, (Gen. xxv: 7) That of Isaac 180 years, (Gen. xxxv: 28). That of Ishmael, 137 years, (Gen. xxv; 17). Jacob was 130 years old when he went into Egypt, (Gen. xlvii: 9) and lived there 17 years, (Gen. xlvii: 28) hence, his whole life was 147 years. The life of Joseph was 110 years, (Gen. l: 26). That of Levi, 137 years, (Ex. vi: 16—20). That of Kohath, 133 years. That of Amram, 137 years.

This makes an average of ages from Noah to Amram of 243 years, which is more than twice 120 years. Hence it must refer to the generation then living.

It has been asserted by some, that we have no evidence that the time of the flood was revealed to Noah. But the Lord did inform some one, if not Noah, that man's "days should be an hundred and twenty years," the only legitimate construction of which is, that there should be an hundred and twenty years between the announcement and the flood.

In Genesis v: 32, we read, "And Noah was five hundred years old, and Noah begat Shem, Ham and Japheth." In Gen. vi: 1–3, we read, "And it came to pass, when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose. And the Lord said, My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh; yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years."

Now, we are informed that, inasmuch as the Lord declares Noah to have been five hundred years old, (Chap. v: 32) before the hundred and twenty years are named; and as Noah was only six hundred years old when the flood of waters came upon the earth, it follows, that the one hundred and twenty years did not measure the time to the flood; for, says the objector, there could have been but one hundred years between the time when Noah was five hundred years old, and the flood, when he was six hundred years old. To this we reply: If the hundred and twenty years were not given before Noah was five hundred years old — because in the previous chapter he is said to have been of that age before he begat his three sons — by parity of reasoning, we should understand, that Lamech died (v. 31,) before Shem was born, because the subject of his death is introduced before there is anything recorded of the children of Noah. Such however was not the fact, for he lived nearly a century after the birth of Noah's eldest son.

To make this subject more evident, we remark, in verse 30 Lamech is said to have been 777 years old; and in verse 31 we are told he died; then in verse 32 it is said, "Noah was five hundred years old; and Noah begat Shem, Ham and Japheth." Does it therefore follow that Lamech died before the sons of Noah were born, because his death was previously recorded? Certainly not; for he lived almost a hundred years after the eldest one's birth.

The same principle may be seen in Gen. vii: 7—10: "And Noah went in, and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives, with him into the ark, because of the waters of the flood. Of clean beasts, and of beasts that are not clean, and of fowls, and of every thing that creepeth upon the earth, there went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, the male and the female, as God had commanded Noah. And it came to pass, after seven days, that the waters of the flood were upon the earth."

Here he carries us down to the time when the waters of the flood were upon the earth, and then, (vs. 13-16,) relates the [illegible] but it does not follow, because he speaks of the family of Noah, together with the beasts entering into the ark, (vs. 7-10,) and then introduces the same subject again, after having spoken of the breaking up of the fountains of the great deep, that therefore this was a second entering into the ark, or that they entered in after the deluge commenced.—But we return to the fifth chapter, and remark that the design of this chapter is, to present the geneology of man from Adam to Noah, bringing us down to the very year of the flood; for the death of Methuseleh, which is herein recorded, occurred on the same year on which the flood commenced. He then returns, takes up the history of Lamech, and brings us down to within five years of the flood, when Lamech died. He then passes back to the five hundreth year of Noah, and comes down to the time when he begat three sons.

The next chapter, instead of being a continued history, from the time that Noah was five hundred years old, goes back to the time when men "began to multiply upon the earth," and continues down to the birth of Noah's sons. It is as follows:—

"And it came to pass, when men began to muliply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men, that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose. And the Lord said, My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years. There were giants in the earth in those days; and also after that, when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children unto them; the same became mighty men, which were of old, men of renown. And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. And it repented the Lord that he had made man upon the earth, and it grieved him at his heart And the Lord said, I will destroy man whom I have created, from the face of the earth; both man and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air: for it repenteth me that I have made them. But Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord. These are the generations of Noah: Noah was a just man, and perfect in his generations, and Noah walked with God: and Noah begat three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth," (Gen. vi. 1-10).

It must, we think, be apparent to every unprejudiced mind, that the one hundred and twenty years (v. 3,) was given to bound the existence of that generation.—In other words, it was given just one hundred and twenty years before the flood. The question to be settled is not, When did Noah begin to build the ark? or, When did he begin to preach? but, Did the Lord limit the life of that generation to one hundred and twenty years? We say, without hesitation, He did. And we conceive no other interpretation would ever have been put upon the passage, were not men disposed to cavil at the truth, and find some subterfuge for believing that the time when our adorable Redeemer shall make His second and glorious appearance, can never be understood till it comes.

On this subject Josephus says: "Now God loved this man (Noah) for his righteousness, yet He not only condemned those other men (giants) for their wickedness, but determined to destroy the whole race of mankind, and to make another race, that should be free from wickedness, and cutting short their lives, and making their years" (that is, the years of the generation then living,) "not so many as they formerly lived, but one hundred and twenty, He turned the dry land into sea." (Josephus, b. i. pp. 27, 28.)

B. B. Edwards, Adam Clark, Bishop Usher, and a host of other commentators and chronologists, present the same view on this point. from an investigation of this subject, we are fully convinced, that the year of the flood, (Chap. vi: 3,) and the day, (Chap. vii: 4,) were revealed.

We trust the reader will pardon us for being so minute on this part of the subject. We now proceed to investigate the remaining portion of Daniel xii. "The wise shall understand." But what particularly shall they understand? Evidently the subject that absorbed the attention of the Prophet at this time, namely, the events of the vision, together with the time of their fulfilment.

v. 11. "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days."

"The daily sacrifice shall be taken away"—that is, the true worship removed. "And the abomination that maketh desolate set up." This refers to the same power that is brought to view in Chap. vii: 24, 25, Chap. xi. 31, and Matt. xxiv: 15, namely the papal power. This power was established in the sense of the prophecy in A. D. 519. (See exposition of Daniel, ch. vii. and Matt. xxiv.) It was then that the Catholic Church was nationalized, and the mode of faith held by that body adopted as the religion of the Empire.—There is not the least intimation of a space of time intervening between the taking away of the daily, and the establishment of the abomination. When the one is taken away, the other is placed, or set up. The act of placing "the man of sin" in the temple of God, displaces the genuine worship of God. When that power, denoted by "the abomination that maketh desolate," commences its reign, the true worship is suppressed, and the saints, or Church, driven into the wilderness; so that the two events must be synchronous, dating from one and the same point.

"There shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." This measurement must commence at the point from which the two events named date. This time we regard as symbolical, a day standing as the representative of a year. For this mode of reckoning we find a precedent established in scripture:

"After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days (each day for a year) shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye shall know my breach of promise," (Num. xiv: 34.)

"For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days, three hundred nnd ninety days: so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel. And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee each day for a year, (Ez. iv: 5, 6.)

"In these passages we prove the command of God. We shall also shew that it was so called in the days of Jacob, when he served for Rachel." (William Miller.)

"Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also, for the service which thou shalt serve with me yet seven other years," (Gen. xxix: 27).

That Daniel followed this rule in the computation of time, is evident from the ninth chapter, in which is presented the seventy weeks, in the division of which we have, (1) seven weeks, (2) sixty-two weeks, and (3) one week. The seven weeks and sixty-two weeks, added together, make sixty-nine weeks, and extend to "Messiah the Prince." In sixty-nine weeks there are 483 days. This period was to [illegible] the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem," and to reach to the crucifixion of Christ, or the cutting off of Messiah.—Between the two points there were more than ten times the number of literal days; but if we reckon "each day for a year," making four hundred and eighty-three years, we find it exactly fulfilled. On turning to Revelation, we learn that the holy city (the Church) was to be trodden under foot "forty and two months." In forty and two months there are twelve hundred and sixty days. This marks the persecution of the Church under the papal rule, and was fulfilled in so many years.

In this chapter, (Dan. xii,) the Angel declares there shall be "time, times, and an half," (or part, marg.) This the prophet did not understand. He then enquires, "What shall be the end of these things? To this the angel replies, (v. 11,) "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination which maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days."

On turning to history, we find this has been exactly fulfilled. In the year 519 the abomination was set up. The Emperor Justin, by a decree, caused the Catholic faith to become the dominant religion, and the Church became incorporated with the State; but in 1809, just twelve hundred and ninety years after this union, Bonaparte deprived his holiness of his temporalities, since which time the power of the Pope, as a temporal Prince, has been but a second rate power. (See exposition of Dan. Ch. 7, Sec. 2.)

vs. 12, 13. "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days."

We have here a promise of a special blessing to those that wait.

Says Isaiah, "For since the beginning of the world men have not heard, nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen, O God, besides thee, what he hath prepared for him that waiteth for him," (Ch. lxiv: 4).

Says Jeremiah, "It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord," (Lam. iii: 26).

Says Habakuk, "I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved. And the Lord answered me, and said, write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it. For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry," (Ch. ii; 1–3).

Says Paul, "And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves, do groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body," (Rom. viii: 23.)

But how long are we to wait? Answer. Until we come to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. Now then if the Lord should appear for the deliverance of His people prior to the close of the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days, it would supercede the necessity of waiting; for assuredly we shall not have to wait, or watch after the coming of our King. If, therefore, there be any propriety or truthfulness in the declaration of the Angel, we must wait and come to the end of the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days in order to receive the blessing promised.

Some have maintained the theory that the days reach to the resurrection, but the Lord will come before the close of this prophetic period. To prove this, they quote the passage in 1 Thess iv: 16; "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." But when men quote such passages to prove that the Lord will come before the days terminate, it clearly shows they are hard pushed for evidence to sustain their theory They seem willing to resort to any subterfuge rather than submit to the truth. The Apostle places this subject in its proper light.—He says: "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel and with the trump of God: and in Cor. xv: 51, 52, "Behold I show you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed· In a moment in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."

The Greek expression, en atomo, here rendered "in a moment," means, we are informed, an indivisible or mathematical point of time; a space so brief that it cannot be divided. Now if the Saviour is to descend With a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead, hearing "the voice of the Son of God," are to be resurrected, and the living saints changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the sound of this last trump, there will be no more time intervening between the descent of the Lord from heaven and the resurrection, than there is between the darting of the electric fluid and the report which accompanies it. It will indeed be "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye."—"But go thou thy way." This evidently refers to Daniel's death; for the next clause reads, "for thou shalt rest." The term "way" occurs in the same sense in Job xvi: 22; "When a few years are come, then I shall go the way whence I shall not return." Daniel was to rest in the grave as in Rev. xiv: 13; "And I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Also in Ps. xvi 9, 10: "Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth; my flesh shall also rest in hope. For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption."

And again, in Is. lvii: 1, 2, "The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: and merciful men are taken away, none considering ahat the righteous is taken away from the evil to come. He shall enter into peace: they shall rest in their beds, each one walking in his uprighness" But how long is he to rest? "Till the END BE." The end of what? The THIRTEEN HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FIVE days.

"For thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot." Thou shalt RISE UP, and stand in thy lot, (Ger. text). Prof. Stuart renders the Hebrew thus: "Thou shalt stand up FOR thy lot." Now, when is Daniel to stand up for his lot? or when is he to be resurrected? "At THE END of the days." End of what days? It can be no other than "THE THOUSAND THREE HUNDRED AND FIVE AND THIRTY DAYS." The resurrection of the dead marks the end of those days. The Angel says, "Go thy way till THE END BE," and "thou shalt "RISE UP," (Ger. text), "FOR THY LOT," (Heb.) "AT THE END of the days." Thus it is written, and thus it will be fufilled. The '1335 days (years) extend just 45 years beyond the 1290. In the margin of the Bishop's Bible is placed the following note: "In this number, (1335 days,) we have a month and a half added to the former number; viz., the 1290 days. In a month and a half (Jewish time) there are just 45 days, and this added to the 1290, make 1335 days, which we believe will end in 1854.

This brings us to the culminating point in the visions of Daniel. It directs the eye to the zenith of that glory to be revealed at the resurrection of the just, when Daniel, with all the saints, will take the kingdom to possess it "forever even forever and ever." And O, what heavenly attractions cluster around that momentous scene! When we cast a glance over the history of the world, we find the masses of men have been subservient to the aggrandizement of the few; might has exalted itself against right; the earth has been strewed with carnage and deluged with blood. But shall death ever riot on human flesh? Are there no bounds to this ocean of sorrow? no limitation to the curse?—The curse shall be removed from off all the earth, says that voice that commands the billows of ocean, "hitherto shalt thou come and no further." The fiat of Him who controls the winds of heaven, saying, "Peace, be still," has gone forth that the winds of commotion shall be hushed, the jarring elements revert to their primeval order, and discordant principles to their original harmony.

But before this Eden beauty can cover the earth, it must be thrown into the crucible of the divine laboratory, the dross removed, and the pure metal, passing through a mould of beauty and of glory, shall come forth remodelled, a regenerated creation, a new heaven and earth, resplendent with the glory of God and the Lamb. What adds grandeur and enchantment to the whole, is the moral beauty and glory that adorns the place, and fills the earth, as the waters cover the sea.

The saints of old saw this land "afar off;" but we behold it nigh at hand. O, thou tender mother, who hast deposited thy sacred treasure in the dust, the smiling, prattling infant of thy maternal love,—and in doing this thou hast felt that thy nature suffered violence, and as though thy heart strings would break from very grief, —listen to that voice which says to thee, "Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy." The delicate flower has not ultimately perished; its leaves are but folded for the night, to be reopened when the morn of the resurrection shall dawn. Its beauty, and freshness, and fragrance will all return; and transplanted to Eden bowers, it will bloom, in unfading loveliness, a model of [illegible] perfected by the finger of God.

Ye family circles whose number has been broken by the fell destroyer, if your friends have fallen asleep in Jesus, do not "mourn as those who mourn without hope." The day of their redemption draweth nigh; soon the bands of death will be sundered! The righteous dead shall hear the voice of the Son of Man; and they that hear shall live! The eye that has lost its lustre, shall be rekindled amid the blaze of everlasting day! the cheek that is pallid in death, will be mantled with the glow of immortal youth! the frame that is palsied and inert, will be raised in the power of an endless life! And all this beauty, and glory, and joy so soon to come! At the end of the days, they will receive an inheritance among the just, pure and undefiled, and that fadeth not away!

☞The following interesting remarks are taken from a number of the Advent Herald, issued just after the passing of the time when Adventists were expecting the coming of the Lord in 1844:

"At first the definite time was generally opposed; but there seemed to be an irresistible power attending its proclamation, which prostrated all before it. It swept over the land with the velocity of a tornado, and it reached hearts in different and distant places almost simultaneously, and in a manner which can be accounted for only on the supposition that God was in it. It produced everywhere the most deep searching of heart and humiliation of soul before the God of high heaven It caused a weaning of affections from the things of this world—a healing of controversies and animosities—a confession of wrongs—a breaking down before God, and penitent, broken hearted supplications to him for pardon and acceptance. It caused self abasement and prostration of soul, such as we never before witnessed. As God, by Joel commanded, when the great day of God should be at hand, it produced a rending of hearts and not of garments, and a turning unto the Lord, with fasting and weeping and mourning. As God said by Zechariah, a spirit of grace and supplication was poured out upon his children; they looked to him whom they had pierced, and there was a great mouring in the land—every family apart, and their wives apart; and those who were looking for the Lord, afflicted their souls before him.

The lecturers among the Adventists were the last to embrace the views of the time, and the more prominent ones came into it last of all. It seemed not to be the work of men, but to be brought about against the will of men. The several Advent papers came into the view only at a late hour; and this paper was the last to raise its voice in the spread of the cry. For a long time we were determined to take no part in the movement, either in opposition or in the advocacy of it. We afterwards endeavored to point out what we considered to be a few inaccuracies in the arguments used, but which did not materially affect the result. It was not until within about two weeks of the commencement of the seventh month, that we were particularly impressed with the progress of the movement—when we had such a view of it, that to oppose it, or even to remain silent longer, seemed to us to be opposing the work of the Holy Spirit: and in entering upon the work with all our souls, we could but exclaim, "What were we, that we should resist God?" It seemed to us to have been so independent of human agency, that we could but regard it as a fulfilment of the "midnight cry," after the tarrying of the Bridegroom, and the slumbering and sleeping of the virgins, when they were all to arise and trim their lamps. And this last work seems to have been done; for there has never been a time before when the respective Advent bands were in so good a state of preparedness for the Lord's coming.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, APRIL 12, 1854.

The Battle of Armagedon.

We publish to-day an account of some of the engines of war of '54 invention. As it is the grand Crisis in the world's history, as a different scene is opening from any scene of turmoil and carnage and devastation the world has ever witnessed, the engines of death must be adapted to the awful occasion—the tremendous epoch that is about to burst upon the world. If this is to be "the battle of that great day of God Almighty," and the slain of the Lord are to be many "from one end of the earth even to the other end of the earth," if none are to be left to bury or lament over them, we may expect preparations for that fearful catastrophe that is to deluge the world, will be made in some measure proportionate to the magnitude of the event. We find that when in the providence of God Cyrus was to accomplish a mighty enterprize in the overthrow of the Babylonian Empire, that the mode of warfare was changed. His heavy and destructive chariots of war, his movable towers, his cavalry, &c., constituted a new era in the tactics of the world. So when Alexander went forth to the conquest of the world, his Grecian phalanx with their long pikes and consolidated ranks, the shock of which no power on earth could resist, far excelled the Persians in the art of war.—But when the heavy-armed legions of Rome took the field another revolution was accomplished, and the Grecian phalanx fell before the Roman sword. Again, when the formidable empire of the Turks was to be built up "to slay the third of men," a greater revolution still in the art of human butchery must be effected, and accordingly the explosive element of gunpowder must be put in requisition to send forth its missiles of death from the musket and the cannon's mouth.

But now when the mighty destruction of wicked nations is to come—a destruction over and above all preceding ones as the heavens are higher than the earth—a new mode of warfare must be invented and engines of unparalleled power must be brought into action. To accomplish this the proclamation from the throne of Jehovah goes forth, "Wake up the mighty men." Stir up those men of England, whose mastery has astonished the world, and raised her to the zenith of national glory. Wake up those mighty men—let them apply their inventive genius, their highly perfected mechanical arts—tell them to "prepare war"—their engines of death are wanted. It is to be no retail work—this is to be wholesale dealing.—Let them invent engines of slaughter such as are unparalleled in the works of man. The bow and arrow of the Assyrian will not answer now. Those days of Babylonian warfare are gone by—the Persian lance is not efficient for the mighty havoc of human life—the Roman broad sword is too powerless for the stupendous work—nay, the Ottoman's powder and balls are inadequate—the patent revolver—the modern bomb—the Paixhan gun, are all too harmless for THE BATTLE OF THAT GREAT DAY. Hence all England is moved, laboring night and day with unremitting industry to prepare war, to invent and perfect engines unheard of before—engines that can paralyze an entire crew on board a man-of war at a single shot—engines that can sink a line of battle ship at a blow—engines that can set a fleet, village, or city on fire. It is enough to make the stoutest heart quail. O my God, to what a day are we approaching? O the wail of misery that will roll like a mighty wave over the earth. I must confess that although I have previously felt a sort of peaceful, heavenly serenity, and calm confidence in God, while reading accounts of the preparation for the last conflict; yet when I came to read of the newly invented implements of destruction, my heart seemed to melt. Here, thought I, is the living reality—the awful scene depicted before my eyes, and now I hear the voice of God in his providence calling the mighty men to advance. They, having executed his command to "prepare war," are now directed to come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat, to advance to the scene of action; and accordingly they move, and the conflict is about to begin. O solemn thought! O momentous day!! Let us, beloved Brethren and Sisters, be prepared to escape all those things that are coming on the earth, and to stand before the Son of man.

☞I learn that some exceptions have been taken in reference to the publication of a notice in the Crisis, of a public discussion in Lowell, to be holden between Elder J. Turner, and W. H. Browster, particularly in relation to the sale of the tickets for that occasion. I wish to say, the office of the Crisis had no concern in the sale of these tickets, nor arrangements for the discussion. It was simply inserted by special request of those who were interested in the discussion. It is well known, that in conducting the paper, it has been my great design to avoid all collision and contention with others, and so far as in me lies to live peaceably with all men. If in consequence of these feelings, and a desire to oblige, I may have inserted that by which the tender lambs of the flock have been injured, and the opponents of our faith taken occasion to reproach us with a spirit of speculation, no one can regret the error more than myself; for it has been my most earnest desire from the begining, that nothing may enter the columns of the paper, but that which will nurture the flock unto eternal life. My fervent prayer is, that every line may be a line of light, and every word an expression of truth. It ought however, in justice to be stated, that the expense of the hall (being the largest and most costly in the city) for four evenings, would be one hundred dollars. Had the brethren abroad understood this, and other circumstances, it would have altered the case.

Downfall of the "Pillar of Peace." Upon one of the highest cliffs which form the dividing line between Lancanshire and Yorkshire, and which constitutes at that point the "back bone of England," there was erected in the year 1814–15, a tall and massive column of rock, commemorative of the joy which the inhabitants of those wild districts felt at the abdication of Napoleon—a suggestive memorial of the blessings which peace had brought to the two countries which it separated. A large number of persons subscribed to the cost of its erection, and it was called the "Pillar of Peace." A few weeks since, however, as we learn from the London Times, the people of Langfield were alarmed by a loud noise, as of a peal of thunder from the heavens, and on looking towards the summit, they found that their old landmark lay in ruins about its base. An ominous accident.

The falling of "the Pillar of Peace" just at this emergency, although we of course place no dependence on such apparent premonitions of coming events, yet we can hardly feel otherwise than to regard it as an ominous occurrence in providence.

That monument it seems was erected to commemorate the restoration of peace after the wars of Napoleon. It was reared where the four angels commenced holding the four winds, or in other words, when the allied powers began to "keep the peace of the world." Now as the angels are about to let go—just as the most terrible armaments the world ever saw, are about sailing to break the peace of the world, and commence the final conflict, it is certainly a remarkable fact, that in the providence of God, this tower of remembrance—the Pillar of Peace—should be prostrated to the ground. Said a quaint, but learned Author, Cotton Mather, "He that will observe remarkable providences, will find remarkable providences to observe."

The Improved Art of War. Among the many arts which the conceptions of genius are constantly combining to perfect and develope, is the art of war. Every succeeding generation seems to introduce among us still more powerful and efficient agencies for accomplishing the destruction of our fellow men. A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, writing from England, gives an interesting description of a few of the warlike engines which it is supposed will contribute materially to the successful termination of hostilities in the great European struggle which is probably about to occur.

One of the most terrible of these machines, he says, is Wagner's floating gun—which is simply a long congreve gun, designed to be propelled along the surface of the water in a straight line, on the principle of the rocket, untill it strikes the vessel at which it was directed, when it thrusts into its sides its iron head, containing two pounds of fulminating powder of mercury. When the fire reaches this reservoir, the powder explodes, blowing a hole in the vessel ten or twelve feet in diameter—so large that it cannot be closed up by any ordinary method. This machine, says the writer, has been a long time maturing in the Woolwich arsenals, and is now completed, and ready to go forth on its mission of destruction. It can be made available at a distance far beyond the reach of any other gun, and it is thought will be of service in attacking the Russian fleets when anchored under the unapproachable fortresses of Sebastopol and Cronstad.

The correspondent of the Gazette also says that submarine boats have been so perfected that they can attach a burner to an enemy's ship without incurring the least danger to those who manage them. Large numbers of explosive balls were embarked on board the English fleets, of such a nature as invariably to explode whenever they strike the side of an enemy's ship, scattering on every side devastation, death and flames. Experiments are also being made with an asphyxiating ball, which does not kill, but paralyzes an entire crew for several hours, or untill they are made prisoners.

Two small steamboats are building, designed to carry each two enormous Paixhan guns.—These vessels are built in the strongest manner, with oaken walls near six feet thick, covered with a mattrass of cotton one and a half feet in thickness, and this again covered with a sheeting of iron and lead. The roof or upper deck is covered in the same way, so as to allow the bombs of the enemy to glance into the sea without damage. They are designed to be bullet proof, ball proof, and bomb proof.—These ships are to be sent at the proper time into the midst of the enemy's fleet, where they will attack the vessels around them, fore and aft, with bombs thrown between wind and water, at the same time sprinkling them with showers of Greek fire. It is believed that one of these little vessels, operated by the labors of a few determined men, might, under favorable circumstances, destroy an entire fleet of ships.

The English fleet is also largely provided with balloons, intended to carry inflammable materials, to scatter over towns, villages and fleets, when the wind favors such operations: and it is said that another invention, whose results will be still more terrible than any of the above, but of which the construction has not yet been made known, is also about to be sent out to destroy the Russians.

A Certain French Engineer on a vist to Sinope, upon examining some of the wrecks, gave as his opinion that the missiles used in the destruction of the Turkish vessels were of a novel invention, and unlike anything hitherto used in warfare. Some of the spars from the dismantled ships were despatched by him to the French commander, to be duly examined by persons of experience in matters of this nature. Among those present was the captain of one of the frigates, who had, under Louis Phillipe, formed part of the Council of Marine. At sight of the fragments sent for examination by the engineer, he was struck with the remembrance of an invention offered to the minister while he was in the bureaux of marine, and which was rejected at the time, as its employment in war would be contrary to the laws of humanity and honorable warfare. The invention was due to the chemical researches of a M. Fortier, who calls it in his programme, the boulet asphyxiant and was discovered in the year 1839 Upon Fortier's offer to communicate the secret to the Minister of Marine, he refused to accept it, alleging the great number of means for the destruction of human life already existing; and there, it seems the matter ended. In 1842 another proposal was made of the same invention, registered in the archives of the Marine as Fortier's "boulet asphyxiant,' no longer, however, made by the inventor, but a M. Champion, an individual well known in the annals of Paris life, who had lost and won many fortunes—who had been fermier des jeux, speculator on the Bourse, enfant de la balle—in short, one of those who deem all means of gain lawful where all have equal chance.

The offer was again refused, upon the same pretext as before, and nothing more was heard of the affair untill it became known that M. Champion had repaired his broken fortunes in Russia. Capt. B—, who had seen the specimens which Fortier had deposited at the Marine in 1839, declares the effect to have been precisely the same as that visible npon the shattered spars of Sinope. The programme of Fortier's invention describes it as liquid fire burning under water, and destroying life by suffocation in all who happen to be within a certain distance of its explosion. The observation made by Capt. B—at the end of the report, which has been sent home, is this:—"If the Emperor of Russia is really in possession of this deadly element of destruction, the combined navies of the whole universe would be powerless against him."

Later from Europe. By the Europa at New York, on Saturday, we have three days later advices from Europe.

The Czar's reply to the demand of France and England, has not been received. Eastern affairs are unchanged.

The London Globe states that Russia consents to recognize the neutrality of Sweden.—It now remains to be seen what Russia intends respecting Denmark.

The Pussian people are earnestly petitioning their government to join the Western powers; the government, however, continues to hang back.

From the Baltic or Black Sea, or from Asia, nothing additional is received. From Omar Pacha's camp, on the Danube, nothing is received excepting continued skirmishes with outposts at Kalafat

An English and French frigate have gone to destroy the Russian blockace at the mouth of the Danube. This will probably be the commencement of hostillties.

The Greek revolution yet lives but languidly. The export of grain is prohibited from the Ionian Islands.

Austria seems inclined to act in concert with the Western powers, but not in any decided or definite manner.

The fear of war produces dullness in all the markets The export of gold had not been quite so heavy. The Bank rate of interest was unchanged.

Lord Raglan was expected to arrive at Constantinople about the 1st of April, so as to coincide as nearly as possible with the arrival of Marshal Arnaud, of France.

In Constantinople a new corps of twenty thousand men is to be formed under the new Imperial Guard.

The latest from Egypt is, that in a short time another corps of twenty thousand horse, will be placed at the disposal of the Sultan.

Omar Pacha, in order to teach some humanity to his irregular troops, has offered a reward for every Russian prisoner brought in alive

Bucharest, March 7 Major Toms, attache to the Prince of Schwartzenberg, on the staff of Prince Gortschakoff, for the purpose of surveying the movements of the Russians, has just been recalled by his government. This recall has produced a great sensation among the Russians. It has been considered a first step towards a rupture between Austria and Russia. The Austrian consul has said at Bucharest, that the day on which the Russian army should pass the Danube, the Austrians would pass the Carpathians, for the purpose of occupying Wallachia.

Vienna, Thursday.—Advices from the Albanian frontiers state that Zavellas has been proclaimed commander-in-chief of the insurgents. Souli and the northern coast of Epirus are entirely up in arms. The insurrection now extends to Acro, from the Pindus mountain range to Mezzovo.

The Morning Chronicle's Paris correspondent has received Constantinople letters which represent the attitude of the Greek population in the Ottomon dominions as more and more threatening as regards the power of the Sultan. It is believed the Russians will endeavor to strike a decisive blow on the Danube before the arrival of the allied troops.

Omar Pasha is to have the general direction of the military operations both in Europe and Asia.

The Sultan intends to place at the disposal of the English and French armies, on their landing, 12,000 horses and 18,000 mules.

Vienna, March 20.—Although his Majesty only returned yesterday morning at 6 o'clock, he in the course of the day granted M. de Meyerndorff a private audience, which lasted full two hours. Of course no one can know exactly what passed, but hints dropped by the Russians induce us to believe the Emperor Nicholas has again given explanations to the Emperor Francis Joseph, and that the stay of Baron Meyerndorff in this city will depend on the line of conduct which this government may resolve on pursuing.

As far as it goes the following most important news is authentic, but it is too incomplete to be forwarded by telegraph. An alliance offensive and defencive has been concluded between Prussia and Austria, which powers will observe a strict neutrality. Prussia has pledged herself to occupy Hungary, in case Austria should be obliged to send the army now concentrated there into the adjoining Turkish provinces or Italy. My informant either did not know or would not say, what counterpledges Austria had given.

Shumla, March 5.—In the night between the 1st and 2d of March, the Russians attacked, with a considerable force, the battery placed by Omar Pasha at Podbashi, in order to check the passage of the Russian vessels on the Danube. Four companies of Turks were immediately ordered to attack them by Ibrahim Pasha, serving under the orders of Mustapha Pasha, who commands the right wing of the Turkish army in the Dobrudscha.

The object of the Russians was to spike the cannons and destroy the works, but in this they were hindered by the vivacity of the Turkish attack, so that after half an hour's engagement they were all obliged to take to their heels on board the ships, in order to avoid being driven into the Danube. In this affair, the Turkish loss was 10 killed and 13 wounded. 80 Russian dead bodies were found in the morning, and as many were drowned. The Russian loss must have been severe.

At Sistow an insignificant affair has taken place. The Russians having attempted to make themselves masters of an island were repulsed, the Turks having lost one man, the Russians loss was also small.

The London Daily News states that at a meeting between the Emperor of Austria and the Russian envoy, on the 20th inst. the latter preferred claims upon Austria of an important character.

[From the London News, of 25th]

The Anglo French Ultimatum.—We have received the following despatch of yesterday's date, from our correspondent at Berlin:

Count Nesselrode has communicated to the English Consuls that the Emperor will give no answer at all to their joint summons.

We have also received the following despatch from Berlin, dated yesterday (Friday):

Russia has acknowledged the neutrality of Sweden.

There is no change in the Danish Ministry.

The Diet was to be closed on the 24th

We have received from our correspondent in Paris, a despatch of yesterday's date, of which the following is a translation:

We are informed from Marseilles, that three divisions of the expeditionary army will have probably embarked by the end of the month, and that the fourth will follow in the first days of April.

It is thought that the French will stop at Gallipolis, and that the English will establish themselves in the Gulf of Enos. After a short time for repose, the Anglo-French army will be despatched either to Adrianople or to the Crimea.

The secret Russian correspondence, recently made public in England, affords, says the New York Post, the most satisfactory glimpse into the penetralia of the Czar's cabinet, the world has ever been indulged with.

"We have the Emperor taking Sir Henry Seymour by the button-hole, and telling him, confidentially, that Turkey is sick, mortally sick, will die soon, and the body will smell unless some arrangements are made at once for the disposition of it. That England and Russia can take care of it, if they will put their heads together. Sir Henry intimates a doubt whether Turkey is so sick as the Emperor thinks, but writes home about it. Lord John Russell does not think Turkey so very sick, and is afraid to make any arrangement about the body, for fear it will be found out, and not only aggravate the invalid's distemper, but make trouble with the other powers.

Nicholas sticks to it, however, that Turkey cannot live, that her dissolution would take them by surprise and make trouble, unless England and Russia should come to an understanding He did not want anything in writing.—The word of a gentleman is enough Sir Henry was not accustomed to this imperial pertinacity. He fought shy, and wrote home for instructions, which would excuse him from the necessity of debating the subject any longer with the Czar, their conference having become more embarrassing than complimentary"

CORRESPONDENCE.

Bigelow's Mills,
March 27th, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—Dear Sir, though a stranger to me personally, yet I know you as a Brother in the Lord. I wish to give, through the Crisis, a little sketch of my visit at South Bend, Kingsbury, Union and Bigelow's Mills.

I found the brethren in all the above places in a good condition, strong in the Lord and the power of his might, rejoicing in hope of speedy redemption. The Lord is working among them mightily, and over one hundred have been converted and baptized during a few months past, under the labors of Brother and Sister Mansfield; and I must say I never saw more intelligent, strong and active converts, than I found there. I was happily disappointed when I got among them, and heard them talk and pray. I had my fears, knowing that Brother and Sister Mansfield were strong on time, expecting the Lord this year, and did not know but that it might be the work of mere excitement. But I found they knew what they were about.—It is true that most of them are strong on time, but at the same time, say they, if the Lord does not come this year, we will wait until he does, for it can't be long.—Brother and Sister Mansfield are constant and persevering in their labors, and God's blessing attends them everywhere they go, and their labors are highly appreciated among the people.

The brethren in this region are to have a great gathering here (if the Lord will) in May, and it is their united request that Bros. Berrick and Couch, or Burnham, should make their arrangements so as to attend with us. I expect to attend the meetings, and we expect it will be the greatest meeting ever held in the West.—It will commence about the 25th of May. Due notice will be given.

You would doubtless like to know how I stand on time. I would say, I am examining the subject critically, and so far as I have gone it is clear. I have no argument against it, and have seen none in all that has been written in the Harbinger and Watchman. I believe in what is called "the Age to come," but I don't expect the events of that Age until it comes.

If you please, I will ask those brethren who expect the unwalled villages to be built and inhabited before the Advent, a few questions. 1. Who will build these villages? 2. Will those who build inhabit them? 3. Will those who build and inhabit them have the right of possession? 4. Where will they be built? 5. Who gives the right to build and inhabit? 6. By what law or covenant is this right given or secured? 7. With whom is this covenant made? 8. Where is it made? 9. By whom, or who is the Administrator of this covenant? 10. Is this covenant made with Israel and Judah, which gives them the right to build and inhabit before, or subsequent to the Advent and the end of gentile times? 11. Does not Jesus say that Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles until their times be fulfilled? 12. Is not Jerusalem still under gentile treading down, or power? 13. Will not the times of Christ begin where gentile times end? 14. Are not the times of Christ the times of restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began? 15. Will not God send Jesus at the time of restitution, or shall we have the restitution or any part of it without Christ? and if any, why not all? 16. Is not the buildings of the unwalled villages, by Israel and Judah, and their dwelling safely in them, having cattle and goods, &c., so much of the restitution? If so, Jesus must come first. I propose the above queries not for controversy, but to arrest the minds of my brethren, that they may not look too far for the Advent, and so that day come upon them unawares.

If I settle down on the time, you will hear from me.

Yours, hoping for eternal life when Jesus comes, J. C. Bywater.

Dixon, March 3, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—I have received the messenger published by you, it seems to be meat in due season. It is cheering to read the letters showing that so many believe the vision will soon speak and not lie, even this year, 1854. If the chronology is not correct, all the past historical accounts must be incorrect on time, of the fulfilments of events past, viz., taking away the daily, the setting up of the abomination of desolation, 519, the end of 1290 in the year 1809, which leaves 45 years to the end of 1335, which must end in 1854 The Angel said to Daniel, "Go thy way, Daniel, for the words are closed till the time of the end." The time of the end has come—the seal is broken—Daniel, and John with all the redeemed will stand up this year. Paul says, "Now the just shall live by faith."—Now faith is the ground or confidence of things hoped for. "Let us not cast away our confidence which hath great recompenese or reward." We have need of patience; "in the season we shall reap if we faint not." "We are not of them that draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul."—Brethren, we are not in darkness that that day should overtake us as a thief. God "has not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain Salvation through Jesus Christ." When the Son of Man shallcome, &c., before him shall be gathered all nations. The saints must be previously raised and changed; for the Apostle tells us that the Lord himself descends; Enoch tells us that he will come with his saints to execute judgment. The executive judgment belongs to the saints, see 146th Psalm. Joel 2: 11. "The Lord shall utter his voice before his army," &c. Rev. 19, the armies which were in heaven followed him on horses; and out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, (or word of command) that with it he should smite the nations. Dear Brethren and Sisters, "cast not away your confidence," but let us "exhort one another so much the more, as we see the day approaching." It does seem it must come this year; and may it be the happy lot of us to obey the Gospel that we may share in its promises, is the prayer of your brother in tribulation and hope of deliverance this year.

Robert Chown.

West Winsted, Apr. 6th, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—The letters, which are published from week to week in the Crisis, are to me like a warm fire in a cold day, and the greetings of friends in a strange land; and I will not refuse to cheer my pilgrim friends in the same way.

Well, praise the good Lord for the blessed hope, which was never brighter than now. All India's treasures, and gold in mints and mines, with honors of kingly crowns, bear no compasison with the value of the poorest of the saints, who love the appearing of Jesus. I believe the dividend of the heavenly treasure is about to be made, and "the poor of this world rich in faith," to become heirs of the everlasting kingdom.

This is great pay, for our little service in the vineyard of the Lord.

How blessed to rise from earth with angels to escort us into the presence of the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords.

"Soon the morning will dawn," to be followed by no night.

Since I last saw you, I have had some blessed seasons with the children of the Lord.

Our meetings at Boston were truly refreshing, and some resolved to desert from the enemy of man, and join the army of the Lord.

The Sabbath meeting in Tremont Temple building, was one long to be remembered on account of the joy among the saints, and the interest manifested by the citizens of Boston, to hear on the subject of the Lord's speedy coming.

Many were unable to find seats, who would have been glad to have heard on the great question now agitating the world.

It seemed like the meetings in 1843--4—indeed I think the virgins are truly rising and triming their lamps as specified in the parable of Matt. 25: 7.

Our social meetings were truly heart-cheering to the lovers of Jesus.

My next meeting was at East Lee. In this place, they were unable to find a house large enough to hold the people, and many listened outside, while within every nook and corner was occupied. The house would be filled a long time before the hour of commencement. The Baptist ministers was out to hear, and treated the subject with becoming respect. One of the deacons joined with us heartily in our social meetings. Several rose for prayers, and spoke of their determinations to serve the Lord.

The next week I spent at Worcester, where we had a soul refreshing time from the presence of the Lord. Some from the churches, left their former associations and decided to go with "the sect every where spoken against." Brn S Heath, M. Batcheller, Griggs, Camp and Kimball, were present during some portion of the time, and rendered efficient aid to the interest of the meeting.

I left Bro. Kimball there to continue the meetings another week.

Our brethren remarked, that there had not been so much interest in Worcester, for a number of years. Our social meetings were heavenly feasts.

During the meeting Br. Higgings who had been sick some five weeks, sent for the elders of the church, in compliance with the Apostle Jas. 5: 14, 15, and the promise was verified.

Br. H. had not been dressed for about three weeks, and required two to help him off and on to the bed. He was near the grave, and the physician thought there was but little hope for him, and it was believed that he had ulcers in his bowels. In a few minutes after praying with him, he arose, dressed himself, and came out into the sitting room where we were, and sat down to supper with the rest of the family.

His companion was reclaimed from a back-sliden state at the same time that he was healed.

Before the close of the meeting at the hall, he met with us and told what the Lord had done for him, to the great joy of the saints.

Your brother in Christ,
M. Grant.

Ballymena has been during the last week the scene of one of those disgraceful riots which are gotten up under the name of Christianity, but which are in spirit the very opposite of the religion of Christ. A party of Navvies from the south of Ireland were brought up by Mr. Dargon to work on the line of railroad now being constructed there. A party of these having attacked a Presbyterian clergyman on a Sunday evening when returning from his services, the whole country was aroused, and these men were indiscriminately attacked, the innocent with the guilty. Some of them were so severely beaten that their lives are despaired of, and others were driven some miles from there, putting a complete stop to the work.

The cholera has broken out in this neighborhood, and fears are entertained that the consequences will be very serious. In the small town of Carrickfergus, on Saturday morning, there were reported fifty cases, some of which proved fatal, and fears are entertained that on the approach of spring its virulence, which has been checked by the severe winter, may greatly increase. In the southern districts of Ireland it is commencing its sad work. With it to aid emigration, poor Ireland is being fast depopulated.

I was gratified to find in the Daily News an article relative to the position of Austria in the present struggle, in which the writer takes the ground I assumed in my last letter to the Journal, written to you some days before that appeared. Recent events have shown that Austria is not to be depended on, and again I repeat it, England would be better without her, and the thinking men of England, who speak independently of party, agree in this opinion. Very truly, J. B.

Fighting for the Holy Places. The latest news from Syria furnishes a sad commentary upon the state of religion among those who congregate around the places sacred in their historical associations to all Christians.—The whole country is represented as in a state of anarchy, owing to the withdrawal of the troops for the war with Russia, and the Pachas are left without the means of enforcing their authority. The Greek and Latin clergy at Jerusalem have renewed their shameful contests about the Holy Places, while the Turkish officials had not the power to prevent them coming to blows. This time the Latins claimed more than they were entitled to, and the Latin Patriarch and the French Consul (M. Botts) finding themselves under the necessity of yielding to the Greeks, left Jerusalem for Beyrout.

It seems impossible to read without a shudder an account like the above of contention about the Holy Places, those sacred, hallowed spots where the scene of our blessed Saviour's birth, labours and sufferings was laid. The idea that actual violence should there occur seems so foreign from the principles of that religion which breathes "peace and good will to man" that it is a perfect paradox.

I have thought the same in relation to the sacred doctrines connected with the second coming of our Lord. What a monstrous absurdity that those who profess to believe in the immediate coming of Christ, should ever indulge a spirit of animosity and contention toward others who may differ from them on minor points. How astonishing that in reference to the signs that portend his coming in glory there should ever arise a spirit of contention and strife. We hope all will view these subjects too awfully solmen, too sacred and hallowed to admit of any bitter, acrimonious or unholy contention on such glorious subjects, Let us all be awed into silence as it were before the presence of the Supreme Judge. Grudge not one against another brethren, the judge standeth before the door."

For the World's Crisis.

A friend recently called my attention to a remark in the Grand Crisis, on page 73, which is as follows:—"John Wesley and Lorenzo Dow have given the same date (1809), for the breaking of the civil power of the Pope," and enquired, how it could be true, that Wesley gave the year 1809, for the breaking of the power of the Pope, when in fact he died a number of years before it?

In relation to the above, I would say, that, notwithstaning Wesley died before the year 1809, yet according to his calculation, the number 666 (Rev. 13,) which he supposed to commence in A. D 1143, would terminate in 1809, in the taking away of the Pope's temporal power. This fact is not only refered to by Lorenzo Dow but endorsed by him. He says:—"The stripping of the Pope of his temporal power, 1810, which should be effected by an individual from Asia—(B—from Acre) and that 666 years from a certain date, viz., 1143, it would take place, which was exemplified, January 1st, 1810." This calculation as we learn from Dow's Work (vol. 2, p. 134,) was first "made in Germany 1724, translated and published 1754, in London, and reprinted to Wesley's notes in America."

In the above, the whole of the year 1809, is embraced in the calculation, or as Dow remarks, it extends to the first of January 1810, when the new government commenced its opperations. F. H. B.

For the World's Crisis.

The Pilgrim.

A stranger, I've lone wander'd here,
Far from my home;
My eyes are dim'd with bitter tears,
Sadly I roam.

Then pilgrim rest thee here awhile,
Why in such haste?
Linger one night in pleasure's bower,
Its sweets to taste.

I may not stop to sleep in this
Enchanted bower,
Too dearly I shall buy the bliss
Of one sweet hour.

I'll travel on through this dark night,
How can I stay
So near my home, where lov'd ones wait
To welcome me!

And yonder sun is sinking down
Low in the west,
The evening shadows urge me on;
I must not rest.

Pilgrim, yon sun will rise again,
Darkness be gone,
Thy feet are worn, rest tired one,
Your journey's long.

'Tis true, my journey has been long,
And rough the way,
Yet oft in barren wilds among
Rivulets stray.

Oasis in the desert's waste
Sometimes I meet,
As o'er the burning sands I haste
My willing feet.

Sometimes the cool soft breezes blow
My brow to fan,
And Angel's round me whisper low
"Good will to man."

Pilgrim, the path is dangerous,
Thou mayest stray,
Without a guide to pilot thee
This lonely way.

I have a chart of all the way,
And, 'though unseen,
A lovely guide attending me,
The spirit's beam.

My chart not only points the way
My bark should steer,
But tells me Jesus comes to reign
On earth this year.

I soon shall join the blood wash'd band,
There I shall rest,
O I would leave this sin-curs'd land,
Home is the best.

And now a chord within my breast
Trembles with hope,
Touch'd by no hand of mine, it thrills
To love's sweet note.

Earth's sorrows now are growing dim
To human sight,
My thorny path begins to shine,
With living light.

Farewell to pain, and sighs, and tears,
No more I'll roam;
How bright the unchanging morn appears;
Welcome sweet home!

Vesta N. Cudworth.

Special Notice.

Bro. Merriam, I wish to say through the Crisis, my Post Office address is Cutingsville, Vt. I. A. Cheney.

Some of the Brethren of Westfield, think that a tent meeting, to commence the first of June, would do good as there never was a meeting of the kind in this place. Bro. Grant, Turner, and Adrian have lectured here, and the people have become interested to have me write to get the suggestions in season before the brethren to give them time to think of it Westfield is a large place, centrally located, 10 miles West of Springfield, on the Western and Canal R. R.—People can come from the four points of compass by Railroad. If this suggestion should meet the minds of the people they can make it known through the Crisis. Bro. Berick, or Couch, or some one else that has a tent, will need to come if we have the proposed meeting.

I would say to the brethren that Dr. S. P. Hubbard, has been appointed Corresponding Secretary of the Advent Church in Westfield.

Chas. Goodrich.

Westfield, Mass., April 3, 1854.

Advent meetings every Sabbath at Lyceum Hall, Lawrence, Mass.

Advent Hymn Books. It has been decided to publish another edition of Hymn Books, they will be ready in about one week. Those who have ordered books will then be supplied.

Bro. Wm. Pullen's P. O. address is Lowell, Mass.

James E. Clark's P. O. address is Waterville, Ct. Will Bro. Clark have the goodness to inform the Crisis what his Post Office address was formerly.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige and save us immense labor and perplexity if they will strictly adhere to the following rules:

1. Over all communications designed to be published write, For the World's Crisis.

2. Over all communications not designed for the public write, Private.

3. At the head of all letters write the date, never failing to give the STATE, and also County, if written from the Middle, Western or Southern States.

4. Write all orders for the paper or for books on a page by itself, beginning thus, Order for the Crisis, or, Order for books, as the case may be.

5. At the close of each letter containing money write the amount, and to whom it is to be credited.

6. Be careful to write names and P. O. addresses in a legible hand.

7. In returning papers write on the paper the name and P. O. address of the person to whom it had been sent.

8. In preparing matter for the Crisis we hope our correspondents will adopt, as the most important and indispensible of all rules, the practice of commending the subject to God, praying fervently for light to be reflected on the position of the Church, and for heavenly manna to feed and nurture the little flock unto eternal life—also that sinners may be induced to flee from impending wrath, and take refuge in the ark before the deluge takes them all away.

9. Let the letters and communications be carefully read over, corrected, and, if need be re-written, punctuated and prepared for the press, so far as the writer has ability so to do. If, however, the writer does not understand punctuation, &c., the Editor is just as willing, and if possible more so, to serve the humblest member of the flock in bringing his or her sentiments and feelings before the public, as those who have been favored with higher educational advantages, provided only they write under the influence of the Spirit of God.

In sending out eight thousand papers, it would not be strange if some mistakes should be attributable to us, others, it may be, to the Post Offices, and others still to the neglect of subscribers to give their proper Post Office address. We hope in such cases brethren will exercise a little patience, and write us, if necessary, so that we may rectify all mistakes which it will ever afford us pleasure to do. tf

All letters of business in relation to the World's Crisis, or to books sold at the office of the Crisis, or letters containing payment for "the grand crisis in human affairs" and "the Advent Hymn-book," must in future be directed to Jonas Merriam, Editor of the World's Crisis.

Business Items.

☞ Several persons have sent back their papers and wished to have them discontinued, but have forgotten to tell us to what Post Office they were directed. It would cost us a great amount of labor to look over our entire list to find these names. Will those persons therefore be so kind as to inform us where their papers were directed and we will discontinue them.

☞ Persons who wish to have their papers discontinued should always inform us to what Post Office they are sent.

☞ Persons wishing to have their paper changed from one Post Office to another should be as careful to tell us where they are sent, as they are in giving the P O. to which they wish to have them sent, always mentioning the State. Inattention to these things makes us a vast amount of unnecessary labor.

☞ Somebody has ordered a Chart to be directed to Plainfield, Mass., and sent three dollars and ten cents to pay for it and, to pay the postage, but they forgot to sign their name to the order. We will send it when we know who to direct to

☞ S Ferren, writing from Me., requests us to have a few copies of the Jubilee Hymn printed. The hymn is in the new Hymn Book. It will cost one dollar to get them printed, but we will get it done if the brother wishes.

☞ Bro. E. Pitson: Your letter was received and the names you sent put upon the book, and we expect the papers have been sent as you ordered. They were directed to Claremont, N. H.

☞ Bro. Cloudman, we have been directing your papers to Durham, Me. It is all right now.

☞ Persons had never ought to send a great amount of change in a letter, and never send copper. The postage is five times the amount of the copper you send. If you wish to send less than one dollar, it is the best way to send postage stamps

☞ If Bro. Robt. H. Perkins will inform us where he lives we will send him the books.

☞ Bro. S. F. Rogers, will you inform us how many more papers you want.

☞ The edition (3,000) of "The Grand Crisis in Human Affairs," is nearly exhausted; and as we intend to issue another edition soon, those who have sold out the work for us would oblige if they will forward the amount soon as convenient, that we may have the means of defraying the expense of the next issue in cash payment.—[Ed.

☞ The Lithographic Charts can be sent by mail for 10 cents, prepaid, anywhere within 300 miles. Price of the Charts, $3.00. "Bible vs. Tradition," can also be obtained of Bro. French.

☞ The book by J. Cummings explaining the Lithographic Chart may be had by applying to J. French, Lowell, Mass., or to J. Cummings, Concord, N. H. Price, fifty cents.

The Pilgrim Band.

BY E. L. HASTINGS.

Tune—Home of the blest.

We're pilgrims here, but we're journeying on—
We seek for a bright and heavenly home,
Where the woes and toils of life are o'er,
And sorrow and pain shall be felt no more;
Where the pilgrim band shall be at peace,
And grief and woe forever shall cease;
Where the Lord himself, with his own right hand,
Shall wipe the tears from the pilgrim band.

We're poor, down-trodden, and oppress'd,
But we're journeying on to a land of rest,
Where the pilgrim's sigh, and the captive's groan,
Shall yield to heavenly music's tone;
Where the bands of death and hell are riven
By the mighty conquering king of heaven,
And glorious immortality
The portion of the saints shall be.

We're looking for a glorious morn—
We're hoping soon to see it dawn;
Then heaven with shouts of praise shall ring
From sleeping saints who shall wake and sing,
Oh! then our toils and tears shall end,
When Christ the Lord from heaven descends;
Then he shall take his people home,
And the pilgrim band no more shall roam.

Exposition of Ez. Chap. 38 and 39.

It is conceded by many of the learned, that there is no part of the Old Testament so difficult to be understood as that of Ezekiel. His prophecies are very obscure, and we are informed by some that the Jews considered them inexplicable. But while we may regard them as difficult to be understood, we cannot, for a moment, regard them as unintelligible. If the prophecies of Ezekiel are a part of God's revealed purpose, they were given for the benefit of the church, and in order that the church may be benefited, they must understand them. That this idea is correct, is evident from Rom. 15: 4, "For whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning, that we, through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope." Again, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Not only has God promised to give understanding, but we are instructed how to obtain it. Says the wise man, "My son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee; so that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thy heart to understanding; yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding; if thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures; then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God."

But to the subject. Many have believed and still do believe, that this prophecy refers to the future, and that the most, if not all of it is to receive an accomplishment prior to the Second Advent of our Lord Jesus Christ; but this we believe to be inadmissible. There are others, however, who believe that it is to receive but a partial accomplishment before the coming of the Lord. But if it is a fact that we are living in the last days, and that the present generation are to witness the glorious Advent of the son of God, if we have seen the signs, or the beginning of them as referred to by our blessed Lord when he says, (Luke 21,) "when ye see these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh," if this is the case, then no such invasion of Gog, can be looked for before his coming. But, it may be asked, why not? I answer, because the events to be realized as brought to view in those chapters, if we may judge from the past developement of facts, would occupy a period of more than a century. But, says one, they might be fulfilled in a year or two, for Gog can come into the land of Palestine certainly within that time. That it is possible that these northern nations can invade Palestine within a year or two, should time continue, (which I have no idea will be the case) we have no doubt; but this is only one among the many circumstances which are to be fulfilled in this prophecy. When is Gog to come against the land? Ans.—When it is brought back from the sword, when the people of Israel dwell in their own land, when they have got cattle and goods, and when they (the Jews) dwell safely upon the mountains of Israel. Do they thus dwell safely at the present time? and if so, do they dwell upon the mountains of Israel? Have they got cattle and goods, &c., &c. Where is the man that will answer these questions in the affirmative?

But, says the objector, I think I understand it; it does not refer to the literal Jew, but to the spiritual seed, i. e., to the Gentile church. But do the spiritual seed, the children of Abraham, inherit the mountains of Palestine? Nay verily. The very land of Israel, the Mount Zion of the Old Testament, is, with the exception of a few scattered Jews, trodden under foot by the Turks, as it has been by the Gentiles ever since the overthrow of the Jewish polity in A. D. 70, and will continue to be trodden under foot until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, and this point by the way, has not yet been reached.

But, says another, now you perceive what a difficulty you and others are involved in by preaching that the Lord is coming so soon; but if you will step on to our position, all will be perfectly lucid and plain. Well, Brother, what is the position you occupy? Ans? We believe that the Lord will not come yet for some twelve, fifteen or twenty years; and hence we have ample time for the Jews to return to their own land, to gather cattle, goods, gold and silver; and in addition to this, the prospect is fair for its immediate accomplishment. We think, however, the idea of the Jews returning to their own land, and especially of their regaining such a state of prosperity as is brought to view by Ezekiel, and that in fifteen or twenty years, is altogether incredible. But it may be said that God is able to do this, and as he has promised he will certainly perform. We are not at all disposed to limit the Almighty, but this we do say, that the Lord will not do anything contrary to his economy. The question of God's promising to restore Israel (literal Israel) is clear, it is plain; but whether that restoration is in the future is still a question. To sustain the position that the Jews will at some future time return to their own native land, we are often referred to many of the Old Testament prophecies: e. g.—"They shall be gathered from among the nation whither I have driven them;" "they shall build the old waste places;" "they shall dwell in the land that I have given them;" "they shall be no more two nations;" "they shall dwell safely all of them," &c., &c. When is this gathering from the nations? and this dwelling safely to be realized? According to Ezekiel they are to dwell safely when Gog comes into the land of Israel; for it is said, "In that day when my people of Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it"? But this is not all; after Israel has got back to their own land, and have got cattle, and goods, gold and silver; yea while they are dwelling safely, having been gathered from the nations of earth; Gog and Magog invade Palestine, come upon the mountains of Israel, and the poor Jew is again defeated in his expectations, the land that was cleansed is again polluted, and he, poor creature, is carried into captivity. But, says the objector, the Jews are not to be carried into captivity, but Gog is simply to come into the land of Israel to be defeated. But inspiration talks very differently. Says the prophet (Ezek. 39: 23,) "And the heathen shall know that the house of Israel went into captivity." When did they go into captivity? Ans. (verse 26) at the time "when they dwelt safely in their land." When did they dwell safely in their land? Ans. (Chap. 38: 8, 14, 15,) When Gog came against the mountains of Israel. What is the result of Gog's coming into the land of Israel? Ans. The Jews are carried into captivity:—the prophet says, Chap. 39: 23–28:

"And the heathen shall know that the house of Israel went into captivity for their iniquity: because they trespassed against me, therefore hid I my face from them, and gave them into the hand of their enemies: so fell they all by the sword.

According to their uncleanness and according to their transgressions have I done unto them, and hid my face from them.

Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy upon the whole house of Israel, and will be jealous for my holy name;

After that they have borne their shame, and all their trespasses whereby they have trespassed against me, when they dwelt safely in their land, and none made them afraid.

When I have brought them again from the people, and gathered them out of their enemies' lands, and am sanctified in them in the sight of many nations;

Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen: but I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there."

Now, in endorsing the position that, before the Lord comes, (1) the Jews must return; (2) They must dwell in the land of Palestine sufficiently long to obtain cattle and goods, gold and silver, and to arrive (according to the general idea) to a state of glory and perfection almost, if not altogether unparalleled in their entire history, and that this is all to be realized prior to the second Advent of Jesus Christ, and then (3) after they have been gathered back to their own land, shall have acknowledged Christ as the true Messiah, their tears wiped away, their land cleansed, the holy mountain sanctified, and the cross instead of the mosque of Omar, reared upon Mount Moriah. After all this, to have Gog come into the land, strip it of its wealth, deface its beauty, desecrate its sanctuaries, murder its inhabitants and scatter fire-brands, arrows and death throughout the entire region, is absolutely incredible. We are led to believe that such a view is contrary to the teachings of God's word, inconsistent with the position that God requires His Church to occupy at this period of the world's history, untruthful in all of its main features, highly injurious to the spiritual growth of those who embrace it, and last, but not least, such are under the necessity of saying the coming of the Lord cannot be expected for many years.

It is the opinion of some that Russia is the Gog of Ezekiel, and that she is about to invade the land of Palestine. But suppose this to be true, it does not fulfil the prophecy; for as remarked above, neither the literal, nor the spiritual seed of Abraham possess that land at present, which by the way must be the case, when Gog is said to come into the land. Now as there is no probability of a restoration of the Jewish polity, judging from the word of God, and the present developement of events, and as the signs of the times, as exhibited in the moral, political and physical world indicate the near approach of Jesus Christ; we opine that the prophecies of Ezekiel have been fulfilled, and that there is no connection between Gog's coming into the land of Israel (Ezek. 38 and 39) and the events marked in the last part of the eleventh of Daniel; but that the former has been fulfilled, and the latter is in process of fulfilment; and with this view we believe that we can obtain a more perfect harmony than in any other way. With this fact before us, we wish to examine the leading features in these two chapters.

Chap. 38: v. 1–4:

"And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

Son of man, set thy face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, and prophesy against him,

And say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal:

And I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy jaws, and I will bring thee forth, and all thine army, horses and horsemen, all of them clothed with all sorts of armour, even a great company with bucklers and shields, all of them handling swords."

The term Gog occurs here as a proper name—that of a prince. He is said to be the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal.—The names of nations and countries are to a great extent to be traced to the immediate decendants of Noah. Josephus, in speaking of this fact, says, that "Japhet" (the son of Noah) "had seven sons.—They inhabited so, that beginning at the mountains Taurus" (in Asia) "and Amanus" (modern name Al Lucan) "they proceeded along Asia, as far as the river Tanais," (Don.) "and along Europe to Cadiz;" (a city of Spain in the province of Andalusia) "and settling themselves on the lands they lighted upon, which none had inhabited before they called the nations by their own names." "Magog founded those that from him were named Magogites, but who are by the Greeks called Scythians." The term Scythia was by the ancients, sometimes applied to the countries lying at the north of the Black and Caspian seas, and at other times to Mongolia and Tartary, hence the distinguishing appellation of European and Asiatic Scythia. [Enc. Amer.]

"Thobel," (Tubal,) says Josephus, "founded the Thobelites, which are now called Iberes," (i. e., Iberians). Iberia was situated in the Southern part of Georgia, a district of Asia, between the Black and Caspian Seas.

"Meshech," says Clark, "was the founder of the Cappadocians, from whom proceeded the Muscovites." Cappadocia is now a province of Turkey in Asia; its modern name is Caramania. Mitchell, in speaking of these nations, remarks:—"Gog and Magog were probably Scythian tribes. Gomer comprised some of the Celtic nations. Togarmah was a district not far from Mount Ararat; in the same region were the kingdoms of Ararat and Minni, as well as Meshech, Tubal and Kir," (p. 194). Again, the same writer remarks: "Gog and Magog, Gomer, Togarmah, and the north, are alluded to, by the Hebrew writers, as regions very remote, and inhabited by warlike nations, riding on horses and striking terror into the surrounding countries by their numbers and fierceness. They are described as eager to take a prey, to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil. * * * These descriptions have been thought to apply to some of the tribes of Central Asia; but the early inhabitants of the regions east and south of the Black Sea, who were always noted for the number of their horses, and their predatory habits, are believed to be the nations meant by the inspired writers," (pp. 193, 194).

Vs. 5–7. "Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya with them; all of them with shield and helmet:

Gomer, and all his bands; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands: and many people with thee.

Be thou prepared, and prepare for thyself, thou, and all thy company that are assembled unto thee, and be thou a guard unto them."

"Gomer and all his bands." Josephus says that "Gomer founded those whom the Greeks call Gallatians, (Galls,) but they were then called Gomerites."

"'The house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands." Calmet refers this to the "Cimmerians, and Turcomanians, with other northern nations."

According to the above facts, it seems to me that no person need mistake the subject in hand. According to Mitchell's ancient Atlas, these nations are located in Asia; Gog and Magog between the Black and Caspian Seas; Tubal, Togarmah and Meshech south of the Caucasian Mountains; and Gomer south and south-west of the Black Sea; all of which localities were north of Palestine.

Vs. 8. "After many days thou shalt be visited; in the latter years thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword, and is gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste; but it is brought forth out of the nations, and they shall dwell safely all of them."

When is Gog to come into the land?—Ans. "In the latter years," or, as in v. 16, "the latter days." From the phraseology, "latter days," many have supposed it to refer to the Gospel dispensation; but this by no means follows. "The phrase of the latter days," says Newton, "in the Old Testament, signifies any time that is yet to come, though sometimes it may relate to the times of the Messiah in particular, as it comprehends all future time in general; and hence it is used in prophecies that respect different times and periods. 'I will advertise thee,' (saith Balaam to Balak,' Num. 24: 14.) 'what this people shall do to thy people in the latter days;' but what the Israelites did to the Moabites, was done long before the times of the Messiah. 'I know' (saith Moses, Deut. 31: 29,) 'that after my death ye will utterly corrupt yourselves, and turn aside from the way which I have commanded you, and evil will befall you in the latter days;' where the latter days are much the same as the time after the death of Moses. 'There is a God in heaven,' (saith Dan. 2: 28,) 'that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the King Nebuchadnezzar, what shall be in the latter days;' but several particulars are there foretold of the four great Monarchies of the earth, which were fulfilled before the coming of the Messiah. And in like manner these prophecies of Jacob were, many or most of them, accomplished under the Mosaic economy, several ages before the birth of onr Saviour," (pp. 47, 48). It must appear evident, we think, to every mind that the phrase latter days does not necessarily refer to the Gospel dispensation. The connection in which the phrase occurs in the second chapter of Daniel (v. 28), evidently refers to all future time; for the events brought to view there, to take place in the latter days, are 1st, The overthrow of Babylon; 2d, The rise and fall of the Medo-Persian Empire; 3d, The rise of the Grecian Monarchy; 4th, Its subsequent divisions; and 5th, The subversion of them by the Romans; all of which are involved, although not all specified in the history of that developement, prior to the first Advent, the first of which took place about seventy years after the prediction, and the last, thirty years before the first Advent. Let us apply the same rule then to the prophecies of Ezekiel, so far as the phrase "latter days," or "years" is concerned; and there is no difficulty (if the other features of the prophecy are fully met) in respect to the prophecy having a fulfilment prior to the first Advent.

The prophecies of Ezekiel were given about sixteen years after the prophet Daniel interpreted the dream of Nebuchadnezzar, B. C. 587. Ezekiel was in captivity at this time in Babylon. He predicts an invasion of Gog, at a time when Israel is said to dwell safely, hence the prophet recognizes the fact that the Jews were to return. In this captivity of Israel, was fulfilled the prophecies of Moses (Lev. 26. Deut. 28.) Moses had said (Deut. 31: 29) "I know that after my death, ye will utterly corrupt yourselves, and turn aside from the way which I have commanded you; and evil will befall you in the latter days." The prophecies of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, inform us that the Jews did do evil, and that God brought upon them great and sore judgments. Moses had said (Deut. 28: 53, 54), "And thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and of thy daughters which the Lord thy God hath given thee, in the seige and in the straitness wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee;

So that the man that is tender among you, and very delicate, his eye shall be evil toward his brother, and toward the wife of his bosom, and toward the remnant of his children which he shall leave:" and the prophet Jeremiah informs us that it was fulfilled. He says, (Lam. 4: 10, 11,) "The hands of the pitiful women have sodden their own children: they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people.

The Lord hath accomplished his fury; he hath poured out his fierce anger, and hath kindled a fire in Zion, and it hath devoured the foundations thereof."

The prophet Daniel, when referring to the evil that had come upon the Jews, (Dan. 9,) says:

"Neither have we obeyed the voice of the Lord our God, to walk in his laws, which he set before us by his servants the prophets.

Yea, all Israel have transgressed thy law, even by departing, that they might not obey thy voice; therefore THE CURSE is poured upon us, and the oath that is written in the law of Moses the servant of God, because we have sinned against him.

And he hath confirmed his words, which he spake against us and against our judges that judged us, by bringing upon us a great evil; for under the whole heaven hath not been done as HATH been done upon Jerusalem.

As it is written in the law of Moses, ALL THIS EVIL IS COME UPON US; yet made we not our prayer before the Lord our God, that we might turn from our iniquities, and understand thy truth."

Have the Jews ever been gathered back to their own land? Ans.—They have.—On the accession of Cyrus to the Persian throne, he made a proclamation throughout all of his kingdom, granting to the Jews liberty to go to their own land. In Ezra, (chap. 1,) we read,

"Now in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled, the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying,

Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah.

Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel, (he is the God,) which is in Jerusalem."

Not only did the two tribes avail themselves of this privilege of returning to the land of their fathers, but as Josepheus informs us, many of the ten tribes, improved this opportunity of returning to their own land. [B, XI, chap. 5.] Prideaux informs us of the same thing, he says: That "Several also of the other tribes, took the benefit of this decree to return into their own land, for some of them, who were carried away by Tiglath-Pileser, Salmaneser, and Esarhaddon, still retained the true worship of God in a strange land, and did not go into the idolatrous usages and impieties of the heathen, among whom they were dispersed, but joined themselves to the Jews, when by a like captivity, they were brought into the same parts; and some, after all the Assyrian captivities, were left in the land. For we find some of them still there in the time of Josiah, and they suffered the Babylonish captivity, as well as the Jews, till at length they were wholly carried away, the last of them by Nebuzaradan, in the twenty third year of Nebuchadnezzar.—And many of them had long before left their tribes for their religion, and incorporating themselves with their brethren of Judah and Benjamin, dwelt in their cities, and there fell into the same captivity, under the Babylonians. And of all these a great number took the advantage of this decree again to return and dwell in their own cities; for both Cyrus's decree, as well as that of Artaxerxes extended to all the house of Israel. The decree of Artaxerxes is by name to all the people of Israel, and that of Cyrus is to all of the people of the God of Israel, that is, as appears by the text, to all those that worship God at Jerusalem, which must be understood of the people of Israel as well as of Judah; for that temple was built for both, and both had an equal right to worship God there. And therefore Ezra, when he returned, in the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, sent a copy of the king's decree, whereby that favor was granted him through all Media, where ten tribes were in captivity; as well as through all Chaldea and Assyria, where the Jews were in captivity, which plainly implies, that both of them were included in that decree, and that being a renewal of the decree of Cyrus, both must be understood of the same extent.

And we are told in Scripture, that after the captivity some of the children of Ephraim and Manasseh dwelt in Jerusalem, as well as those of Judah and Benjamin.—And it appears from several places in the New Testament, that some of all the tribes were in being among the Jews even to the time of their last dispersion on the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, though then all were comprehended under the name of Jews, which after the Babylonish captivity, became the general name of the whole nation, as that of Israelites was before," [Prid. v. 1, pp. 144, 145].—If it be objected, that, all of the ten tribes did not return, and hence, Israel did not; we reply, that, as God recognized those of the ten tribes which did return as Israel, it must suffice. For Zechariah, who was one of the prophets, and one who returned under the decree of Cyrus, and was in Jerusalem, B. C. 520, about sixteen years after the decree was given, [Ezra 5: 1,] prophesied to the Jews which were then in Judea, under the denomination of Judah and Israel; he says (chap. 8: 13, 15,), "And it shall come to pass, that as ye were a curse among the heathen, O HOUSE OF JUDAH, and HOUSE OF ISRAEL, so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing; fear not, but let your hands be strong.

Correspondence.

RICHMOND, Me. March 27, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—I have thought of writing for the Crisis several times, but have thought there were others who could write more to the edifiation of the cause, than I could, so I have hitherto kept back. I will say I am looking for the commencement of "the time of trouble," (Dan. 12: 1), for the second advent of Christ, the deliverence of his people, and the resurrection of the dead, to take place this year.

Everything around bespeaks to me, that the end of all things is at hand. The signs in the sun, moon and stars—"distress of nations with perplexity," "mens' hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth," "the sea and the waves roaring," the scoffer saying, "where is the promise of his coming?" the perils of these days, with which we are surrounded—the people, and even those professing to be God's watchmen crying, "peace and safety," the nations getting angry and preparing for war, all—all speak to me that we are rapidly approaching a fearful crisis. I do think that those who are looking for, and expecting the appearing of Jesus have good reason to look up and lift up their heads knowing that their redemption draweth nigh. The signs are nearly all in the past, and the next event we are to look for is the commencement of the great battle of Armageddon. Seeing we look for these things, let us be sober, and watch unto prayer.—We should be careful that every word we speak, and everything we do, is in accordance with the will of God, and according to the precepts he has left us on record for our instruction. We have not followed cunningly devised fables. The Lord is coming. Every man must soon hear his final doom. Sinner—Do you know that you are standing in imminent peril; do you know that the sealing angel is doing his last work of sealing the servants of God in their foreheads? O look to these things, examine for yourself—it is for your interest to prepare to meet the scene to which you are approaching. The four angels (Rev. 7: 1) who are holding the four winds are almost ready to let go their hold, and when they let go, the last servant of God is sealed. The winds are already striving to break loose, yet they are making their best efforts to hold on a little longer. It is for your sake, sinner, that they are holding on. It is that a few more souls may be saved from the burning day. Soon it will be said, "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still, he that is holy, let him be holy still," "and behold I come quickly." O Sinner, prepare to meet thy God.

Yours, believing "the year of Jubilee has come"

EDENBORO', Feb. 25th, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—I am satisfied that the "Midnight cry" is now being given, and I praise the good Lord for this glad news.—I have been so firm in the belief of definite time heretofore, and have been disappointed, that I had given up the definite time theory, but thank God he has endowed me with an ordinary capacity, and loving the appearing of Jesus, I cannot reject such incontrovertible testimony. O glory! My heart overflows with joy, my mouth is full of praises to God. Last Lord's day, I preached three times in this place on the time, they came many miles to hear, and the truth seemed to impress every heart with solemnity.

Your brother in hope of seeing the Lord Jesus this year.

☞The above is a sketch of Mitchell's Ancient Map, the design of which, is, to give a true idea of the location of the nations, brought to view in Ezek. 38 and 39. From the Black Sea where Gog is located, to the Caspian Sea where Mitchell has located Magog, there is a range of mountains called the Caucasus mountains. In these mountains are found living at the present time, the Circassians that Russia has been unable to subdue after a war of twenty years. On the west (TURKEY IN EUROPE) and south of the Black Sea (ASIA-MINOR) is Gomer. Togarmah and Meshech are situated in ARMENIA, a province of TURKEY in ASIA. Syria is located east of the Mediterranean Sea, and north of Jerusalem. North-east of Jerusalem may be seen Assyria, Media, Persia, &c.—None of this country (as presented on the map) north of Jerusalem, belongs to Russia, excepting Georgia, which lies between, or at the north of Meshech, and south of Magog, all the rest belongs to Turkey. These countries which are now held by Turkey (in Asia) formerly belonged to Selucus and his successors, kings of Syria.

Exposition of Ezk. chap. 38 and 39.

Continued.

" For thus saith the Lord of hosts; As I thought to punish you, when your fathers provoked me to wrath, saith the Lord of hosts, and I repented not: So again have I thought in these days to do well unto Jerusalem and to the house of Judah: fear ye not." Those whom the prophet calls (v. 13,) Israel and Judah, are in the eleventh verse called the residue, viz.: remnant, and if the Lord has been pleased to denominate the remnant (which did return) Judah and Israel, why should we demur. The same idea is to be found in Ezra 3, he says:—" And when the seventh month was come, and the CHILDREN of ISRAEL were IN THE CITIES, the people gathered themselves together as one man to Jerusalem." Here then we have a restoration of the Jews to their own land, which commenced about fifty years after Ezekiel uttered this prophecy. Many of the Jews returned subsequently, at various times.

But again. The power brought to view which is to invade the land or mountains of Israel, is said to " come from the north parts." The phrase "north parts," "north quarters," " north country," " Families of the north," " king or kings of the north," refers invariably to the nations and countries laying north of the land of Palestine. Or, as Mr Mitchell says, the countries laying SOUTH, and east of the Black Sea.—When Jeremiah is speaking of the nations which were to desolate Jerusalem, he remarks:—(Chap. 1: 14, 15,) " Out of the North an evil shall break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land. For lo, I will call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the Lord; and they shall come, and they shall set every one his throne at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof round about, and against all the cities of Judah." The families of the north are none other than the nations of the Chaldeans, Babylonians, Persians, &c., which were under the administration of Nebuchadnezzar. The same idea is brought to view in Chap. 25: 9, " Behold, I will send and take all the families of the north, saith the Lord, and Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will bring them against this land, and against the inhabitants thereof, and against all these nations round about, and will utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and an hissing, and perpetual desolations." The dominion of Nebuchadnezzar at this time extended over those countries laying at the north of Palestine, and subsequently it extended to Lybia. Rotteck, in speaking of Nebuchadnezzar, says:—" Jerusalem and Tyre fell before him; he caused his banners to wave in Iberia, Arabia, Egypt, and Lybia," (v. 1, p. 84.) Many more passages might be cited but we pass to the Medes and Persians, which are also denominated kings of the north. Jeremiah, in speaking of the overthrow of the city of Babylon (Chap. 50: 1–3,) by the Medes and Persians, says,—" The word that the Lord spake against Babylon and against the land of the Chaldeans by Jeremiah the prophet. Declare ye among the nations, and publish, and set up a standard; publish, and conceal not: say, Babylon is taken, Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces; her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces. For out of the north there cometh up a nation against her, which shall make her land desolate, and none shall dwell therein: they shall remove, they shall depart, both man and beast."

At the time when Babylon was beseiged by Cyrus, the Persians were in possession of these northern countries, for their dominion extended from the " Ægean sea (Archipelago) to the Euphrates," (Prid. v. 1, p. 136.) In the declaration of Jeremieh (Chap. 51: 27,) when referring to the seige of Babylon these northern nations are again brought to view. He says, —" Call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat Minni and Ashchenaz," (provinces of Armenia.) In these quotations we have specifically pointed out three of the principal kingdoms, from which were to issue the armies destined for the conquest of Babylon, viz: Media, Elam or Persia, and Armenia; and from history we learn that the troops from those countries, embodied in the army of Cyrus, constituted the main body of the invading forces.

Again. On the dismemberment of Alexanders Empire, about three hundred years before Christ, these northern countries fell to Selencus, whose dominion extended " from the Euphrates to the Indus (a River of Asia), 'and Oxus' (modern name Gihon) 'and in a brilliant expedition against the Indian king, Sandracotus,' he 'carried his arms as far as the Ganges." At the battle of Ipsus he extended it as far as the Mediterranean.

At the time of his death, his kingdom embraced Macedonia, Thrace, Asia Minor, Syria, Cappadocia, Armenia, Mesopotamia, Assyria, Susiana, Media, Persia, and all the country clear to the Caucassus Mountains. These countries were bequeathed to his successors, under the denomination of the kingdom of Syria, or kingdom of Asia, the metropolis of which was Antioch.

This very kingdom is the one refered to by Daniel, (chap. 11,) under the title of the king of the north. The phrase "king of the north," occurs in verses 6, 7, 11, 13, and 15, six times, and in every case refers to the kingdom of Syria, which embraced the countries between Palestine and the Black Sea, as far as the Caucassus mountains. There are many more places in the Old Testament, that might be refered to, showing, that the phrase " north," as connected with kingdom or people, (more than twenty instances) has reference to the people and countries south and east of the Black Sea, and in not one passage or instance in the Old Testament, where the phrase occurs, (unless Dan. 11: 40, and Ezek. 38: 15, are exceptions) can it be made to refer to Russia? And as the phrase " king of the north," is used six times in the fore part of the eleventh chap. of Daniel, by the angel, and every instance reference is had to Syria, and the countries laying north of Palestine, and south and south east of the Black sea, that this is sufficient of itself (without going to the Hyperborean regions of eternal frost, to find the king of the north) to determine us in relation to the prophecy. If we act on the principle of comparing scripture with scripture, and in more than twenty instances where the phrase " north," as applying to people or kingdoms, as,—Assyria, Chaldea, Media, Armenia, Asia Minor, and Syria,—the countries laying south of the Black and Caspean seas, and all north of Palestine, are refered to, can we, I ask, if the scriptures are to be their own exposetor, refer this phrase " king of the north," to Russia? There would be some show of truth in the position, if Russia possessed the countries south of the Black sea; but as it is, there is not, to our mind, the least shadow of truth in the theory of Russia's occupying this position. Asia Minor, Armenia, Syria, Kourdistan, (Assyria) &c. is at present occupied by Turkey. Russia, to be sure possesses Georgia, but this is but an item compared with the vast dominions of Turkey and Persia, countries laying south of the Black and Caspean seas. But we return to the subject. Verses 10–12. " Thus saith the Lord God; It shall also come to pass, that at the same time shall things come into thy mind, and thou shalt think an evil thought. And thou shalt say, I will go up to the land of unwalled villages; I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates. To take a spoil, and to take a prey; to turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land."

The object of Gog's coming into the land of Israel is, to " take a spoil, and to take a prey." It is impossible for us to have a more perfect fulfillment of this prophecy, than that which occured under the Syrian kings, and especially under Antiochus. Let every one divest him or herself of prejudice, and look at he facts connected with this fulfillment. And,—

1st. The prophet declares that the invasion of Gog, is to occur in the latter days, this we have shown referes to any future time. And—

2d. Prior to this invasion, the Jews were to return to their own land; this is implied in the language of the prophet;—" Thou shalt come up against my people of Israel, as a cloud to cover the land;" this we have shown by scripture and history, did take place, and although all of the ten tribes did not return, yet, those who did return, God recognized as Israel, and Judah.

3d. That the term " north quarters," &c., refers to the countries laying north of Palestine.

4th. That Meshech, Magog, Tubal, Togarmah, &c., were the nations inhabiting the countries SOUTH and EAST of the Black Sea. And,

5th. That as Russia does not, nor never has possessed these countries, she is not so much as hinted at in the prophecy of Ezekiel.

If we look to the history of Antiochus, it seems to me we have a perfect fulfillment. For,

1st. He, in the sense of the prophecy, reigned in the last days, something over four hundred years after Ezekiel prophesied.

2d. The Jews, at the time he reigned, dwelt in their own land,—Palestine.

3d. He reigned over the countries laying north of Palestine.

4th. His dominion extended to the Black and Caspian Seas, over the very countries denominated in the prophesy, Meshech, Magog, Tubal, Togarmah, &c.

5th. Hd did invade the land of Israel.

6th. The great object he had in view in going to Judea was, as the prophet declares, to take a spoil, and to take a prey. In relation to this, the historian remarks: " And after that Antiochus had smitten Egypt, he returned again in the hundred forty and third year, and went up against Israel and Jerusalem with a great multitude, and entered proudly into the sanctuary, and took away the golden altar, and the candlestick of light, and all the vessels thereof. And the table of the shew bread, and the pouring vessels, and the vials, and the cencers of gold, and the vail, and the crowns, and the golden ornaments that were before the temple, all which he pulled off, he took also the silver and the gold, and the precious vessels; also he took the hidden treasures which he found. And when he had taken all away, he went into his own land, having made a great massacre, and spoken very proudly, therefore there was a great mourning in Israel, in every place where they were." (1 B. Mac. C. 2.)

Prideaux, in speaking of this, says:—that he took from the temple the " value of one thousand eight hundred talents of gold, and made the like plunder in the city, he returned to Antioch, carrying thither with him the spoils of Judea as well as of Egypt; which, both together, amounted to an emense treasure of riches. (2 v. p. 115.)

Again. We read,—And after two years fully expired, he sent his chief collector of tribute into the cities of Judah, who came unto Jerusalem with a great multitude; and spake peaceable words unto them, but all was deceit, for when they had given him credence, he fell suddenly upon the city, and smote it very sore, and destroyed much people of Israel. And when he had taken the spoils of the city, he set it on fire, and pulled down the houses and walls on every side. But the women and children took they captive, and possessed the cattle. (1 Mac. 1). How applicable the inquiry, " Art thou come to take a spoil? hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?"

7th. The prophet speaks of his coming against the " mountains of Israel;" and when Josephus refers to this invasion of Judea, he says,—" So this Antiochus got together fifty thousand footmen, and five thousand horsemen, and four score elephants, and marched through Judea into the MOUNTAINOUS PARTS.

8th. " Sheba," " Dedan," " and the Merchants of Tarshish," are represented as " bargaining for the spoils of the Jews." Agreable to this we read that Lysias, governor under Antiochus, sent three of his generals with " forty thousand footmen, and seven thousand horsemen to go to the land of Judea." " And the merchants of the country hearing the fame of them, took silver and gold very much, with servants, and came into the Camp to buy the children of Israel for slaves. (Mac. C. 8.)

9th. The army which is represented as invading the land of Israel, according to the prophesy, was to be made up of various nations. Hence we read that, " Apollonius gathered the Gentiles together, and a great host out of Samaria, to fight against Israel." And again, " Then forthwith choosing Nicanor, the son of Patroclus, one of his special friends, he sent him with no fewer than twenty thousand of ALL NATIONS under him, to root out the whole generation of the Jews." (2 Mac.)

10th. "Clothed with all sorts of armour." The historian, when speaking of the army under Nicanor, says:—" Maccabeus seeing the coming of the multitude, and the DIVERS PREPERATIONS OF ARMOUR."

11th. The Jews, at the time that Gog comes into the land of Israel, are to dwell in " unwalled villages," (towns). Mark, it is not said that Jerusalem is not to have a wall, but there shall be unwalled villages. This was the condition of the most of those cities in which the Jews dwelt after the Babylonish captivity, as we learn from Est. 9: 19, " Therefore the Jews of the villages, that dwelt in the unwalled towns, made the fourteenth day of the month Adar a day of gladness and feasting, and a good day, and of sending portions one to another." Vs. 17, 18, " Thus saith the Lord God; Art thou he of whom I have spoken in old time by my servants the prophets of Israel, which prophesied in those days many years, that I would bring thee against them? And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face." This power is spoken of in Isa., Chap. 10, 11, 14 and 19, under the denomination of the Assyrian. V. 19, " For in my jealousy and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken, Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel." The term " shaking," is evidently the same as in Isaiah 30: 32,—" And in every place where the grounded staff shall pass, which the Lord shall lay upon him, it shall be with tabrets and harps: and in BATTLES of SHAKING will he fight with it." V. 20, " So that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at my presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground."

In the above passage there are some expressions which demand our attention.

1st. The earth is said to shake. This does not necessarily mean the whole earth. The phrase earth sometimes is used for a part, as in Samuel (Chap. 4: 5,) " All Israel shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again." Again. In Isaiah (Chap. 10: 14,) the Assyrian power is represented as saying, " I have gathered all the earth: and there was none that moved the wing, or opened the mouth, or peeped." Again. In Luke (Chap. 23: 44,) we read that " there was darkness over all the earth, until the ninth hour." There are other instances in which the term occurs, where, instead of the whole, only a part of the earth is referred to.—The Evangelist Luke, in saying that darkness was over all the earth, evidently referred to the country connected with Judea.

2d. The Lord is represented as being present at the time of this shaking, for it is said, " shall shake at my presence."—Precisely the same idea is presented in Isaiah (Chap. 19: 1,) when speaking of the overthrow of the government of Egypt. He says:—" The burden of Egypt. Behold, the Lord rideth upon a swift cloud, and shall come into Egypt: and the idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence, and the heart of Egypt shall melt in the midst of it. Vs. 21–23, " And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God: every man's sword shall be against his brother. And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone. Thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am the Lord." The three last verses of chapter 38, are evidently synonimous with Chap. 39: 3–6, where is brought to view the overthrow of this mighty power. The language here is strong and explicit, but no more so than in many places in the Bible. From the expressions " hailstones, fire and brimstone," many have supposed the prophesy to refer to the end of the world, but it seems to me that we have phraseology as strong, if not stronger than the above, applying to the judgments which came upon Jerusalem. For example, we read in Micah, (Chap. 1: 1–5,) " The word of the Lord that came to Micah the Morasthite in the days of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, which he saw concerning Samaria and Jerusalem. Hear, all ye people; hearken, O earth, and all that therein is: and let the Lord God be witness against you, the Lord from his holy temple. For behold, the Lord cometh forth out of his place, and will come down, and tread upon the high place of the earth. And the mountains shall be molten under him, and the valleys shall be cleft, as wax before the fire, and as the waters that are poured down a steep place. For the transgression of Jacob is all this, and for the sins of the house of Israel."

In the above scripture, the phrases, " the Lord cometh forth out of his place," " mountains molten," and " valleys shall be cleft, as wax before the fire," are equally as strong as those in Ezekiel.—Again. In Isaiah 30. 27–33, we have (as we believe) a description of the overthrow of Gog under the name of " the Assyrian," he says:—" Behold, the name of the Lord cometh from far, burning with his anger, and the burden thereof is heavy: his lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire: And his breath, as an overflowing stream, shall reach to the midst of the neck, to sift the nations with the sieve of vanity: and there shall be a bridle in the jaws of the people, [I will put hooks into his (Gog's) jaws] causing them to err. Ye shall have a song, as in the night when a holy solemnity is kept; and gladness of heart, as when one goeth with a pipe to come into the mountain of the Lord, to the Mighty One of Israel. And the Lord shall cause his glorious voice to be heard, and shall shew the lighting down of his arm, with the indignation of his anger, and with the flame of a devouring fire, with scattering, and tempest, and hail-stones. For through the voice of the Lord shall the Assyrian be beaten down [full upon the mountains of Israel] which smote with a rod. And in every place where the grounded staff shall pass, which the Lord shall lay upon him, it shall be with tabrets and harps: and in battles of shaking will he fight with it.—For Tophet is ordained of old; yea, for the king it is prepared; he hath made it deep and large: the pile thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the Lord, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it."

Tophet (Valley of Hinnom) was south-east of Jerusalem. Some have supposed, from the description here given of Tophet, &c., that it related to the overthrow of the Assyrian army under Senacherib. But we are more inclined to the opinion that the Valley of Tophet, or Hinnom, is the same as the Valley of Hamon-gog (Ezekiel 39: 11,) where Gog and all his army were to be burried. Again. In Isaiah (Chap. 14: 24, 25,) we read,—" The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand: That I will break the Assyrian in my land, and upon my mountains tread him under foot: [Thou (Gog) shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel. Ezek. 39: 4,] then shall his yoke depart from off them, and his burden depart from off their shoulders."

But as most may agree that the passages above cited, refer to, and synchronize with the overthrow of Gog, we pass to consider whether this part of the prophesy has been fulfilled—whether this power has thus fallen upon the mountains of Israel. We have already referred this prophesy to the Syrian kings, and especially to Antiochus, and his successor, in their wars against the Jews. We believe that no prophesy has been more perfectly fulfilled. In no part of the history of the Church from the time of Joshua, did the Almighty manifest more direct interposition than in the wars waged against the Syrians by the Maccabees.—And if we believe that God was with Gideon, Barak, Sampson, Jephthae, David, &c., when they, by comparatively a handfull of men, defeated the hosts that came against Israel, likewise similar facts, circumstances, and exploits of the Jews at the point of time referred to above, lead us to believe that this was the hand of God.

Prideaux, in speaking of the death of Mattathias (v. 2, p. 125,) and the succession of Judas, remarks, "But this loss was sufficiently compensated by the succession of Judas Maccabaeus, his son, in the same station. For, as soon as his father's funeral was over, he stood up in his stead; and, according as appointed by him, took on him the chief command of those forces which he had with him at his death; and his brothers, and all others that were zealous for the law, resorted to him, till they had made up the number of an army; whereon he erected his standard, and led them forth under it to fight the battles of Israel against their common enemies, the heathens that oppressed them. His motto, in that standard being this Hebrew sentence, taken out of Exodus 15: 11, Mi kamo-ka Baclim Jehovah, i. e. 'Who is like unto thee among the gods, O Jehovah?'" The first conflict of any note was between Apollonius and the army of Judas. Prideaux in speaking of this says: "Whereon Apollonius, who was governor for Antiochus in Samaria, thinking to put a stop to his future progress, got an army together, and marched against him. But Judas, having vanquished and slain him in battle, made a great slaughter of his forces, and took their spoils; among which finding the sword of Apollonius, he took it to his own use, and fought with it all his life after." (Ib. p. 128.) "Seron, the deputy-governor of Cœlesyria, advanced to revenge the defeat of Apollonius, but encountering the enemy in the strong pass of Bethhoson, met with the same fate," (Mil. His. of Jews, v. 2, p. 43,) eight hundred of his army being slain. (1 Mac.) "When Antiochus heard of these two defeats, he was moved with great fury and indignation, and therefore in his rage, forthwith sent and gathered together all his forces, even a very great army;" but fearing that he should not be able to defray the expenses of the war, divided his forces; he with a part of them went to Armenia, and Persia, while the remainder were sent under two or three of his generals into Judea. "The vanguard of the Syrian army, amounting to twenty thousand, under the command of Nicanor and Georgias, advanced rapidly into the province: it was followed by the general-in-chief, Ptolemy Macron; their united forces forming an army of forty thousand foot and seven thousand horse." Judas then assembled six thousand men, and after they had fasted and prayed, which was the custom in the days of the Judges, he, in strict conformity to the law of Moses, "issued out through his little army the appointed proclamation, that all who had married wives, built houses, or planted vineyards, or were fearful, should return to their homes." His force dwindled to three thousand men, while that of his enemies amounted to forty-seven thousand. Yet with this small band Judas advanced towards Emmaus, where the enemy lay encamped. "Intelligence reached him that Georgias has been detached with five thousand foot, and one thousand horse, to surprise him by night. He instantly formed the daring resolution of eluding the attack, by falling on the Camp of the enemy. It was morning before he arrived; but, animating his men for the attack, he rushed down upon the Syrians, who, after a feeble resistance, fled an all sides. Judas was as wary as bold, his troops as well disciplined as enterprising. He restrained them from the plunder of the Camp, till the return of Georgias with the flower of the army, who came back weary with seeking the Jewish insurgents among the mountains, where they had hoped to surprise them. To their own astonishment they beheld their own Camp in a blaze of fire. The contest was short, but decisive; the Syrians were defeated, with immense loss;" (Mil. His. of Jews v. 2, p. 44,) there being about three thousand men slain, and the immense booty of the Camp fell into the hands of the Jews. (1 Mac.) Says the prophet, (Ezek. 39: 10,) "they shall spoil those that spoiled them, and rob those that robbed them, saith the Lord God." How perfectly was this fulfilled. Again. Judas "hearing that a great force was gathering beyond the Jordan under Timotheus and Baccidas, he crossed the river, and gained a great victory and a considerable supply of arms. Here two of the chief oppressors of the Jews, Philarches and Callisthenes, perished; one in battle, the other burnt to death in a house, where he had taken refuge."—"The next year Lysius appeared in person, at the head of sixty thousand foot and five thousand horse, on the southern frontier of Judea, having perhaps levied part of his men among the Idumeans. This tribe now inhabited a district to the west of their ancestors, the Edomites, having been dispossessed of their former territory by the Nabathean Arabs. Judas met this formidable host with ten thousand men; gained a decisive victory, and slew five thousand of the enemy. Thus on all sides triumphant, Judas entered, the ruined and desolate Jerusalem." (His. of Jews, v. 2, p. 45.)

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, APRIL 19, 1854.

The Cause and its Progress.

As time is passing, the faith of true Adventists is growing more and more confirmed in the nearness of the coming of Jesus Christ. The cause of truth is acquiring strength every day, scores are falling into the ranks of Zion, and embracing the truth with all the soul. Many are being converted to God in various parts of the country, and our brethren are indefatigable in spreading the light, and in sounding the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."

The word of the Lord points out this to be the year of the redeemed, when Zion shall be made to rejoice with exceeding joy. Every day the light grows brighter; the sure word of prophecy is unfolding itself in a wonderful manner; and as the signs, which indicate the coming of our Lord to be near, are thickening on either hand, the heart of the weary pilgrim is made to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Every effort which has been put forth to stop the car of Salvation has served to give it an accelerating motion. And every person who has grasped the pen saying, "I will put it down," has either darkened counsel with words without knowledge, and hence left the matter worse than when he commenced, or, he has written in a hard censorious spirit, and by doing this, he has extorted the confession from those who did not believe, and they have said:—"whether it be true that Christ is coming or not, we know these men are not right,"—and thus all this effort has been lost upon those who really desire the truth. The fact is "God lives." "It is not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit saith the Lord of hosts." "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy." The ways of God are wonderful indeed, and however much men may oppose, his purpose must and will be developed. For,—

His purposes will ripen fast,
  Unfolding every hour;
The bud may have a bitter taste,
  But sweet will be the flower.

Blind unbelief is sure to err,
  And scan his work in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
  And he will make it plain.

The truth of the matter is, God will have the glory. If the instrument He has chosen to perform any part of the great plan does not suffice, he lays it aside, and selects one that will. When men get so great in their own estimation, and so wise in their own conceit, as to feel that they are the bone and muscle of the cause in which they are engaged, and that if they should die, the work in which they are engaged must stop; God shows, by setting them aside, and selecting others in their place, that he is not beholden to them in the least. There have been many just such characters in the Christian Church. Men of no ordinary talent, men, who have done a great amount of good, but forgetting that it was God that worked in them both to will and to do of his own good pleasure, they have at length fallen to rise no more.

The Jewish nation were highly favored for many centuries. God had revealed himself to them in a wonderful manner, but He at length rejected them; not however, until they had departed from the commandment that was delivered to them. God purposes to save men by the foolishness of preaching. He "hath chosen the foolish things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are; that no flesh should glory in his presence." He has put "this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." Hence if we, as the apostle says, "have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God," he may honor us with some humble calling, and by a faithful discharge on our part of the obligation resting upon us, we shall at last be raised to participate in the glory at His right hand. X.

The Time, Times, and a Part.

The angel, in revealing the visions to Daniel, makes an effort to reveal time;—and that effort is fruitless unless time is revealed, and that time must be understood in order to be effectual. There are certain periods given reaching from a given point, to the accomplishment of certain "wonders;" and if we can ascertain what those wonders are, and when those periods commenced, we can arrive at correct conclusions respecting the fulfilment of the wonders;—and if we cannot settle those points, these periods might as well not have been given.

The first question in the xii of Daniel, relative to time, is, "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders;—viz., every thing that had been previously brought to view—the rise and reign of antichrist,—the standing up of Michael,—the deliverence of God's people, and the resurrection of the dead. Mark the answer. "And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river. When he held up his right hand and his left unto heaven, and swear by him that liveth forever and ever, that it shall be for a time, times, and a part (Marg)." But this is not all. We must not consider the answer complete.—"It shall be for a time, times, and a part, and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished." Now we see that in the first place, there is a period called a time, times, and a part, and after that has expired, a certain work is to be accomplished called the scattering the power of the holy people. Who are the holy people? Of course they are the Church. Then the power of the Church was to be scattered after the time, times, and a part expired. Hence we see that this period cannot reach down to the judgment as some suppose.

The question now arises, how long is the period called a time, times, and a part. We get light on that point in the preceding verses. "And I heard, but understood not." Daniel doubtless listened with the most intense interest to this answer; but it was clothed in mystery too deep for his comprehension. But unwilling to let this propitious moment pass without getting the true time, he anxiously exclaimed, "O my Lord what shall be the end of these things." The angel intimates that the matter is not for him to understand: and says—"Go thy way, Daniel, for the words are closed up and SEALED until the time of the end." Then he declares that the wicked shall not undersand, but the wise (those that have spiritual wisdom) shall understand, (i. e., in due time). Then, to partially explain the former mystical expression, and give a date or point from which to start in the calculation, He says, "From the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate, set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." This period very clearly is the same as the time, times, and a part, and commences at the same point. This is understood by all to mean 1290 years.

But when he mentioned the other period viz., time, times, and a part, he also gives an indefinite space for the scattering of the power of the holy people;—and in this last expression, he says, "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thirteen hundred five and thirty days." These periods it is very plain, commence at the same time, but the last is 45 years the longest. This 45 years is doubtless the time that is allotted to the scattering of the power of the holy people.

Hence, we see that the time is given twice, once in a deeply mystical manner without any starting point, to one that was by the side of the river, and once to Daniel himself, in a more intelligible manner, having a noted event in the history of the church as a starting point.

According to our position, this starting point was 519, the termination of the period time, times and a part, was the taking away of the civil power of the pope by Napoleon, which took place just 1290 years from that date. Then the times and laws were taken out of the hand of the little Horn power.

Since that time, the greatest efforts have been made to scatter the gospel to the ends of the earth. 45 years are allotted to this scattering of the power of the Church, and then the thirteen hundred five and thirty years will close. These years are on the verge of expiration. They end this year. Prepare to meet thy God.

W. H. P.

For the World's Crisis.

"The wise shall understand." Here we find a declaration that no one can deny;—for it is the word of Jehovah, and that word cannot fail. But the question arises, what is it that the wise will understand? Daniel had heard the question; "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" and the answer came from the one which stood upon the waters, clothed in linen, after he had held up his right hand, and his left hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth forever, that it should be for a time, times, and an half; or part (Margin). "I heard," says Daniel, "but I understood not: then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?—And he said, Go thy way, Daniel: for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end. Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand: but the wise shall understand." Then we see that it was relative to time, that the Lord informed Daniel, that the wise shonld understand; yea, definite time. There are many of our good and faithful brethren that overlook this great subject of definite time I fear; for while we present the subject before them, they have no confidence in it; yet when asked about their faith in the coming of the Lord they reply, "My faith was never stronger in the coming of the Lord, and that He is nigh even at the door, than at the present." This is no faith in the time of the Lord's coming, unless you make faith and knowledge one and the same thing; for Christ says, "Know that it is nigh." Here is knowledge at sight, but faith is believing something we do not see. O my Brethren, I fear that there is danger here. Many that have no confidence in definite time, but believe in "the nigh even at the door theory," I fear have not "held fast the beginning of their confidence," but have engaged too much in the perplexing cares of this life, and do not regard the admonition of the Saviour as much as they ought, where he says,—"Search the Scriptures," which Paul says, "are able to make us wise unto salvation." Peter also says, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy, wherunto ye do well that ye take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place. Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scriptures is of any private interpretation." And again remarks Paul, in writing to his brethren, "Whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning; that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." As it is definite time that the wise are to understand, we wish to enquire, who are the wise? They are not the wise of this world, or those that are wise in their own conceits. But they are those who feel their ignorance, and apply to the Father, the great Giver of Wisdom, who will give to all that ask in faith liberally, and upbraid none? These are the characters that will understand. Now we wish to say a little upon this subject which the wise are to understand; and we pray for the Holy Ghost to aid and direct, that we may get the truth, and be sanctified (ourselves) by it, and by communicating it to others, be giving meat in due season, that God may be glorified here, and we be saved in the day when He shall make up His Jewels. Paul says, "all scripture given by inspiration of God, is profitable for doctrine" &c. Now in order to have them (the scriptures) profitable, must they not be understood? Certainly they must. For the Lord hath declared that he "doeth nothing, but he revealeth his secret to his servants the prophets:" says the Psalmist (Ps. 25. 14.) "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him;" and in the other passage we just quoted, Amos 3; 7, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." We look at the character of God, and we see that in all past ages he has revealed his plan to his servants; and says the Apostle Paul: "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him, also freely give us all things." Thank God, we have every thing to encourage us in our work of studying the Scriptures of truth, and we may come to a right conclusion. Therefore we will briefly examine some of the evidence. We might take up the subject, and go through with an examination of the vision, and present History to prove the truthfulness of our conclusion: but we say, "To the Law and to the testimony." In the commencement of our article, we remarked that Daniel did not understand the time, times, and a half, therefore he enquired more definitely concerning this matter.—He then receives this answer. "From the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days"—(Prophetic time.) But what is prophetic time? Ans. A day for a year. Proof.—Num. 14: 34, Ezek. 4: 6, therefore it is 1290 years.—This then gives us the time during which the saints were to be in the hands of this desolating power." The Saviour referring to it says." (Matt. 24: 15,) "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, whoso readeth let him understand." Again, speaking of the days (1290,) He says:—"They shall be shortened, for except those days be shortened, there should no flesh be saved." The Revelator declares, that 1260 days (years,) is the space of time for this power to destroy the saints; and Christ declares, that immediately after those days shall the sun be darkened: therefore, this abomination must be set up 1260 years before May 19, 1780, for then the sun was darkened.

From 519 A. D., to 1780, is 1260 years. We do not count the year 519, because it is from that year, therefore, it includes the year 1779, to make up the whole number. Now what is the conclusion drawn from the above arrangement? It is this; 1290 years was the time that was first specified, during which the saints were to be in the hand of this desolating power. 2nd These days were shortened to 1260, and that period ended as soon as May 17th, 1780. Now if the 1260 ended in 1779, (as some affirm) the 1335 which bring the resurrection, must end 75 years subsequent to 1779, which bring us to 1854.

But I will put it the farthest that it can be placed. No one can reasonably doubt that the tribulation ended May 19, 1780, then as soon as that date, the 1260 years ended; 75 more,—the difference between 1260 and 1335—end as soon as May 19, 1855.—This is as far as we can go and take the Bible for our guide. Here then is the conclusion. Between this, and May 19, 1855, we believe the Lord will make his second appearance among the children of men; and this we regard, "Bible time," glory to God. The 1335 days are written for our learning, which bring us to the end of the world, when Christ will "reward every man as his work shall be;" yet how few there are who regard them, and are willing to believe the word of God.

When the Son of man cometh will he find faith on the earth. O how few will be ready. Brother, gird on the armour, and stand at your post like a faithful sentinel, ready to give the alarm to all around.—Sinners, what must I say to you? The Cry is heard sounding through the land, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." The virgins are trimming their lamps, and soon Jesus will come, and what will become of you? How will you stand in that trying hour? I warn you to flee to Christ now while it is mercy's hour. Seek Salvation now, lest by delaying you lose your all and have to wail at last when the "harvest is past, and the Summer ended, and you not saved;" my whole being cries out to you, "Escape for thy life" for God will destroy the place.

May the Lord guide both reader and writer into a patient waiting for Christ at the ending of the days, Amen.

The Traditional Policy of Russia—The will of Peter the Great.—At the present moment, when events are developing the Policy of aggrandizement which Russia is pursuing, it may be interesting to reprint the following document, which was published in 1818 by the French newspaper La Presse as an authentic copy of the Political Will of Peter the Great. Whether genuine or not, it cannot be denied, in view of recent disclosures, that it is a pretty accurate programme of the career on which Russia has entered:

THE TESTAMENT OF PETER THE GREAT OF RUSSIA.

In the name of the Holy and invisible Trinity, we, Peter the First, to all our descendants and successors to the throne and Government of the Russian nation:

Having by the great God of whom we received our existence, been also endowed with the gift of prescience, we view the Russians as called, in the course of future event, to the general dominion of Europe.

This opinion is founded on the fact, that the other European nations have reached a state of old age next to caducity, toward which they are journeying with giant strides; hence, it follows, that they should easily and undoubtedly be conquered by a people young and new, when it shall have acquired its strength and vigor. We view the invasion of the East and West countries by the North as a periodical movement, decreed among the arcana of that Providence that regenerated the Roman people through the invasion of the barbarians.

The emigration of the polar men are like the flood of the Nile, which comes at certain periods to fertilize the exhausted lands of Egypt. We found Russia a rivulet, and leave it converted into a river, and my successor will find it a sea, destined to fertilize impoverished Europe, and its waves will break down all opposing dykes, if my descendants have but the wisdom to direct the current.

To this end I leave the following instructions, which are recommended to their attention and constant observance:

1 To have the Russian constantly at war, that the soldiery may be always disciplined and always ready for action. Allow the nation no rest, but for the replenishing of the treasury, organizing the armies, and choosing the opportune moment for attack; making in this manner, peace serve war, and war serve peace, in the interests, aggrandizement and prosperity of Russia.

2 To attract, by all possible means, the most efficient and celebrated military officers in Europe during war, and the highly educated, scientific men of all countries, in time of peace, that the Russians may enjoy the advantages of other countries without loosing their own identity.

3 To take part, on all occasions, in the disputes and contentions among the States of Europe, especially those of Germany; in which, as the nearest, we are the most directly interested.

4 To subdue Poland; foment there continual rivalries and disturbances; gain their nobles by bribery; influence their diets, and, by intrigue, take action in the election of their kings: form partisan cliques, and for their protection send them Muscovite troops, to remain in the country until the moment of complete occupation. If the neighboring powers make opposition, quiet them at once by dismembering the country; and giving to each a part.

5. To take what we can from Sweden, and make any attack by her a pretence for subjugation. For this, separate her from Denmark, and likewise Denmark from Sweden, and foment with care, all animosities and rivalries between them.

6. To select wives for the Russian princes among the princesses of Germany, for the multiplying of family alliances conciliate interests, and by them will unite Germany to our cause, and increase our influence in that country.

7. To attend assiduously to forming an alliance with England for our commerce the assistance of that power we most need for the purpose of building up a maritime force, and she will be of the greatest service in supplying us with her gold in exchange for our lumber and other productions. Continual intercourse with her merchants and sailors, will accustom ours to navigation and commerce.

8. Extend ourselves unceasingly toward the north, the whole length of the Baltic, and likewise to the south by the Black Sea.

9. To take every possible means of gaining Constantinople and the Indies, (for he who rules there will be true sovereign of the world) excite war continually, in Turkey and Persia, establishing fortresses on the Black Sea; get the control of the sea by degrees and also of the Baltic, which is a double point necessary to the realization of our project; accelerate, as much as possible, the decay of Persia;—penetrate to the Persian gulf—re-establish, if it be possible, by the way of Syria, the ancient commerce of the Levant! advance to the Indies, which are the great depot of the world. Once there we can do without the gold of England.

10. Obtain and carefully cultivate the alliance of Austria; support (apparently) her ideas of future dominion over Germany; excite animosities and rivalries among her princes—thus causing each party to claim the assistance of Russia, and exercise over this country a species of protection that will prepare for future dominion.

11. Interest the House of Austria in the expulsion of the Turks from Europe, and quiet their dissensions at the moment of the conquest of Constantinople, (having excited war among the old States of Europe,) by giving to Austria a portion of the conquest, which afterwards will or can be reclaimed.

12 Unite within your borders all the disunited or schismatic Greeks now scattered in Hungary and Poland, making ourselves their centre, establishing beforehand an independent church by a species of autocracy and sacredotal supremacy.

13. Sweden dismembered, Persia subdued, Poland subjected, and Turkey conquered, our armies united, and the Black Sea and the Baltic guarded by our ships-of-war, it will be necessary to propose separately, and with the greatest secrecy, to the court of Versailles, and afterwards to that of Vienna, to divide with them the empire of the universe.

If one of the two accept this offer so flattering to their ambition and self love, let her serve to annihilate the other, commencing a contest, the issue of which cannot be doubtful; and Russia may take possession of all the East and a great part of Europe.

If both nations should refuse the offer made by Russia, (which is not at all probable,) it will be necessary to excite quarrels among them, which will engage them in a war with each other. Then Russia, improving the decisive moment, advances her troops (assembled beforehand) on France and Germany at the same time. Two squadrons proceed—one by the sea of Azof, and the other by the port Archangel—filled with Asiatic hordes under the convoy of our armed ships in the Black Sea and the Baltic. Advance by the Mediterranean and the ocean, inundate France on one side, while Germany is unindated on the other—and, these two countries conquered, the rest of Europe will pass under the yoke without firing a gun. Thus may and should be effected the subjugation of Europe.

Bro. Merriam:—I here give you an account of the meeting held at New-Haven, Conn., by Elds. F. H. Berick and E. Burnham. The attendance and attention were very good, from the commencement to the close. Not any disturbance in any form what ever. The lectures were both interesting and profitable. There have been no lectures in this city on the subject of the Advent since '44. The people were prejudiced against the Advent, especially the time; they knew nothing of the blessed hope: they had been informed that Millerism was a great delusion, and that it was very wicked to preach the time. I have learned since the meeting, many of those who were so bitter have changed their minds, some say it is truth, others it looks like the truth, and some have nothing to say. New Haven is stirred up (so to speak,) on the subject of Christ's coming.

And it is the opinion of the Brethren that a company will go up from New Haven to meet the Lord in the air. The following important items of their discourses were clearly and faithfully shown, by the Bible and history—namely, the rise of the man of sin—the papacy or little horn, (Dan. 7) to be in 519 A. D. and at this point of time commenced the 1260 years of tribulation upon the Church of God, as recorded in Matt. 24: 29, and Rev. 12: 6, 14. Also that this point of time (519) dates the commencement of the 1290 years as recorded in Dan. 12: 11. According to this all could see that the 1260 years carry us to 1779, where the tribulation ended, and toleration was granted to the poor heretics, so called.

That the 1290 years did end A. D. 1809, where the Dominion of the Pope was taken away. All that I have heard and read against the above position, has no weight on my mind. I am settled and grounded, that the position of Bro. F. H. B. on the time of the rise of the little horn is correct; hence add to 1809, forty five years, and it makes out the 1335 years Dan 12: 12, carrying us to 1854.

In conclusion, the effect of the meeting is good, many a soul is rejoicing in the speedy Advent of our blessed Lord, others are investigating the subject, and enquiring are these things so? In short, bless the Lord that those two faithful Watchmen ever came to New Haven. The people are anxious to hear more on the subject.

Jas. E. Clark.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:—I thank the Lord that he is still calling on poor sinners to seek a refuge from the awful storm which is about to burst upon this wicked and thoughtless generation. O, is it true that our deliverer is coming this year? Yes, I beleive it. He will soon come to gather his faithful children home from this dreary land. I beleive that we soon shall be in that kingdom that shall never end.—I pray the Lord that we may all meet there. Oh sinners seek salvation before it is too late, before the door of mercy is forever closed against you. O what a lamentable cry there will be in that great day! sinners will cry for rocks and mountains to to fall on them, to hide them from the wrath of the lamb. May God speed the message of his glorious and speedy coming even unto the ends of the earth. Brothers and sisters be faithful untill the Lord comes.—Your sister expecting redemption this year.

Famine in Norway. The Chicago Daily Tribune, says that the news lately received from Norway, is of a very alarming character. In a great portion of that country, there is a scarcity of food. The sufferings of the people in consequence, are as great, if they do not exceed, those which the people of Ireland endured in the year 1847. The Tribune says:

"In the most fruitful seasons in Norway, there is never more than a bare sufficiency. It is comparatively a barren country, very mountainous and rocky; there are a few fertile spots, scattered here and there among the mountains and hills, and these few acres require much labor to clear them of the stones and gravel. Such patches as these constitute the farms of Norway.—Never more than a bare subsistence can be gathered from them. It is said by them who know, that about one million barrels of grain have to be imported annually—most of it from the Russian provinces. At this present time, the consequence of the troubles in the East, the export of grain is entirely prohibited by the Emperor of Russia. All over Europe, particularly in the western parts, there is a great scarcity. A very small quantity has this year been received in Norway, and in consequence, there are hundreds of families among the poor, who are destitute of bread. Barley, which is generally used by the lower classes, is, according to the latest accounts, worth $10 per barrel, of our currency;—Rye $12 per barrel. Common laborers' wages are but 25 or 30 cents a day."

The Norwegians of this country, are making preparations to aid their countrymen at home.

War in good earnest at last.

The English and French governments have made their formal declaration of war, and the manifesto of Queen Victoria, as well as the Emperor Napoleon, was responded to by the members of both legislatures, with the most united and enthusiastic feeling conceivable. Indeed it seems there never was a war in which nations engaged with more hearty good will, than the present conflict. It is said nothing else is talked of in England, either in public or private. Have they not drank "the cup?" Are they not "moved and mad" because of the word which the Lord has sent among them? Are they not filled with the fury of war? "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the word which I will send among you," Jer. 25: 27. They have for a considerable time been drinking in the elements of wrath, they are now beginning to vomit forth their rage and violence, and soon they will fall to rise no more. The startling news by the late arrivals, would have received more particular notice, but having been absent from the city for my health, opportunity for writing has been wanting.

TEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the Hermann, at New York, yesterday morning, and by the America at Halifax yesterday afternoon, we have ten days later advices from Europe—dates to the 1st inst. The news is of the deepest interest. We learn that war has been officially declared by England and France against Russia—that the two former powers have intimated their intention of refusing to issue letters of marque against the commerce of their foe—probably because she has none—and that Russia as yet withholds her intentions in the premises, although the advantages privateering will afford her in crippling the commerce of her opponents may yet induce her to resort to this questionable means of civilized warfare. The Czar having returned unanswered the last proposition of the allied powers, Her Britanic Majesty has issued the following declaration of war:—

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, having been compelled to take up arms in support of an ally, is desirous of rendering the war as little onerous as possible to the powers with whom she remains at peace. To preserve the commerce of neutrals from all unnecessary obstruction, Her Majesty is willing for the present to waive a part of the belligerent right appertaining to her by the law of Nations; but it is impossible for Her Majesty to forego the exercise of her right of seizing articles contraband of war, and from preventing neutrals from bearing the enemy's despatches. And she must maintain the right of a belligerent to prevent neutrals from breaking any effective blockade which may be established with an adequate force, against the enemy's forts, harbors or coasts; but Her Majesty will waive the right of seizing the enemy's property, laden on board a neutral vessel, unless it be contraband of war. It is not Her Majesty's intention to claim the confiscation of neutral property not being contraband of war, and on board the enemy's ships. And Her Majesty further declares that being anxious to lessen as much as possible the evils of war, and to restrict its operations to the regularly organized forces of the enemy, it is not her present intention to issue Letters of Marque for the commission of privateers. Dated March 28, 1854.

On the same day, the Legislature at Paris received a message from the Emperor Napoleon, declaring that Russia had placed herself in a state of war with France. The Emperor Napoleon's announcement was received in both Chambers with extraordinary enthusiasm.

The French Government announces that it will not grant letters of marque to American vessels. Admiral Sir Charles Napier's fleet anchored off Kiel on the 27th. Eighteen thousand Russians crossed the Danube on the 23d. Thirty-five thousand crossed at Matschin without molestation. A skirmish occurred between the Russians and Turks on the bridge of the island of Turtukeh. The Turks having destroyed the bridge, 200 Russians were precipitated into the water.

The Duke of Parma was stabbed by an assassin, and died next day. The Duke of Portland is dead.

The war is to be in strict accordance with a treaty between the Porte, France and Britain, signed on the night of March 12th, embracing five articles.

First—England and France engage to support Turkey by force of arms, until the conclusion of a peace that shall secure the independence and integrity of the Sultan's dominions.

Second—That the Porte shall not conclude a peace without the consent of the allies.

Third—that the allies shall evacuate the Turkish territories after the war.

Fourth—This treaty to remain open for the adhesion of the other powers of Europe.

Fifth—Turkey guarantees to all subjects of the Porte, without distinction of creed, perfect equality in law.

Several protocols are attached regulating the details. Meanwhile the campaign has begun in earnest.

On the 23d, a Russian detachment, under Prince Gortschakoff, forced the passage of the Danube, above Tuksa, and captured eleven guns, two hundred prisoners, and occupied Tulksa, and several forts on the right bank.

On the 24th, General Luders began the preparations for the seige of Matschin.

On the 23d, the Russians also attempted to cross the Danube at Olenitza, when a desperate battle ensued, and the Russians were repulsed. The carnage was dreadful. The Russians lost 3000 men. The Turks were themselves so badly cut up, that they had to retire to their entrenchments. It will be seen, however, that the Russians have effected a passage at three points.

On the very day when the Russians commenced to cross the Danube, Omar Pacha had intended to attack the Russian head-quarters at Pojana. The plan of the battle was drawn up, and the entire force was put under the command of the French Colonel Dieu, but the Russian movement disconcerted the plan.

A despatch from Omar Pacha dated the 5th, says, "The Russians have lost all desire of attacking Kalafat, and purpose crossing the Danube at other points." Omar Pacha is prepared. He has 40,000 men in the right wing, with a line of works connecting the Dodrudscha with Silistria and Shumla.

The British steamer Sampson reports by telegraph, that the Russians were abandoning their forts on the east coast of the Black Sea.—Souchum Kale was in flames, and the Circassians were plundering it.

The allied fleets remained at Beicos Bay.—There were rumors, not creditable, of Turkish preparations to attack Sebastopol.

The British frigate Retribution found Sulina, the mouth of the Danube, impassable.

Admiral Sir Charles Napier's fleet, at last accounts, 29th, was again under way, the supposed destination being the Island of Aland.—Kiorge Bay is named as the rendezvous.

Lord Bloomfield, the British minister at Berlin, telegraphed to Sir Charles Napier the declaration of war, with instructions to commence hostilities.

The Russians are making strong preparations for hostilities in the Baltic. All houses in Cronstadt not capable of defence are pulled down. New batteries are everywhere erecting, and 200 additional gun-boats are ordered forthwith. The Czar with his sons are personally superintending the preparations. Discontent prevails in Finland against the Russians. Some arrests have been made.

Accounts from Greece are unfavorable. The Turkish Minister had demanded his passports, and left Athens. The Greek insurrection was reviving; but the Turks hold the fortress, and have 8000 troops in Epirus. They have as yet had only one or two unimportant rencontres with the insurgents.

An Anglo French occupation of the country was not improbable. Envoys were daily expected at Athens with the final commands of the English and French government. It was given out that several nobles have joined the insurrection.

Fifteen thousand French troops have already embarked; the remainder will be in Turkey by May 1st. 40,000 were landed at Gallipoli on the 17th.

It was reported that the British land force will be increased 30,000 men. The first division of the expeditionary force is being rapidly forwarded from Malta and Constantinople.

The English cavalry regiments are to march through France from Boulogne to Marseilles, thence by steam to Gallipoli.

The Sultan has betrothed his daughter, the princess Munireh, to Ilhama, the eldest son of the Viceroy of Egypt.

The overland mail has reached London, bringing dates from Calcutta to February 19th, and Kong Kong to the 11th.

Trade at Calcutta was fair. Indigo had fallen. Exahrnge was declining.

Shanghae was still in possession of the patriots. The rebel army was wintering near Pekin. Exchange on Shanghae and Canton was falling.

Great Britain. It was rumored that Lord Aberdeen would resign, but the Globe, the Government paper, contradicts the report.

Parliament had moved an address to the Queen in answer to the declaration of war, assuring her of the nation's firm determination to cooperate in vigorous resistance to the projects of Russia, whose further aggrandizement would be dangerous to the peace of Europe.

In the House of Lords, the Earl of Malmsbury asked if it was true that the Russian fleet had left Sebastopol, to operate on the coast of Circassia. Earl Clarendon replied that Government was not so informed.

The Russian ships from Sebastopol were reported near Perekof, north of the Black Sea. The allied fleets were at Beicos Bay, Admiral Lyons having just returned from a cruise.

In the House of Commons, the Attorney General gave an opinion that the sale of Russian ships to neutral parties, if bona fide, would be protected in law. He further stated that Great cannot and does not forego the right of search of neutral vessels for articles contraband of war.

The bill to double the Income Tax had passed the House of Commons.

A banquet was to be given to the Earl of Elgin by persons connected with Canada. Lord John Russell will preside.

France. The French government makes a similar announcement with the British, respecting the commerce of neutrals. Also, will not at present issue letters of marque.

The Minister of France reports that ninety thousand persons have subscribed to the loan, the subscription amounting to 467,000,000 of francs, being twice as much as wanted.

The Minister of Marine has addressed a circular to the Chamber of Commerce, highly applauding the United States for refusing letters of marque. The greatest activity prevailed in fitting out the expeditionary army.

Spain. The following is telegraphed from Madrid, 25th:

"The Queen has amnestied all prisoners implicated in the Lopez invasion of Cuba."

Italy. The Sardinian government loan of seven million dollars is sanctioned by the Legislature.

The Duke of Parma having been assasinated, his duchess has assumed the Regency, during the minority of her son Robert. The Ministry has resigned. Baron Ward has been ordered to quit the country forever. His expulsion pleases the people.

Switzerland continues perfectly quiet as to foreign politics. Austria and Russia have not commitsed themselves by any overt act.

Denmark. The King has made no change in her ministry.

Latest by Mail.—Paris, Friday. It is reported that Austria is more inclined to approach the policy of the Western powers. This report coupled with the rise in the English consols, caused a rally to occur at the Bourse.

The rupture between the Porte and Greece is complete.

Constantinople, March 20. The Retribution and Caton had returned to Beicos without having freed the mouth of the Danube. It is supposed that a stronger expedition than was at first supposed necessary would be required for that purpose;

War was formally proclaimed at the London Royal Fxchange, on Friday, in the presence of the civic authorities.

Three Days Later from Europe.

By the Collins steamer Arctic, at New York, yesterday, we have three days later advices from Europe—dates to the 5th inst. Our advices by this arrival are highly exciting, and savor strongly of gunpowder. The Russian troops have succeeded in capturing several Turkish strongholds, and are managing the campaign with an adroitness and finesse that have disconcerted the plans of the allies. If the Czar be afflicted with madness, as the English papers aver, there seems to be much method in it. The French Emperer reminds Austria of her declaration that she would consider the passage of the Danube by the Russians a cause of war—and Austria will therefore be compelled to show her hand. Prussia is also called upon to define her position. In fine, there appears that all the great European powers will, sooner or later,, become involved in the grand contest.

Hirsova was taken by the Russians on the 28th of March. No details are given as yet.—The Russians had also taken the strong position of Babahagh, and are thus masters of the Upper Dobudscha. It is reported that Isaktchi was captured by the Russians on the 27th.

4000 Russians were reported to have left Sebastopol in five steamers, to aid in Prince Gortshakoff's operation beyond the Danube. The Turks were throwing reinforcements into Varna, and the British fleet was cruising off that coast. The late Russian movements have changed the entire plans of the campaign.

Sir Charles Napier with 22 ships is anchored off Moen Island, in the Baltic. A portion of the Russian fleet is frozen in at Revel. Shipments of troops from France and Great Britain go on rapidly. France has already shipped 20,000 and England 10,000.

Nothing important from Asia. Zarif has been appointed to the chief command in Asia. The appointment is viewed favorably. The aspect of the Greek insurrection is unchanged.—A telegraph despatch says the Czar has sent a letter to the king of Prussia saying contemptuously—"when the allies have emancipated the Christians, and evacuated the Turkish waters, he will evacuate the principalities."

At Constantinople the Grand Mufti and Rejat Pacha have been dismissed, and successors appointed more friendly to the allies. The combined fleets entered Beycos Bay on the 25th.—On the 30th of March the Circassians, by a mistake, fired on the steamers Sampson and Cague. The Greek Minister, Meteac, had received his passport, and all foreign Greeks and also Russians were to be sent from Turkey.

The members of both Houses of Parliament went into procession to present a cordial address to the Queen in support of the declaration of war.

It is said that Napoleon has written to the Emperor of Austria reminding him of his promise to regard the crossing of the Danube by the Russians as a casus belli. France has loaned ten millions francs to Turkey. The house of Leroy de Chabroi, the eminent Paris bankers, has failed. The Central Jewish Consistory of France has petitioned the Emperor to extend the privileges about to be obtained for the Christians in Turkey, to the Jews who may be subjects of the Sultan.

Austria still wavers. Prussia makes no sign.

Lord John Russell stated in Parliament that the British Government had sent a communication to the United States respecting the Black Warrior seizure, but up to then there had been no report from Mr Crampton.

It is positively asserted that the Russians have landed 4000 troops from Sabastopol and seized on the large island of Dumares, below Tultscha; also, that a Russian fleet of thirteen ships had attacked Varna. Public feeling is considerably excited in Constantinople, which causes disquiet to the Government.

The Russians are razing all the fortresses in Dobudscha. The general tenor of the news is unfavorable to the Turks. The London Daily News has accounts from St. Petersburgh, stating that the war is very unpopular among the classes. The Russian loss at Tutukal is said to be from 2,000 to 2,500 men.

It is stated that Omar Pacha had anticipated the Russian advance into Dobrudscha, and that the Ottoman force there was falling back according to orders upon Trajans wall which is well fortified, and where the Russians will have to encounter about 60,000 Turks.

According to reliable accounts from Berlin, the Czar's letter to the king of Prussia contains no tangible concession to the European Powers.

The Agram Gazette states that a courier had arrived from St. Petersburgh, with positive orders for the Montenegrans to attack the Turkish Province of Hershova. Russian couriers are passing in rapid succession between Russia and Montenegro. Fifteen packet ships are fitting out at Liverpool for conveyance of troops.

There is an unprecedented number of emigrants, chiefly Irish, waiting for a conveyance to America. The price of a steerage passage has advanced to as high as £5 10s

Continental advices regard the occupation of the Lower Danube by the Russians as a definite measure.

Advices of the 25th from Odessa say that the entire Russian fleet left Sebastopol with, it was believed, the intention of attacking Varna.

There are rumors of treachery on the part of the Turkish commanders of the different fortresses which have fallen into the hands of the Russians.

Omar Pacha had marched 20,000 men to strengthen his position between the Russians and the Balkans. A new levy of 80,000 men has been proposed in France.

The ship Plavis, Glover, from Antwerp, bound ostensibly for Montreal, was captured and brought to the Downs, loaded with arms for the Greek insurgents. A council of Austrian Generals was summoned to meet at Vienna, among them the Bau Jellalich. It is stated that Hirsova held out three days before capitulating.

The Czar will not go to the principalities.

The Russians, fearing Osel Island would be the first point of attack, have placed a strong garrison there of some 30,000 men.

The troops now leaving England go direct for Constantinople, without stopping at Malta. Ten Turkish steamers are at Alexandria, embarking Egyptian troops.

Advices from Trebizond report that the Russians are concentrating their forces at Askalzick. Operations are directed against Kars.—20,000 troops are concentrating at Sivas.

Persia was tranquil.

Advices from Greece say that the king and Queen left Athens for the frontier.

The French Admiral Der Fenan, sailed from Constantinople in a steam frigate, with an energetic note to king Otho, demanding suppression of the hostile movements which have originated in his territories.

The vote on the address to the Queen of England was unanimous in both Houses.

Sir John Franklin's name was struck off the book of the British Navy, as he was given up for dead.

Mazzini is reported to be in Switzerland.—Several Italians were arrested in Paris with proclamations exciting an insurrection in Lombardy.

A despatch of the 31st from Vienna, says that when Baron Bess returns from Berlin, an imperial manifesto may be expected, "that though Austria disapproves of the movements of Russia, she is resolved to remain neutral, with the rest of Germany, and that an army of 70,000 Germans will make that neutrality respected. Baron Meyendorf has been informed that Russia expects nothing beyond neutrality from Austria.

The Danish Government issued a declaration defending articles contraband for war which include horses, timber for construction of vessels, tar, copper sheathing, sail cloth, canvass, hemp and cordage, but not coals. No Danish pilots allowed to serve on board the vessels of the belligerent powers.

The Soldier of the Cross.

Am I a soldier of the Cross,
A follower of the Lamb,
And shall I fear to own his cause,
Or blush to speak his name?
No, I will glory in his name,
And spread abroad his holy fame,
And serve the great Redeemer,
O He's the Friend for me.

Must I be carried to the skies,
On flowery beds of ease,
Whilst others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas?
No, I must fight for my dear Lord,
And love his people—trust his word,
And gain his approbation.
O He's the Friend for me.

Are there no foes for me to face,
Must I not stem the flood,
Is this vile world a friend to grace,
To help me on to God?
This world is a delusive ground,
In Christ true peace and rest are found,
And holy consolation.
O He's the Friend for me.

Sure I must fight, if I would reign;
Increase my courage Lord,
I'll bear the toil, endure the pain,
Supported by thy word.
Thy word affords me sweet delight,
And faith sustains me in the fight,
And I, through Christ, shall conquer.
O He's the Friend for me.

Thy saints, in all this glorious war,
Shall conquer though they die,
They see the triumph drawing near,
And seize it with their eye.
They keep the promise in their eye,
Expect the final victory
Through grace and faith in Jesus.
O He's the Friend for me.

That joyful day will soon appear,
And all thine armies shine,
Combin'd to serve the Saviour dear,
And own the glory thine.
How high in bliss the saints will soar,
What music sweep the heavenly shore,
With love and praise to Jesus.
O He's the Friend for me.

Obituary.

Died, in Surry, Maine, March 28, our beloved sister Julia Smith, aged about 43 years She has left a companion and ten children, who deeply mourn her loss. Her sickness was only three days, but her sufferings were very severe. She retained her reason until the last moment, and then sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, without a struggle or a groan. She was a believer in the speedy coming of our Lord; she formally belonged with the Methodists; but about two years ago she embraced the Advent doctrine, and has since been a faithful follower of our Lord. She was truly an example to all,—a living epistle, read and known of all men. We miss her much in the house of prayer, we see her vacant seat; but, thank the Lord, we do not mourn as those that have no hope. Our loss is her gain, we believe her inheritance is sure, and she is free from sorrow and care. She knew that her end was approaching and was perfectly resigned to the will of the Lord, her work was done and well done. O how heavenly to look upon a dying saint, and see them calmly sink to rest. Bro. N. G. Reed delivered a discourse from first Cor. 15: 19, and the afflicted friends were comforted with the prospect of meeting her this year. She exhorted her companion to be faithful, assuring him that he would meet her soon. O may he heed her dying request, and with their children be an unbroken family in the kingdom.

A. D. Wood.

Fallen asleep in Jesus, Bro William Tibbets, of North Hermon, aged 92 years, on the 29th of March. Bro. T was brought into the enjoyment of the blessed hope at the early age of 18 years, from which time he has ever manifested his love for the Savior, and notwithstanding the infirmities brought on by age and disease, until the day of his death his hope seemed to grow brighter and brighter; and the day before he died, Bro. Dorr went to visit him, and he eagerly enquired when the Lord was coming? Upon being informed that the Lord was coming the present year, he exclaimed with a full soul, "Bless the Lord whether I live or die, I am the Lord's." I attended the funeral and preached from Isaiah 40: 5-7.

S. Bragg.

Died, April 3d, James Frederick, infant child of Seth T. and Abigail M. Holt, aged 13 months. After but a short illness of lung fever, the little sufferer fell a victim to him that had the power of death. The bereaved ones do not mourn as those who have no hope, but with the consoling hope of seeing their little one coming from the land of the enemy, and restored with Rachel's children, to their own border, even the present year. Bro Dammon attended the funeral and preached from John 11: 35,—"Jesus wept."

He will have on hand at wholesale and retail, the following works: The Lord soon to come, Advent Hymn Book, Historical Extracts, a Tract by F. H. Berick on 1260, 1290, and 1335 days of Daniel and John.

Special Notice.

Bro. Merriam, I wish to say through the Crisis, my Post Office address is Cutingsville, Vt.

I. A. Cheney.

Some of the Brethren of Westfield, think that a tent meeting, to commence the first of June, would do good as there never was a meeting of the kind in this place. Bro. Grant, Turner, and Adrian have lectured here, and the people have become interested to have me write to get the suggestions in season before the brethren to give them time to think of it. Westfield is a large place, centrally located, 10 miles West of Springfield, on the Western and Canal R. R.—People can come from the four points of compass by Railroad. If this suggestion should meet the minds of the people they can make it known through the Crisis. Bro. Berick, or Couch, or some one else that has a tent, will need to come if we have the proposed meeting.

I would say to the brethren that Dr. S. P. Hubbard, has been appointed Corresponding Secretary of the Advent Church in Westfield.

Chas. Goodrich.

Westfield, Mass., April 3, 1854.

Advent meetings every Sabbath at Lyceum Hall, Lawrence, Mass.

Bro. Wm. Pullen's P. O. address is Lowell, Mass.

James E. Clark's P. O address is Waterville, Ct. Will Bro. Clark have the goodness to inform the Crisis what his Post Office address was formerly.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige and save us immense labor and perplexity if they will strictly adhere to the following rules:

1. Over all communications designed to be published write, For the World's Crisis.

2. Over all communications not designed for the public write, Private.

☟ ☟ ☟ ☟ ☟ ☟ ☟

3. At the head of all letters write the date, never failing to give the STATE, and also County, if written from the Middle, Western or Southern States.

☝ ☝ ☝ ☝ ☝ ☝ ☝

4. Write all orders for the paper or for books on a page by itself, beginning thus, Order for the Crisis, or, Order for books, as the case may be.

5. At the close of each letter containing money write the amount, and to whom it is to be credited.

6. Be careful to write names and P. O. addresses in a legible hand.

7. In returning papers write on the paper the name and P. O. address of the person to whom it had been sent.

8. In preparing matter for the Crisis we hope our correspondents will adopt, as the most important and indispensible of all rules, the practice of commending the subject to God, praying fervently for light to be reflected on the position of the Church, and for heavenly manna to feed and nurture the little flock unto eternal life—also that sinners may be induced to flee from impending wrath, and take refuge in the ark before the deluge takes them all away.

9. Let the letters and communications be carefully read over, corrected, and, if need be re-written, punctuated and prepared for the press, so far as the writer has ability so to do. If, however, the writer does not understand punctuation, &c., the Editor is just as willing, and if possible more so, to serve the humblest member of the flock in bringing his or her sentiments and feelings before the public, as those who have been favored with higher educational advantages, provided only they write under the influence of the Spirit of God.

In sending out eight thousand papers, it would not be strange if some mistakes should be attributable to us, others, it may be, to the Post Offices, and others still to the neglect of subscribers to give their proper Post Office address. We hope in such cases brethren will exercise a little patience, and write us, if necessary, so that we may rectify all mistakes which it will ever afford us pleasure to do. tf

All letters of business in relation to the World's Crisis, or to books sold at the office of the Crisis, or letters containing payment for "the grand crisis in human affairs" and "the Advent Hymn-book," must in future be directed to Jonas Merriam, Editor of the World's Crisis.

And it is the opinion of the Brethren that a company will go up from New Haven to meet the Lord in the air. The following important items of their discourses were clearly and faithfully shown, by the Bible and history—namely, the rise of the man of sin—the papacy or little horn, (Dan. 7) to be in 519 A. D. and at this point of time commenced the 1260 years of tribulation upon the Church of God, as recorded in Matt. 24: 29, and Rev. 12: 6, 14. Also that this point of time (519) dates the commencement of the 1290 years as recorded in Dan. 12: 11. According to this all could see that the 1260 years carry us to 1779, where the tribulation ended, and toleration was granted to the poor heretics, so called.

That the 1290 years did end A. D. 1809, where the Dominion of the Pope was taken away. All that I have heard and read against the above position, has no weight on my mind. I am settled and grounded, that the position of Bro. F. H. B. on the time of the rise of the little horn is correct; hence add to 1809, forty five years, and it makes out the 1335 years Dan 12: 12, carrying us to 1854.

In conclusion, the effect of the meeting is good, many a soul is rejoicing in the speedy Advent of our blessed Lord, others are investigating the subject, and enquiring are these things so? In short, bless the Lord that those two faithful Watchmen ever came to New Haven. The people are anxious to hear more on the subject.

JAS. E. CLARK.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:—I thank the Lord that he is still calling on poor sinners to seek a refuge from the awful storm which is about to burst upon this wicked and thoughtless generation. O, is it true that our deliverer is coming this year? Yes, I beleive it. He will soon come to gather his faithful children home from this dreary land. I beleive that we soon shall be in that kingdom that shall never end.—I pray the Lord that we may all meet there. Oh sinners seek salvation before it is too late, before the door of mercy is forever closed against you. O what a lamentable cry there will be in that great day! sinners will cry for rocks and mountains to to fall on them, to hide them from the wrath of the lamb. May God speed the message of his glorious and speedy coming even unto the ends of the earth. Brothers and sisters be faithful untill the Lord comes.—Your sister expecting redemption this year.

CAROLINE A PHELPS.

FAMINE IN NORWAY. The Chicago Daily Tribune, says that the news lately received from Norway, is of a very alarming character. In a great portion of that country, there is a scarcity of food. The sufferings of the people in consequence, are as great, if they do not exceed, those which the people of Ireland endured in the year 1847. The Tribune says:

"In the most fruitful seasons in Norway, there is never more than a bare sufficiency. It is comparatively a barren country, very mountainous and rocky; there are a few fertile spots, scattered here and there among the mountains and hills, and these few acres require much labor to clear them of the stones and gravel. Such patches as these constitute the farms of Norway.—Never more than a bare subsistence can be gathered from them. It is said by them who know, that about one million barrels of grain have to be imported annually—most of it from the Russian provinces. At this present time, the consequence of the troubles in the East, the export of grain is entirely prohibited by the Emperor of Russia. All over Europe, particularly in the western parts, there is a great scarcity. A very small quantity has this year been received in Norway, and in consequence, there are hundreds of families among the poor, who are destitute of bread. Barley, which is generally used by the lower classes, is, according to the latest accounts, worth $10 per barrel, of our currency;—Rye $12 per barrel. Common laborers' wages are but 25 or 30 cents a day."

The Norwegians of this country, are making preparations to aid their countrymen at home.

War in good earnest at last.

The English and French governments have made their formal declaration of war, and the manifesto of Queen Victoria, as well as the Emperor Napoleon, was responded to by the members of both legislatures, with the most united and enthusiastic feeling conceivable. Indeed it seems there never was a war in which nations engaged with more hearty good will, than the present conflict. It is said nothing else is talked of in England, either in public or private. Have they not drank "the cup?" Are they not "moved and mad" because of the word which the Lord has sent among them? Are they not filled with the fury of war? "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the word which I will send among you," Jer. 25: 27. They have for a considerable time been drinking in the elements of wrath, they are now beginning to vomit forth their rage and violence, and soon they will fall to rise no more. The startling news by the late arrivals, would have received more particular notice, but having been absent from the city for my health, opportunity for writing has been wanting.

TEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the Hermann, at New York, yesterday morning, and by the America at Halifax yesterday afternoon, we have ten days later advices from Europe—dates to the 1st inst. The news is of the deepest interest. We learn that war has been officially declared by England and France against Russia—that the two former powers have intimated their intention of refusing to issue letters of marque against the commerce of their foe—probably because she has none—and that Russia as yet withholds her intentions in the premises, although the advantages privateering will afford her in crippling the commerce of her opponents may yet induce her to resort to this questionable means of civilized warfare. The Czar having returned unanswered the last proposition of the allied powers, Her Britanic Majesty has issued the following declaration of war:—

Her Majesty the Queen of the Uuited Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, having been compelled to take up arms in support of an ally, is desirous of rendering the war as little onerous as possible to the powers with whom she remains at peace. To preserve the commerce of neutrals from all unnecessary obstruction, Her Majesty is willing for the present to waive a part of the belligerent right appertaining to her by the law of Nations; but it is impossible for Her Majesty to forego the exercise of her right of seizing articles contraband of war, and from preventing neutrals from bearing the enemy's despatches. And she must maintain the right of a belligerent to prevent neutrals from breaking any effective blockade which may be established with an adequate force, against the enemy's forts, harbors or coasts; but Her Majesty will waive the right of seizing the enemy's property, laden on board a neutral vessel, unless it be contraband of war. It is not Her Majesty's intention to claim the confiscation of neutral property not being contraband of war, and on board the enemy's ships. And Her Majesty further declares that being anxious to lessen as much as possible the evils of war, and to restrict its operations to the regularly organized forces of the enemy, it is not her present intention to issue Letters of Marque for the commission of privateers. Dated March 28, 1854.

On the same day, the Legislature at Paris received a message from the Emperor Napoleon, declaring that Russia had placed herself in a state of war with France. The Emperor Napoleon's announcement was received in both Chambers with extraordinary enthusiasm.

The French Government announces that it will not grant letters of marque to American vessels. Admiral Sir Charles Napier's fleet anchored off Kiel on the 27th. Eighteen thousand Russians crossed the Danube on the 23d. Thirty-five thousand crossed at Matschin without molestation. A skirmish occurred between the Russians and Turks on the bridge of the island of Turtukeh. The Turks having destroyed the bridge, 200 Russians were precipitated into the water.

The Duke of Parma was stabbed by an assassin, and died next day. The Duke of Portland is dead.

The war is to be in strict accordance with a treaty between the Porte, France and Britain, signed on the night of March 12th, embracing five articles.

First—England and France engage to support Turkey by force of arms, until the conclusion of a peace that shall secure the independence and integrity of the Sultan's dominions.

Second—That the Porte shall not conclude a peace without the consent of the allies.

Third—that the allies shall evacuate the Turkish territories after the war.

Fourth—This treaty to remain open for the adhesion of the other powers of Europe.

Fifth—Turkey guarantees to all subjects of the Porte, without distinction of creed, perfect equality in law.

Several protocols are attached regulating the details. Meanwhile the campaign has begun in earnest.

On the 23d, a Russian detachment, under Prince Gortschakoff, forced the passage of the Danube, above Tuksa, and captured eleven guns, two hundred prisoners, and occupied Tulksa, and several forts on the right bank.

On the 24th, General Luders began the preparations for the seige of Matschin.

On the 23d, the Russians also attempted to cross the Danube at Olenitza, when a desperate battle ensued, and the Russians were repulsed. The carnage was dreadful. The Russians lost 3000 men. The Turks were themselves so badly cut up, that they had to retire to their entrenchments. It will be seen, however, that the Russians have effected a passage at three points.

On the very day when the Russians commenced to cross the Danube, Omar Pacha had intended to attack the Russian head-quarters at Pojana. The plan of the battle was drawn up, and the entire force was put under the command of the French Colonel Dieu, but the Russian movement disconcerted the plan.

A despatch from Omar Pacha dated the 5th, says, "The Russians have lost all desire of attacking Kalafat, and purpose crossing the Danube at other points." Omar Pacha is prepared. He has 40,000 men in the right wing, with a line of works connecting the Dodrudscha with Silistria and Shumla.

The British steamer Sampson reports by telegraph, that the Russians were abandoning their forts on the east coast of the Black Sea.—Souchum Kale was in flames, and the Circassians were plundering it.

The allied fleets remained at Beicos Bay.—There were rumors, not creditable, of Turkish preparations to attack Sebastopol.

The British frigate Retribution found Sulina, the mouth of the Danube, impassable.

Admiral Sir Charles Napier's fleet, at last accounts, 29th, was again under way, the supposed destination being the Island of Aland.—Kiorge Bay is named as the rendezvous.

Lord Bloomfield, the British minister at Berlin, telegraphed to Sir Charles Napier the declaration of war, with instructions to commence hostilities.

The Russians are making strong preparations for hostilities in the Baltic. All houses in Cronstadt not capable of defence are pulled down. New batteries are everywhere erecting, and 200 additional gun-boats are ordered forthwith. The Czar with his sons are personally superintending the preparations. Discontent prevails in Finland against the Russians. Some arrests have been made.

Accounts from Greece are unfavorable. The Turkish Minister had demanded his passports, and left Athens. The Greek insurrection was reviving; but the Turks hold the fortress, and have 8000 troops in Epirus. They have as yet had only one or two unimportant rencontres with the insurgents.

An Anglo French occupation of the country was not improbable. Envoys were daily expected at Athens with the final commands of the English and French government. It was given out that several nobles have joined the insurrection.

Fifteen thousand French troops have already embarked; the remainder will be in Turkey by May 1st. 40,000 were landed at Gallipoli on the 17th.

It was reported that the British land force will be increased 30,000 men. The first division of the expeditionary force is being rapidly forwarded from Malta and Constantinople.

The English cavalry regiments are to march through France from Boulogne to Marseilles, thence by steam to Gallipoli.

The Sultan has betrothed his daughter, the princess Munirch, to Ilhama, the eldest son of the Viceroy of Egypt.

The overland mail has reached London, bringing dates from Calcutta to February 19th, and Kong Kong to the 11th.

Trade at Calcutta was fair. Indigo had fallen. Exahrnge was declining.

Shanghae was still in possession of the patriots. The rebel army was wintering near Pekin. Exchange on Shanghae and Canton was falling.

Great Britain. It was rumored that Lord Aberdeen would resign, but the Globe, the Government paper, contradicts the report.

Parliament had moved an address to the Queen in answer to the declaration of war, assuring her of the nation's firm determination to cooperate in vigorous resistance to the projects of Russia, whose further aggrandizement would be dangerous to the peace of Europe.

In the House of Lords, the Earl of Malmsbury asked if it was true that the Russian fleet had left Sebastopol, to operate on the coast of Circassia. Earl Clarendon replied that Government was not so informed.

The Russian ships from Sebastopol were reported near Perekof, north of the Black Sea. The allied fleets were at Beicos Bay, Admiral Lyons having just returned from a cruise.

In the House of Commons, the Attorney General gave an opinion that the sale of Russian ships to neutral parties, if bona fide, would be protected in law. He further stated that Great cannot and does not forego the right of search of neutral vessels for articles contraband of war.

The bill to double the Income Tax had passed the House of Commons.

A banquet was to be given to the Earl of Elgin by persons connected with Canada. Lord John Russell will preside.

France. The French government makes a similar announcement with the British, respecting the commerce of neutrals. Also, will not at present issue letters of marque.

The Minister of France reports that ninety thousand persons have subscribed to the loan, the subscription amounting to 467,000,000 of francs, being twice as much as wanted.

The Minister of Marine has addressed a circular to the Chamber of Commerce, highly applauding the United States for refusing letters of marque. The greatest activity prevailed in fitting out the expeditionary army.

Spain. The following is telegraphed from Madrid, 25th:

"The Queen has amnestied all prisoners implicated in the Lopez invasion of Cuba."

Italy. The Sardinian government loan of seven million dollars is sanctioned by the Legislature.

The Duke of Parma having been assasinated, his duchess has assumed the Regency, during the minority of her son Robert. The Ministry has resigned. Baron Ward has been ordered to quit the country forever. His expulsion pleases the people.

Switzerland continues perfectly quiet as to foreign politics. Austria and Russia have not commitsed themselves by any overt act.

Denmark. The King has made no change in her ministry.

Latest by Mail.—Paris, Friday. It is reported that Austria is more inclined to approach the policy of the Western powers. This report coupled with the rise in the English consols, caused a rally to occur at the Bourse.

The rupture between the Porte and Greece is complete.

Constantinople, March 20. The Retribution and Caton had returned to Beicos without having freed the mouth of the Danube. It is supposed that a stronger expedition than was at first supposed necessary would be required for that purpose;

War was formally proclaimed at the London Royal Fxchange, on Friday, in the presence of the civic authorities.

Three Days Later from Europe.

By the Collins steamer Arctic, at New York, yesterday, we have three days later advices from Europe—dates to the 5th inst. Our advices by this arrival are highly exciting, and savor strongly of gunpowder. The Russian troops have succeeded in capturing several Turkish strongholds, and are managing the campaign with an adroitness and finesse that have disconcerted the plans of the allies. If the Czar be afflicted with madness, as the English papers aver, there seems to be much method in it. The French Emperer reminds Austria of her declaration that she would consider the passage of the Danube by the Russians a cause of war—and Austria will therefore be compelled to show her hand. Prussia is also called upon to define her position. In fine, there appears that all the great European powers will, sooner or later,, become involved in the grand contest.

Hirsova was taken by the Russians on the 28th of March. No details are given as yet.—The Russians had also taken the strong position of Babahagh, and are thus masters of the Upper Dobudscha. It is reported that Isaktchi was captured by the Russians on the 27th.

4000 Russians were reported to have left Sebastopol in five steamers, to aid in Prince Gortshakoff's operation beyond the Danube. The Turks were throwing reinforcements into Varna, and the British fleet was cruising off that coast. The late Russian movements have changed the entire plans of the campaign.

Sir Charles Napier with 22 ships is anchored off Moen Island, in the Baltic. A portion of the Russian fleet is frozen in at Revel. Shipments of troops from France and Great Britain go on rapidly. France has already shipped 20,000 and England 10,000.

Nothing important from Asia. Zarif has been appointed to the chief command in Asia. The appointment is viewed favorably. The aspect of the Greek insurrection is unchanged.—A telegraph despatch says the Czar has sent a letter to the king of Prussia saying contemptuously—"when the allies have emancipated the Christians, and evacuated the Turkish waters, he will evacuate the principalities."

At Constantinople the Grand Mufti and Rejat Pacha have been dismissed, and successors appointed more friendly to the allies. The combined fleets entered Beycos Bay on the 25th.—On the 30th of March the Circassians, by a mistake, fired on the steamers Sampson and Cague. The Greek Minister, Meteac, had received his passport, and all foreign Greeks and also Russians were to be sent from Turkey.

The members of both Houses of Parliament went into procession to present a cordial address to the Queen in support of the declaration of war.

It is said that Napoleon has written to the Emperor of Austria reminding him of his promise to regard the crossing of the Danube by the Russians as a casus belli. France has loaned ten millions francs to Turkey. The house of Leroy de Chabroi, the eminent Paris bankers, has failed. The Central Jewish Consistory of France has petitioned the Emperor to extend the privileges about to be obtained for the Christians in Turkey, to the Jews who may be subjects of the Sultan.

Austria still wavers. Prussia makes no sign.

Lord John Russell stated in Parliament that the British Government had sent a communication to the United States respecting the Black Warrior seizure, but up to the time there had been no report from Mr Crampton.

It is positively asserted that the Russians have landed 4000 troops from Sabastopol and seized on the large island of Dumares, below Tultscha; also, that a Russian fleet of thirteen ships had attacked Varna. Public feeling is considerably excited in Constantinople, which causes disquiet to the Government.

The Russians are razing all the fortresses in Dobudscha. The general tenor of the news is unfavorable to the Turks. The London Daily News has accounts from St. Petersburgh, stating that the war is very unpopular among the classes. The Russian loss at Tutukai is said to be from 2,000 to 2,500 men.

It is stated that Omar Pacha had anticipated the Russian advance into Dobrudscha, and that the Ottoman force there was falling back according to orders upon Trajans wall which is well fortified, and where the Russians will have to encounter about 60,000 Turks.

According to reliable accounts from Berlin, the Czar's letter to the king of Prussia contains no tangible concession to the European Powers.

The Agram Gazette states that a courier had arrived from St. Petersburgh, with positive orders for the Montenegrans to attack the Turkish Province of Hershova. Russian couriers are passing in rapid succession between Russia and Montenegro. Fifteen packet ships are fitting out at Liverpool for conveyance of troops.

There is an unprecedented number of emigrants, chiefly Irish, waiting for a conveyance to America. The price of a steerage passage has advanced to as high as £5 10s

Continental advices regard the occupation of the Lower Danube by the Russians as a definite measure.

Advices of the 25th from Odessa say that the entire Russian fleet left Sebastopol with, it was believed, the intention of attacking Varna.

There are rumors of treachery on the part of the Turkish commanders of the different fortresses which have fallen into the hands of the Russians.

Omar Pacha had marched 20,000 men to strengthen his position between the Russians and the Balkans. A new levy of 80,000 men has been proposed in France.

The ship Plavis, Glover, from Antwerp, bound ostensibly for Montreal, was captured and brought to the Downs, loaded with arms for the Greek insurgents. A council of Austrian Generals was summoned to meet at Vienna, among them the Ban Jellalich. It is stated that Hirsova held out three days before capitulating.

The Czar will not go to the principalities.

The Russians, fearing Osel Island would be the first point of attack, have placed a strong garrison there of some 30,000 men.

The troops now leaving England go direct for Constantinople, without stopping at Malta. Ten Turkish steamers are at Alexandria, embarking Egyptian troops.

Advices from Trebizond report that the Russians are concentrating their forces at Askalzick. Operations are directed against Kars.—20,000 troops are concentrating at Sivas.

Persia was tranquil.

Advices from Greece say that the king and Queen left Athens for the frontier.

The French Admiral Der Fenan, sailed from Constantinople in a steam frigate, with an energetic note to king Otho, demanding suppression of the hostile movements which have originated in his territories.

The vote on the address to the Queen of England was unanimous in both Houses.

Sir John Franklin's name was struck off the book of the British Navy, as he was given up for dead.

Mazzini is reported to be in Switzerland.—Several Italians were arrested in Paris with proclamations exciting an insurrection in Lombardy.

A despatch of the 31st from Vienna, says that when Baron Bess returns from Berlin, an imperial manifesto may be expected, "that though Austria disapproves of the movements of Russia, she is resolved to remain neutral, with the rest of Germany, and that an army of 70,000 Germans will make that neutrality respected. Baron Meyendorf has been informed that Russia expects nothing beyond neutrality from Austria.

The Danish Government issued a declaration defending articles contraband for war which include horses, timber for construction of vessels, tar, copper sheathing, sail cloth, canvass, hemp and cordage, but not coals. No Danish pilots allowed to serve on board the vessels of the belligerent powers.

The Soldier of the Cross.

Am I a soldier of the Cross,
A follower of the Lamb,
And shall I fear to own his cause,
Or blush to speak his name?
No, I will glory in his name,
And spread abroad his holy fame,
And serve the great Redeemer,
O He's the Friend for me.

Must I be carried to the skies,
On flowery beds of ease,
Whilst others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas?
No, I must fight for my dear Lord,
And love his people—trust his word,
And gain his approbation.
O He's the Friend for me.

Are there no foes for me to face,
Must I not stem the flood,
Is this vile world a friend to grace,
To help me on to God?
This world is a delusive ground,
In Christ true peace and rest are found,
And holy consolation.
O He's the Friend for me.

Sure I must fight, if I would reign;
Increase my courage Lord,
I'll bear the toil, endure the pain,
Supported by thy word.
Thy word affords me sweet delight,
And faith sustains me in the fight,
And I, through Christ, shall conquer.
O He's the Friend for me.

Thy saints, in all this glorious war,
Shall conquer though they die,
They see the triumph drawing near,
And seize it with their eye.
They keep the promise in their eye,
Expect the final victory
Through grace and faith in Jesus.
O He's the Friend for me.

That joyful day will soon appear,
And all thine armies shine,
Combin'd to serve the Saviour dear,
And own the glory thine.
How high in bliss the saints will soar,
What music sweep the heavenly shore,
With love and praise to Jesus.
O He's the Friend for me.

Obituary.

Died, in Surry, Maine, March 28, our beloved sister Julia Smith, aged about 43 years. She has left a companion and ten children, who deeply mourn her loss. Her sickness was only three days, but her sufferings were very severe. She retained her reason until the last moment, and then sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, without a struggle or a groan. She was a believer in the speedy coming of our Lord; she formally belonged with the Methodists; but about two years ago she embraced the Advent doctrine, and has since been a faithful follower of our Lord. She was truly an example to all,—a living epistle, read and known of all men. We miss her much in the house of prayer, we see her vacant seat; but, thank the Lord, we do not mourn as those that have no hope. Our loss is her gain, we believe her inheritance is sure, and she is free from sorrow and care. She knew that her end was approaching and was perfectly resigned to the will of the Lord, her work was done and well done. O how heavenly to look upon a dying saint, and see them calmly sink to rest. Bro. N. G. Reed delivered a discourse from first Cor. 15: 19, and the afflicted friends were comforted with the prospect of meeting her this year. She exhorted her companion to be faithful, assuring him that he would meet her soon. O may he heed her dying request, and with their children be an unbroken family in the kingdom.

A. D. WOOD.

Fallen asleep in Jesus, Bro William Tibbets, of North Hermon, aged 92 years, on the 29th of March. Bro. T was brought into the enjoyment of the blessed hope at the early age of 18 years, from which time he has ever manifested his love for the Savior, and notwithstanding the infirmities brought on by age and disease, until the day of his death his hope seemed to grow brighter and brighter; and the day before he died, Bro. Dorr went to visit him, and he eagerly enquired when the Lord was coming? Upon being informed that the Lord was coming the present year, he exclaimed with a full soul, "Bless the Lord whether I live or die, I am the Lord's." I attended the funeral and preached from Isaiah 40: 5-7.

S. BRAGG.

Died, April 3d, James Frederick, infant child of Seth T. and Abigail M. Holt, aged 13 months. After but a short illness of lung fever, the little sufferer fell a victim to him that had the power of death. The bereaved ones do not mourn as those who have no hope, but with the consoling hope of seeing their little one coming from the land of the enemy, and restored with Rachel's children, to their own border, even the present year. Bro Dammon attended the funeral and preached from John 11: 35,—"Jesus wept."

Bro. Geo T. Adams, Boston, No. 167 Hanover street, is authorized to receive money and orders for the World's Crisis. He will have on hand at wholesale and retail, the following works: The Lord soon to come, Advent Hymn Book, Historical Extracts, a Tract by F. H. Berick on 1260, 1290, and 1335 days of Daniel and John.

Special Notice.

Bro. Merriam, I wish to say through the Crisis, my Post Office address is Cutingsville, Vt.

I. A. CHENEY.

Some of the Brethren of Westfield, think that a tent meeting, to commence the first of June, would do good as there never was a meeting of the kind in this place. Bro. Grant, Turner, and Adrian have lectured here, and the people have become interested to have me write to get the suggestions in season before the brethren to give them time to think of it. Westfield is a large place, centrally located, 10 miles West of Springfield, on the Western and Canal R. R.—People can come from the four points of compass by Railroad. If this suggestion should meet the minds of the people they can make it known through the Crisis. Bro. Berick, or Couch, or some one else that has a tent, will need to come if we have the proposed meeting.

I would say to the brethren that Dr. S. P. Hubbard, has been appointed Corresponding Secretary of the Advent Church in Westfield.

CHAS. GOODRICH.

Westfield, Mass., April 3, 1854.

Advent meetings every Sabbath at Lyceum Hall, Lawrence, Mass.

Bro. Wm. Pullen's P. O. address is Lowell, Mass.

James E. Clark's P. O. address is Waterville, Ct. Will Bro. Clark have the goodness to inform the Crisis what his Post Office address was formerly.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige and save us immense labor and perplexity if they will strictly adhere to the following rules:

1. Over all communications designed to be published write, For the World's Crisis.

2. Over all communications not designed for the public write, Private.

☞ ☞ ☞ ☞ ☞ ☞ ☞

3. At the head of all letters write the date, never failing to give the STATE, and also County, if written from the Middle, Western or Southern States.

☞ ☞ ☞ ☞ ☞ ☞ ☞

4. Write all orders for the paper or for books on a page by itself, beginning thus, Order for the Crisis, or, Order for books, as the case may be.

5. At the close of each letter containing money write the amount, and to whom it is to be credited.

6. Be careful to write names and P. O. addresses in a legible hand.

7. In returning papers write on the paper the name and P. O. address of the person to whom it had been sent.

8. In preparing matter for the Crisis we hope our correspondents will adopt, as the most important and indispensible of all rules, the practice of commending the subject to God, praying fervently for light to be reflected on the position of the Church, and for heavenly manna to feed and nurture the little flock unto eternal life—also that sinners may be induced to flee from impending wrath, and take refuge in the ark before the deluge takes them all away.

9. Let the letters and communications be carefully read over, corrected, and, if need be re-written, punctuated and prepared for the press, so far as the writer has ability so to do. If, however, the writer does not understand punctuation, &c., the Editor is just as willing, and if possible more so, to serve the humblest member of the flock in bringing his or her sentiments and feelings before the public, as those who have been favored with higher educational advantages, provided only they write under the influence of the Spirit of God.

In sending out eight thousand papers, it would not be strange if some mistakes should be attributable to us, others, it may be, to the Post Offices, and others still to the neglect of subscribers to give their proper Post Office address. We hope in such cases brethren will exercise a little patience, and write us, if necessary, so that we may rectify all mistakes which it will ever afford us pleasure to do. tf

All letters of business in relation to the World's Crisis, or to books sold at the office of the Crisis, or letters containing payment for "the grand crisis in human affairs" and "the Advent Hymn-book," must in future be directed to Jonas Merriam, Editor of the World's Crisis.

Life in a future world.

A life in the future world,
A home that ne'er shall cloy,
A home where the saints shall sing,
And swell the rapturous joy.
Here the whole creation groans,
With sighs and plaintive moans,
Lord, let thy kingdom come,
And gather the faithful home.

CHORUS.

The Prophet's sought this home,
But died without the sight,
As pilgrims here they roamed,
And never saw the light.

Great God in mercy hear,
The remnant now they cry,
Compassionate their tears,
And save them lest they die.
O let the trumpet sound,
And all the saints awake,
And, with bright glory crowned,
The new possession take.

O let the North give up,
The East and West obey,
The South her daughters bring,
Thy sons from far away.
Let the earth give up her slain,
The sea resign her dead,
And all the saints appear
Triumphant with their Head.

There on those flowery plains
Our bodies ne're shall tire,
But in melodious strains
Redeeming love admire.
Come, Jesus, quickly come,
Nor let thy car delay,
O speed thee down the sky,
Come, Saviour, come away.

A Voice of Warning!

"He that hath an ear, let him hear."—Rev.

Fellow traveller to the judgment; you have heard about the second coming of Christ, to judge the world, and the time of his coming. But have you investigated the subject for yourself? If you have not, then you are unprepared to decide upon the subject; a wise man, suspends judgment until he has heard the evidence. And I wish to bring before your mind some evidence, which is unimpeachable, that proves we are living upon the last crumbling sands of time, and are hearing the last message of mercy, to a dying world that is hastening on with rapidity to the judgment.

The subject that I wish to bring before you, is the time of Christ's coming to judge the world, and raise the dead. I intreat of you dear reader, to give this subject a thorough investigation, for it involves the interests of all mankind. The evidence that I bring on this subject, is from inspired witnesses; and we may rely upon it with perfect confidence.

The question was propounded to our Lord, (Matt. 24 : 3) "When shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?"—"And Jesus answered and said, "There shall arise false Christs'. 2d, "There shall be wars, and rumors of wars." 3d, "Nation against nation, and kingdom aangainst kingdom." 4, "Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you." 5, "And many false prophets (or teachers) shall arise, iniquity shall abound, and the love of many shall wax cold; but he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved."

We learn by this testimony, that the events here brought to view, are to transpire in their chronological order; commencing in the days of the Apostles, and extending to the end of the world. Now let us examine, and learn what event is being fulfilled in our day; then we can determine what event to look for next. The first event is the rise of the false Christs. We learn from "Buck's theological Dictionary," that, between the second and seventeenth century, there were about twenty five false Christ's that arose; hence we have passed the first event. 2d, "Wars and rumors of wars." This was fulfilled just prior to the breaking up of the Roman Empire. 3d, "Nation against nation, and kingdom against kingdom." This was accomplished between A. D. 356, and 500. 4th, "Then they shall deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you." This commenced to be fulfilled in A. D. 519, when the Church was delivered up unto the hands of that power, symbolized by the little horn of Dan. 7: 25, and this syncronizes with the power denominated the Abomination of desolation, Dan. 11 : 31, 33, "Yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil many days." 5th, "False prophets (or teachers) shall arise, and iniquity shall abound, and the love of many shall wax cold." These teachers were to come (as seen in verses 22, 23,) immediately after the days of tribulation. This has certainly been fulfilled since the tribulation ended, which took place in A. D. 1779, just prior to the darkening of the sun in 1780. We have only to cast our eye over the history of the church for the last seventy five years; and we see a striking fulfillment of this prediction; in the rise of false teachers, as the Shakers, Mormons, Spirit rappers, and many others,—that have lowered the standard and compromised the truth, to please the world loving professors; and in consequence of these teachers promulgating their false doctrines, the love of many has waxed cold. "But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." Readers, are we not living in the days when iniquity abounds? Look at the pleasure parties and picnics, church lotteries, countenanced by the teachers of the present day. Are these in accordance with the teachings of our Lord found in Luke 14 : 12–15? Look again, at the increase of crime, for the last few years, and you see the fulfillment of scripture. The next event that is to transpire, is the coming of the Lord to judge the world. Oh! let us endure unto the end!

Now lest we should be mistaken in regard to the time in which we live, let us heed the instruction of our Lord given in verse 15, "When ye therfore shall see the Abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, whoso readeth, let him understand." In order to understand when Christ is coming, he (Christ) informs us that we must read what Daniel has recorded about the abomination of desolation, and understand that. Now let us have Daniel's testimony. Dan. 11 : 31–33, "And armies shall stand on his part; and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and shall place the abomination that maketh desolate. And they that understand among the people shall instruct many; yet they shall fall by the sword, by flame, by captivity and spoil, many days."

We learn by this testimony, that when the abomination of desolation is set up, there is to be a persecution of the Church, many days This must be the abomination of desolation that Jesus refers to, for his testimony agrees with Daniel's, in regard to a persecution following the setting up of the abomination of desolation.—Matt. 24 : 21, "For there shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time; no, nor ever shall be." Now let us see if Daniel gives us any instruction in regard to the end, in connection with the abomination of desolation. From verse 31 of chapter 11, to the 3d verse of chapter 12, we have a history of events as follows: 1st. A persecution of the Church for many days.—2d. The king of the South and the king of the North. 3d. Michael's standing up, and the time of trouble. 4th. And many of them that sleep in the dust shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. The last event here brought to view, is the resurrection of the dead. Chap. 12 : 6, "And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" Here the question is asked, How long it shall be to the end of the wonders, or to the resurrection of the dead, which is the last event named in the wonders.—The answer is given by an angel under oath, and it must be true. He says (v. 7), "It shall be for a time, times, and a half, (or part;) and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished." Daniel said he heard but did not understand, and he inquired, (v. 8), "What shall be the end of these things?" The angel answers, (v. 11,) "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be 1290 days, (or years*). Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the 1335 days (years.) But go thou thy way, till the end be; for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days."

Hence, in the foregoing testimony of Daniel we learn: 1st, That when the abomination of desolation is set up, there is to be a tribulation, such as there never was before. 2d, That the 1290 years are given to measure the abomination of desolation and persecution. 3d, That from the time that the abomination of desolation is set up, there is to be 1335 years to the resurrection of the dead, or, 45 years from the time that the 1290 end, to the time that Daniel is to stand in his lot.

Now let us have Christ's testimony in regard to the tribulation. Matt. 24: 15, 21, 22, "When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place; whoso readeth let him understand; * * * For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, to this time; no, nor ever shall be. And except these days (years) should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake, those days shall be shortened."

The tribulation here spoken of could not have been at the destruction of Jerusalem, as many suppose, from the fact that it was to be the greatest that ever was, or ever should be, And at the destruction of Jerusalem there was only about eleven hundred thousand perished. While under the papal persecution there was about fifty millions put to death, in every way that men or devils could invent. Hence, the days of tribulation here spoken of are the days of the abomination of desolation, which days, are the 1290 that measure the Papal power. Now Jesus says that those days of tribulation were to be shortened, or no flesh would be saved; and his testimony is true. But as yet he has not informed us how long they shall be after they are shortened. It was about A. D. 33 when he said they should be shortened.—There would be no propriety in saying the days should be shortened, unless he referred to a definite number of days; and the days that he refers to are the 1290 days of the abomination of desolation, during which the saints were being put to death.

Some sixty years subsequent to the time when Jusus said the days should be shortened, John had a Revelation, "Which he declares to be the Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things that must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John," (Rev. 1 : 2.) The apostle refers to this very tribulation of the Church. He says, (Rev. 13 : 5,) "There was given unto him (the beast) a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue (margin, make war) forty and two months." V. 7, "And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them; and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations." What do we learn from this testimony? Ans. We learn that there is a power, symbolized by the beast having a mouth and speaking great things, that puts the saints to death for a period of 42 months, or 1260 years. The same time is referred to in Chapt. 12 : 6, 14, when the woman, or true Church, flees into the wilderness, from the face of a persecuting power. This is the same tribulation that is spoken of by Daniel and Christ. Again. The apostle informs us that the tribulation is to be 42 months, or 1260 years; and it must be 42 months, otherwise his testimony is not reliable.

It may be asked how we know that John refers to the same tribulation that Daniel and Christ does? Ans. It is known to be the same from the fact, that the Bible has not spoken of but one great tribulation on the Church; and that is brought to view in connection with the abomination of desolation spoken of in Dan. 11: 31, 32, 12: 11, 7: 25. Matt. 24 : 15.

From John's testimony, we learn that the days of tribulation were 1260 years after they were shortened; hence they were shortened just 30 years—1260 from 1290, leaves 30, hence it is seventy-five years, from the time that the tribulation ends, to the resurrection, or the end of the 1335 years; for 75 added to 1260 make 1335: when Daniel must stand in his lot. The next point that we wish to find, is where the 1260 end; if we can establish this point, we can tell where the abomination was set up, and where the resurrection will take place. The abomination of desolation must be set up 1260 years before the tribulation ends; and from the time that the tribulation ends, we cannot have more than 75 years, before the resurrection.—Jesus has informed us in Matt. 24: 29, That, "Immediately after that tribulation the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." It must be evident to any one that will read with an unprejudiced mind, that the darkening of the sun marked the end of the 1260 years of tribulation. When was the sun darkened? Ans. May 19th, 1780, there was a remarkable fulfilment of this prediction of our Lord; and in reference to the facts and dates, there can be no place for doubts, for aside from historical accounts, there are thousands now living who can attest thereto. They say the darkness was so intense that candles had to be lighted at noon day, and although the moon had fulled only the night previous. The Rev. Mr Tenney, of Exeter, N. H. when speaking of the darkness of the night, says: "I could not help conceiving at the time, that if every luminous body in the universe had been shrouded in impenetrable darkness, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not have been more complete."

In the month of May, 1780, there was a terrible dark day in New England, when all faces seemed to gather blackness, and the people were filled with fear. (Tract No. 379, Am. Tract Society.) "The 9th of May, 1780, was a remarkable dark day; candles were lighted in many houses; the birds disappeared; it was the general opinion that the day of Judgment was at hand." (Pres. Dwight's His. Coll.)

"The dark day of May 19, 1780.—The sun rose and shone clear for several hours; at length the sky became overcast with clouds, and by ten o'clock the darkness was such as to occasion the farmers to leave their work in the fields and retire to their dwellings. The darkness continued through the day; and the night, till near morning, was as unusually dark as the day." (Gage's His. of Rowley, Mass.)

Much more testimony might be adduced on this point if it was necessary. We have testimony from persons of undoubted veracity, that the sun was darkened, not only in New England, but also in other parts of the world. This remarkable phenomenon cannot be accounted for on any astronomical, or philosophical principles of reasoning. God said it should be so, and it was so.

This event shows that the 1260 years of tribulation ended as early as 1779, consequently, 75 years more bring us to the end of the 1335, which ends in 1854, when the resurrection will take place, according to this calculation, and the testimony of the three inspired witnesses. ☞ See Diagram.

What have we proved by the testimony of Daniel, Christ and John? Ans. We have proved, 1st. That there is to be 1335 years from the time the abomination of desolation is set up, to the resurrection of the dead.

2nd. That from the time the abomination is set up, there is to be 1260 years of tribulation on the Church.

3d. That the darkening of the sun, May 19, 1780, marks the end of the tribulation; which ended as early as 1779, consequently, 75 years more make up the 1335; which end in 1854, when Daniel and all of the righteous will come forth to everlasting life.

"WHAT! The great day of the Lord. It comes sure and rapidly! Its heralds are not to be mistaken. That day of wrath and woe—the day of storm and thunder—that day of Judgment is just up on the world. Sinner, proud presumptious sinner! O, why will ye die? Why despise the costly ransom paid for thee?—Why lift thy puny arm against Omnipotence? Why arrive hot, and out of breath at destruction? O, turn and live, mercy waits for thee, thy Redeemer bids thee come. Hasten to thy only refuge! "Tarry not in all the plain, escape for thy life, lest thou be consumed!" O haste!!

For the World's Crisis.

"Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophecied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity."—[Matt. 7 : 22, 23.

From various texts it is evident that such scriptures as the above are to have a partial or preparatory fulfilment before the Advent. It is in this sense only that the exhortation to remember Lot's wife can have an application this side of Christ's coming. But in order to be profited by the above scripture, we are to inquire, In what sense is it to have a fulfilment before the Advent? Plainly, only in the sense of a proud retort to the reproving preaching of the true servants of Christ.—Doctrines will be extensively advocated, showing the corruptions of the popular churches, and the fabulous nature of their teachings; which will call forth a retort, by referring to the many revivals that have attended the labours of the popular ministry, the extensive benevolent enterprises that have followed their efforts, &c.

But such a plea will avail them nothing; it will only serve to convince the truly righteous that the Advent will immediately follow; for they see by the unerring word, that the event is to be indicated by such a state of things. The plan of God in the gospel work requires such a preaching against the popular churches as will call forth an opposition of the above kind, even to such a degree as to enforce such plea and retort by persecuting measures; for the closing truths of this dispensation, when rejected, will speedily serve to blind their minds to a degree, to cause them to become drunken with the satanic spirits that will go forth coincident with such preaching. They will say, "My Lord delayeth his coming;" and by associating with the armies of satan, will become smiters of the true servants of God, and will be found in that condition when Christ shall come, as the following scripture clearly proves:

"But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

The text follows Christ's sermon on the mount; hence, the doctrines of that sermon are necessary to be strictly preached and practiced, in order to escape the present reproof of Christ through his ministers, and the final and hopeless reproof of his coming; for the verse just preceding the text clearly shows this. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

To be accepted of Christ then, when he comes, we must understand, proclaim and practice the truth that his coming is just at hand, together with the doctrines of Christ in general, We can never be excused from performing the whole requirements of Christianity, until the master has come. Paul charged Timothy to "keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is such only who will receive the reproofs of the worldly religionists of the present time.

Are we walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord's house blameless? While we believe in the immediate appearing of Christ; do we seek to know and do the will of God in other respects? We must not only shape our service to God in harmony with the immediate coming of Christ, but we must also seek to know what that service is, in all respects; lest we have a zeal not according to knowledge, and like God's ancient people be cut off with all the enemies of Christ.

We can grow in grace or favor with God only by obeying his word; and that word equally demands of us a growth in knowledge as a growth in grace. To grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, is necessary to a perfect serving of him. We must not only know Christ with respect to his character as a quickly coming judge and king, but as the great and perfect teacher of righteousness, with regard to his character in every respect. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

Br Merriam:—

Through your columns I would communicate a few lines to the waiting pilgrims. I do thank and praise God with all my heart, that there is still a little company, who, retain faith in the ever glorious hope of the coming of our blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and the everlasting kingdom of God, soon to be established under the whole heaven. According to the present state of things, the next great event will be when the stone will smite the Image on the feet, and the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, and then it will be given to the people of the saints of the most High, and they will possess it forever, even forever and ever. My soul replies, "Amen; even so, come Lord Jesus" and come quickly." And "knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."

"The night is far spent, the day is at at hand, let us therefore cast off the works of darkness and let us put on the armor of light."
